In the castell of Susan there was a Jewe, whose name was Mardocheus, the sonne of Jair, the sonne of Simei, the sonne of Cis, the sonne of Jemini, which was caried awaye from Jerusalem, whan Jechonias the kynge of Juda was led awaye, (whom Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon caned awaye) and he norished Hadassa (that is Hester) his vncles daughter: for she had neither father ner mother, and she was a fayre and beutyfull damsell. And whan hir father and mother dyed, Mardocheus receaued her as his awne daughter.

Now whan ꝑ kynges cōmaundemēt and cōmyssion was published, & many dāsels were broughte together vnto the castell of Susan vnder ꝑ hande of Hegai, Hester, was take also vnto ꝑ kynges house vnder ꝑ hande of Hegai ꝑ keper of ꝑ wemē, & the damsell pleased him, & she founde grace in his sighte. And he put her wꝺ hir maydēs in ꝑ best place of ꝑ Womēs buildige. And Hester shewed it not vnto hir people & hir kynred: for Mardocheus had charged her, ꝑ she shulde not tell it. And Mardocheus walked euery daye before ꝑ courte of ꝑ Womēs buyldinge, ꝑ he might knowe how Hester dyd, and what shulde become of her.

And whan the appoynted tyme of euery damsell came that she shulde come to ꝑ kynge Ahasuerus, after that she had bene twolue monethes in the deckynge of the wemen (for their deckynge must haue so moch tyme, namely sixe monethes with Balme & Myrre, & sixe monethes wꝺ good spyces, so were the wemē beutifyed) then wente there one damsell vnto ꝑ kynge, and what so euer she requyred, ꝑ must be geuē her to go wꝺ her out of the Womens buyldinge vnto ꝑ kynges palace. And whan one came in the euenynge, ꝑ same wēte frō him on ꝑ morow in to ꝑ seconde house of wemen, vnder the hande of Saasgas the kynges chamberlayne, which kepte ꝑ concubines. And she must come vnto the kynge nomore, excepte it pleased the kynge, and that he caused her to be called by name.

Now whan the tyme came of Hester the daughter of Abihail Mardocheus vncle (whom he had receaued as his awne daughter) ꝑ she shulde come to the kynge, she desyred nothinge but what Hegai the kynges chamberlayne the keper of the wemen sayde.

And Hester founde fauoure in the sighte of all them that loked vpon her. And Hester was taken vnto kynge Ahasuerus in to the house royall, in the tenth moneth which is called Tebeth, in the seuenthe yeare of his reigne.

And the kynge loued Hester aboue all the wemen, and she founde grace and mercy in his sighte before all the virgins: and he set the quenes croune vpon hir heade, and made her quene in steade of Vasthi. And the kynge made a greate feast vnto all his princes and seruauntes (which feast was because of Hester) and let the londes be in quyetnes, & gaue royall giftes.

And whan the virgins were gathered together the seconde tyme, Mardocheus sat in the kynges gate. And as yet had not Hester shewed hir kynred and hir people, acordinge as Mardocheus had bydden her: for Hester dyd after the worde of Mardocheus, like as whan he was hir tutoure. At the same tyme whyle Mardocheus sat in the kynges gate, two of the kinges chamberlaynes, Bigthan and Theres which kepte the dore, were wroth, and sought to laye their handes on the kynge Ahasuerus: Wherof Mardocheus gat knowlege, and tolde it vnto quene Hester, and Hester certified the kynge ther of in Mardocheus name. And whan inquycion was made, it was founde so. And they were both hanged on tre: and it was wryttē in the Cronicles before the kynge.

The III. Chapter.

A AFter these actes dyd the kynge promote Aman the sonne of Amadathi the Agagite, vnd set him hye, & set his seate aboue all ỳ prynces that were with him. And all the kynges seruauntes that were in the gate, bowed their knees, and dyd reuerence vnto Aman: for the kinge had so cōmaunded. But Mardocheus bowed not the knee, and worshipped him not. Then the kynges seruauntes which were in the kynges gate, sayde vnto Mardocheus: Why transgressest thou the kynges commaundement? And whan they spake this daylie vnto him, and he folowed them not, they tolde Aman, that they mighte se whether Mardocheus matters wolde endure: for he had tolde them, ỳ he was a Jewe. And whā Aman sawe, that Mardocheus bowed not the knee vnto him, ner worshipped him, he was full of indignacion & despyte, that he shulde laye hondes onely on Mardocheus: for they had shewed him ỳ people of Mardocheus, but he sought to destroye the people of Mardocheus, and all the people that were in the whole empyre of Ahasuerus.

B In the first moneth that is the moneth Nissan, in ỳ twolueth yeare of kinge Ahasuerus, was there occasion and oportunyte sought by Aman, from one daye to another, and from the same moneth vnto the twolueth moneth, that is the moneth Adar. And Amā sayde vnto kinge Ahasuerus: There is a people scatered abrode and dispersed among all people in all the londes of thine empire, and their lawe is cōtrary vnto all people, and they do not after the kynges lawes, nether is it the kinges profit to suffre thē after this maner. Yf it please the kynge, let him wryte, that they maye be destroyed, & so wil I weye downe ten thousande talentes of siluer, vnder the handes of the workmen, to be brought in to the kynges chamber. Then toke the kynge his rynge from his hande, and gaue it vnto Aman the sonne of Amadathi the Agagite the Jewes enemie. And the kinge sayde vnto Aman: Let the siluer be geuen the, and that people also, to do withall what pleaseth the.

C Then were the kynges scrybes called on ỳ thirtenth daye of the first moneth, & there was wrytten (accordynge as Aman commaūded) vnto the kynges prynces, and to the Debites euery where in the londes, and to the captaynes of euery people in the countres on euery syde, accordynge to the wrytinge of euery nacion, and after their language in the name of kynge Ahasuerus, and sealed with the kynges rynge. And the wrytynges were sent by postes in to all the kynges lōdes, to rote out, to kyll, and to destroye all Jewes, both yonge and olde, childrē and wemen in one daye (namely vpon the thirtenth daye of the twolueth moneth, which is the moneth Adar) and to spoyle their goodes.

This was the summe of the wrytinge, ỳ there shulde be a commaundement geuen in all londes, to be published vnto all people, ỳ they shulde be ready agaynst the same daye. And the postes wente in all the haist accordynge to the kynges commaundement. And in the castell of Susan was the cōmaundement denysed. And the kynge & Aman sate & dranke. But ỳ cite of Susan was disquieted.

The IIII. Chapter.

WHan Mardocheus perceaued all that was done, he rēte his clothes, and put on a sack cloth, & aßshes, & wente out in to the myddes of the cite, and cried loude and lamentably, and came before the kynges gate: for there might no man entre within the kynges gate, that had a sack cloth on. And in all lōdes & places, as farre as the kynges worde and commaundement extended, there was greate lamentacion amonge the Jewes, and many fasted, wepte, mourned, & laye in sack clothes & in aßshes. So Hesters dāsels, and hir chamberlaines, came and tolde it her. Then was the quene exceadingly astonnyed. And she sent raymente, that Mardocheus shulde put them on, and laye the sack clothe from him. But Mardocheus wolde not take them. Thē called Hester Hathac one of the kinges chamberlaines (which stode before her) and gaue him a cōmaundement vnto Mardocheus, that he might knowe what it were, and wherfore he dyd so. So Hathac wente forth to Mardocheus vnto the strete of the cite, which was before the kynges gate.

D And Mardocheus tolde him of all ỳ had happened vnto him, and of the summe of siluer that Amā had promysed to weie downe in the kynges chamber because of ỳ Jewes for to destroye them, and he gaue him the copye of the commaundement, that was denysed at Susan to destroye them, that he might shewe it vnto Hester, and to speake to her and charge her, ỳ she shulde go in to the kynge, and make her prayer and supplicacion vnto him for hir people.

And whā Hathat came in, and tolde Hester the wordes of Mardocheus, Hester spake vnto Hathat, and cōmaunded him to saye vnto Mardocheus: All the kynges seruauntes, and the people in the londes of the kynge knowe, that who so euer commeth within the courte vnto ỳ kynge, whether it be man or woman, which is not called, the cōmaundement is that the same shal dye immediatly, excepte the kynge holde out the goldē cepter vnto him, that he maye lyue. As for me, I haue not bene called to come in to the kynge now this thirtie dayes.

C And whā Mardocheus was certified of Hesters wordes, Mardocheus bad saie againe vnto Hester: Thynke not to saue thine awne life, whyle thou art in ỳ kynges house before all Jewes: for yf thou holdest thy peace at this tyme, then shal the Jewes haue helpe and delyueraunce out of another place, & thou & thy fathers house shalbe destroyed. And who knoweth whether thou art come to the kyngdome, for this tymes sake? Hester bad geue Mardocheus this answere: Go thou ỳ waye then, & gather together all ỳ Jewes ỳ are founde at Susan, & fast ye for me, ỳ ye eate not & drynke not in thre dayes, nether daye ner nighte. I & my damsels wil fast likewyse, & so wyl I go in to the kynge cōtrary to the cōmaundement: yf I perishe, I perishe. So Mardocheus wente his waye, & dyd all ỳ Hester had cōmaunded him.

The V. Chapter.

A AND on the thirde daye put Hester on hir royall apparell, and stode in the courte of ỳ kinges palace within ouer agaynst the kynges house. And ỳ kynge sat vpō his royall seate in ỳ kynges palace ouer agaynst ỳ dore of the house. And whan the kynge sawe Hester the quene stōdinge in the courte, she founde grace in his sighte. And ỳ kynge helde out the goldē cepter in his hāde towarde Hester. So Hester stepte forth, and touched the toppe of ỳ cepter. Then sayde ỳ kynge vnto her: What wilt thou quene Hester? & what requyrest thou? axe euē the halfe of ỳ empyre, & it shal be geuē the. Hester sayde: Yf it please ỳ kynge, let ỳ kynge & Aman come this daye vnto ỳ banket ỳ I haue prepared. The kynge sayde: Cause Aman to make haist, ỳ he maye do as Hester hath saide.

B Now whā the kynge & Aman came to ỳ banket ỳ Hester had prepared, the kynge sayde vnto Hester whan he had dronken wyne: Hester, what is thy peticion? it shal be genē the. And what requyrest thou? euen the halfe of the empyre, it shal be done.

Then answered Hester and sayde: My peticion and desire is, yf I haue founde grace in ỳ sight of the kynge, & yf it please the kynge to geue me my peticion, and to fulfill my request, then let the kynge & Aman come to the bancket ỳ I shal prepare for thē, and so wil I do tomorow as the kynge hath sayde.

Then wente Aman forth the same daye ioyfull and mery in his mynde. And whan he sawe Mardocheus in the kynges gate, ỳ he stode not vp and kneled before him, he was full of indignacion at Mardocheus. Neuertheles he refrained himselfe: and whā C he came home, he sent, and called for his frēdes, and Seres his wyfe, and tolde them of the glory of his riches, and the multitude of his children, all together how the kynge had promoted him so greatly, and how that he was taken aboue the prynces and seruauntes of the kynge. Aman sayde moreouer: Yee and Hester the quene let no man come with the kynge vnto the bancket that she had prepared, excepte me, and tomorow am I bidden vnto her also with the kynge. But in all this am I not satisfied as longe as I se Mardocheus the Jewe syttinge in ỳ kynges gate. Then sayde Seres his wife and all his frendes vnto him: Let thē make a galowe of fiftye cubites hie, & tomorow speake thou vnto the kynge, that Mardocheus maye be hanged theron, yf thou cōmest merely with the kynge vnto the bancket. Aman was well content withall, and caused a galowe to be prepared.

The VI. Chapter.

A THe same night coulde not the kynge slepe, and he commaunded to bringe ỳ Cronicles and storyes: which whā they were red before ỳ kinge, they happened on the place where it was wrytte, how Mardocheus had tolde, that the kynges two chāberlaynes (which kepte ỳ tresholdes) soughte to laie hondes on kinge Ahasuerus. And the kynge saide: What worshippe and good hāue we done to Mardocheus therfore? Then sayde the kynges seruauntes that ministred vnto him. There is nothinge done for him. And the kynge sayde: Who is in ỳ courte? (for Aman was gone in to ỳ courte without before ỳ kinges house, ỳ he might speake vnto ỳ kinge to hange Mardocheus on ỳ tre, ỳ he had prepared for him.) And the kinges seruauntes saide vnto him: Beholde, Amā stōdeth in the courte. The kynge saide: Let him come in. And whā Amā came in, ỳ kinge sayde vnto him: What shal be done vnto ỳ mā, whom the kynge wolde fayne bringe vnto worshippe: But Hamā thought in his hert: Whom shulde the kynge els be glad to bynge vnto worshippe, but me? And Aman sayde vnto the kynge: Let the man vnto whom the kynge wolde be glad to do worshippe, be broughte hither, that he maye be araied with the royall garmentes which the kynge vseth to weere: and the horse that the kynge rydeth vpon, and that the crowne royall maye be set vpon his heade. And let this rayment and horse be delyuered vnder the hande of one of the kynges prynces, that he maye araye the man withall (whom the kynge wolde fayne honoure) and cary him vpon the horse thorow the strete of the cite, and cause it to be proclamed before him: Thus shal it be done to every man, whom the kynge wolde fayne honoure.

C The kynge sayde: Make haist, and take (as thou hast sayde) the raymēt and the horse, and do euen so with Mardocheus ỹ Jewe that sitteth before the kynges gate, and let nothinge fayle of all that thou hast spoken. Then toke Aman the rayment and the horse, and arayed him, and broughte him on horsbacke thorow the strete of the cite, and proclamed before him: Euen thus shall it be done vnto every man whom the kynge is disposed to honoure. And Mardocheus came agayne to the kynges gate, but Aman gat him home in all the haist, mournynge with bare heade, and tolde Seres his wyfe and all his frendes, every thynge that had happened him. Then sayde his wise men and Seres his wyfe vnto him: Yf it be Mardocheus of the sede of the Jewes, before whō thou hast begonne to fall, thou canst do nothynge vnto him, but shalt fall before him. Whyle they were yet talkynge with him, came the kynges chamberlaynes, and caused Aman to make haist to come vnto the banckett that Hester had prepared.

The VII. Chapter.

A AND whan the kynge and Aman came to the banckett that quene Hester had prepared, the kynge sayde vnto Hester on the seconde daye whan he had dronken wyne: What is thy peticion quene Hester, that it maye be geuen the? And what requyrest thou? Yee are euen halfe of the empyre, and it shal be done. Hester ỹ quene answered and sayde: Yf I haue founde grace in thy sighte (O kynge) and yf it please the kynge, then graunte me my lyfe at my desyre and my people for my peticions sake: for we are solde to be destroyed, to be slayne, and to perishe. And wolde God we were solde to be bondmen and bondwemen, then wolde I holde my tonge, so shulde not the enemye be so hye to the kynges harme. The kynge Ahasuerus spake & saide vnto quene Hester: What is he that? Or where is he ỹ darre presume in his mynde to do soch a thinge after that maner? Hester sayde: The enemye and aduersary is this wicked Aman.

As for Amā, he was exceadingly afraied B before ỹ kynge & ỹ quene. And the kynge arose frō the banckett & frō ỹ wyne in his displeasure, and wente in to the palace garden. And Aman stode vp, and besoughte quene Hester for his life: for he sawe ỹ there was a mischaūce prepared for him of the kynge allready.

And whan the kynge came agayne out of the palace garden in to ỹ parler where they had eaten, Aman had layed him vpon the bed that Hester sat vpon. Then saide the kynge: wyl he force the quene also besyde me in the house? As soone as that worde wente out of the kynges mouth, they couered Amans face. And Harbona one of the chamberlaynes that stode before the kynge, sayde Beholde, there stondeth a galowe in Amās house fiftie cubytes hye, which he had made for Mardocheus, that spake good for ỹ kynge. The kynge sayde: Hange him theron. So they hanged Aman on the galowe that he had made for Mardocheus. Then was the kynges wrath stylled.

The VIII. Chapter.

THe same daye dyd kynge Ahasuerus A geue the house of Aman the Jewes enemye, vnto quene Hester. And Mardocheus came before ỹ kinge: for Hester tolde how that he belōged vnto her. And the kynge put of his synger rynge, which he had taken from Aman, & gaue it vnto Mardocheus. And Hester set Mardocheus ouer the house of Aman. And Hester spake yet more before the kynge, and fell downe at his fete, & besought him, that he wolde put away the wyckednes of Aman the Agagite, and his deuice that he had ymagined against ỹ Jewes. And the kynge helde out the golden cepter vnto Hester. Then rose Hester, and stode before the kynge, and sayde: Yf it please the kynge, and yf I haue foūde grace in his sight, & yf it be cōuenyent for the kinge, and yf it be accepted in his sighte, then let it be writtē, ỹ the letters of the deuyce of Amā the sonne of Amadathai the Agagite, A may be called agayne: which letters he wrote, to destroie ỹ Jewes in all ỹ kynges lōdes. For how can I se the euell that shal happē vnto my people: and how can I loke vpon the destruction of my kynred?

Then sayde ỳ kynge Ahasuerus vnto quene Hester, and to Mardocheus the Jewe: Beholde, I haue geuen Hester the house of Aman, & him haue they hanged vpon a tre, because he layed hãde vpon ỳ Jewes. Wryte ye now therfore for the Jewes, as it liketh you in the kynges name, and seale it with ỳ kynges rynge (for the wrytinges that were wrytten in ỳ kynges name, and sealed with the kynges rynge, durst no man dysanulle.) Then were the kynges scrybes called at the same tyme in the thirde moneth, that is the moneth Siuan, on the thre & twentieth daie.

And it was wrytten (as Mardocheus cõmaunded) vnto the Jewes and to the prynces, to the Debities and captaynes in the londes from India vntyll Ethiopia, namely, an hundreth and seuen and twenty e londes, vnto euery one acordinge to the wrytinge therof, vnto euery people after their speche, and to the Jewes acordinge to their wrytinge and language.

And it was written in the kynge Ahasuerus name, and sealed with the kynges rynge. And by postes that rode vpon swyfte yonge Mules, sent he the wrytinges, wher in the kynge graunted the Jewes (in what cities so euer they were) to gather them selues together, and to stonde for their lyfe, and for to rote out, to slaye, and to destroye all the power of the people and londe that wolde trouble them, with children and wemen, and to spoyle their good vpon one daye in all the londes of kynge Ahasuerus, namely vpon the thirtenth daye of the twolueth moneth, which is the moneth Adar.

The summe of the wrytinge was, how there was a cõmaundement geuen in all londes to be publisled vnto all the people, that ỳ Jewes shulde be ready agaynst that daye to auenge them selues on their enemies. And the postes that rode vpon the Mules, made hast with all spede, acordinge to the kynges worde: and the commaundement was deuysed in the castel of Susan.

As for Mardocheus, he wente out from the kynge in royall apparell of yalow and whyte, and wyth a greate crowne of golde, beynge arayed with a garment of linnen and purple, and ỳ cite of Susan reioysed & was glad: but vnto the Jewes there was come light and gladnesse, & ioye & worshippe. And in all londes and cities, in to what places so euer the kynges worde and commaundemẽt reached, there was ioye & myrth, prosperite and good dayes amonge the Jewes: in so moch that many of the people in the londe became of the Jewes beleue, for the feare of the Jewes came vpon them.

The IX. Chapter.

IN the twolueth moneth, that is the moneth Adar, vpon the thyrtenth daye, which the kinges worde and cõmaundement had appoynted, that it shulde be done, euẽ vpon ỳ same daie ỳ the enemies shulde haue destroyed the Jewes to haue oppressed them, it turned contrary wise, euen ỳ the Jewes shulde subdue their enemies. Then gathered the Jewes together in their cities within all ỳ londes of kynge Ahasuerus, to laye honde on soch as wolde do thẽ euell, & no man coulde withstonde them: for ỳ feare of thẽ was come ouer all people. And all the rulers in the londes, and prynces and Debities, and officers of the kinge promoted the Jewes: for the feare of Mardocheus came vpõ thẽ. For Mardocheus was greate in the kynges house, & the reporte of him was noised in all lõdes, how he increased & grewe.

Thus the Jewes smote all their enemies with a sore slaughter, and slewe and destroyed, & dyd after their wyll vnto soch as were their aduersaries. And at ỳ castell of Susan slewe the Jewes and destroied fyue hũdreth men: & slewe Parsandatha, Dalphon, Aspatha, Poratha, Adalia, Aridatha, Parmastha Arissai, Aridai, Vaiesatha, the ten sonnes of Aman ỳ sonne of Amadathi ỳ enemie of the Jewes: but on his goodes they layed no handes. At the same tyme was the kynge certified of the nombre of those that were slaine at the castell of Susan. And the kynge sayde vnto quene Hester: The Jewes haue slayne and destroyed fyue hũdreth men at ỳ castell of Susan, and the ten sonnes of Amã: What shal they do in the other londes of ỳ kynge? What is thy peticion, that it maye be geuen the? & what requirest thou more to be done? Hester sayde: Yf it please the kynge, let him suffre the Jewes to morow also to do acordinge vnto this dayes commaundement, that they maye hange Amans ten sonnes vpõ ỳ tre. And the kynge charged to do so, and the commaundement was deuysed at Susan, & Amans ten sonnes were hanged. And the Jewes gathered thẽ selues together at Susan, vpon the fourtenth daye of the moneth Adar, and slewe thre hundreth men at Susan, but on their goodes they laied no hãdes.

As for the other Jewes in the kynges lõdes, they came together, & stode for their lynes, & gatt rest frõ their enemies: and slewe

of their enemies fyue and seuentye thousande, howbeit they layed no hondes on their goodes. This was done on the thirtēth daie of the moneth Adar, and on the fourtenth daye of the same moneth rested they, which (daye) they ordeyned to be a daye of feastinge and gladnesse. But the Jewes at Susan were come together both on the thyrtenth daye and on the fourtenth, and on the fyftenth daye they rested, and the same daye ordeyned they to be a daye of feastinge & gladnes. Therfore the Jewes that dwelt in the vyllages and vnwalled townes, ordeyned ỳ fourtenth daye of the moneth Adar, to be a daye of feastinge and gladnes, and one sent giftes vnto another.

And Mardocheus wrote these actes, and sent the writinges vnto all the Jewes ỳ were in all ỳ londes of kynge Ahasuerus, both nye and farre, that they shulde yearly receaue and holde the fourtenth and fiftenth daie of the moneth Adar, as the daies wherin ỳ Jewes came to rest from their enemies, & as a moneth wherin their payne was turned to ioye, and their sorowe in to prosperite: that they shulde obserue the same as dayes of wealth and gladnes, and one to sende giftes vnto another, & to distribute vnto the poore

And the Jewes receaued it that they had begonne to do, and that Mardocheus wrote vnto them: how that Aman the sonne of Amadathai all ỳ Jewes enemye, had deuysed to destroye all the Jewes, and caused the lot to be cast for to put them in feare, and to bringe them to naughte: and how Hester wente and spake to the kynge, that thorow letters his wicked deuyce (which he ymagyned agaynst the Jewes) might be turned vpon his awne heade, and how he and his sonnes were hanged on the tre. For the which cause they called this daye Purim after the name of the lot, acordynge to all ỳ wordes of this writinge: and what they thē selues had sene, and what had happened vnto them.

And the Jewes set it vp, and toke it vpon them and their sede, and vpon all soch as ioyned themselues vnto them, that they wolde not misse to obserue these two dayes yearly, acordynge as they were writtē and appointed, how ỳ these dayes are not to be forgotten, but to be kepte of childers children amōge all kynreds in all londes and cities. They are the dayes of Purim, which are not to be overslipte amonge the Jewes, and the memoriall of them oughte not to perishe from their sede.

And quene Hester the daughter of Abihail and Mardocheus the Jewe, wrote with all auctorite, to confirme this seconde writinge of Purim, and sent the letters vnto all the Jewes in the hundreth and seuen and twentye londes of ỳ empyre of Ahasuerus, with frendly and faithfull wordes, to confirme these dayes of Purim, in their tyme appoynted, acordynges as Mardocheus the Jewe and Hester the quene had ordeined cōcernynge them: lyke as they vpon their soule and vpon their sede had cōfirmed the actes of the * fastinges and of hir cōplainte. And Hester cōmaunded to stablish these actes of this Purim, and to wryte them in a boke.

The X. Chapter.

AND the kynge Ahasuerus layed tribute vpon the londe, and vpon the Iles of the See. As for all ỳ worke of his power and auctoryte, and ỳ greate worshippe of Mardocheus, which the kynge gaue him, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Media & Persia. For Mardocheus the Jewe was the seconde next vnto kynge Ahasuerus, and greate amonge ỳ Jewes, and accepted amonge the multitude of his brethren, as one ỳ seketh the welth of his people, and speaketh the best for all his sede.

The first Chapter.

AT the lōde of Hus there was a man called Job: an innocent and vertuous man, soch one as feared God, and eschued euell. This man had vij. sonnes, and iij. doughters. His substaunce was vij. M. shepe, iij. M. camels, v. C. yock of oxen, v. C. she asses, and a very greate housholde: so y he was one of the most principall men amōge all them of the east countre. His sonnes now wente on euery man, and made banckettes: one daye in one house, another daye in another, and sent for their iij. sisters, to eate ⁊ drinke with them. So when they had passed ouer the tyme of their banckettinge rounde aboute, Job sent for them, and clensed them agayne, stode vp early, and offred for euery one a brēt offeringe. For Job thought thus: peraduenture my sonnes haue done some offence, and haue bene vnthankfull to God in their hertes. And thus dyd Job euery daye.

A Gen. 22. d

Iob. 42. c

B Now vpon a tyme, when the seruauntes
Iob.1.a of God came and stode before the LORDE, Sathan came also amonge them. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: From whence commest thou? Sathan answered the LOR-1.Pe.5.b DE, and sayde: I haue gone about the lode, and walked thorow it.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathā: hast thou not considered my seruaunt Job, how that he is an innocēt and vertuous mā: soch
one as feareth God, and eschueth euell, and that there is none like him in the londe? Sa-than answered, and sayde vnto the LORDE:
Doth Job feare God for naught? hast thou not preserued him, his house, and all his substaunce on euery syde? hast thou not blessed the workes of his hondes? Is not his possession encreaced in the londe? But laye thyne honde vpō him a litle, touch once all that he hath, and (I holde) he shall curse the to thy face. And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan: lo
all that he hath, be in thy power: only vpon him self se that thou laye not thine honde.
Then wente Sathan forth from the LORDE.

C Now vpon a certayne daye when his son-nes and doughters were eatinge, and drynkinge wyne in their eldest brothers house, the re came a messaunger vnto Job, and sayde:
Whyle the oxen were a plowinge, and the Asses goinge in the pasture besyde them: the Sabees came in violētly, and toke them all awaye: yee they haue slayne the seruauntes with the swearde, and I only ranne my wa-ye, to tell the.

And whyle he was yet speakynge, there came another, and sayde: The fyre of God is fallen from heauen, it hath consumed & brēt vp all the shepe and seruauntes: and I only ranne my waye, to tell the. In the meane sea son whyle he was yet speakinge, there came another, and sayde: The Caldees made thre armies, and fell in vpon the camels, which they haue caried awaye, yee and slayne the seruauntes with the swearde: and I only am D gottē awaye, to tell the. Whyle he was spea kinge, there came yet another, ād sayde: Thy sonnes and doughters were eatinge ād drynkinge wyne in their eldest brothers house, ād sodenly there came a mightie greate wynde out off the South, and smote the iiij. corners of the house: which fell vpon thy children, so that they are deed: and I am gotten awaye alone, to tell the.

Then Job stode vp, and rente his clothes
shaued his heade, fell downe vpon the groude, worshipped, and sayde: Naked came I cls.5.c out of my mothers wombe, and naked shall Tim.6.b I turne thither agayne. The LORDE gaue, and the LORDE hath taken awaye (the LOR-DE hath done his pleasure) now blessed be name off the LORDE. In all these thinges dyd Job not offende, ner murmured foolish ly agaynst God.

The II. Chapter.

IT happened also apon a tyme, that when the seruauntes of God came & stode before the LORDE, Sathan came also amonge them, and stode before him.
And the LORDE sayde vnto Sathan:
From whence commest thou? Sathan answered and sayde: I haue gone about the lō de, and walked thorow it.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathan:
Hast thou not considered my seruaunt Job,
how that he is an innocent & vertuous man
soch one as feareth God, and eschueth euell,
and that there is none like him in the londe?
But thou mouedest me agaynst him, to pu-nysh him: yet is it in vayne, for he contyneth still in his godlynesse.

Sathan answered the LORDE, and sayde:
Skynne for skynne: yee a man will geue all euer he hath, for his life. But laye thine hon-de vpon him, touch him once vpon the bone and flesh, and (I holde) he shall curse the to thy face. Then sayde the LORDE vnto Sathā: lo, there hast thou him in thy power, but spare his life.

So wente Sathan forth from the LOR- B DE, and smote Job with maruelous sore byles, from the sole off the fote vnto his crow-ne: so that he sat vpon the grounde in the as shes, and scraped of the etter off his sores with a potsherde.

Then sayde his wife vnto him: Dest thou yet cōtynue in thy perfectnesse? curse God, &
dye. But Job sayde vnto her: Thou speakest like a foolish womā. Seinge we haue receā-ued prosperite at the honde of God, wherfo
re shulde we not be content with aduersite al so? In all these thinges, dyd not Job synne with his lippes.

Now when Jobs frendes herde of all C trouble, that happened vnto him, there came thre off them, euery one from his owne place: namely, Eliphas the Themanite, Baldad the Suhite, and Sophar the Naa-mathite.

For they were agreed together to come,
to shewe their compassion vpon him, and to comforte him. So when they liste vp their eyes a farre off, they knewe him not.

Then they cried, and wepte: then euery one off them rente his clothes, and spryncked dust vpon their heades in the ayre. They sat them downe by him also vpon the ground, vij. dayes and vij. nightes. Nether was there eny of them that spake one worde vnto him, for they sawe that his payne was very greate.

The III. Chapter.

A Fter this opened Job his mouth, and cursed his daye, and sayde: lost be that daye, wherin I was borne: and the night, in the which it was sayde: there is a manchilde conceaued. The same daye be turned to darcknesse, and not regarded of God from above, nether be shyned vpō w' light: but be couered with darcknesse, and the shadowe of death. Let the dymme cloude fall vpon it, and let it be lapped in with sorowe. Let the darck storme ouercome ỳ night, let it not be reckened amonge the dayes off the yeare, ner counted in the monethes. Despysed be thas night, and discommended: let them that curse the daye, geue it their curse also, euen those that be ready to rayse vp Leviathan. Let the starres be dymme thorow darcknesse of it. Let it loke for light, but let it se none, nether the rysynge vp of the fayre morynge: because it shut not vp the wombe that bare me, ner hyd these sorowes fro myne eyes.

B Alas, why dyed I not in ỳ byrth? Why dyd not I perysh, as soone as I came out of mynmothers wōbe? Why set they me vpō ỳ kn̄ees? Why gaue they me suck with their brestes? Then shulde I now haue lyen still, I shulde haue slepte, and bene at rest: like as the kynges ād lordes of ỳ earth, which buylde them selues speciall places: As the princes that haue greate substaunce of golde, & their houses full of syluer. O that I vtterly had no beynge, or were as a thinge borne out of tyme (that is put asyde) ether as yonge children, which neuer sawe the light. There must the wicked ceasse from their tyranny, C there soch as are ouerlaboured, be at rest: there are those letten out fre, which haue bene in preson, so that they heare no more the voyce of the oppressoure: There are small and greate: the bonde man, and he that is fre frō his master.

Wherfore is the lighe geuen, to him that is in mysery? and life vnto them, that haue hevy hertes? (Which longe for death, and it commeth not: for yf they might fynde their graue, they wolde be marueilous glad, as those that dygge vp treasure) To the man whose waye is hyd, which God kepeth backe from him.

This is the cause, that I syghe before I eate, and myn roaringes fall out like a water floude. For the thynge that I feared, is come vpon me: and the thynge that I was afrayed of, is happened vnto me. Was I not happy? had I not quyetnesse? Was I not in rest? And now commeth soch mysery vpon me.

The IIII. Chapter.

THen answered Eliphas of Theman A and sayde vnto him: Yf we begynne to comon with the, peraduēture thou wilt be myscontent, but who can withholde himself from speakynge? Beholde, thou hast bene a teacher of many, and hast comforted the weery hondes.

Thy wordes haue set vp those that were fallen, thou hast refresshed the weake knees. But now that the plage is come vpon the, thou shrēckest awaye: now that it hath touched thyself, thou art faint harted. Where is Tob.2.d now thy feare of God, thy stedfastnesse, thy pacience, and the perfectnesse of thy life? Considre (I praye the) who euer perysshed, beynge an innocent? Or, when were the godly destroyed? As for those that plowe wickednesse (as I haue sene myself) and sowe myschefe, they reape ỳ same. For whō God bloweth vpon them, they perysh, and are destroyed thorow the blast of his wrath. The roaringe of the lyon, the cryenge off the lyonesse, & ỳ teth off ỳ lyōs whelpes are brokē. The greate lyon perysheth, because he cā get no pray and the lyons whelpes are scatred abrode. Gala.5.a

There is spoken vnto me a thynge in coun B cell, which hath geuen a terrible sounde in myne eare, with a vision in the night, when men are fallen a slepe. Soch feare and drede came vpō me, that all my bones shoke. And when the wynde passed ouer by me, the hayres of my flesh stode vp. Dan.10.d

Then stode there one before me, whose face I knewe not: an ymage there was, and the wether was still, so that I herde this voyce: Maye a man be iustified before God? Maye there eny man be iudged to be clene, by reason of his owne workes? Beholde, he hath founde vnsayth fulnesse amonge his owne seruauntes, and proude disobedience amonge his angels. Iob.25.a Psal.142. Rom.3.b Iob.15.b 2.Pe.2.d

How moch more thē shal they (that dwell

in houses of claye, whose foundacion is but earth) be moth eaten: They shalbe destroyed from the mornynge vnto the euenynge: yee they shall perish, or euer they be aware: and be taken awaye so clene, that none of thē shall remayne, but be deed, or euer they be aware off it.

The V. Chapter.

A CAme me one els, yf thou canst fynde eny: yee loke aboute the, vpon eny of the holy men. As for the foolish man displeasure kylleth him, and anger slayeth yͤ ignoraunt. I have sene my self, when the foolish was deperoted, that his bewty was sodēly destroyed: that his children were without prosperite or health: that they were slayne in the dore, and no mā to delyuer them: that his harueste was eaten vp off the hungrie: that the weapened man had spoyled it, and that the thurstie had droncke vp his riches. It is not the earth that bryngeth forth trauayle, nether commeth sorow out of yͤ groūde: but it is man, that is borne vnto mysery, like as the byrde for to fle.

B But now will I speake off the LORDE, and talke of God: which doth thinges, that are vnsearcheable, and marueles without nō bre: Which geueth rayne vpō the earth, and poureth water vpon all thinges: which setteth vp them of lowe degre, and sendeth prosperite, to those that are in heuynesse: Which destroyeth the deuyces of the sotyll, so that they are not able to perfourme the thynges that they take in hōde: which compaseth yͤ wyse in their owne craftynesse, and ouerthroweth the councell of the wicked: In so moch that they runne in to darcknesse by fayre daye, and grope aboute them at the noone daye, like as in the night.

And so he delyuereth the poore from the swearde, from their mouth, and from the hōde of the cruell: that the poore maye haue hope, and that the mouth of the oppressoure maye be stopped.

C Behold, happie is the man, whom God punysheth: therfore, despyse not thou yͤ chastenynge of the Allmighty. For though he make a wounde, he geueth a medicyne agayne: though he smyte, his honde maketh whole agayne.

He delyuereth the out of fyre troubles, so that in the seuenth there can no harme touch the. In the myddest of honger he saueth yͤ from death: and when it is warre, from the power of the swearde.

He shall kepe the from the perlous tonge so that when trouble commeth, thou shalt not nede to feare. In destruccion and derth thou shalt be mery, and shalt not be afrayed for the beastes of the earth: But the castels in the londe shal be confederate with the, and the beastes of the felde shall gene the peace:

Yee thou shalt se, that thy dwellynge place shalbe in rest: thou shalt beholde thy substaunce, and be nemore punyshed for synne. Thou shalt se also, that thy sede shall encrese, and that thy posterite shalbe as the grasse vpon the earth. Thou shalt come to thy graue in a fayre age, like as yͤ corne sheues are brought in to the barne in due season. Lo, this is the matter, as we oure selues haue proued by experience. Ther fore now that thou heareste it, take better hede to thy self.

The VI. Chapter.

JOb answered, and sayde: O that my A misery weere weyed, and my punyshment layed in the balaunces: for then shulde it be heuyer, then the sonde of the see. This is the cause, that my wordes are so sorouefull.

For the allmighty hath shott at me with his arowes, whose indignacion hath dronckē vp my spirete, and yͤ terrible feares of God fight agaynst me. Doth the wilde asse reare when he hath grasse? Or crieth the oxe, whē he hath fodder ynough? Maye a thynge be eaten vnseasoned, or without salte? What taist hath yͤ white within the yoke an egge? The thinges that some tyme I might not awaye withall, are now my meate for very sorow. O that I might haue my desyre: O yf God wolde graunte me the thynge, that I longe for: That he wolde begynne and smyte me: that he wolde let his honde go, and hew me downe. Then shulde I haue some cōfort: yee I wolde desyre him in my payne, that he shulde not spare, for I will not be agaynst yͤ wordes of the holy one.

What power haue I to endure? Or: what B is myne ende, that my soule might be patient? Is my strength the strength of stones? Or is my flesh made of brasse? Am I able to helpe my self? Is not my strength gone fro me, like as yf one withdrewe a good dede from his frende, and forsoke the feare of God? Myne owne brethren passe ouer by me as the waterbroke, that hastely runneth thorow yͤ valleys. But they that feare the horefrost, the snowe shal fall vpon them.

When their tyme cõmeth, they shalbe destroyed and perishe: and when they be set on fyre, they shalbe remoued out of their place. For the pathes yͭ they go in, are croked: they haist after vayne thinges, and shal perish. Consyder the pathes off Theman, & the wayes off Saba, wherin they haue put their trust. Confounded are they, that put eny cõfidence in them: For whē they came to optey ne the thynges that they loked for, they were brought to confucion.

C Enē so are ye also come vnto me: but now that ye se my mysery, ye are afrayed. Dyd I desyre you, to come hyther? Or, to gene me eny off youre substaunce? To delyuer me me from the enemies honde, or to saue me from the power off the mightie? Teach me and I will holde my tonge: and yf I do erre, shewe me wherin.

Wherfore blame ye then the wordes, that are well and truly spoken? which of you can reproue them? Sauynge only that ye are sotyll to check mens sayenges, and can speake many wordes in the wynde. Ye fall vpon the fatherlesse, ād go aboute to ouerthrowe your owne frende. Wherfore loke not only vpon me, but vpon youre selues: whether I lye, or no. Turne in to youre owne selues (I praye you) be indifferent iudges, and consydre myne vngyltinesse: whether there be eny vnrightuousnesse in my tonge, or vayne wordes in my mouth.

The VII. Chapter.

A Is not the life off mā vpon earth a very batayll? Are not his dayes, like the dayes of an hyred seruaunte? For like as a bonde seruaunt desyreth the shadowe, and as an hyrelinge wolde fayne haue an ende of his worke: Euen so haue I laboured wholemonethes longe (but in vayne) and many a carefull nyght haue I tolde. When I layed me downe to slepe, I sayde: O when shal I ryse? Agayne, I longed sore for the night. Thus am I full off sorowe, till it be darcke. My flesh is clothed with wormes, fylthinesse and dust: my sklynne is wythered, and crompled together: my dayes passe ouer more spedely, thē a weuer can weue out his webbe, and are gone, or I am awarre. O remembre, that my life is but a wynde, ād that myne eye shal nomore se the pleasures therof yee and that none other mans eye shall se me eny more. For yf thou fasten thine eyes vpon me, I come to naught. like as a cloude is cõsumed and vanyshed awaye, euen so he that goeth downe to hell, commeth nomore vp, ner turneth agayne in to his house, neither shall his place knowe him eny more.

Therfore I will not spare my mouth, but B will speake in the trouble of my sprete, in yͭ bytternesse of my mynde will I talke. Am I a see or a whalfysh, that thou kepest me so in preson? When I thynke: my bedd shall comforte me, I shall haue some refresshinge by talkynge with myself vpon my couche: Thē troublest thou me with dreames, ād makest me so afrayed thorow visions, that my soule wysshyth rather to be hanged, and my bones to be deed. Dan. 8. a

I can se no remedy, I shall lyue nomore: O spare me then, for my dayes are but vayne What is man, that thou hast him in soch reputacion, and settest so moch by him? Thou takest diligent care for him, and sodēly doest thou tryen him. Matt. 6. c Deu. 8. a Gen. 22. a

Why goest thou not fro me, ner letest me alone, so longe till I swalow downe my spetle? I haue offended, what shal I do vnto yͭ, O thou preseruer off men? Why hast thou made me to stonde in thy waye, and am so heuy a burden vnto my self? Why doest thou not forgene me my synne? Wherfore takest thou not awaye my wickednesse? Beholde, now must I slepe in the dust: and yff thou seekest me tomorow in the mornynge, I shalbe gone.

The VIII. Chapter.

Then answered Baldad the Suhite, A and sayde: How longe wilt thou talke of soch thinges? how longe shal yͭ mouth speake so proude wordes? Doth God peruerte the thinge that is lawfull? Or, doth the Allmightie destroye the thynge that is right? Whē thy sonnes synned agaynst him, dyd not he punysh thē for their wickednesse? Iob. 1. c

Yff thou woldest now resorte vnto God by tymes, and make thine humble prayer to yͭ Allmightie: yf thou woldest lyue a pure and a godly life: shulde he not wake vp vnto the immediatly, & gene the the bewtie of righteousnesse agayne? In so moch, that where ī so euer thou haddest litle afore, thou shuldest now haue greate abundaunce. Enquere of them that haue bene before the, search diligently amonge thy forefathers: Namely, yͭ we are but of yesterdaye, and consydre not, that oure dayes vpon earth are buth a very shadow. They shall shewe the, they shall tell the, yee they will gladly confesse the same. Deu. 30. Psal. 144.

B Maye a reſſhe be grene without moyſtneſſe: maye the graſſe growe without water? No: but (or euer it be ſhot forth, and or euer it be gathered) it wythereth, before eny other herbe. Euen ſo goeth it with all them, that forget God: and euen thus alſo ſhal the ypocrytes hope come to naught. His confidence ſhalbe deſtroyed, for he truſteth in a ſpyders webbe.

He leeneth him vpō his houſe, but he ſhal not ſtonde: he holdeth him faſt by it, yet ſhal he not endure. Oft tymes a thinge doth floriſh, and men thynke that it maye abyde the Sonneſhyne: it ſhuteth forth the braunches in his garden, it taketh many rotes, in ſo moch that it is like an houſe off ſtones. But yf it be taken out off his place, euery man denyeth it, ſayenge: I knowe the not. Lo, thus is it w' him, that reioyſeth in his owne doinges: and as for other, they growe out of the earth.

Beholde, God will not caſt awaye a vertuous man, nether wil he helpe the vngodly. Thy mouth ſhall be fyll with laughynge, and thy lyppes with gladneſſe. They that hate the, ſhalbe confounded, & ỹ dwellinges of ỹ vngodly ſhal come to naught.

The IX. Chapter.

A Pſal. 142. a Ro. 3. b Iob. 4. b 22. b. 25. a

IOb anſwered, and ſayde: As for ỹ I knowe it is ſo of a treuth, ỹ a man compared vnto God, can not be iuſtified. Yf he wil argue with him, he ſhall not be able to anſwere him vnto one amonge a thouſande. He is wyſe of hert, and mightie in ſtrength. Who euer proſpered, that toke parte agaynſt him? He tranſlateth the mōtaynes, or euer they be aware, & ouerthroweth them in his wrath. He remoueth the earth out of hir place, that hir pilers ſhake withall. He commaundeth the Sōne, & it ryſeth not: he cloſeth vp the ſtarres, as it were vnder a ſignet. He himſelf alone ſpredeth out ỹ heauens, and goeth vpon the wawes of the ſee. He maketh the waynes of heauen, the Orions, the * vij. ſtarres and the ſecrete places of the ſouth. He doth greate thinges, ſoch as are vnſearcheable, yee and wonders without nombre.

Amos. 5. a * Some call the ſeuen ſtarres, the clock ſonne with hir hekens.

Yf he came by me, I might not loke vpō him: yf he wente his waye, I ſhulde not perceaue it. Yf he be haſty to take eny thinge awaye, who wil make him reſtore it agayne? Who wil ſaye vnto him: what doeſt thou? B Eccls. 8. g Iere. 10. a He is God, whoſe wrath no man maye withſtōde: but the proudeſt of all muſt ſtoupe vnder him. How ſhulde I then anſwere him? or, what wordes ſhulde I fynde out agaynſt him? Yee though I be righteous, yet will I not geue him one worde agayne, but meekely ſubmytte my ſelf to my iudge. All be it that I call vpon him, and he heare me, yet am I not ſure, ỹ he hath herde my voyce: he troubleth me ſo with the tempeſt, and woundeth me out of meaſure without a cauſe. He will not let my ſprete be in reſt, but fylleth me w' bytterneſſe.

Yf men will ſpeake of ſtrength, he is the ſtōgeſt of all: yf mē will ſpeake of righteouſnes, who darre be my recorder? yf I will iuſtifie my ſelf, myne owne mouth ſhall cōdemne me: yf I will put forth my ſelf for a perfecte man, he ſhal proue me a wicked doer: for that I ſhulde be an innocent, my cōſcience knoweth it not, yee I my ſelf am weery off my life.

This one thīge wil I ſaye: he deſtroyeth both the righteous & vngodly. And though he ſlaye ſodenly w' the ſcourge, yet laugheth he at the punyſhment of the innocent. As for the worlde, he geueth it ouer into the power of the wicked, ſoch as the rulers be, whereof all londes are full. Is it not ſo? where is there eny, but he is ſoch one?

My dayes haue bene more ſwifte, then a runner: they are gone ſodenly, and haue ſene no good thinge. They are paſſed awaye, as the ſhippes that be good vnder ſale, and as the Aegle that haiſteth to the praye. When I am purpoſed to forget my complayninges to chaunge my countenaunce, and to cōforte my ſelf: then am I afrayed of all my werkes, for I knowe, thou fauoureſt not an euell doer. Yf I be then a wicked one, why haue I laboured in vayne? Though I waſſhed my ſelf with ſnowe water, and made myne hondes neuer ſo clene, yet ſhuldeſt thou dyppe me in ỹ myre, & myne owne clothes ſhulde defyle me. For he ỹ I muſt geue anſwere vnto, and with whom I go to lawe, is not a man as I am. Nether is there eny dayes man to repreue both the partes, or to laye his hōde betwixte vs. Let him take his rod awaye from me, yee let him make me no more afrayed of him, and then ſhal I anſwere him without eny feare. For as longe as I am in ſoch fearfulneſſe, I can make no anſwere: And why? it greueth my ſoule to lyue.

The X. Chapter.

NEuertheleſſe, now will I put forth my wordes: I wil ſpeake out of the very heuyneſſe off my ſoule, and wil

saye vnto God: O do not condemne me, but shewe me the cause, wherfore thou iudgest me on this maner. Thinkest thou it well done, to oppresse me, to cast me of (beinge a worke of thy hondes) and to manteyne the counsell of the vngodly? Hast thou flesh thy eyes then, or doest thou loke as man loketh? Are thy dayes as the dayes of man, and thy yeares as mans yeares? that thou makest soch inquisicion for my wickednesse, and searchest out my synne? where as (notwithstondinge) thou knowest that I am no wicked person, & that there is no man able to delyuer me out of thine honde. Thy hondes haue made me, & fashioned me altogether rounde about, wilt thou then destroye me sodēly? O remembre (I beseke the) how that thou madest me of the moulde of the earth, and shalt bryngeme to earth agayne.

Hast thou not milked me, as it were mylck: and turned me to cruddes like chese? Thou hast couered me with synne and flesh, and ioyned me together with bones & synowes. Thou hast graunted me life, and done me good: and the diligent hede that thou tokest vpon me, hath preserued my spirite.

Though thou hydest these thinges in thine hert, yet am I sure, that thou remembrest thē all. Wherfore diddest thou kepe me, when I synned, and hast not clensed me fro myne offence? If I do wickedly, wo is me therfore: If I be righteous, yet darre I not lift vp my heade: so full am I of confucion, and se myne owne misery.

Thou huntest me out (beynge in heynesse) as it were a Lyon, and troublest me out of measure. Thou bringest fresh witnesses agaynst me, thy wrath increasest thou vpon me, very many are the plages that I am in. Wherfore hast thou brought me out of my mothers wombe? O that I had perished, & that no eye had sene me. If they had caried me to my graue, as soone as I was borne, then shulde I be now, as though I had neuer bene.

Shall not my short life come soone to an ende? O holde the fro me, let me alone, that I maye ease my self a litle: afore I go thyther, from whence I shal not turne agayne: Namely, to that londe of darcknesse & shadowe of death: yee into that darck clowdy londe & deadly shadowe, where as is no order, but terrible feare as in the darcknesse.

The XI. Chapter.

THen answered Sophar the Naamathite, and sayde: Shulde not he that maketh many wordes, be answered? Shulde he that bableth moch, be commended therin? Shulde men gene eare vnto the only? Thou wilt laugh other men to scorne, & shal no body mocke the agayne? Wilt thou saye vnto God: The thinge that I take in honde, is perfecte, & I am clene in thy sight? O that God wolde speake, and open his lippes agaynst the, that he might shewe the (out of his secrete wysdome) how many folde his lawe is: then shuldest thou knowe, that God had forgotten the, because of thy synnes.

Wilt thou synde out God with thy serchinge? wilt thou attayne to the perfectnesse of the Allmightie? He is hyer thē heuē, what wilt thou do? Deper thē hell, how wilt thou then knowe him? His length exceadeth the length of the earth, and his bredth ſ bredth of the ses. Though he turne all thinges vp syde downe, close them in, or thrust thē together, who darre check him therfore?

For it is he, that knoweth the vanite of men: he seyth their wickednesse also, shulde he not then considre it? A vayne body exalteth him self, and the sonne of man is like a wylde asses foale. If thou haddest new a right herte, & liftest vp thine hondes towarde him: yf thou woldest put awaye the wickednesse, which thou hast in honde, so that no vngodlynesse dwelt in thy house: Then mightest thou lift vp thy face without shame, thē shuldest thou be sure, and haue no nede to faare. B 1.Re.16. Iere.17.c

Then shuldest thou forget thy misery, and thynke nomore vpon it, then vpon the waters that runne by. Then shulde thy life be as cleare as the noone daye, and sprynge forth as the mornynge. Then mightest thou haue comforth, in the hope that thou hast: & slepe quyetly, when thou art buried. Then shuldest thou take thy rest, and no mā to make the afrayed, yee many one shulde set moch by the. As for the eyes of the vngodly, they shal be consumed, and not escape: their hope shalbe misery and sorow of mynde.

The XII. Chapter.

SO Job answered, and sayde: Then (no doute) ye are the men alone, and wysdome shal perish with you. But I haue vnderstōdinge as well as ye, and am no lesse then ye. Yee who knoweth not these thinges? Thus he that calleth vpō God, and whom God heareth, is mocked of his neyghboure: the godly & innocent man is laughed to scorne. Godlynesse is a light despysed in ſ hertes of the rich, & is set for them to stomble vpon. A

The houses of robbers are in wealth and prosperite, & they that maliciously medle agaynst God, dwel without care: yee God geueth all thinges richely with his honde.

B Axe the catell, & they shal enfourme the: the foules of the ayre, and they shall tell ý: Speake to the earth, and it shall shewe the: Or to the fyshes of the see, and they shal certifie the. What is he, but he knoweth, that ý hõde of the LORDE made all these? In whose honde is the soule of every lyuynge thinge, and the breth of all men. Haue not the eares pleasure in hearinge, and the mouth in tastinge the thinge that it eateth? Amonge olde personnes there is wyßdome, and amonge the aged is vnderstõdinge. Nee with God is wyßdome and strength, it is he that hath councell & forknowlege. Ý he breake downe a thinge, who can set it vp agayne? Ý he shutt a thinge, who wil open it? Beholde, ý he witholde the waters, they drye vp: Ý he let thẽ go, they destroye the earth. With him is strength and wyßdome: he knoweth both the disceauer, and him that is disceaued.

C He carieth awaye the wyse men, as it were a spoyle, and bryngeth the iudges out of their wyttes. He lowseth the gyrdle of kynges, and gyrdeth their loynes with a bonde. he ledeth awaye the prestes into captiuyte, and turneth the mightie vp syde downe. He taketh the verite from out of the mouth, & disapoynteth ý aged of their wyßdome. He poureth out confucion vpon prynces, and cõforteth them that haue bene oppressed. Loke what lyeth hyd in darcknesse, he declareth it opẽly: and the very shadowe of death bringeth he to light. He both increaseth the people, and destroyeth them: he maketh them to multiplie, and dryueth them awaye. He chaungeth the herte of the prynces and kynges of the earth, and disapoynteth them: so that they go wãdringe out of the waye, and grope in the darcke without light, stackeringe to and fro like droncken men.

The XIII. Chapter.

A LO, all this haue I sene with myne eye, herde with myne eare, & vnderstonde it. Loke what ye knowe, that same do I knowe also, nether am I inferior vnto you. Nevertheless I am purposed to talke with the Allmightie, and my desyre is to comon with God. As for you, ye are worke masters of lyes: and vnprofitable phisicians altogether. Wolde God ye kepte youre tonge, that ye might be taken for wyse men. Ther fore heare my wordes, and pondre the sentence of my lippes. Will ye make answere for God with lyes, and mãteyne him with disceate? Wil ye accepte ý personne of God, and intreate for him? Shal that helpe you, when he calleth you to rekenynge? Thynke ye to begyle him, as a man is begyled? Punysh you shall he and reprooue you, ý ye do secretly accepte eny personne. Shall he not make you afrayed, when he sheweth himself? Shal not his terrible feare fall vpõ you? youre remembraunce shalbe like the dust, & youre pryde shalbe turned to claye.

Holde youre tonges now, and let me speake, for there is some thinge come in to my mynde. Wherfore do I beare my flesh in my teth, and my soule in myne hondes? Lo, there is nether cõforte ner hope for me, ý he wil slaye me. But ý I shewe and reprooue myne owne wayes in his sight, he is euen the same, that maketh me whole: and why? there may no Ypocrite come before him. Heare my wordes, and pondre my sayenges with youre eares. Beholde, though sentence were geuen vpon me, I am sure to be knowne for vngilty. What is he, that will go to lawe with me? For ý I holde my tonge, I shal dye. Nevertheless graunte me ij. thinges, and then will I not hyde my self from the.

Withdrawe thine honde fro me, & let not the fearfull dredе of the make me afrayed. And then sende for me to the lawe, ý I maye answere for my self: or els, let me speake, and geue thou the answere. How greate are my myßdedes & synnes? Let me knowe my trãsgressions & offences. Wherfore hydest thou thy face, and holdest me for thine enemye. Wilt thou be so cruell & extreme vnto a flyenge leaf, and folowe vpon dreye stubble? that thou layest so sharply to my charge, and wilt vtterly vndoo me, for ý synnes of my youthe? Thou hast put my fote in the stockes: thou lokest narowly vnto all my pathes, & marckest the steppes of my fete: where as I (notwithstondinge) must consume like as a foule carion, and as a cloth that is moth eaten.

The XIIII. Chapter.

MAn that is borne of a woman, hath but a shorte tyme to lyue, and is full of dyuerse miseries. He cõmeth vp, and falleth awaye like a floure. He flyeth as it were a shadowe, and never continueth in one state. Thinkest thou it now well done, to open thine eyes vpon soch one, and to bringe me before the in iudgment? Who can make it cleane, that commeth of an vncleane thinge? No body. The dayes of man are shorte, ý nembre of his monethes are knowne only vnto the. Thou hast apoynted him his bõm des, he can not go beyonde them. Go from him, that he maye rest a litle: vntill his daye come, which he loketh for, like as an hyrelinge doth.

B Yf a tre be cutt downe, there is some hope yet, that it will sproute and shute forth the braunches againe: For though a rote be waxen olde and deed in the grounde, yet whē the stocke getteth the sent of water, it will budde, and bringe forth bowes, like as when it was first planted. But as for man, when he is deed, perished and consumed awaye, what becommeth of him? The floudes when they be dryed vp, & the ryuers when they be emptie, are fylled agayne thorow the flowinge waters of the see: but when man slepeth, he ryseth not agayne, vntill the heauen perish: he shal not wake vp ner ryse out of his slepe. O that thou woldest kepe me, and hyde me in the hell, vntill thy wrath were stilled: & to appointe me a tyme, wherin thou mightest remembre me. Maye a deed man lyue agayne? All the dayes of this my pilgremage am I lokynge, when my chaunginge shal come. Yf thou woldest but call me, I shulde obeie the: only despyse not the worke of thine owne hondes.

C For thou hast nombred all my goynges, yet be not thou to extreme vpon my synnes. Thou hast sealed vp myne offences, as it were in a bagg: but be mercifull vnto my wickednesse. The mountaynes fall awaye at the last, the rockes are remoued out of their places, the waters pearse thorow the very stones by litle and litle, the floudes wash the awaye the grauell & earth: Euen so destroyest thou the hope of man in like maner. Thou preuaylest agaynst him, so that he passeth awaye: thou chaungest his estate, and puttest him from the. Whether his children come to worshipe or no, he can not tell: And yf they be men of lowe degre, he knoweth not. Whyle he lyueth, his flesh must haue trauayle: and whyle the soule is in him, he must be in sorowe.

The XV. Chapter.

A Then answered Eliphas the Themanite, and sayde: Shulde a wyse man geue soch an answere (as it were one that spake in the wynde) and fyll his stomacke with anger? Thou reprouest w̄ wordes, that are nothinge wroth: and speakest thynges, which can do no good. As for shame, thou hast set it aside, els woldest thou not make so many wordes before God: but thy wickednesse teacheth thy mouth, and so thou hast chosen the a craftie tonge. Thine owne mouth condemneth the, and not I: yee thine owne lippes shappe the an answere. Art thou the first man, that euer was borne? Or, wast thou made before the hylles? hast thou herde the secrete councell of God, that all wyssdome is to litle for y? What knowest thou, y we knowe not? What vnderstondest thou, but we can the same? With vs are olde and aged men, yee soch as haue lyued longer then thy forefathers.

Dost thou nomore regarde the comforte of God? but thy wicked wordes wil not suffre the. Why doth thine herte make the so proude? Why stondest thou so greatly in thine owne conceate? Where vnto loke thine eyes, y thy mynde is so pufft vp agaynst God & letteste soch wordes go out of thy mouth? What is man, that he shulde be vncleane? what hath he (which is borne of a woman) wherby he might be knowne to be righteous? Beholde, he hath founde vnfaithfulnesse amōge his owne sanctes: yee the very heauens are vnclene in his sight. How moch more then an abhominable and vyle mā, which dryncketh wickednesse like water? I will tell the, heare me: I wil shewe the a thinge, that I knowe: which wyse men haue tolde, & hath not bene hyd from their fathers: vnto whom only the londe was geuen, that no straunger shulde come amonge them. B Iob 4. b 1. Pet. 1. d

The vngodly despayreth all the dayes of his life, & the nombre of a tyrauntes yeares is vnknowne. A fearfull sounde is euer in his eares, & when it is peace, yet feareth he destruccion: he beleueth never to be delyuered out of darckenesse, the swearde is allwaye before his eyes. When he goeth forth to get his lyuinge, he thinketh planely, that the daye of darckenesse is at houde. Sorow and carefulnesse make him afrayed, & cōpasse him rounde aboute, like as it were a kinge with his hoost redy to the battayll. For he hath stretched out his honde agaynst God, & armed himself agaynst y Allmightie. He runneth proudly vpon him, & with a stiff necke fighteth he agaynst him: where as he couereth his face with fatnesse, and maketh his body well lykynge. Therfore shall his dwellynge be in desolate cities, & in houses which no mā inhabiteth, but are become heapes of stones. C Gen. 4. b

He shall not be rich, nether shall his substaunce continue, ner encrease vpon earth. He shal never come out of darckenesse, the flame shal drye vp his braunches, with y blast of the mouth of God shal he be take awaie. He wil nether applye himself to faithfulnes ner treuth, so sore is he diseased w̄ vanite. D

He shall perish, afore his tyme be worne out, and his honde shal not be grene. He shal be pluckte of as an vntymely grape from ỹ wyne, and shal let his floure fall, as the olyue doth. For the congregacion of Ypocrites is vnfrute full, & the fyre shal consume the houses of soch, as are gredy to receaue giftes. He conceaueth trauayle, he beareth myschefe, & his body bryngeth forth disceate.

The XVI. Chapter.

A Job answered, and sayde: I haue oft tymes herde soch thinges. Miserable geuers of comforte are ye, all the sorte of you. Shall not thy vayne wordes come yet to an ende? Or, hast thou yet eny more to saye? I conde speake, as ye do also. But wolde God, that youre soule were in my soules steade: then shulde I heape vp wordes agaynst you, and shake my heade at you. I shulde comforte you with my mouth, and release youre payne with ỹ talkinge of my lyppes. But what shall I do? For all my wordes, my sorow wil not ceasse: and though I holde my tõge, yet wil it not departe fro me. And now that I am full of payne, and all that I haue destroied (wherof my wryncles beare wytnesse) there stödeth vp a dyssembler to make me answere with lyes to my face. He is angrie at me, he hateth me, and gnasheth vpon me with his teth. Myne enemy slouleth vpon me with his eyes.

B They haue opened their mouthes wyde vpon me, and smytten me vpon the cheke despitefully, they haue eased thẽ selues thorow myne aduersite. God hath geuen me ouer to the vngodly, and delyuered me into the hondes of ỹ wicked. I was somtyme in wealth, but sodenly hath he brought me to naught. He hath taken me by the neck, he hath rente me, and set me, as it were a marck for him to shute at. He hath compased me rounde about with his dartes, he hath wounded my loynes, & not spared. My bowels hath he poured vpon the grounde. He hath geuẽ me one wounde vpon another, and is fallẽ vpon me like a giaunte. I haue sowed a sack cloth vpon my skynne, and lye with my strength in the dust.

3. Re. 22. d
Mar. 14. g

C My face is swollẽ with wepinge, & myne eyes are waxen dymme. Howbeit there is no wickednesse in my hondes, and my prayer is cleye. O earth, couer not my blonde, and let my crienge fynde no rowme. For lo, my witnesse is in heauen, and he that knoweth me, is aboue in the heyth. My frendes laugh me to scorne, but myne eye poureth out teares vnto God. Though a body might pleate wt God, as one man doth with another, yet the nombre of my yeares are come, & I must go the waye, from whence I shal not turne agayne.

The XVII. Chapter.

MY breth sayleth, my dayes are shortened, I am harde at deathes dore. I haue disceaued no man, yet must myne eye cõtinue in heyrynesse. O delyuer me, and set me by the, who shall then be able to thrust my hondes together? Thou hast with holdẽ their hertes from vnderstõdinge, therfore shall they not be set vp an hye. He promiseth his frẽdes parte of his good, but his owne childrẽ spende it. He hath made me as it were a byworde of the comon people, I am his gestinge stocke amõge thẽ. My countenaunce is heuy for very anger, & the membres of my body are become like a shadowe. Vertuous mẽ therfore shall wel cõsidre this, and the innocent shal take parte agaynst the Ypocrite.

A

B The righteous wil kepe his waye, and he ỹ hath cleane handes, wil euer be stronger & stronger. As for you, turne you, & get you hence, for I can not se one wyse mã amonge you. My dayes are past, my thoughtes are vanished awaye, which haue vexed myne herte, chaunginge the night into daye, & ỹ light into darcknes. Though I tary neuer so moch, yet the graue is my house, and I must make my bed in the darcke. I call corrupcion my father, and the wormes call I my mother and my sister. What helpeth then my longe tarienge? Or, who wil fulfill the thinge, that I loke for? All that I haue, shall go downe into the pytt, & lye with me in the dust.

The XVIII. Chapter.

THen answered Baldad the Suhite, and sayde: when wil ye make an ende of youre wordes? Marcke well, and considre, we wil speake also. Wherfore are we counted as beestes, & reputed so vyle in youre sight? Why destroyest thou thy self with anger? Shal ỹ earth be forsaken, or the stones remoued out of their place becãse of ỹ? Shal not the light of the vngodly be put out? yee the flame of his fyre shal not burne. The light shalbe darcke in his dwellinge, & his candle shalbe put out with him. His presumptuous goinges shal be kept in, and his owne councell shal cast him downe. For his fete shalbe taken in the nett, and he shal walke in the snare. His sote shalbe holden in the gilder, and the thurstie shal catch him. The snare is layed for him in the grounde, and a pytfall in the waye.

B Fearfulnesse shal make him afrayed on every syde, that he shall not knowe, where to get out. Honger shalbe his substaunce, and myßfortune shall hange vpon him. He shall eate his owne slynne, yee his owne armes shall he devoure, beynge a firstborne of death. All his comforte and hope shalbe roted out of his dwellynge, very fearfulnesse shall brynge him to the kynge. Other men shall dwel in his house (which now is none of his)
and brymstone shalbe scatered vpon his ha-bitacion. His rotes shalbe dryed vp beneth, & aboue shall his harvest be cut downe. His remembraunce shall perish from the earth, &
his name shall not be prayséd in the stretes:
he shalbe dryven from the light into darcknesse, and be cast clene out of the worlde. He shall nether have children ner kynßfolkes amonge his people, no ner eny posterite in his countre: yonge & olde shalbe astonyshed at his death. Soch are now the dwellynges of the wicked, and this is ỹ place of him that knoweth not God. The XIX. Chap.

A IOb answered, & sayde: How lõge wil ye vexe my mynde, & trouble me with wordes? Lo, ten tymes have ye repro-ued me: are ye not ashamed, for to laugh me so to scorne? yf I go wronge, I go wronge to my self. But yf ye wil enhaunce yo selves a-gaynst me, & accuse me to be a wicked perso-ne because of the shame that is come vpon me: knowe this then, ỹ it is God, which hath handled me so violẽtly, & hath compased me aboute with his scourges. Behold, though aa I crie, yet violẽce is done vnto me, I can not be herde: Though I complane, there is none to geve sentẽce with me. He hath hedged vp my path, I cã not get awaye, he hath set darcknesse in my gate.

B He hath spoyled me of myne honoure, & taken the crowne awaye fro my heade. He hath destroyed me on every syde, and I am vndone: My hope hath he taken awaye fro me, as it were a tre plucte vp by the rote. His wrath is kyndled agaynst me, he taketh me, as though I were his enemy.

His men of warre came together, which made their waye ouer me, and besẽged my bb dwellinge rounde aboute. He hath put my brethren farre awaye fro me, and soch as we re of myne acquauntaunce, are become strãgers vnto me. Myne owne kynßfolkes have forsaken me, and my frendes have put me out of remembraunce. The seruauntes and may dens of myne owne house take me for a strãger, and I am become as an aleaunt in their sighe.

When I call vpon my seruãt, he geveth C me no answere: no though I praie him with my mouth. Myne owne wyfe may ye not abyde my breth, I am fayne to speake fayre vnto
the children of myne owne body. Yee the very deserte fooles despyse me, and when I am gone from them, they speake evell vpon me.
All soch as were my most familiers, abhorre me: and they whom I loved best, are turned agaynst me. My bone hangeth to my slynne, and the flesh is awaye, only there is left me the slynne aboute my teth. Have pite vp-on me, have pite vpon me (o ye my frendes)
for the hande of the LORDE hath touched me. Seynge God persecuteth me, wil ye vexe me also? Have ye not yet ynough of the trouble of my flesh?

O that my wordes were written, O that D
they were put in a boke: wolde God they we re grauẽ wt an yron pẽne in leade or in stone.
For I am sure, that my redemer lyveth, and that I shall ryse out of the earth in the latter daye: that I shal be clothed againe with this slynne, and se God in my flesh. Yee I my self shal beholde him, not with other but with these same eyes. My reynes are consumed within me, when yee saye: Why do not we persecute him? we have founde an occasion agaynst him. But bewarre of the swear de, for the swearde wylbe avenged of wicked nesse, and be sure, that there is a iudgment.

The XX. Chapter.

THen answered Sophar the Naama A thite, and sayde: For the same cause do my thoughtes compell me to an-swere. And why? my mynde is tossed here and there. I have sufficiently herde the checkynge & repro se, therfore am I purposed to make answere after my vnderstõdinge. Knowest thou not this, namely: that from the begynninge (euer sence the creacion of man vpon earth) the prayse of the vngodly hath bene shorte, and that the ioye of Hypocrytes continued but ỹ twincklinge of an eye? Though he be magnified vp to the heauẽ, so that his heade reacheth vnto the cloudes: yet he perisheth at the last like donge: In so moch ỹ
they which have sene him, saye: Where is he?
He vanysheth as a dreame, so that he can no more be founde, & passeth awaye as a vision in ỹ night. So that the eye which sawe him before, getteth now no sight of him, & his pla ce knoweth him nomore. His childrẽ go a beg ginge, their handes bringe thẽ to sorow and heuynesse.

From his youth his bones are ful of vyce, B which shall lie downe wt him in ỹ earth. Whẽ wickednesse is swete in his mouth, he hydeth it vnder his tonge. That he fauoureth, that wyll he not forsake, but kepeth it close in his throte. The meate that he eateth, shalbe turned to the poyson of serpētes within his body. The riches ỹ he deuoureth, shall he perbreake agayne, for God shal drawe them out of his bely. The serpentes heade shall sucke him, and the adders tonge shall slaye him: so that he shal nomore se the ryuers and brookes of hony and butter: But laboure shal he, & yet haue nothinge to eate. Greate trauayle shal he make for riches, but he shal not enioye them. And why? he hath oppressed the poore, and not helped them; houses hath he spoyled, and not buylded them. His bely coude neuer be fylled, therfore shall he perish in his couetousnesse. He deuoured so gredely, ỹ he left nothinge behynde, therfore his goodes shal not prospere. Though he had plenteousnesse of euerythinge, yet was he poore, & therfore he is but a wretch on euery syde.

Eccls. 5.b

For though ỹ wicked haue neuer so moch to fyll his bely, yet God shal sende his wrath vpon him, and cause his battayll to rayne ouer him: so that yf he fle the yron weapens, he shall be shott with the stele bowe. The arowe shal be taken forth, & go out at his backe, and a glisteringe swearde thorow ỹ hall of him, feare shal come vpō him. There shal no darcknes be able to hyde him. An vnkynded fyre shal consume him, and loke what remayneth in his house, it shall be destroyed. The heauen shall declare his wickednesse, & the earth shal take parte agaynst him. The substaunce that he hath in his house, shalbe taken awaye and perish, in the daye of the LORDES wrath. This is the porcion that ỹ wicked shal haue of God, and the heretage that he maye loke for of the LORDE.

The XXI. Chapter.

AIob answered, and sayde: O heare my wordes, and amende yo' selues. Suffre me a litle, that I maye speake also, and thē laugh my wordes to scorne, yf ye will. Is it with a man, that I make this disputacīō? Which yf it were so, shulde not my sprete be thē in sore trouble? Marck me well, be abasshed, and laye youre hāde vpon youre mouth. For whē I ponder & consider this, I am afrayed, and my flesh is smytten with feare. Wherfore do wicked mē lyue in health and prosperite, come to their olde age, & increase in riches? Their childers children lyue in their sight, & their generacion before their eyes. Their houses are safe from all feare, for the rodd of God doth not smyte thē. Their bullocke gendreth, and that not out of tyme: their cow calueth, and is not vnfruteful.

Heb. 12.a

They sende forth their children by flockes, and their sonnes lede the daunce. They bere with them tabrettes and harpes, and haue instrumentes of musick at their pleasure. They spende their dayes in welthynesse: but sodenly they go downe to hell. They saye vnto God: go from vs, we desyre not the knowlege of thy wayes. What maner of felowe is the Allmightie, that we shulde serue him: What profit shulde we haue, to submitte oure selues vnto him? Lo, there is vtterly no goodnesse in them, therfore will not I haue to do with the councell of the vngodly. How oft shal the candle of ỹ wicked be put out: how oft commeth their destruccion vpon them? O what sorowe shall God geue them for their parte in his wrath? Yee they shal be euen as chaffe before the wynde, and as dust that the storme carieth awaye.

And though God saue their childrē from soch sorowe, yet wil he so reward thē selues, that they shal knowe it. Their owne destruccion and misery shal they se with their eyes, and drynke of the fearfull wrath of the Allmighty. For what careth he, what become of his houshold after his death? whose monethes passe awaye swifter then an arowe. In as moch thē as God hath ỹ hyest power of all, who can teach him eny knowlege? One dyeth now when he is mightie & at his best, rich and in prosperite: euen when his bowels are at the fattest, and his bones full of mary. Another dyeth in sorowe and heuynesse, and neuer had good daies. Now slepe they both a like in the earth, & the wormes couer them. But I knowe what ye thinke, yee and what ye ymagin agaynst me vnrighteously. For ye saye: where is the princes palace? where is the dwellynge of the vngodly: Are eny man that goeth by the waye, and (yf ye will not regarde their tokens & dedes) he shal tell you, that the wicked is kepte vnto the daye of destruccion, and that the vngodly shalbe brought forth in the daye of wrath. Who darre reproue him for his wayes to his face? who rewardeth him for the vngraciousnesse that he doth? Yet shal he be brought to his graue, and watch amonge the heape of the deed. Thē shal he be fayne to be buried amōge the stones by the broke syde. All men must folowe him, & there are innumerable gone before him. O how vayne is the comforte ỹ ye geue me? Are not youre answeres cleane contrary to right and treuth?

The XXII. Chapter.

SO Eliphas the Themanite gaue answere, & sayde: ¶ Maye a man be cōpared vnto God in wysdome, though he seme to him self, for to be like him? What pleasure hath God in ỹ thou art righteous? Or what doth it profite him, ỹ thy waies are perfecte? Is he afrayed to reproue the, & to steppe forth wt the into iudgment? Cōmeth not this for ỹ greate wickednesse, & for thine vngracious dedes which are innumerable? Thou hast takē the pledge from thy brethrē for naught, & robbed the naked of their clothinge: To soch as were weery, hast thou geuē no water to drynke, thou hast withdrawē bred frō the hungrie: Shulde soch one thē as vseth violēce, mōge & oppression (doinge all thinges of parcialyte, & hauynge respecte of persōnes) dwell in the lōde? Thou hast sent wyddowes awaye emptie and oppressed the poore fatherlesse.

¶ Therfore art thou compased aboute with snares on euery syde, & sodēly vexed wt feare. Shuldest thou thē se no darcknesse? Shulde not the water floude runne ouer the? Now because ỹ God is hyer thē the heauens, & because thou seist ỹ the starres are so hye, wilt thou therfore saye: Tush, how shulde God knowe? Doth his dominion reach beyonde the cloudes? Tush, the cloudes couer him, ỹ he maye not se, for he dwelleth in heauen. Well, thou wilt kepe the olde waye, ỹ all wicked mē haue gone: both olde & yonge, whose foundacion is a runnynge water, which saye vnto God: go from vs, and after this maner: Tush, what wil the Allmightie do vnto vs? where as he (not with stōdinge) fylleth their houses wt all good. Which meanynge of the vngodly be farre frome. For wt ioy shal the godly, and with gladnesse shal the innocent se, that their increase shal be hewen downe, & their posterite consumed with the fyre.

¶ Therfore recōcile the vnto God, & be content, so shal all thinges prospere wt the right well. Receaue the lawe at his mouth, & laye vp his wordes in thine herte. For yf thou wilt turne to the Allmightie, thou shalt ston de fast, & all vnrighteousnesse shall be farre from thy dwellinge: he shal geue the an harueste, which in plenty & abundaunce shall excede the dust of the earth, and the golde of Ophir like ryuer stones. Yee the Allmightie his owne self shalbe thine harueste, & the heape of thy money. Then shalt thou haue thy delyte in the Allmightie, & lift vp thy face vnto God. Thē shalt thou make thy prayer vnto him, & he shal heare the, & thou shalt kepe thy promyses. Thē, loke what thou takest in honde, he shal make it to prospere with the, and the light shall shyne in thy wayes. For who so humbleth him self, him shal he set vp: and who so loketh mekely, shalbe healed. Yf thou be innocēt, he shal saue the: and thorow the vngiltynesse of thyne handes shalt thou be delyuered.

The XXIII. Chapter.

IOb answered, and sayd: My sayenge is yet this daye in bytternes, and my hande heuy amonge my groninges. O that I might se him & fynde him: O that I might come before his seate, to pleate my cause before him, and to fyll my mouth with argumentes: That I might knowe, what answere he wolde geue me: & that I might vnderstonde, what he wolde saye vnto me. Wil he pleate agaynst me with his greate power & strength, or wyll he leane him self vtterly vpon me? Oh no, let him not do so with me. But let hym geue me like power to go to lawe, then am I sure to wynne my matter. For though I go before, I fynde him not: yf I come behynde, I cā get no knowlege of him: Yf I go on the left syde to ponder his workes, I can not atteyne vnto them: Agayne, yf I go on the right syde, he hydeth him self, ỹ I can not se him. But as for my waye, he knoweth it: & trieth me as ỹ golde in ỹ fyre. Sap. 3. a 1. Pet. 1.

¶ Neuertheles my fete kepe his path, his hye strete haue I holden, and not gone out of it. I haue not forsaken the cōmaundemēt of his lippes, but loke what he charged me with his mouth, that haue I shutt vp in my herte. It is he him self alone, who will turne him back? he doth as him listeth, and bryngeth to passe what he wil. He rewardeth me into my bosome, & many other thinges mo doth he, as he maye by his power. This is ỹ cause, that I shrenke at his presence, so that when I considre him, I am afrayed of him. For in so moch as he is God, he maketh my herte soft: and seynge that he is Allmightie, he putteth me in feare. Thus can not I get out of darcknesse, the cloude hath so couered my face.

The XXIIII. Chapter.

COnsideringe then that there is not tyme hyd from the Allmightie, how happeneth it, that they which knowe him, wil not regarde his dayes? For some mē there be, that remoue other mēs londe markes: that robbe them of their catell, and kepe the same for their owne: that dryue awaye the asse of the fatherlesse: that take ỹ wyddowes ore for a pledge: that thrust the poore out of the waye, & oppresse the symple of the worl- Deu. 19. c 27. c Exo. 22. c Exo. 23. a manteyne the baren, & make them ỹ they can not beare, & vnto wyddowes they do no goo-od. They plucke downe the mightie w̄ their power, & when they them ſelues are gotten vp, they are neuer without feare, as longe as they liue. And though they might be ſafe, yet they wil not receaue it, for their eyes loke vpon their owne wayes. They are exalted for a litle, but ſhortly are they gone, brought to extreme powerte, & takē out of the waye: yea & vtterly plucte of as the eares of corne. Je it not ſo: Who wil thē reproue me as a lyar, & ſaye ỹ my wordes are nothinge worth?

The XXV. Chapter.

THen answered Baldad the Suhite, 2 & ſayde: Power & feare is with him aboue, that maketh peace (ſittinge) in his hyneſſe, whoſe men of warre are innume rable, and whoſe light aryſeth ouer all. But how maye a man cōpared vnto God, be iuſti fied? Or, how can he be clene, that is borne of a woman? Beholde, the Moone ſhyneth no thinge in compariſon to him, & the ſtarres are vnclene in his ſight. How moch more thē, mā, that is but corrupcion: and the ſonne of man, which is but a worme?

The XXVI. Chapter.

IOb answered, and ſayde: O how hel 2
peſt thou the weake? what comfort geueſt thou vnto him that hath no ſtrēgth? Where is ỹ coūcell ỹ thou ſhuldeſt geue him, which hath no wyſdome? Wilt thou ſo ſhewe thine excellent righteouſnes?
Before whom haſt thou ſpoken thoſe wor-des? Who made the breth to come out of ỹ mouth? The giauntes & worthies ỹ are ſlayne, & lye vnder ỹ worlde w̄ their cōpanions:
yee & all they which dwell beneth in the hell
are not hyd frō him, & the very deſtruccion it ſelf cā not be kepte out of his ſight. He ſtretcheth out ỹ north ouer the emptie, & hāgeth ỹ earth vpō nothinge. He byndeth ỹ water in his cloudes, that they fall not downe toge ther. He holdeth back his ſtole, that it cānot 3 be ſene, and ſpredeth his cloudes before it.

He hath cōpaſed the waters w̄ certayne bounds, vntill the daye & night come to an ende. The very pilers of heauē trēble & quake at his reproſe. He ſtilleth the ſee with his power, & thorow his wyſdome hath he ſet forth ỹ worlde. With his ſprete hath he gar niſhed the heauēs, & with his hande hath he wounded the rebellious ſerpēt. This is now a ſhorte ſumme of his doynges. But who is able ſufficiently to rehearce his workes?
Who can perceaue and vnderſtonde ỹ thon dre of his power? The XXVII. Chap.

IOb alſo proceaded and wēte forth in 2
his communicacion, ſayēge: As tru ly as God lyueth (which hath taken awaye my power fro me) & the Allmightie, that hath vexed my mynde: My lippes ſhall talke of no vanite, and my tonge ſhal ſpeake no diſceate, whyle my breth is in me, and as longe as the wynde (that God hath geuen
me) is in my noſtrels.

God forbydde, that I shulde graunte you re cause to be right. As for me, vntill myne ende come wil I neuer go fro myne innocency. My rightuous dealynge wil I kepe fast, & not forsake it: For my conscience repro-ueth me not in all my conuersacion. Therfore my-ne enemy shalbe founde as the vngodly, & he y taketh parte agaynst me, as the vnrightuous. What hope hath y Ypocrite, though he haue greate good, and though God geue him riches after his hertes desyre? Doth God heare him the sooner, whē he crieth vn to him in his necessite? Hath he soch pleasure & delyte in the Allmightie, that he darre allwaye call vpon God? I wil teach you in the name of God, & the thinge that I haue of y Allmightie, wil I not kepe from you. Beholde, ye stonde in yo owne conceate, as though ye knew all thinges. Wherfore then do ye go aboute w soch vayne wordes, sayēge: This is the porcion that the wicked shall haue of God, & the heretage that Tyrauntes shal re ceaue of y Allmightie. If he get many chil-drē, they shal perish w the swearde, & his pos teryte shall haue scarcenesse of bred. Loke whom he leaueth behinde him, they shal dye & be buried, & no man shall haue pite of his wyddowes. Though he haue as moch money as the dust of the earth, & raymēt as rea dy as the claye, he maye well prepare it: but the godly shal put it vpon him, and the inno cēt shal deale out the money. His house shal endure as the moth, & as a bothe that the watchman maketh. When the rich man dyeth, he carieth nothinge with him: he is gone in y twincklynge of an eye. Destruccion taketh holde vpō him as a water floude, & y tēpest stealeth him awaye in the night season. A vehement wynde carieth him hence, & departeth: a storme plucketh him out of his place. It rußsheth in vpon him, and spareth him not, he maye not escape from the power therof. Than clappemē their hōdes at him, yee and ieast of him, whē they loke vpon his place.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

There are places where syluer is moltē, & where golde is tryed: where yron is dygged out of the grounde, & stones resolued to metall. The darcknes shal on ce come to an ende, he can seke out the groun de of all thinges: the stones, the darcke, & the horrible shadowe. w the ryuer of water par teth he a sunder the straunge people, y knoweth no good neghbourheade: soch as are rude, vnmanerly & boysteous. He bryngeth foode out of the earth, & y which is vnder, consumeth he with fyre. There is founde a place, whose stones are clene Saphirs, and where y clottes of the earth are golde. There is a waye also that the byrdes knowe not,
that no vultures eye hath sene: wherin y prou
de & hye mynded walke not, & where no lyon commeth. There putteth he his honde vpon the stony rockes, & ouerthroweth the moun-taynes. Ryuers flowe out of the rockes, & lo ke what is pleasaunt, his eye seyth it. Out of droppes bryngeth he greate floudes toge ther, & the thinge that is hyd bryngeth he to light. How commeth a man then by wyßdo me? Where is the place that men fynde vn-derstondinge? Verely no man can tell how worthy a thinge she is, nether is she foūde in the lōde of the lyuynge. The depe sayeth: she is not in me. The see sayeth: she is not with me. She can not be gotten for the most fy-ne golde, nether maye the pryce of her be bought with eny moneye. No wedges of golde of Ophir, no precious Onix stones, no Saphirs maye be compared vnto her. No, nether golde ner Christall, nether swete odours ner golden plate. There is nothinge so worthy, or so excellēt, as once to be named vn to her: for parfecte wyßdome goeth farre be yonde thē all. The Topas that cōmeth out of Inde, maye in no wyse be lickened vnto
her: yee no maner of apparell how pleasaunt and fayre so euer it be.

From whēce then commeth wyßdome? & C where is the place of vnderstondinge? She is hyd from the eyes of all men, yee & frō the foules of the ayre. Destruccion & death saie:
we haue herde tell of her w oure eares. But God seyth hir waie, & knoweth hir place. For he beholdeth the endes of the worlde, and lo keth vpon all that is vnder the heauē. When he weyed the wyndes, & measured y waters:
when he set the rayne in ordre, and gaue the mightie floudes a lawe: Then dyd he se her,
thē declared he her, prepared her and knewe
her. And vnto man he sayde: Beholde, to fea re the LORDE, is wyßdome: & to forsake euell, is vnderstondinge.

haue it none other wayes, my wordes were so well taken amonge thē. They wayted for me, as the earth doth for the rayne: & gaped vpon me, as the groūde doth to receaue the latter shower. When I laughed, they knew well it was not earnest: & this testimony of my cōtenaunce pleased thē nothinge at all.
When I agreed vnto their waye, I was the chefe, & sat as a kynge amonge his seruauntes: Or as one that comforteth soch as be in

A But now they that are my inferiours & yonger then I, haue me in derision:
yee euē they, whose fathers I wolde haue thought scorne to haue set w' the dogges of my catell. The power & strēgth of the ir hādes might do me no good, & as for their age, it is spēt & past awaye without eny profit. For very misery & honger, they wente a-boute in the wilderneſſe like wretches & beg-gers, pluckynge vp herbes from amonge the bussshes, & the Jumpers rote was their mea
te. And when they were dryuen forth, men cried after them, as it had bene after a thefe.
Their dwellinge was beside foule brokes, yee in the caues & dennes of the earth. Vpō the drye heeth wēre they aboute crienge, & in the brome hilles they gathered them together.
They were the childeren of fooles & vylanes, which are deed awaye frō the worlde. Now I am Jtheir songe, & am become their iestin-ge stocke. they abhorre me, they flee farre fro me & stayne my face w' spetle. For ỹ LORDE hath opened his quyuer, he hath hytt me, & put a brydle in my mouth. Vpon my right hā de they rose together agaynst me, they haue
hurte my fete, made awaye to destroye me, & my path haue they clene marred. Jt was so easy for them to do me harme, that they n ded no man to helpe thē. They fell vpon me, as it had bene ỹ breakynge in of waters, & ca me in by heapes to destroye me. Fearfulnes is turned agaynst me. Myne honoure va-nisheth awaye more swiftly then wynde, & my prosperite departeth hēce like as it were a cloude. Therfore is my mynde poured full of heuynesse, & ỹ dayes of trouble haue tak holde vpon me. My bones are pearsed thor rew in ỹ night season, & my synewes take no rest. With all their power haue they chaunged my garmēt, & gyrded me therwith, as it were w' a coate. Jam euē as it were claye, & am become like aſshes & dust. Whē I crie vn to the, thou doest not heare me: & though I stonde before the, yet thou regardest me not.
Thou art become myne enemye, & w' ỹ vio-lēt hāde thou takest parte agayn̄ me. Jn ty mes past thou dydest set me vp an hye, as it were aboue ỹ winde, but now hast thou geue me a very sore fall. Sure I am, ỹ thou wilt delyuer me vnto death: where as a lodgyng is prepared for all mē lyuinge. Now ys nee mē to do violēce vnto thē, ỹ are destroyed al ready: but where hurte is done, there vse thei to helpe. Dyd not I wepe in ỹ tyme of trouble: & had not my soule cōpassion vpō ỹ poore: Yet neuertheless where as I loked for go od, euell happened vnto me: and where as I waited for light, there came darckneſſe. My bowels seeth w' in me & take no rest, for ỹ da
yes of my trouble are come vpō me. Meke & lowly came I in, yee & without eny displea sure: I stode vp in ỹ cōgregacion, & commoned with thē But now. I am a cōpanyon of dragons, & a felowe of Estriches. My skyn ne vpō me is turned to black, & my bones are brēt w' heate: my harpe is turned to sorow, &
my pipe to wepinge. The XXXI. Chap.

Jmade a couenaunt w' myne eyes, ỹ I wolde not loke vpō a dāsell. For how greate a porciō shal I haue of God
frō aboue & what enheritaūce frō ỹ Almigh tie on hie? As for the vngodly & he ỹ ioyneth

Farre be it from God, that he shulde medle with wickednesse: and farre be it from the Almightie, that he shulde medle with vnrighteous dealynge: but he rewardeth the workes of man, and causeth euery man to fynde accordinge to his wayes. For sure it is, that God cõdemneth no man wrongeously, and the iudgmẽt of the Allmightie is not vnrighteous. Who ruleth the earth in his steade? Or, whom hath he set to gouerne the whole worlde? To whom hath he geuen his herte, for to drawe his spirete and breth vnto him? All flesh shal come together vnto naught, & all mẽ shal turne agayne vnto earth. Yf thou now haue vnderstõdinge, heare what I saye and herken to the voyce of my wordes.

Maye he be made whole, that loueth no right? Yf thou were a very innocent man, shuldest thou then be punyshed? For he is euen the same, that knoweth the rebellious kynges, & sayeth to princes: Vngodly men are ye he hath no respecte vnto the persõnes of the lordly, & regardeth not the rich more thẽ poore. For they be all the worke of his hondes.

In the twincklinge off an eye shall they be slayne: and at mydnight, when the people & the tyrauntes rage, then shal they perish, and be taken awaye without hondes. And why? his eyes loke vpon the wayes of man, and he seyth all his goinges. There is no darcknes ner thicke shadowe, that can hyde the wicked doers from him. For no mã shalbe suffred to go into iudgment with God.

Many one, yee innumerable doth he punyshe and setteth other in their steades. For he knoweth their euell & darcke workes, therfore shal they be destroyed. They that were in the steade of Seers, dealt like vngodly mẽ. Therfore turned they back trayterously and vnfaithfully frõ hi, & wolde not receaue his wayes. In so moch that they haue caused the voyce of the poore to come vnto him, & now he heareth the cõplaynte of soch as are in necessite. Yf he delyuer & graunte pardõ, who will iudge or condemne? But yf he hyde awaye his countenaunce, who wil turne it about agayne, whether it be to the people or to eny man? For the wickednesse & synne of the people, he maketh an ypocrite to reigne ouer thẽ. For so moch then as I haue begonne to talke of God, I wil not hyndre the. Yf I haue gone amysse, enfourme me: yf I haue done wronge, I will leaue of. Wilt thou not geue a reasonable answere? Art thou afrayed of eny thinge, seynge thou begãnest first to speake, & not I? For els the men of vnderstõdinge & wisdome that haue herde me, might saye: What cãst thou speake? As for Job he hath neither spoken to the purpose ner wysely. O father, let Job be well tryed, because he he hath turned himself to the wicked: yee aboue his synnes he hath blasphemed, which offence he hath done euen before vs, in that he stryueth agaynst God with his wordes.

The XXXV Chapter.

Eliu spake moreouer, and sayde: Thinkest thou it right that thou sayest: I am righteous before God? Seinge thou sayest so, how doest thou knowe it? What thinge hast thou more excellẽt, thẽ I that am a synner? Therfore will I geue answere vnto the & thy frendes: loke vnto the heauẽ, & beholde it: cõsidre the cloudes, how they are hyer then thou. Yf thou synnest, what dost thou vnto him? Yf thine offences be many, how getteste thou his fauoure? Yf thou be righteous, what geuest thou him? Or, what receaueth he of thy handes? Of soch an vngodly personne as thou, & of the sonne of man that is righteous as thou pretendest to be: there is a greate crie & cõplaynte made by thẽ that are oppressed with violence, yee euery man complayneth vpon the cruell arme of tyrauntes. For soch one neuer sayeth: Where is God that made me? ãd that shyneth vpon vs, that we might prayse him in the night? Which geueth vs more vnderstõdinge then he doth the beastes of the earth, and teacheth vs more then the foules off heauẽ. Yf eny soch complayne, no mã geueth answere, and that because of the wickednesse off proude tyrauntes. But yf a man call vpon God, doth not he heare him? Doth not the Almightie accepte his crie? Whã thou speakest then, shulde not he pardon the, yff thou open thy self before him, and put thy trust in him? Then vseth he no violence in his wrath ner hath he pleasure in curious and depe inquisicions. Therfore hath Job opened his mouth but in vayne, ãd folishly hath he made so many wordes.

The XXXVI. Chapter.

Eliu proceaded forth in his talkinge, & sayde: holde the still a litle, and I shal shewe the, what I haue yet to speake on Gods behalfe. I wil open vnto the yet more of myne vnderstondinge, and proue my maker righteous. True are my wordes, & no lye: and the knowlege wherwithall I argue agaynst the, is perfecte. Beholde, God casteth not awaye the mightie, for he himself is mightie in power and wisdome.

As for the vngodly, he preserueth thē not but helpeth the poore to their right. He turneth not his eyes awaye from the righteous he setteth vp kynges in their Trone, and cōfirmeth them, so that they allwaye syt therin. But yf they be layed in preson and cheynes, or bounde with the bondes of powerte: then sheweth he them their workes ād dedes and the synnes wherw' they haue vsed cruell violence.

B He with punyshinge and nurturinge off them, rowneth them in the eares, warneth them to leaue of from their wickednesse, and to amende. Yf they now will take hede and be obedient, they shall weere out their dayes Esa.1.c in prosperite, and their yeares in pleasure ād ioye. But yff they will not obeye, they shall go thorow the swearde, & perish or euer they be awarre. As for soch as be fayned, dyssemblers and ypocrytes, they heape vp wrath for them selues: for they call not vpon him, though they be his presoners. Thus their soule perisheth in foolishnesse, and their lyfe w' ỹ condēned. The poore delyuereth he out of his straytnesse, and comforteth soch as be in necessite and trouble. Euen so shall he kepe the (yf thou wilt be content) from the botomlesse pytte that is beneth: & yf thou wilt holde the quyete, he shal fyll thy table with plenteousnesse.

C Neuertheles, thou hast condemned the iudgment of the vngodly, yee euen soch a iudgment and sentence shalt thou suffre. For then shal not thy cause be stilled with crueltie, ner pacified with many giftes. Hath God ordened then, that the glorious life off the & all soch mightie men shulde not be put downe? Prolonge not thou the tyme, till there come a night for the, to set other people in thy steade. But bewarre that thou turne not aside to wickednesse and synne, which hyther to thou hast chosen more then mekenesse. Beholde, God is of a mightie hye power: Where is there soch a gyde and lawegeuer as he? Who wil reproue him of his waye? who wil saye vnto him: thou hast done wronge?

D O considre how greate and excellent his workes be, whom all men loaue and prayse: yee wondre at him, and yet they se him but a farre of. Beholde, so greate is God, that he passeth oure knowlege, nether are we able to come to ỹ experiēce of his yeares. He turneth ỹ water to smal droppes, he dryueth his 28.d cloudes together for to rayne, so that they poure downe and droppe vpon men. He can spreade out the cloudes (a couerynge off his tabernacle) and cause his light to shyne vpō them, and to couer the botome of the see. By these thinges gouerneth he his people, and geueth thē abundaunce of meate. In ỹ turnynge of a hande he hydeth the light, & at his commaundement it commeth agayne. The rysinge vp therof sheweth he to his frendes and to the catell.

The XXXVII. Chapter.

At this my hert is astonnied, and moued out of his place. Heare then the sounde of his voyce, and the noyse ỹ goeth out of his mouth. He gouerneth euery thinge vnder the heauen, and his light reacheth vnto the ende of the worlde. A rorynge voyce foloweth him: for his glorious magesty geueth soch a thondre clappe, that (though a man heare it) yet maye he not perceaue it afterwarde. Yt geueth an horrible sownde, when God sendeth out his voyce: greate thinges doth he, which we can not comprehende. When he commaundeth the snowe, it falleth vpon the earth: As soone as he geueth the rayne a charge, Immediatly the showers haue their strength and fall downe. He sendeth feare vpon euery man, that they might knowe their owne workes. The beestes crepe in to their dennes, & take their rest. Out of the south commeth the tempest, and colde out of the north.

At the breth of God, the frost commeth, & the waters are shed abrode. The cloudes do their laboure in geuynge moystnesse, the cloudes poure downe their rayne. He distributeth also on euery syde, acordinge as it pleaseth him to deale out his workes, that they maye do, what so euer he commaundeth thē thorow the whole worlde: whether it be to punysh eny londe, or to do good vnto them that sēke him.

Herken vnto this (o Job) stonde still, and considre the wonderous workes of God. Art thou of coūcel with God, when he doth these thinges? When he causeth the light to come forth of his cloudes? Art thou of his coūcell, when he spredeth out the cloudes? Hast thou the perfecte knowlege of his wonders? and how thy clothes are warme, whē the lōde is still thorow the south wynde? hast thou helped him to spred out the heauen, which is to loke vpō, as it were cast of cleare metall? Teach vs what we shal saye vnto hi, for we are vnmete because of darcknes. Shal it be told him, what I saye? Shulde a man speake, or shulde he kepe it backe? For euery mā saith not the light, ỹ he kepeth cleare in the cloudes, which he clenseth whan he maketh the wynde to blowe. Golde is brought out of the nōth, but the prayse and honoure off Gods feare commeth frō God himself. It is not we that can fynde out the allmightie: for in power, equite and rigtuousnesse he is hyer then can be expressed. Seinge then that every body feareth him, why shulde not all wyse men also stōde in feare of hī? Chap. XXXVIII.

Then spake the LORDE vnto Job out of the storme, and sayde: what is he, that hydeth his mynde with foolysh wordes? Gyrde vp thy loynes like a mā, for I will question the, se thou gene me a dyrecte answere. Where wast thou, when I layed ỹ foundacions of the earth? Tell planely yff thou hast vnderstondinge. Who hath measured it, knowest thou? Or, who hath spred ỹ lyne vpon it? Where vpon stōde the pilers of it? Or, who layed ỹ corner stone? where wast thou when the mornynge starres gaue me prayse, ād when all the angels of God reioysed? Who shutt the see with dores, when it brake forth as a childe out off his mothers wombe? When I made the cloudes to be a coueringe for it, and swedled it with ỹ darcknes? when I gaue it my cōmaundement, makynge dores ꝛ barres for it, sayenge: Hither to shalt thou come, but no further, and here shalt thou laye downe thy proude and hye wawes. Hast thou geuē the mornynge his charge (as soone as thou wast borne) and shewed the dayespringe his place, ỹ it might take holde of the corners of the earth, ꝛ ỹ the vngodly might be shakē out? Their tokēs ꝛ weapēs hast thou turned like claye, ꝛ set thē vp agayne as the chaunginge of a garment. Ree thou hast spoyled the vngodly off their light, ꝛ brokē the arme of the proude. Camest thou euer in to the grōūde of the see, Or, hast thou walked in ỹ lowe corners of ỹ depe? Haue the gates of death bene opened vnto the? Or hast thou sene the dore of euerlastīge treasure? Hast thou also perceaued, how brode ỹ earth is? Now yf thou hast knowlege of all, thē shewe me where light dwelleth, and where darcknes is: ỹ thou mayest bringe vs vnto their quarters, yf thou cāst tell the waye to their houses. Knewest thou (when thou wast borne) how olde thou shuldest be?

Wentest thou euer in to the treasuries off the snowe, or hast thou sene ỹ secrete places of the hale: which I haue prepared agaynst the tyme of trouble, agaynst the tyme of batell ꝛ warre? By what waye is the light parted, ꝛ the heate dealt out vpon earth? Who deuydeth the abundaūce of waters in to ryuers, or who maketh a waye for the stormy wether, ỹ it watereth ꝛ moystureth ỹ drye ꝛ baren grounde: to make the grasse growe in places where no body dwelleth, ꝛ in the wildernes where no mā remayneth? Who is the father of rayne? Or, who hath begotten the droppes of dew? Out of whose wōbe came the yse? who hath gendred the coldnes of ỹ ayre? ỹ the waters are as harde as stones, ꝛ lye congeeled aboue the depe. Hast thou brought ỹ vij. starres together? Or, art thou able to breake the Circle of heauē? Cāst thou bringe forth the mornynge starre or the euenynge starre at cōuenient tyme, ꝛ cōueye thē home agayne? Knowest thou the comse off heauē, ỹ thou mayest set vp the ordinaunce therof vpō earth? Moreuer, cāst thou lift vp thy voyce to ỹ cloudes, ỹ they maye poure downe a greate rayne vpō the? Canst thou thōdre also ỹ they maye go their waye, ꝛ be obediēt vnto the, sayēge: lo, here are we? Who geueth sure wisdome, or stedfast vnderstōdinge? who nombreth the cloudes in wisdome? who stilleth ỹ vehement waters of the heauē? who turneth the clottes to dust, ꝛ thē to be clottes agayne? Hunteste thou the praye frō the Lyon, or fedest thou his whelpes lyēge in their dēnes ꝛ lurkinge in their couches? who prouydeth meate for the rauen, whē his yonge ones crie vnto God, ād fle aboute for want of meate? Chap. XXXIX.

Knowest thou the tyme when the wilde gotes brīge forth their yōge amōge the stony rockes? Or layest thou wayte when the hindes vse to fawne? Rekenest thou the monethes after they ingendre, ỹ thou knowest the tyme of their bearinge? Or when they lye downe, when they cast their yonge ones, ꝛ when they are delyuered off their trauayle ꝛ payne? How their yōge ones growe vp ꝛ waxe greate thorow good fedinge: who letteth the wilde asse go free, or who lowseth the bōdes of the Moole? Vnto whō I haue geuen the wyldernes to be their house, ꝛ the vntilled londe to be their dwellinges place. That they maye gene no force for the multitude off people in the cities, nether to regarde the crienge of the dryuer: but to seke their pasture aboute the mountaynes, ꝛ to folowe vpon the grene grasse. Wyll the vnicorne be so tame as to do ỹ seruyce, or to abyde still by thy cribbe? Cāst thou bynde ỹ yocke aboute him in thy forowes, to make him plowe after the in ỹ valleis? Mayest thou trust hī (because he is strōge) or cōmitte thy labor vnto hī? Mayest thou beleue hī, ỹ he wil brīge home ỹ come, or to cary eny thinge vnto ỹ barne? The Estrich (whose fethers are fayrer thē ỹ wynges of the sparow hauke) whē he hath layed his egges vpon the greunde, he bredeth them in the dust, and forgetteth them: so that they might be troden with fete, or broken with sōme wilde beast.

So harde is he vnto his yong ones, as though they were not his, and laboureth in vayne without eny feare. And that because God hath taken wisdome from him, & hath not geuen him vnderstondinge. When his tyme is, he flyeth vp an hye, and careth nether for horse ner man.

C Hast thou geuen the horse is strength, or lerned him to bowe downe his neck with fea re: that he letteth him self be dryuen forth li ke a gresshopper, where as the stoute neyen ge that he maketh, is fearfull? he breaketh y grounde with the hoffes of his fete chearful ly in his strength, and runneth to mete the harnest men. He layeth asyde all feare, his stomack is not abated, nether starteth he a back for eny swerde. Though the quyuers rattle vpon him, though the speare and shil
de glistre: yet russheth he in fearsly, and bea teth vpon the grounde. He feareth not the noyse of the trompettes, but as soone as he heareth the shawmes blowe, tush (sayeth
he) for he smelleth the batell afarre of, y noy
se, the captaynes and the shoutinge.

D Commeth it thorow thy wysdome, that the goshauke flyeth towarde the south?
Doth the Aegle mounte vp & make his nest on hye at thy commaundement? He abydeth in the stony rockes, and vpon the hye toppes
of harde mountaynes, where no man can co
me. From thence maye he beholde his praye, and loke farre aboute with his eyes. His yon dede body lyeth, there is he immediatly.

Moreouer, God spake vnto Job and sayde: Can he that stryueth with the Allmightie, be at rest? Shulde not he which disputeth with God, geue him an answere? Job answe red the LORDE, sayenge: Beholde, I am to vyle a personne, to answere the, therfore will I laye my hande vpon my mouth. Once or twyse haue I spoken, but I will saye no more.

The XL. Chapter.

A Then spake the LORDE vnto Job out
Iob. 38. a of the storme, and sayde: gyrde vp y loynes like a man, and tell me the thi nge that I will axe the. Wilt thou disanulle my iudgment? Or, wilt thou condemne me,
y thou thy self mayest be made righteous?
Is thine arme then like the arme of God?
Maketh thy voyce soch a sounde as his doth?
Then arme thy self with thine owne power, vp, decke the in thy holy araye, poure out the indignacion of thy wrath: se that thou cast downe all y proude, loke well, that thou ma kest all soch as be stubburne, to obeye: treade
all the vngodly vnder thy fete, cast the dow-ne in to the myre, and couer their faces with darckneese: Then will I confesse also, that thyne owne right honde hath saued the.

Beholde, the cruell beaste (whom I made w^t the) which eateth haye as an ore: lo, how stronge he is in his loynes, and what power
he hath in the nauell of his body. He spre-deth out his tale like a Cedre tre, all his ve-nes are stiff. His shynnes are like pipes off brasse, his rygge bones are like staues of yis
First when God made him, he ordened the wylderneese for him, y the mountaynes shul
de geue him grasse, where all the beastes off the felde take their pastyme. He lyeth amōge
the redes in the Mosses, the femmes hyde him with their shadowe, and the wylowes of the broke couer him rounde aboute. Lo, without eny laboure might he drynke out the whole floude, and suppe off Jordane without eny trauayle. Who darre laye honde vpon him o penly, and vndertake to catch him? Or, who darre put an hoke thorow his nose, ād laye a snare for him?

Darrest thou drawe out Leuiathan with an angle, or bynde his tonge with a stare?
Canst thou put a ryng in the nose of him, or bore his chaftes thorow with a naule? Will he make many fayre wordes with the (thynk-est thou) or flatre the? Will he make a cōuenaunt with the? Or, art thou able for to com pell him to do the contynuall seruyce? Wilt thou take thy pastyne w^t him as with a bynde, or geue him vnto thy maydens, that thy companyons maye hew him in peces, to be parted amonge the marchaunt men? Canst thou fyll the nett w^t his skynne, or y fysh pō nyer with his heade? Darrest thou laye honde vpon him? It is better for the to consider what harme might happē the there thorow
and not to touch him. For when thou thynk est to haue holde vpon him, he shall begyle
the: Euery man also that seyth him, shall go
backe. And why? there darre none be so bol
de, as to rayse him vp.

The XLI. Chapter.

Who is able to stonde before me? Or,
who hath geuen me eny thynge a-
fore hande, that I am bounde to re-warde him agayne? All thinges vnder heauen are myne. I feare him not, whether he threaten or speake fayre. Who lifteth him vp
and stripeth him out of his clothes, or who taketh him by the bytt of his brydle? Who openeth the dore of his face? for he hath ho rible tethe rounde aboute. His body is coured with scales as it were with shyldes, lock te in, kepte, and well cōpacte together. One is so ioyned to another, that no ayre can come in: yee one hangeth so vpon another, and sticke so together, that they can not be sunde red. His nesinge is like a glisteringe fyre, and his eyes like the mornynge shyne. Out of his mouth go torches and fyre brandes, out off his nostrels there goeth a smoke, like as out off an hote seetinge pott. His breth maketh the coales burne, the flame goeth out of his mouth. In his necke remayneth strength, and before his face sorowe is turned to gladnesse. The membres of his body are ioyned so strayte one to another, and cleue so fast together, that he can not be moued.

His hert is as harde as a stone, ād as fast as the fryth ye that the hammer man smyteth vpon. When he goeth: the mightiest off all are afrayed, and the wawes heuy. Yff he drawe out the swearde, there maye nether speare ner brest plate abyde him. He setteth as moch by a strawe as by yrō, and as moch by a rotten stocke as by metall. He starteth not awāye for him that bendeth the bowe, ꝛ is for slynge stones, he careth as moch for stubble as for them. He counteth the hammer no better then a strawe, he laugheth him to scorne that shaketh the speare. He treadeth the golde in the myre like ỹ sharpe potsherdes. He maketh the depe to seeth and boyle like a pott, and stereth the see together like an oyntment. The waye is light after him, the depe is his walkynge place. Vpon earth is there no power like vnto his, for he is so made, that he feareth not. Yff a man will cōsidre all hye thinges, this same is a kynge ouer all the children off pryde.

The XLII. Chapter.

Then Job answered the LORDE, and sayde: I knowe that thou hast power of all thinges, and that there is no thought hyd vnto the. For who can kepe his owne councell so secrete, but it shall be knowne: Therfore haue I spoken vnwysely, seynge these thinges are so hye, and passe my ne vnderstondinge. O herken thou vnto me also, and let me speake: answere me vnto the thinge that I will axe the. I haue geuen diligent eare vnto the, and now I se ỹ with myne eyes. Wherfore I geue myne owne self ỹ blame, and take repentaunce in the dust and asshes.

Now whē the LORDE had spoken these wordes vnto Job, he sayde vnto Eliphas ỹ Themanite: I am displeased with the ꝛ thy two frendes, for ye haue not spoken the thinge ỹ is right before me, like as my seruaunt Job hath done. Therfore take vij. oxen and seuen rammes, and go to my seruaunt Job offre vp also for youre selues a brentofferinge, and lat my seruaunt Job praye for you: him will I accepte, and not deale with after youre foolishnesse: in that ye haue not spokē ỹ thinge which is right, like as my seruaunt Job hath done.

So Eliphas the Themanite, Baldad Suhite and Sophar the Naamathite, went their waye, and did acordynge as the LORDE commaunded them. The LORDE also accepted the persōne off Job, and the LORDE turned him vnto Job, whē he prayed for his frendes: Yee the LORDE gaue Job twyse thy moch as he had afore.

And thē came there vnto him all his brethren, all his sisters with all them that had bene off his acquātaūce afore, and ate breed with him in his house, wondringe at him, ād comfortinge him ouer all the trouble, that the LORDE had brought vpon him. Euery mā gaue him a shepe and a Jewell of golde.

And the LORDE made Job richer then he was before: for he had xiiij. M. shepe, vi. M. camels, a M. yock oxē, and a M. asses. He had children also: vij. sonnes and iij. doughters. The first he called Daye, the seconde, ỹ pouerte: the thirde, All plenteousnes. In the londe were none founde so fayre, as the doughters of Job, ꝛ their father gaue them enheritaunce amonge their brethren.

After this lyued Job xl. yeares, so that he sawe his children, ꝛ his childers children vnto the fourth generacion. And so he dyed, beinge olde ꝛ of a perfecte age.

The ende of the boke of Job.

The Psalter

The first psalme.

kest thou) or flatre the? Will he make a cōnaunt with the? Or, art thou able for to cōm pell him to do the contynuall seruyce? Wil thou take thy pastyne w' him as with a byrde, or geue him vnto thy maydens, that thy companyons maye hew him in peces, to be parted amonge the marchaunt men? Can thou fyll the nett w' his skynne, or y fysh pō nyer with his heade? Darrest thou laye hon-de vpon him? It is better for the to consider what harme might happē the there thorow
and not to touch him. For when thou thykest to haue holde vpon him, he shall begyle
the: Euery man also that seyth him, shall go
backe. And why? there darre none be so bol-
de, as to rayse him vp.

The XLI. Chapter.

Who is able to stonde before me? Or
who hath geuen me eny thynge a-
fore hande, that I am bounde to re-
warde him agayne? All thinges vnder hea-
uen are myne. I feare him not, whether he threaten or speake fayre. Who lifteth him vp
and stripeth him out of his clothes, or who taketh him by the bytt of his brydle? Who openeth the dore of his face? for he hath terrible tethe rounde aboute. His body is cou-
red with scales as it were with shyldes, lok
te in, kepte, and well cōpacte together. One

is so ioyned to another, that no ayre can come in: yee one hangeth so vpon another, and sticke so together, that they can not be sunde red. His nesinge is like a glisteringe fyre, and his eyes like the mornynge shyne. Out of his mouth go torches and fyre brandes, out off his nostrels there goeth a smoke, like as out off an hote seetinge pott. His breth maketh the coales burne, the flame goeth out of his mouth. In his necke remayneth strength, and before his face sorowe is turned to gladnesse. The membres of his body are ioyned so frayre one to another, and cleue so fast together, that he can not be moued.

His hert is as harde as a stone, ād as fast as the fyth ye that the hammer man smyteth vpon. When he goeth: the mightiest off all are afrayed, and the wawes heuy. Yff he throwe out the swearde, there maye nether speare ner brest plate abyde him. He setteth as moch by a strawe as by yrō, and as moch by a rotten stocke as by metall. He starteth not awāye for him that bendeth the bowe, ī is for flynge stones, he careth as moch for stubble as for them. He counteth the hammer no better then a strawe, he laugheth him to scorne that shaketh the speare. He treadeth the golde in the myre like ỹ sharpe potsherdes. He maketh the depe to seeth and boyle like a pott, and stereth the see together like an oyntment. The waye is light after him, the depe is his walkynge place. Vpon earth is there no power like vnto his, for he is so made, that he feareth not. Yff a man will cōsidre all hye thinges, this same is a kynge ouer all the children off pryde.

The XLII. Chapter.

Then Job answered the LORDE, and sayde: I knowe that thou hast power of all thinges, and that there is no thought hyd vnto the. For who can kepe his owne councell so secrete, but it shall be knowne? Therfore haue I spoken vnwysely, seynge these thinges are so hye, and passe my vnderstondinge. O herken thou vnto me also, and let me speake: answere me vnto the thinge that I will axe the. I haue geuen diligent eare vnto the, and now I se ỹ with myne eyes. Wherfore I geue myne owne self ỹ blame, and take repentaunce in the dust and asshes.

Now whē the LORDE had spoken these wordes vnto Job, he sayde vnto Eliphas ỹ Themanite: I am displeased with the ī thy two frendes, for ye haue not spoken the thinge ỹ is right before me, like as my seruaunt Job hath done. Therfore take vij. oxen and seuen rammes, and go to my seruaunt Job offre vp also for youre selues a brentoffe ge, and lat my seruaunt Job praye for you. Him will I accepte, and not deale with you after youre foolishnesse: in that ye haue not spokē ỹ thinge which is right, like as my seruaunt Job hath done.

So Eliphas the Themanite, Bald Suhite and Sophar the Naamathite went their waye, and did accordynge as the LORDE commaunded them. The LORDE also accepted the persōne off Job, and the LORDE turned him vnto Job, whē he prayed for his frendes: Yee the LORDE gaue Job twyse so moch as he had afore.

And thē came there vnto him all his brethren, all his sisters with all them that had ben off his acquātaūce afore, and ate bred with him in his house, wondringe at him, ād comfortinge him ouer all the trouble, that the LORDE had brought vpon him. Euery mā gaue him a shepe and a Jewell of gold.

And the LORDE made Job richer then he was before: for he had xiiij. M. shepe, vi. M. camels, a M. yock oxē, and a M. asses. He had children also: vij. sonnes and iij. doughters. The first he called Daye, the seconde powerte: the thirde, All plenteousnes. In the londe were none founde so fayre, as the doughters of Job, ī their father gaue them enheritaunce amonge their brethren.

After this lyued Job xl. yeares, so that he sawe his children, ī his childers children vnto the fourth generacion. And so he dyed, beinge olde ī of a perfecte age.

The ende of the boke of Job.

The Psalter

The first psalme.

Blessed is ỹ man, ỹ goeth not in the councell of ỹ vngodly, ỹ abydeth not in the waye of synners, ī sytteth not in ỹ seate of the scornefull. But his lyfe is in the lawe of ỹ LORDE, ī exercyseth himself in his lawe both daye and nyght. Soch a mā is like a tre planted by ỹ water, ỹ bringeth forth his fruite in due season.

His leeues shal not fall off, ād loke what ner he doth, it shal prospere. As for the vn ly, it is not so with them: but they are li-he dust, which ỹ wynde scatereth awaom of the grounde. Therfore the vngod all not be able to stonde in the iudgmēt, er the synners in the congregacion off ighteous. For the LORDE alloweth ỹ of the righteous, but the waye of the dly shal perishe.

The II. A psalme of Dauid.

Why do the heithē grudge? why do
the people ymagyn vayne thinges?
The kynges of the earth stōde vp,
he rulers are come together, agaynst LORDE ād agaynst his anoynted. Let breake their boudes a sunder, and cast aye their yocke from vs. Neuertheless,
e that dwelleth in heauen, shall laugh thē
o scorne: yee euen the LORDE himself shall haue them in derision. Then shal he spea-vnto them in his wrath, and vexe them in sore displeasure. Yet haue I set my kynvpon my holy hill of Sion. As for me ill preach the lawe, wherof the LORDE
h sayde vnto me: Thou art my sonne, is daye haue I begotten the. Desyre off ne, and I shall geue the the heithen for thi-te enheritaunce, Yee the vttemost partes of wo:lde for thy possession. Thou shalt ru-hem with a rodde of yron, and breake thē peces like an erthen vessell. Be wyse now erfore (o ye kynges) be warned, ye that are dges of the earth. Serue the LORDE ith feare, and reioyse before him with reue-nce. Kysse the sonne, lest the LORDE be an-rie, and so ye perish from the right waye.
or his wrath shal be kindled shortly: blessed ll they that put their trust in him.

The III. A psalme of Dauid.

Why are they so many (o LORDE) ỹ trouble me? a greate multitude are they, that ryse agaynst me. Yee one there be that saye off my soule:
is no helpe for him in God. Sela thou (o LORDE) art my defender, my wor e, ād the lifter vp of my heade. I call the LORDE with my voyce, and he hea me out of his holy hill. Sela I layed downe and slepte, but I rose vp agayne,
e the LORDE susteyned me. I am not afray for thousandes of the people, that cōpasme rounde aboute. Vp LORDE, and helpe
o my God: for thou smytest all myne enes vpon the cheke bones, and breakest the th of the vngodly. Helpe belongeth vn the LORDE, therfore let thy blessynge

be vpon thy people.

The IIII. A psalme of Dauid.

Heare me whē I cal, o God of my righ tuousnes, thou that comfortest me in my trouble: haue mercy vpon me, and herken vnto my prayer. O ye sonnes off men: how longe will ye blaspheme myne ho-noure? why haue ye soch pleasure in vanyte, seke after lyes? Sela Knowe this, that the LORDE dealeth marueloully with his saynte: and when I call vpon the LORDE, he heareth me. Be angrie, but synne not:
comō w̄ youre owne hertes vpō yo^r beddes,
and remēbre yo^r selues. Sela. Offre ỹ sacri fice of righteousnes, and put yo^r trust in ỹ LOR DE. There be many ỹ saye: who wil do vs eny good? where as thou (o LORDE) hast sho wed vs the lighte of ỹ countenaūce. Thou reioysest myne herte, though their encrease be greate both in corne and wyne. Therfore wil I laye me downe in peace, and take my rest:
for thou LORDE only settest me in a sure dwel lynge. The V. A psalme of Dauid.

Heare my wordes (o LORDE) consider my callynge. O marke the voyce of my peticion, my kynge and my God: for vnto the wil I make my prayer. Heare my voyce by tymes (o LORDE) for early in the mor
ninge wil I gett me vnto the, yee and ỹ w̄ dili gēce. For thou art not the God ỹ hath plea sure in wickednesse, there maye no vngodly personne dwel with the. Soch as be euil maye not stonde in thy sight, thou art an ene
mie vnto all wicked doers.

Thou destroyest the lyers: the LORDE ab
horreth the bloude thurstie and disceatfull.
But as for me, I wil come in to thy house, euen vpon the multitude of thy mercy: ād in thy feare wyll I worshipe towarde thy holy tēple. Lede me (o LORDE) in thy righteous nesse, because of myne enemyes, ād make thy waye playne before me. For there is no faithfulnesse in their mouthes: they dyssem-ble in their hertes: their throte is an open sepulchre: with their tonges they disceaue.
Punysh them (o God) that they maye perish
in their owne ymaginacions: cast them out because of the multitude of their vngodlines se, for they rebell agaynst the. Agayne, let all them that put their trust in the, reioyse:
yee let them euer be geuynge of thankes, because thou defendest them: that they which loue thy name, maye be ioyfull in the. For thou LORDE geuest thy blessinge vnto the righteous: and with thy fauorable kyndnes
thou defendest him, as with a shylde.

The VI. A psalme of Dauid.

O LORDE, rebuke me not in thine anger: Oh chastē me not in thy heuy displeasure. Haue mercy vpon me (o LORDE) for I am weake: o LORDE heale me, for all my bones are vexed. My soule also is in greate trouble, but LORDE how longe? Turne the (o LORDE) & delyuer my soule: Oh saue me, for thy mercies sake. For in death no man remembreth the: Oh who wil geue the thankes in the hell? I am weery of gronynge: Euery night wasshe I my bedde, & water my couche with my teares. My countenaūce is chaunged for very inwarde grefe, I cōsume awaye, I haue so many enemies. Awaye from me all ye wicked doers, for the LORDE hath herde the voyce off my wepinge. The LORDE hath herde myne humble petition, the LORDE hath receaued my prayer. All myne enemies shalbe cōfounded & sore vexed: yee they shalbe turned backe and put to shame, and that right soone.

The VII. A psalme of Dauid.

O LORDE my God, in y do I trust: saue me frō all thē y persecute me, & delyuer me. Lest he hauoch vp my soule like a lyon, & teare it in peces, whyle there is none to helpe. O LORDE my God, yff I haue done eny soch thinge: yf there be eny vnrighteousnes in my hādes: Yff I haue rewarded euell vnto thē y dealt frendly w^t me or hurte thē y w^t out eny cause are myne enemies: Then let myne enemie persecute my soule, & take me: yee let hī treade my life downe in the earth, & laye myne hono^r in the dust. Sela. Stōde vp (o LORDE) in y^e wrath, lift vp thyself ouer the furious indignaciō of myne enemies: aryse vp (for me) in the vengeaunce that thou hast promysed. That the congregacion of the people maye come aboute the, for their sakes therfore lift vp thyselff agayne, The LORDE is iudge ouer the people: Auenge me then (o LORDE) accordinge to my righteousnes & innocency. Oh let the wickednes of the vngodly come to an ende: but manteyne the iust, thou righteous God, y^e triest the very hertes & the reynes. My helpe cōmeth of God, which preserueth them y^e are true of herte. God is a righteous iudge, & God is euer threateninge. Yf men wil not turne, he hath whet his swearde: he hath bent his bowe & made it ready. He hath prepayred him the weapens of death, & ordened his arowes to destroye. Beholde, he trauayleth with myschefe, he hath cōceaued vnhappynesse, and brought forth a lye. He hath grauen and dygged vp a pytte, but he shal fall himself into y pytte y he hath made. For his vnhappynes shall come vpon his owne heade, & his wickednes shall fall vpon his owne pate. As for me, I will geue thankes vnto the LORDE for his righteousnes sake, and wil prayse the name of the LORDE the most hyest. Psal. 119. b

The VIII. A psalme of Dauid. A

O LORDE oure gouernoure: how wonderfull is thy name in all the worlde? how excellent is thy glory aboue the heauens? Out of the mouth of the very babes & sucklinges thou hast ordened prayse, because of thine enemes, y thou mightest destroye the enemie and the auenger. For I considre thy heauens, euen the worke off thy fyngers: the Moone and the starres which thou hast made. Oh what is man, y thou art so myndfull of him: ether the sonne of ma that thou visitest him? After thou haddest for a seasō made him lower thē the angels, thou crowndest him with hono^r & glory. Matt. 21. b B Psal. 144. b Heb. 2. b Thou hast set him aboue the workes off thy hondes: thou hast put all thinges in subiecci on vnder his fete. All shepe and oxen, yee and the beastes of the felde. The foules of the ayre: the fysh of the see, and what so walketh thorow the wayes of the see. O LORDE oure gouernoure, how wonderfull is thy name in all the worlde? Ge Eph

The IX. A psalme of Dauid.

I Wil geue thākes vnto the (o LORDE) with my whole herte, I wil speake of all thy maruelous workes. I wil be glad & reioyse in the, yee my songes wil I make of thy name, o thou most hyest. Because thou hast dryuē myne enemies aback, they were discōfited, & perished at thy presence. For thou hast manteyned my right and my cause: thou sytte^st in the Trone that art the true iudge. Thou rebukest the heithen, and destroyest the vngodly, thou puttest out their name for ever and euer. The enemies swerdes are come to an ende, thou hast ouerthrowen their cities, their memoriall is perished with thē. But y LORDE endureth for ever, he hath prepared his seate vnto iudgmēt. He gouerneth y^e worlde with righteousnes & ministreth true iudgmēt vnto the people. The LORDE is a defence for the poore, a defence in the tyme of trouble. Therfore they y^t knowe thy name, put their trust in y^e: for thou (LORDE) neuer fayle^st thē, that seke the. O prayse the LORDE, which dwelleth in Sion shewe y people of his doinges. And why? he maketh inquysicion for their bloude, and A Psal. 110. a and 111. b B Deu. 4. a Psal. 22. a remembreth them: he forgetteth not the complaynte of the poore. Haue mercy vpō me (o LORDE) consydre the trouble that I am in amōge myne enemies, thou that lyfteſt me vp from ỹ gates of death. That I maye shewe all thy prayses within the portes off the doughter Sion, and reioyse in thy sauynge healthe. As for the Heithen, the are sunckē doune in the pytte that they made: in the same nette, which they spred out priuely, is their owne fote take. Thus ỹ LORDE is knowne to execute true iudgment, whē the vngodly is trapped in the workes of his owne handes. Sela. The wicked muſt be turned vnto hell, and all the Heithen ỹ forget God. But the poore shal not allwaye be out of remembraunce, the paciēt abydinge of soch as be in trouble shall not perish forever. Vp LORDE, let not man haue the vpper hāde, let the Heithē be cōdemned before the. O LORDE, set a scolemaster ouer thē, that the Heithē maye knowe them selues to be but mē. Sela.

Here the Hebrues begynne the x. psalme.

WHy art thou gone so farre of, o LORDE: wilt thou hyde thy selff in tyme of trouble: Whyle ỹ vngodly hath the ouer hande, the poore muſt suffre persecucion: O that they were taken in the ymaginacions which they go aboute. For the vngodly maketh booſt of his owne hertes desyre, the couetous blesseth him self, and blaspheme th the LORDE. The vngodly is so proude and full of indignaciō, that he careth not: nether is God before his eyes. His wayes are allwaye filthie, thy iudgmentes are farre out of his sight, he defyeth all his enemies. For he sayeth in his herte: Tush, I shal neuer be cast downe, there shal no harme happē vnto me. His mouth is full of cursynge, fraude and disceate: vnder his tōge is trauayle ỹ sorow. He sytteth lurkynge in the gardens, that he maye pryuely murthur the innocent, his eyes are set vpō the poore. He lyeth waytinge secretly, as it were a lyon in his denne. He lurketh that he maye rauysh the poore, yee to rauysh the poore, when he hath gotten him in to his nett. Then smyteth he, then oppresseth he ỹ casteth downe the poore with his auctorite. For he sayeth in his herte: Tush, God hath forgotten, he hath turned away his face, so ỹ he will neuer se it. Aryse o LORDE God, lift vp thine honde, and forget not the poore. Wherfore shulde the wicked blaspheme God, and saye in his herte: Tush, he careth not for it: This thou seiſt, for thou considreſt the mysery and sorowe: The poore geueth himself ouer in to thy hande, and committeth him vnto the, for thou art the helper of the frendlesse. Breake thou ỹ arme off the vngodly and malycious, search out the wickednesse which he hath done, that he maye perish. The LORDE is kynge for euer, ye Heithen shal perish out off his londe. LORDE, thou heareſt the desyrous longynge off the poore: their herte is sure, that thine eare herkeneth therto. Helpe the fatherlesse and poore vnto their right, that the vngodly be nomore exalted vpon earth.

The X. A psalme of Dauid.

IN the LORDE put I my truſt: how will ye then saye to my soule: that she shulde flee as a byrde vpon youre hill: For lo, the vngodly haue bēt their bowe, and made redy their arowes in the quyuer: that they maye priuely shute at them, which are true of herte. The very foundacion haue they caſt downe, what cā the righteous thē do withall: But the LORDE is in his holy temple, the LORDES seate is in heauen: he cōsidereth it with his eyes, his eyelyddes beholde the children of men. The LORDE searcheth both the righteous and vngodly, but who so deliteth in wickednes, him his soule abhorreth. Vpon the vngodly he shal rayne snares, fyre, brymstone, storme and tempeſt: this reward shal they haue to drynke. For the LORDE is righteous, and he loueth righteousnes, his countenaunce beholdeth the thinge ỹ is iuſt.

The XI. A psalme of Dauid.

HElpe LORDE, for there is not one sayncte more: very fewe faithfull are there emonge the children off men. Euery man telleth lyes to his neighbō, they do but flater with their lippes and dissemble in their herte. O that the LORDE wolde rote out all disceatfull lippes, and the tonge that speaketh proude thinges. Which saye: Oure tōge shulde preuayle: we are they that ought to speake, who is lorde ouer vs: Now for the troubles sake off the oppressed, and because of the complaynte of the poore, I wil vp (sayeth the LORDE) I wil helpe thē, and set thē at rest. The wordes of the LORDE are pure wordes: euē as ỹ syluer, which from earth is tried and purified vij. tymes in the fyre. Kepe thē therfore (o LORDE) and preserue vs fro this generacion for ever. And why: when vanite and ydylnes getteth the ouer hande amonge the children of men, all are full of ỹ vngodly.

The XII. A psalme of Dauid.

HOw longe wilt thou forget me, o LORDE: for euer: how longe wilt thou hyde thy face frome: Oh how lōge shall I sete councell in my soule: how longe shall I be so vexed in myne herte: how longe shal myne enemie triumphe ouer me: Considre, ād heare me, o LORDE my God: lighten myne eyes, that I slepe not in death. Lest myne enemie saye: I haue preuayled agaynst hī for yf I be cast downe, they that trouble me will reioyse at it.

But my trust is in thy mercy, and my hert is ioyfull in thy sauynge health. I wil synge of the LORDE, that dealeth so louyngly with me. (Yee I wil prayse the name of the LORDE the most hyest)

The XIII. A psalme of Dauid.

THe foolish bodyes saye in their hertes: Tush, there is no God. They are corrupte, ād become abhominable in their doynges, there is not one yͭ doth good. The LORDE loked downe frō heauē vpō the children of men, to se yf there were eny, that wolde vnderstonde ⁊ seke after God. But they are all gone out of the waye, they are altogether become vnprofitable: there is none that doth good, no not one. * Their throte is an open sepulcre, with their tonges they haue disceaued, the poyson of Aspes is vnder their lippes. * Their mouth is full of cursinge and bytternes, their fete are swift to shed blonde. * Destruccion ⁊ wretchednes are in their wayes, ād the waye of peace haue they not knowne: there is no feare off God before their eyes. How can they haue vnderstondinge, yͭ worke myschefe, eatinge vp my people, as it were bred, ⁊ call not vpō yͭ LORDE? Therfore shal they be brought in greate feare, for God stondeth by the generacion of the righteous. As for you, ye haue made a mocke at the coūcell of the poore, because he putteth his trust in the LORDE. Oh yͭ the sauynge health were geuen vnto Israel out off Sion. Oh that the LORDE wolde delyuer his people out of captiuyte. Thē shulde Jacob reioyse, and Israel shulde be right glad.

The XIIII. A psalme of Dauid.

LORDE, who shall dwell in thy tabernacle: who shal rest vpō yͭ holy hill: Euen he yͭ leadeth an vncorrupte life: that doth the thinge which is right, ād that speaketh the treuth from his herte. He yͭ vseth no disceat in his tonge: he that doth no euell to his neghboure, ⁊ slaundreth not his neghbours. He yͭ setteth not by the vngodly but maketh moch of thē that feare the LORDE: he yͭ sweareth vnto his neghboure ⁊ disappointeth him not. He that geueth not his money vpon vsury, and taketh no rewarde agaynst the innocēt. Who so doth these thinges, shal neuer be remoued. Exo. 22. a

The XV. A psalme of Dauid.

PReserue me (o God) for in the do I trust. I haue sayde vnto yͭ LORDE: thou art my God, my goodes are nothinge vnto the. All my delyte is vpon the sanctes that are in the earth, and vpon soch like. But they yͭ runne after another, shall haue greate trouble. Their drynke offerenges of blonde wil not I offre, nether make mencion of their name in my moueth. The LORDE himself is my good and my ... thou manteynest my enheritaūce. ...ge in yͭ is fallen vnto me in a fayre groūde ...e glad is ...e a goodly heretage. Therfore dyd my hert reioyce ⁊ my tunge was glad, my flesh also shall rest in hope. For why: thou shalt not leaue my soule in hell, nether shalt thou suffre thy sayute to se corrupcion. Thou hast shewed me the wayes off life: thou shalt make me full of ioye wͭ thy countenaunce. At thy right hande there is pleasure and ioye for euermore.

The XVI. A psalme of Dauid.

HEare yͭ right (O LORDE) cōsidre my cē playnte: herken vnto my prayer, that goeth not out of a fayned mouth. Let my sentence come forth frō thy presence, and loke vpon the thinge that is equall. Thou hast proued ⁊ visited myne herte in the nighte season: thou hast tried me in the fyre, ⁊ hast founde no wickednes in me: for I vtterly purposed, that my mouth shulde not offende. Because of the wordes of thy lippes, I haue kepte me frō the workes of men, in yͭ wayes off the murthurer. Oh ordre thou my goynges in thy pathes, that my fote steppes slippe not. For vnto the I crie, heare me o God, enclyne thine eares to me, and herkē vnto my wordes. Shewe yͭ marueluous louinge kindnesse, thou that sauest them which put their trust in the, from soch as resist thy right honde. Kepe me as the apple of an eye, defende me vnder the shadowe of thy wynges. From the vngodly that trouble me, fro myne enemies which compasse my soule rounde aboute. zac. 2. b Matth. 25.

Psal.21.c remembreth them: he forgetteth not the complaynte of the poore. Haue mercy vpō me (o LORDE) consydre the trouble that I am in amōge myne enemies, thou that lyftest me vp from ỹ gates of death. That I maye shewe all thy prayses within the portes off the doughter Sion, and reioyse in thy sauynge healthe. For the vngodly maketh boost of his owne hertes desyre, the couetous blesseth him self, and blaspheme th the LORDE. The vngodly is so proude and full of indignaciō, that he careth not: nether is God before his eyes. His wayes are allwaye filthie, thy iudgmentes are farre out of his sight, he defyeth all his enemies. For he sayeth in his herte: Tush, I shal neuer be cast downe, there shal no harme happē vnto me. His mouth is full of cursynge, fraude and disceate: vnder his tōge is trauayle ỹ sorow. He sytteth lurkynge in the gardens, that he maye pryuely murthur the innocent, his eyes are set vpō the poore. He lyeth waytinge secretely, as it were a lyon in his denne. He lurketh that he maye rauysh the poore, yee to rauysh the poore, when he hath gotten him in to his nett. Then smyteth he, then oppresseth he ỹ casteth downe the poore with his auctorite. For he sayeth in his herte: Tush, God hath forgotten, he hath turned a waye his face, so ỹ he will neuer se it. Aryse o LORDE God, lift vp thine honde, and forget not the poore. Wherfore shulde the wicked blaspheme God, and saye in his herte: Tush, he careth not for it? This thou seist, for thou considrest the mysery and sorowe: The poore geueth himself ouer in to thy hande, and committeth him vnto the, for thou art the helper of the frendlesse. Breake thou ỹ arme off the vngodly and malycious, seach out the wickednesse which he hath done, that he maye perish. The LORDE is kynge for euer, ye Heithen shal perish out off his londe. LORDE, thou heaurest the desyrous longynge off the poore: their herte is sure, that thine eare herkeneth therto. Helpe the fatherlesse and poore vnto their right, that the vngodly be nomore exalted vpon earth.

The X. A psalme of Dauid.

IN the LORDE put I my trust: how will ye then saye to my soule: that she shulde flie as a byrde vpon youre hill. For lo, the vngodly haue bēt their bowe, and made redy their arowes in the quyver: that they maye priuely shute at them, which are true of herte. The very foundacion haue they cast downe, what cā the righteous thē do withall? But the LORDE is in his holy temple, the LORDES seate is in heauen: he cōsidereth it with his eyes, his eye lyddes beholde the children of men. The LORDE seeth both the righteous and vngodly, but who so deliteth in wickednes, him his soule abhorreth. Vpon the vngodly he shal rayne snares, fyre, brymstone, storme and tempest: this reward shal they haue to drynke. For the LORDE is righteous, and he loueth righteousnes, his countenaunce beholdeth the thinge ỹ is iust.

The XI. A psalme of Dauid.

HElpe LORDE, for there is not one sayncte more: very fewe faithfull are there amonge the children off men. Euery man telleth lyes to his neighbō, they do but flater with their lippes and dissemble in their herte. O that the LORDE wolde roote out all disceatfull lippes, and the tonge that speaketh proude thinges. Which saye: Oure tōge shulde preuayle: we are they that ought to speake, who is lorde ouer vs? Now for the troubles sake off the oppressed, and because of the complaynte of the poore, I wil vp sayeth the LORDE) I will helpe thē, and set the at rest. The wordes of the LORDE are pure wordes: euē as ỹ syluer, which from earth is tried and purified vij. tymes in the fyre. Kepe thē ther fore (o LORDE) and preserue vs fro this generacion for ever. And why? when vanite and ydylnes getteth the ouer hande amonge the children of men, all are full of ỹ vngodly.

The XII. A psalme of Dauid.

HOw longe wilt thou forget me, o LORDE: for euer: how longe wilt thou hyde thy face frome: Oh how lōge shall I seke councell in my soule: how longe shall I be so vexed in myne herte: how longe shal myne enemie tryumphe ouer me: Considre, ād heare me, o LORDE my God: lighten myne eyes, that I slepe not in death. Lest myne enemie saye: I haue preuayled agaynst hī for yf I be cast downe, they that trouble me will reioyse at it.

But my trust is in thy mercy, and my hert is ioyfull in thy sauynge healthe. I wil synge of the LORDE, that dealeth so louyngly with me. (yee I wil prayse the name of the LORDE the most hyest)

The XIII. A psalme of Dauid.

THe foolish bodyes saye in their hertes: Tush, there is no God. They are corrupte, ād become abhominable in their doynges, there is not one yᵗ doth good. The LORDE loked downe frō heauē vpō the children of men, to se yf there were eny, that wolde vnderstonde ȝ seke after God. But they are all gone out of the waye, they are altogether become vnprofitable: there is none that doth good, no not one. * Their thro te is an open sepulcre, with their tonges they haue disceaued, the poyson of Aspes is vnder their lippes. * Their mouth is full of cursinge and bytternes, their fete are swift to shed blonde. * Destruccion ȝ wretchednes are in their wayes, ād the waye of peace haue they not knowne: there is no feare off God before their eyes. How can they haue vnderstondinge, yᵗ worke myschefe, eatinge vp my people, as it were bred, ȝ call not vpō yᵗ LORDE? Therfore shal they be brought in greate feare, for God stondeth by the generacion of the righteous. As for you, ye haue made a mocke at the coūcell of the poore, because he putteth his trust in the LORDE. Oh yᵗ the sauynge healthe were geuen vnto Israel out off Sion. Oh that the LORDE wolde delyuer his people out of captiuyte. Thē shulde Jacob reioyse, and Israel shulde be right glad.

The XIIII. A psalme of Dauid.

LORDE, who shall dwell in thy tabernacle: who shal rest vpō yᵗ holy hill: Euen he yᵗ ledeth an vncorrupte life: that doth the thinge which is right, ād that speaketh the treuth from his herte. He yᵗ vseth no disceat in his tonge: he that doth no euell to his neghboure, ȝ slaundreth not his neghbours. He yᵗ setteth not by the vngodly but maketh moch of thē that feare the LORDE: he yᵗ sweareth vnto his neghboure ād disappointeth him not. He that geueth not his money vpon vsury, and taketh no rewarde a gaynst the innocēt. Who so doth these thinges, shal neuer be remoued.

The XV. A psalme of Dauid.

PReserue me (o God) for in the do I trust. I haue sayde vnto yᵗ LORDE: thou art my God, my goodes are nothinge vnto the. All my delyte is vpon the sanctes that are in the earth, and vpon soch like. But they yᵗ runne after another shall haue greate trouble. Their drynke offerynges of blonde wil not I offre, nether make mencion of their name in my moueth. The LORDE himself is my good and my [illegible] thou manteynest my enheritaūce. [illegible] is fallen vnto me in a fayre groūde [illegible] ne a goodly heretage. I wil thanke [illegible] DE for geuynge me warnynge, my re[illegible] so haue chastened me in the night se[illegible] Afore hōnde sawe I God allwayes [illegible] me, for he is on my right honde, that I shulde not be meued.

Therfore dyd my hert reioyce, ȝ my tunge was glad, my flesh also shall rest in hope. For why: thou shalt not leaue my soule in hell, nether shalt thou suffre thy sayncte to se corrupcion. Thou hast shewed me the wayes off life: thou shalt make me full of ioye wᵗ thy countenaunce. At thy right hande there is pleasure and ioye for euermore.

The XVI. A psalme of Dauid.

HEare yᵗ right (O LORDE) cōsidre my cōplaynte: herken vnto my prayer, that goeth not out of a fayned mouth. Let my sentence come forth frō thy presence, and loke vpon the thinge that is equall. Thou hast proued ȝ visited myne herte in the nighe seasō: thou hast tried me in the fyre, ȝ hast founde no wickednes in me: for I vtterly purposed, that my mouth shulde not offende. Because of the wordes of thy lippes, I haue kepte me frō the workes of men, in yᵗ wayes off the murthurer. Oh ordre thou my goynges in thy pathes, that my fote steppes slippe not. For vnto the I crie, heare me o God, enclyne thine eares to me, and herkē vnto my wordes. Shewe yᵗ marueloꝰ louinge kindnesse, thou that sauest them which put their trust in the, from soch as resist thy right honde. Kepe me as the apple of an eye, defende me vnder the shadowe of thy wynges. From the vngodly that trouble me, fro myne enemies which compasse my soule rounde aboute.

Matt. 25.

Which manteyne their owne welthynesse with oppression, & their mouth speaketh proude thinges. They lye waytinge in ye waye on euery syde, turnynge their eyes downe to the grounde. Like as a lyon that is gredy of his pray, & as it were a lyons whelpe lurckynge in his denne. Up LORDE, dispoynte him & cast him downe: delyuer my soule with thy swerde from the vngodly. Fro the men of thy honde (o LORDE) from the men eff the worlde, which haue their porcion in this life: whose belies thou fyllest with thy treasure.

They have children at their desyre, and leaue the reste of their substaūce for their babes

But as for me, I will beholde thy presence in rightousnes: and when thy glory appeareth shal be satisfied.

XVII. A psalme of Dauid when he is delyuered from the honde eff Saul.

I Will loue the (o LORDE) my strēgth.

The LORDE is my succo', my refuge, my Sauio': my god, my helper i whō I trust: my buckler, ye horne of my health, & my protectiō. I will prayse ye LORDE & call vpon him, so shal I be safe fro myne enemies.

a The sorowes of death cōpassed me, & the brokes of vngodlynes made me afrayed. The paynes of hell came aboute me, the snares of death toke holde vpō me. Yet in my trouble I called vpō the LORDE, & cōplayned vnto my God. So he herde my voyce out eff his holy tēple, & my cōplaynte came before hi, yee euē into his eares. Thē the earth trembled

Iudic. v. f

& quaked, the very foūdaciōs of the hilles shoke & were remoued, because he was wrothe. There wēte a smoke out of his nostrels, ād a cōsumynge fyre out of his mouth, so ye coales were kyndled at it. He bowed the heauēs & came downe, & it was darcke vnder his fete. He rode vpō the Cherubins & dyd fle: he came flyenge with the wynges of the wynde. He made darckenesse his pauylion rounde aboute hi, with darcke water & thicke cloudes to couer him. At the brightnes off his presence the cloudes remoued, with hale stones & coales of fyre. The LORDE also thondred out of ye heauē, & the heyth gaue his thondre wt hale stones & coales of fyre. He sent out his arowes & scatred thē, he cast fore lightninges, & destroyed thē. The springes of waters were sene, & the foundaciōs of the roūde worlde were discouered at ye chiding (o LORDE) at the blastinge & breth of thy displeasure. He sent downe frō the heyth to fetch me, & toke me out of greate waters. He delyuered me fro my stronge enemies, and fro my foes which were to mightie for me. They preuented me in the tyme of my trouble, but ye LORDE was my defence. He brought me forth also into lyberte: & delyuered me, because he had a fauo' vnto me. The LORDE shall rewarde me after my rightuous dealynge, & according to the clēnesse of my hōdes shal he recōpense me. For I haue kepte the wayes of the LORDE, & haue not behaued myself wickedly agaynst my God. I haue an eye vnto all his lawes, & cast not out his commaundemētes fro me. Vncorrupte will I be before hī, & wil eschue myne owne wickednes. Therfore shal ye LORDE rewarde me after my righ

b tuous dealinge, & according vnto ye clēnesse of my hōdes in his eye sight. With the holy thou shalt be holy, & wt ye innocēt thou shalt be innocēt. With the clene thou shalt be clene & with the froward thou shalt be froward. For thou shalt saue the poore oppressed, & bringe downe the hye lokes of the proude. Thou lightest my cādle, o LORDE my God: thou makest my darckenesse to be light. For in the I can discōfit an hooste of mē: yee in my God I cā leape ouer the wall.

The waye of God is a perfecte waye: the wordes of the LORDE are tried in the fyre: he is a shylde of defence, for all them that trust in him. For who is God, but the LORDE? Or, who hath eny strength, but oure God? It is God that hath gyrded me with strēgth and made my waye vncorrupte. He hath made my fete like hartes fete, and set me vp an hye. He teacheth myne hondes to fight, and maketh myne armes to breake euen a bowe off stele. Thou hast geuē me the defence of thy health, thy right hande vpholdeth me, and thy louynge correccion maketh me greate. Thou hast made rowme ynough vnder me for to go, that my fote steppes shulde not slyde. I will folowe vpon myne enemies, and take them: I will not turne till they be discomfited. I will smyte them, they shall not be able to stonde, but fall vnder my fete. Thou hast gyrded me with strength vnto ye batell, thou hast throwē them all downe vnder me, that rose vp agaynst me. Thou hast made myne enemies to turne their backes vpon me, thou hast destroyed thē ye hated me. They cried, but there was none to helpe thē: yee euen vnto the LORDE, but he herde thē not. I will beate them as small as the dust before the wynde, I will cast them out as ye claye in the stretes. Thou shalt delyuer me from the stryuinges of the people, thou shalt make me the heade of the heithē. A people whom I haue not knowne, shall serue me.

As soone as they heare of me, they shall obeye me, but the straunge childrē dyssemble with me. The straunge children are waxē olde, and go halting out of their pathes. The LORDE lyueth: & blessed be my helper, praysed be the God of my healthe. Euē y God which seyth that I be auenged, and subdueth the people vnto me. It is he that deliuereth me fro my cruell enemies: thou shalt lifte me vp from them that ryse agaynst me, thou shalt ryd me from the wicked man.

For this cause I wil geue thankes vnto y (o LORDE) amonge the Gentiles, and synge prayses vnto thy name. Greate prosperite geueth he vnto his kynge, and sheweth louinge kyndnesse vnto Dauid his anoynted, yee & vnto his sede for euermore.

The XVIII. A psalme of Dauid.

THe very heauēs declare the glory off God, & the very firmamēt sheweth his hādye worke. One daye telleth another, and one night certifieth another. There is neither speach ner lāguage, but their voyces are herde amōge thē. Their soūde is gone out in to all londes, and their wordes in to the endes of the worlde.

In thē hath he sett a tabernacle for y Sōne, which cōmeth forth as a brydegrome out of his chambre, & reioyseth as a giaunte to rūne his course. It goeth forth frō the one ende of the heauen, and runneth aboute vnto the same ende agayne, & there maye no mā hyde himself frō the heate therof. The lawe of the LORDE is a perfecte lawe, it quickeneth the soule. The testimony of y LORDE is true, & geueth wisdome euen vnto babes. The statutes of the LORDE are right, & reioyse the herte: y cōmaundemēt of y LORDE is pure, and geueth light vnto the eyes.

The feare of the LORDE is cleane, & endureth for euer: the iudgmentes of the LORDE are true and rigtuous alltogether. More pleasunt are they then golde, yee then moch fyne golde: swater then hony & the hony combe. These thy seruaunt kepeth, & for kepinge of them there is greate reward. Who can tell, how oft he offendeth? Oh clēse thou me fro my secrete fautes. Kepe thy seruaūte also from presumptuous synnes, lest they get the dominion ouer me: so shal I be vndefyled & innocēt frō the greate offence. Yee the wordes of my mouth & the meditaciō of my herte shalbe acceptable vnto the, o LORDE, my helper and my redemer.

The XIX. A psalme of Dauid.

THe LORDE heare the in the tyme off trouble, the name of the God of Jacob defende the. Sende the helpe frō the Sanctuary, & strength y out of Sion. Remembre all thy offerynges, and accepte thy brent sacrifice. Sela. Graunte the thy hertes desyre, & fulfill all thy mynde. We will reioyse in thy healthe, & triūphe in y name of the LORDE oure God: the LORDE performe all thy peticiōs. Now knowe I, that the LORDE helpeth his anoynted, and will heare him frō his holy heauen: mightie is the helpe of his right hōde. Some put their trust in charettes, & some in horses: but we wil remēbre y name of the LORDE oure God. They are brought downe and fallen, but we are ryssen and stonde vpright. Saue (LORDE) & helpe vs (o kynge) when we call vpon the.

The XX. A psalme of Dauid.

LORDE, how ioyfull is the kynge in y strength: O how exceadinge glad is he of thy sauynge healthe? Thou hast geuen him his hertes desyre, & hast not put him frō the request of his lippes. Sela. For thou hast preuēted him w^t liberall blessinges, & set a crowne of golde vpon his heade. He asked life of the, & thou gauest him a longe life, euē for euer & euer. His honoure is greate in thy sauynge healthe, glory and greate worshipe shalt thou laye vpon him. For thou shalt geue him euerlastige felicite, & make him glad w^t the ioye of y coūtenaūce. And why: because the kinge putteth his trust in the LORDE, & in the mercy of the most hieste he shal not myscary. Let all thine enemies fele thy honde, let thy right honde fynde out all thē y hate the. Thou shalt make thē like a fyre ouen in tyme of thy wrath: the LORDE shal destroye thē in his displeasure, & the fyre shall consume them. Their frute shalt thou rote out of the earth, & their sede frō amōge the childrē of men. For they intended myschefe agaynst the, & ymagined soch deuyces, as they were not able to performe. Therfore shalt thou put thē to flight, & with thy stringes thou shalt make ready thine arowes agaynst the faces off them. Be thou exalted (LORDE) in thine owne strength, so wil we synge and prayse thy power.

The XXI. A psalme of Dauid.

MY God, my God: why hast thou forsaken me: y wordes of my cōplaynte are farre fro my healthe. O my God, I crie in the daye tyme, but thou herest not: and in the night season also I take no rest. Yet dwellest thou in the Sanctuary, o thou worshipe of Israel. Oure fathers hoped in the, they trusted in the, & thou dydest delyuer them. They callled vpon the,

and were helped: they put their truſt in the, and were not cõfounded. But as for me, I am a worme and no man: a very ſcorne of me and the out caſt of the people. All they y ſe me, laugh me to ſcorne: they ſhute out their lippes, and ſhake their heades. He truſted in God, let him delyuer him: let him helpe hi, yf he wil have him. But thou art he that toke me out of my mothers wõbe: thou waſt my hope, when I hanged yet vpon my mothers breſtes. I have bene left vnto the euer ſence I was borne, thou art my God, euẽ fro my mothers wombe. O go not fro me the, for trouble is harde at honde, and here is none to helpe me. Greate bulles are come aboute me, fatt oxen cloſe me in on euery ſyde. They gape vpon me with their mouthes, as it were a rampinge and roaringe lyon.

I am poured out like water, all my bones are out of ioynt: my hert in the myddeſt off my body is euen like meltinge waxe. My ſtrength is dried vp like a pot ſherde, my tunge cleueth to my gomes, and thou haſt brought me in to the duſt of death. For dogges are come aboute me, the cõuell of y wicked hath layed ſege agaynſt me. They pearſed my hondes and my fete, I might have told all my bones: as for them, they ſtode starinige and lokinge vpon me. They have parted my garmentes amonge them, ād caſt lottes vpon my veſture.

But be not thou farre fro me, o LORDE: thou art my ſuccoure, haiſt the to helpe me. Delyuer my ſoule from the ſwearde, my dearlinge from the power of the dogge. Saue me from the lyons mouth, and heare me frõ amonge the homes off the vnicornes. So will I declare thy name vnto my brethren, in the myddeſt off the congregacion will I prayſe the. O prayſe the LORDE ye that feare him: Magnifie him all ye ſede of Jacob, and let all y ſede of Iſrael feare hi. For he hath not deſpyſed ner abhorred the myſerable eſtate of the poore: he hath not hyd his face fro me, but whẽ I called vnto him, he herde me. I will prayſe the in the greate congregacion, and performe my vowes in the ſight off all thẽ that feare the. The poore ſhal eate ād be ſatisfied: they y ſeke after y LORDE ſhal prayſe him: youre herte ſhal lyne for euer.

All the endes of the worlde ſhal remembre them ſelues, and be turned vnto the LORDE: and all the generacions of the heithen ſhal worſhipe before him. For the kyngdome is the LORDES, and he ſhal be the gouernoure of y heithen. All ſoch as be fat vpõ earth, ſhal eate alſo and worſhipe: All they that lye in the duſt, and lyue ſo hardly, ſhall fall downe before him. The ſede ſhall ſerue him, and preach of the LORDE for euer. They ſhal come, and declare his righteouſnes: vnto a people that ſhal be borne, whõ the LORDE hath made.

The XXII. A pſalme of Dauid.

The LORDE is my ſhepherde, I can wante nothinge. He ſedeth me in a grene paſture, ād ledeth me to a freſh water. He quickeneth my ſoule, and bringeth me forth in the waye of righteouſnes for his names ſake. Though I ſhulde walke now in the valley of the ſhadowe of death, yet I feare no euell, for thou art with me: thy ſtaffe and thy ſhepehoke cõforte me. Thou prepareſt a table before me agaynſt mine enemies: thou anoyneſt my heade with oyle, and filleſt my cuppe full. Oh let thy louynge kyndnes and mercy folowe me all the dayes off my life, that I maye dwell in the houſe off the LORDE for euer.

The XXIIII. A pſalme of Dauid.

The earth is the LORDES, and all that therin is: the cõpaſe of the worlde, ād all y dwell therin. For he hath fõded it vpõ the ſees, and buylded it vpon the flodes. Who ſhal go vp in to the hill off the LORDE: Or, who ſhal remayne in his holy place: Euẽ he y hath innocẽt hõdes and a clene herte: which lifteth not vp his mynde vnto vanite, and ſweareth not to diſceaue. He ſhal receaue the bleſſinge frõ the LORDE, ād mercy frõ God his ſauioure. This is y generaciõ of thẽ y ſeke him, of thẽ y ſeke y face, o Jacob. Sela. Open yo gates (o ye princes) let the euerlaſtinge dores be opened, and y kynge off glory maye come in. Who is this kynge of glory: It is the LORDE ſtrõge and mighty, euen the LORDE mighty in batell.

Open youre gates (o ye princes) let the euerlaſtinge dores be opened, y the kynge off glory maye come in. Who is this kynge off glory: It is the LORDE of hooſtes, he is the kynge of glory. Sela.

The XXIIII. A pſalme of Dauid.

Vnto the (o LORDE) I lift vp my ſoule. My God, I truſt in y: Oh let me not be confounded, leſt myne enemies triũphe ouer me. For all they y hope in y ſhal not be aſhamed: but ſoch as be ſcornefull deſpyſers wont a cauſe they ſhall be put to cõfuciõ. Shewe me thy wayes (o LORDE) and teach me thy pathes. Call to remembraunce, O LORDE, thy tender mercyes & thy louinge kyndneſſes, which haue bene euer of olde. Oh remembre not ſ synnes & offences of my youth, but accordinge vnto thy mercy thynke vpon me (O LORDE) for thy goodneſſe. O how frēdly & righteous is the LORDE, therfore wil he teach ſynners in the waye. He ledeth the ſymple a right, and ſoch as be meke thē lerneth he his wayes. All the wayes of the LORDE are very mercy & faithfulneſſe, vnto ſoch as kepe his teſtament and couenaunt. For thy names ſake, O LORDE, be merciſull vnto my ſynne, for it is greate. What ſo euer he be that feareth the LORDE, he ſhal ſhewe him the waye that he hath choſen.

His ſoule ſhall dwell at eaſe, and his ſede ſhall poſſeſſe the londe. The ſecrete of the LORDE is amonge them that feare him, and he ſheweth them his couenaunt. Myne eyes are euer lokynge vnto the LORDE, for he ſhal plucke my fete out of ſ nett. Turne the vnto me and haue mercy vpon me, for I am deſolate and in miſery. The ſorowes of my herte are greate, O brynge me out of my troubles.

Loke vpon my aduerſite and miſery, and forgeue me all my ſynnes. Conſidre how myne enemies are many, and beare a malicious hate agaynſt me. O kepe my ſoule, and delyuer me: let me not be confounded, for I haue put my truſt in the. Let innocency and righteous dealinge wayte vpon me, for my hope is in the. Delyuer Iſrael (O God) out of all his trouble.

The XXV. Pſalme of Dauid.

BE thou my iudge (O LORDE) for I walke innocently: my truſt is in the LORDE, therfore ſhall I not fall.

Examen me O LORDE, and proue me: trie out my reynes and my hert. For thy louynge kyndneſſe is before myne eyes, and I walke in thy trueth. I ſyt not amōge vayne perſonnes, and haue no felliſhipe with the diſceatfull. I hate the congregacion of the wicked, and I will not ſyt amonge the vngodly.

I waſſhe my hondes with innocency O LORDE, and ſo go I to thine aulter. That I maye ſhewe the voyce of thy prayſe, and tell of all thy wonderous workes. LORDE, I loue the habitacion of thy houſe, and ſ place where thy honoure dwelleth. O deſtroye not my ſoule with the ſynners, ner my life with the bloudthurſtie. In whoſe hondes is wickednesſe, and their right hondes is full of giftes. But as for me I will walke innocently: O delyuer me, and be merciſull vnto me. My fote ſtondeth right: I wil prayſe the (O LORDE) in the congregacions. Deu. 17.

The XXVI. Pſalme of Dauid.

THe LORDE is my light and my helth: whom then ſhulde I feare? the LORDE is the ſtrength of my life, for whom the ſhulde I be afrayed? Therfore when the wicked (euen myne enemies & my foes) came vpon me, to eate vp my fleſh, they ſtombled and fell. Though an hoſt of men were layed agaynſt me, yet ſhal not my hert be afrayed: and though there roſe vp warre againſt me, yet wil I put my truſt in him. One thinge haue I deſyred of the LORDE, which I wil requyre: namely, that I maye dwell in the houſe of the LORDE all the dayes of my life, to beholde the fayre bewtie of the LORDE, and to vyſet his temple. A Pſal. 118. Luce 10. 2. Re. 7. c

For in the tyme of trouble he hath hyd me in his tabernacle, yee in the ſecrete place of his dwellinge hath he kepte and ſet me vp vpon a rocke of ſtone. And now hath he lift vp my heade aboue myne enemies, that cōpaſſed me rounde aboute. Therfore wil I offre in his dwellinge, the oblacion of thākeſgeuynge: I wil both ſynge & ſpeake prayſes vnto the LORDE. Herke vnto my voyce (O LORDE) when I crie vnto the: haue mercy vpon me & heare me. My hert ſpeaketh vnto the, my face ſeketh the, yee LORDE, thy face wil I ſeke. O hyde not thou thy face fro me, caſt not thy ſeruaunt of in diſpleaſure. Thou art my ſuccoure, leaue me not, nether forſake me, O God my Sauioure. For my father and my mother haue forſaken me, but the LORDE hath taken me vp. Shewe me thy waye O LORDE, and lede me in the right path, becauſe of myne enemies. Delyuer me not into the wylles of myne aduerſaries, for there are falſe wytneſſes ryſen vp againſt me, and they ymagyn myſchefe. Neuertheleſſe, I beleue verely to ſe the goodneſſe of the LORDE in the londe of the lyuynge. O tary thou ſ LORDE S leyſure, be ſtronge, let thine hert be of good comforte, and wayte thou ſtill for the LORDE. B 1. Re. 21. C Pſal. 29. d

The XXVII. Pſalme of Dauid.

VNto the wil I crie, o my ſtronge defence: thinke no ſcorne of me, leſt (if thou make the as though thou herdeſt not) I become like them, that go downe into ſ pytte. Heare the voyce of my humble peticion, when I crie vnto the, and holde vp my hondes towarde thy holy temple. D

O plucke me not awaye amonge the vngodly and wicked doers, which speake frendly to their neighboure, but ymagin myschefe in their herres. Rewarde them accordinge to their dedes and wickednesse of their owne ínuencions. Recompense them after ye workes of their hõdes, paye them that they haue deserued. For they regarde not the workes of the LORDE, nor the operacion of his hãdes: therfore shal he breake them downe, and not buylde them vp. Praysed be ye LORDE, for he hath herde the voyce of my humble peticiõ. The LORDE is my strẽgth and my shylde: my herte hoped in him, & I am holpe: therfore my hert daũseth for ioye, and I will synge prayses vnto him. The LORDE is the strength of his people, he is the defender and Sauoure of his anoynted.

O helpe thy people, geue thy blessynge vnto thy enheritaunce: fede them, and set them vp for euer.

The XXVIII. A psalme of Dauid.

A Scrybe vnto the LORDE (o ye mightie) ascribe vnto the LORDE worshipe and strength. Geue the LORDE the honoure of his name, bowe youre selues to the holy magesty of the LORDE. It is the LORDE that commaundeth the waters: It is the glorious God that maketh ye thonder: it is the LORDE ye ruleth the see. The voyce of the LORDE is mightie in operacion, the voyce of the LORDE is a glorious voyce. The voyce of the LORDE breaketh the Cedre trees: yee the LORDE breaketh the Cedres of Libanus. He maketh them to skippe like a calfe: Libanus and Sirion like a yonge vnycorne. The voyce of the LORDE deuideth the flames of fyre: the voyce of the LORDE shaketh the wilderneſſe, yee the LORDE shaketh the wilderneſſe of Cades.

The voyce of the LORDE moueth ye hyndes & discouereth the thicke busshes: in his temple shal euery man speake of his honoure. The LORDE stilleth the water floude, & ye LORDE remayneth a kynge for euer. The LORDE shall geue power vnto his people, the LORDE shal geue his people the blessynge of peace.

The XXIX. A psalme of Dauid.

A I Wil magnifie ye (O LORDE) for thou hast set me vp, & not suffred my foes to triũphe ouer me. O LORDE my God, I cried vnto the, and thou hast healed me. Thou LORDE hast brought my soule out of hell: thou hast kepte my life, where as they go downe to the pytte. Synge prayses vnto the LORDE (o ye sayntes of his) geue thankes vnto him for a remembraunce of his holynesse. For his wrath endureth but the twynckelinge of an eye, and his pleasure is in life: heuynesse maye well endure for a nighte, but ioye commeth in the mornynge.

As for me, whẽ I was in prosperite, I sayde: Tush, I shal neuer fall more. (And why? thou LORDE of thy goodnesse hadest made my hill so stronge.) But as soone as thou turnedest thy face fro me, I was brought in feare. Thẽ cried I vnto ye (O LORDE) yee vnto ye LORDE made I my prayer. What profit is there in my blonde, yf I go downe to corrupcion? Maye the dust geue thankes vnto ye? Or shal it declare thy faithfulnesse? Heare (O LORDE) and haue mercy vpon me: LORDE be thou my helper. And so thou hast turned my heuynesse into ioye: thou hast put of my sack cloth, & gyrded me w gladnesse. That my honor mighe synge prayses vnto the w out ceassynge: O LORDE my God, I wil geue thankes vnto the for euer.

The XXX: A psalme of Dauid.

IN the, O LORDE, is my trust: let me neuer be put to cõfucion, but delyuer me in thy righteousnesse. Bowe downe thine eare to me, make hast to delyuer me: be thou my stronge rocke and a house of defence, that thou mayest saue me. For thou art my stronge holde & my castell: O be thou my gyde, & lede me for thy names sake. Drawe me out of the nett ye they haue layed primely for me, for thou art my strẽgth.

Into thy hondes I commende my spirite: thou hast deliuered me O LORDE thou God of treuth. I hate them that holde of vanities, and my trust is in the LORDE. I wil be glad and reioyse in thy mercy: for thou hast considred my trouble, thou hast knowne my soule in aduersite. Thou hast not delyuered me ouer in to the hõdes of the enemie, but hast set my fete in a large rowme. Haue mercy vpon me, O LORDE, for I am in trouble, myne eye is consumed for very heuynesse, yea my soule and my body. My life is waxen olde with heuynesse, and my yeares w mournynge. My strẽgth fayleth me because of my aduersite, and my bones are corrupte. I am become a very reproose amonge all myne enemies, my neighbours & they of myne owne acquaintaunce are afrayed of me: they ye se me in the strete, cõvey them selues fro me. I am clene forgotten and out of mynde, as a deed man: I am become like a broken vessell.

For I haue herde the blasphemy of the multitude: euery man abhorreth me: they ha-ye gathered a councel together agaynst me, and are purposed to take awaye my life.

But my hope is in ỹ O LORDE, & I saye: thou art my God. My tyme is in thy honde: delyuer me from the honde of myne enemies, & from them ỹ persecute me. Shewe thy seruaunt the light of thy countenaunce, helpe me for thy mercies sake. Let me not be confounded (o LORDE) for I call vpon the: let the vngodly rather be put to confucion, and brought vnto the hell. Let the lyenge lippes be put to sylence, which cruelly, disdaynedly & despitefully speake agaynst the righteous. O how greate and manifolde is thy good, which thou haist hyd for them that feare ỹ: O what thinges bum gest thou to passe for them, that put their trust in the, euen before the sonnes of men?

Thou hydest them priuely by thine owne presence from the proude men, thou kepest them secretly in thy tabernacle, from the strife of tonges. Thankes be to the LORDE, for he hath shewed me maruelous greate kyndnesse in a stronge cite. For when the sodane feare came vpon me, I sayde: I am cast out of thy sight. Neuertheles, thou herdest myne humble prayer, when I cried vnto the. O loue the LORDE (all ye his soyntes) for the LORDE preserueth the faithfull, and plenteously rewardeth he the proude doer. Be stronge therfore & take a good herte vnto you, all ye that put youre trust in the LORDE.

The XXXI. A psalme of Dauid.

BLessed are they, whose vnrighteousnesse is forgeuen, and whose synnes are couered. Blessed is the man, vnto whom the LORDE imputeth no synne, in whose spirite there is no gyle. For whyle I helde my tonge, my bones consumed awaye thorow my daylie complaynynges. And because thy hande was so heuy vpon me both daye and night, my moysture was like the drouth in Sommer. Sela.

Therfore I confessed my synne vnto the, and hyd not myne vnrighteousnesse. I saide: I will knowlege myne offence, and accuse my self vnto the LORDE, and so thou forganest me the wickednesse of my synne.

Sela. For this shal euery saynte make his prayer vnto the in due season, therfore shall not the greate water floudes come nye him. Thou art my defence in the trouble that is come aboute me, O cõpasse thou me aboute also with the ioye of delyueraunce.

Sela. I wil enforme the, and shewe the the waye wherin thou shalt go: I wil fasten myne eyes vpon the. Be not ye now like horses & mooles, which haue no vnderstondinge. Whose mouthes thou must holde with bytt & bridle, yf they wil not obeie the.

Greate plages shall ỹ vngodly haue, but who so putteth his trust in the LORDE, mercy shall compasse him on euery syde. Be glad (o ye righteous) and reioyse in the LORDE, be ioyfull all ye that are true of herte.

The XXXII. A psalme of Dauid.

REioyse in ỹ LORDE (o ye righteous) for it becommeth well the iust to be thankfull. Prayse the LORDE with harpe: synge psalmes vnto him with the lute and instrument of ten strynges. Synge him a new songe, yee synge lustely vnto him & with a good courage. For the worde of ỹ LORDE is true, and all his workes are faithfull. He loueth mercy & iudgment, ỹ earth is full of the goodnesse of the LORDE. By the worde of the LORDE were the heauens made, & all the hoostes of them by ỹ breth of his mouth. He gathereth ỹ waters together as it were in a bottell, & laieth vp the depe in secrete. Let all the earth feare the LORDE, and let all them that dwell in the worlde, stode in awe of him. For loke what he sayeth, it is done: and loke, what he cõmaundeth, it stondeth fast. The LORDE bringeth the councell of the heithen to naught, and turneth the deuyces of the people.

But the cõcell of the LORDE endureth, and the thoughtes of his hert from generacion to generacion. Blessed are the people that holde the LORDE for their God, & blessed are the folke whom he hath chosen to be his heretage. The LORDE loketh downe from heauen, & beholdeth all the children of men: from his stronge seate he considreth all them ỹ dwell in the worlde. He only hath fashioned all the hertes of them, & knoweth all their workes. A kynge is not holped by his owne greate hoost, nether is a giaunte saued thorow the might of his owne stregth.

A horse is but a vayne thynge to saue a man, it is not the power of his stregth that can delyuer him. Beholde, the eye of the LORDE loketh vnto them that feare him, & put their trust in his mercy. That he may delyuer their soules from death, and to fede them in the deare tyme. Let oure soule paciently abyde the LORDE, for he is oure helpe and shilde. So shal oure herte reioyse in him, because we haue hoped in his holy name. Let thy mercifull kyndnesse (o LORDE) be vpon vs, like as we put oure trust in the.

The XXXIIII. A psalme of Dauid.

A I Wil allwaye geue thankes vnto the LORDE, his prayse shal euer be in my mouth. My soule shall make hir boast in the LORDE: the poore oppressed shal heare therof, and be glad. O prayse ye LORDE with me, and let vs magnifie his name to gether. Re.21.d I sought the LORDE, and he herde me, yee he delyuered me out of all my feare. They that haue an eye vnto him, shalbe lightened, & their faces shall not be ashamed. This poore man cried vnto the LORDE, and he herde him, yee and delyuered him out of all his troubles. 1.Re.6.19 Iosue 5.d The angell of the LORDE pitcheth his tente rounde aboute them that feare him, and delyuereth them.

Psal.2.b O taist and se how frendly the LORDE is, B blessed is the man ye trusteth in him. Psal.127.a Matt.6.c O feare the LORDE, ye ye be his sayntes: for they that feare him, lacke nothinge. The rich shal want and suffre hunger, but they which seke the LORDE, shal wāt no maner of thinge, that is good. Come hither (o ye children) herken vnto me, I wil teach you the feare of the LORDE. Who so listeth to lyue, & wolde fayne se good dayes. Let him refrayne his tonge from euell, and his lippes that they speake no gyle. Let him eschue euell, and do good: Let him seke peace & ensue it. For the eyes of the LORDE are ouer the righteous, and his eares are open vnto their prayers. But the face of the LORDE beholdeth them that do euel, to destroye the remembraunce of them out of the earth.

When the righteous crie, the LORDE heareth them, and delyuereth thē out of all their troubles. The LORDE is nye vnto them ye are contrite in hert, & wil helpe soch as be of an hūble spirete. Greate are ye troubles of the righteous, but the LORDE delyuereth them out of all. He kepeth all their bones, so ye not one of them is broken. But miss fortune shal slaye the vngodly, and they that hate ye righteous shal be giltie. The LORDE delyuereth the soules of his seruaūtes, and all they that put their trust in him, shal not offende.

The XXXIIII. A psalme of Dauid.

A STryue thou with them (o LORDE) that stryue w̄ me, fight thou agaynst them that fighte agaynst me. Laye honde vpon the shylde and speare, and stonde vp to helpe me. Drawe out thy swearde, and stoppe the waye agaynst them that persecute me, saye vnto my soule: I am ye helpe. Let them be cōfounded and put to shame, that seke after my soule: let thē be turned back and brought to confucion, that ymagin myscheefe for me. Let thē be as ye dust before the wynde, and the angell of the LORDE scaterynge thē. Let their waye be darcke and slippery, and the angell of the LORDE to persecute them. For they haue prively laied their nett to destroye me without a cause, yee and made a pitte for my soule, which I never deserued. Let a sodane destruccō come vpon him vnawarres, and ye nett that he hath layed prively, catch him self, that he maye fall into his owne myscheefe. But let my soule be ioyfull in the LORDE, and reioyse in his helpe. All my bones shal saie: LORDE, who is like vnto the? which delyuerest ye poore from those that are to stronge for him, yee the poore and the nedy from his robbers.

False witnesses are rysen vp, & laye to my charge thinges that I knowe not. They reward me euell for good, to the greate discomforth of my soule. Neuertheles, when they were sick, I put on a sack cloth: I humbled my soule with fastinge, and my prayer turned in to myne owne bosome. I behaued my self as though it had bene my frende or my brother, I were heuely, as one ye mourneth for his mother. But in my aduersite they reioyse, and gather them together: yee ye very lame come together agaynst me vnawarres, makynge mowes at me, & ceasse not. With ye gredy & scornefull ypocrites they gnaßshed vpon me with their teth. LORDE, whan wilt thou loke vpō this? O rescue my soule from ye wicked rūmoure of thē, my dearlinge from the lyons. So wil I geue ye thankes in the greate congregacion, & prayse the amonge moch people. O let thē not triūphe ouer me, that are myne enemies for naught: O let them not wincke w̄ their eyes, that hate me without a cause. And why? their comonynge is not for peace, but they ymagin false wordes agaynst ye ouercrestes of the londe. They gape vpon me w̄ their mouthes, sayenge: there there: we se it with oure eyes. This thou seist, o LORDE: holde not thy tonge thē: go not farre from me, o LORDE. Awake (LORDE) and stonde vp: auenge thou my cause, my God, and my LORDE. Judge me (o LORDE my God) acordinge to thy righteousnesse, & they triūphe not ouer me. O let thē not saye in their hertes: there there, so wolde we haue it. O let them not saye: we haue ouercome him.

Let them be put to confucion and shame, that reioyse at my trouble: let thē be clothed with rebuke and dishonoure, that boost thē selues agaynst me. Let them also be glad and reioyse, that fauoure my rightuous dealinge: yee let them saye allwaye: blessed be ỹ LORDE, which hath plesure in the prosperite of his seruaunt. And as for my tonge, it shall be talkynge of thy rightousnes and of thy prayse, all the daye longe.

The XXXV. A psalme of Dauid.

WHert sheweth me the wickednesse of the vngodly, that there is no feare of God before his eyes. For he dyssembleth before his face, so longe till his abhominable synne be founde out. The wordes of his mouth are vnrightuousnesse and disceate, he wil not be lerned to do good. He ymagineth mysches vpon his bedde, he will come in no good waye, ner refuse the thinge that is euell. Thy mercy (O LORDE) reacheth vnto the heauen, and thy faithfulnesse vnto the cloudes. Thy rightuousnesse stondeth like the stronge mountaynes, & thy iudgment like the greate depe. Thou LORDE preseruest both mẽ & beestes. How precious is thy mercy (O God) that the children of men maye put their trust vnder ỹ shadowe of thy wynges? They shalbe satisfied with the plẽteousnesse of thy house, and thou shalt geue them drynke of the ryuer of thy pleasures. For by the is ỹ well of life, & in thy light, shall we se light. O sprede forth thy louynge kyndnesse vnto them that knowe the, & thy rightuousnes vnto thẽ that are true of hert. O let not the fote of pryde ouertake me, O let not the hande of ỹ vngodly cast me downe. As for wicked doers, they fall, they are cast downe, & are not able to stõde.

The XXXVI. A psalme of Dauid.

FRett not thy self at the vngodly, be not thou envious agaynst the euell doers. For they shall soone be cut downe like ỹ grasse, & be wythered euen as ỹ greene herbe. Put thou thy trust in ỹ LORDE, & be doinge good: so shalt thou dwell in the londe, & verely it shal fede the. Delyte thou in the LORDE, & he shal geue the thy hertes desyre. Cõmitte thy waye vnto ỹ LORDE, set thy hope in him, and he shal bringe it to passe. Yee he shall make thy rightousnesse as cleare as the light, & thy iust dealinge as the noone daye. Holde the still in ỹ LORDE, and abyde pacietly vpon him: but greue not thy self at one that hath prosperite, and lyueth in abhominacion. Leaue of from wrath, let go displeasure, let not thy gelousy moue the also to do euell. For wicked doers shal be roted out, but they that pacietly abyde the LORDE, shal enheret the londe.

Suffre yet a litle whyle, & ỹ vngodly shal be clene gone: thou shalt loke after his place, & he shal be awaye. But the meke spreted shal possesse the earth, & haue pleasure in moch rest. The vngodly layeth wayte for the iust, & gnasheth vpon him w his tethe, Matt. 5. a

But ỹ LORDE laugheth him to scorne, for he seith ỹ his daye is cõminge. The vngodly drawe out the swerde & bende their bowe, to cast downe ỹ symple & poore, and to slaye soch as go ỹ right waye. Neuertheles, their swerde shal go thorow their owne hert, and their bowe shalbe brokẽ. Psal. 2. a

A small thinge ỹ the rightuous hath, is better then greate riches of the vngodly. For the armes of ỹ vngodly shalbe broken, but the LORDE vpholdeth the rightuous. The LORDE knoweth the dayes of the godly, & their enheritaũce shal endure for euer. They shal not be cõfounded in ỹ perlous tyme, & in ỹ dayes of derth they shall haue ynough. As for ỹ vngodly, they shall perishe: & whẽ ỹ enemies of ỹ LORDE are in their floures, they shal cõsume, yee euen as the smoke shal they cõsume awaye. The vngodly borroweth and paieth not agayne, but the rightuous is mercifull & liberall. Soch as be blessed of him, shal possesse the londe: & they whom he curseth, shalbe roted out. The LORDE ordreth a good mans goinge, & hath pleasure in his waye. Though he fall, he shal not be hurte, for the LORDE vpholdeth him w his hãde. Pro. 15. b. Eccli. 29. a. 1. Tim. 6. b

I haue bene yonge, & now am olde: yet sawe I neuer the rightuous forsakẽ, ner his sede to seke their bred. The rightuous is euer mercifull, & lẽdeth gẽtly, therfore shal his sede be blessed. Fle frõ euell, & do ỹ thinge that is good, so shalt thou dwell for euer.

For ỹ LORDE loueth ỹ thinge ỹ is right, he forsaketh not his sayntes, but they shal be preserued for euermore: as for the sede of the vngodly, it shalbe roted out. Yee the rightuous shal possesse ỹ lõde, & dwell therin for euer. The mouth of the rightuous is exercised in wysdome, & his tõge talketh of iudgment. The lawe of his God is in his hert, therfore shal not his fote steppes slyde. The vngodly seyth the righteous, & goeth about to slaye him. But the LORDE wil not leaue him in his hõdes, ner condemne him when he is iudged. Pro. 10. d

Hope thou in the LORDE & kepe his waye: & he shal so promote the, that thou shalt haue the lõde by enheritaũce, & se, when the vngodly shall perishe. I my self haue sene the vngodly in greate power, & florishinge like a grene baye tre: but when I went by, lo, he was gone: I sought him, but he could no where be founde.

Kepe innocency, and take hede vnto the thinge that is right, for that shall bringe a man peace at the last. As for the trāsgressours, they shal perishe together, and the vngodly shal be rooted out at ỹ last. The helpe of the righteous commeth of the LORDE, he is their strength in the tyme of trouble. The LORDE shal stode by them, and saue them: he shal delyuer them from the vngodly, and helpe thē, because they put their trust in him.

The XXXVII. A psalme of Dauid.

A Ierem.10.d Psal.6.a

PVt me not to rebuke (O LORDE) in thine anger: Oh chastē me not in thy heuy displeasure. For thy arowes stick fast in me, and thy honde presseth me sore. There is no whole parte in my body, because of thy displeasure: there is no rest in my bones, by reason of my synnes. For my wickednesses are gone ouer my heade, and are like a sore burthen, to heuy for me to beare.

My woundes stynck & are corrupte, throwe my folishnesse. I am brought in to so greate trouble and misery, that I go mournynge all the daye longe. For my loynes are clene dried vp, and there is no whole parte in my body. I am feble and sore smytte, I roare for the very disquietnes of my hert.

B LORDE, thou knowest all my desyre, & my gronynge is not hyd from the. My hert paunteth, my strength hath fayled me, & the light of myne eyes is gone fro me. My louers & frendes stonde lokynge vpon my trouble, and my kynsmen are gone a farre of.

They that sought after my life, and to do me euell, spake of lyes and ymagined disceate all the daye longe. As for me, I was like a deaf mā, and herde not: and as one that were domme, not openynge his mouth. I am become as a man that heareth not, and that can make no resistaunce w̄ his mouth.

C For in the (O LORDE) is my trust, thou shalt heare me, O LORDE my God. My desyre is, ỹ myne enemies triumphe not ouer me: for ỹ my fote slippe, they reioyse greatly against me. I am redy to suffre trouble, and my heuynesse is euer in my sight. For I cōfesse my wickednesse, & my synne greueth me.

But myne enemies lyue, and are mightie: and they that hate me without a cause, are many in nombre. They that reward me euell for good, speake euell of me, because I folowe the thinge that good is. Forsake me not (O LORDE my God) O go not farre fro me. Haist the to helpe me, O LORDE my succoure.

The XXXVIII. A psalme of Dauid.

I Sayde: I wil kepe my waies, that I offended not in my tonge. And so I shut my mouth, whyle the vngodly layed wayte for me. I held my tonge, I was domme, I kepte sylence, yee euē from good wordes, but it was payne and greefe to me. My hert was hote within me, & whyle I was thus musynge, the fyre kyndled: so that I spake with my tonge. LORDE, let me knowe myne ende, and the nombre of my dayes: that I maye be certified what I want. Beholde, thou hast made my dayes a spanne longe, and my life is as it were nothynge before the. O how vayne are all men lyuynge! Sela. Yee euery man walketh as it were a shadowe, and disquieteth himself in vayne: he heapeth vp riches, and cannot tell to whom he gathereth them. And now LORDE, wherin shall I comforte me? my hope is in the. Delyuer me from all myne offences, and make me not a scorne vnto the foolish. I kepe sylēce, and open not my mouth, for thou hast done it. Turne thy plages awaye fro me, for I am cōsumed throwe the feare of thy hāde. When thou punysshest man for synne, thou chastenest him so that his beutie consumeth awaye, like as it were a mothe. O how vayne are all men! Sela. Heare my prayer o LORDE, and considre my callinge: shewe not thy self as though thou sawest not my teares. For I am a straunger and pilgrymme with the, as all my forefathers were. Oh spare me a litle, that I maye refresh my self, before I go hence, and be no more sene.

The XXXIX. A psalme of Dauid.

I Wayted paciently for the LORDE, which enclyned himself vnto me, and herde my callinge. He brought me out of the horrible pitte, out of the myre and claye: he set my fete vpō the rocke, and ordred my goinges. He hath put a new songe in my mouth, euen a thankesgeuynge vnto our God. Many men seynge this, shal feare the LORDE, & put their trust in him. Blessed is the man that setteth his hope in the LORDE, and turneth not vnto the proude, & to soch as go aboute with lies. O LORDE my God, greate are ỹ wonderous workes which thou hast done: & in thy thoughtes towarde vs there maye none be lickened vnto the. I wolde declare them, and speake of thē: but they are so many, that they can not be told. Sacrifice and offeringe thou woldest not haue: but a body hast thou ordeined me. burntofferynges and sacrifice for synne thou hast not alowed. Then sayde I: Lo, I me. In the begynnynge of the boke it is writ ten of me, that I shulde fulfill thy wil O my God, & that am I contet to do: yee thy lawe is within my hert. I wil preach of y righ teousnesse in the greate congregacion: Lo, I wil not refrayne my lippes, O LORDE, & that thou knowest. I do not hyde y righteousnes in my hert, my talkynge is of thy treuth

and sauynge healthe: I kepe not thy louynge mercy and faithfulnesse backe from the grea te congregacion. Turne not thou thy mer cy fro me o LORDE, but let thy louynge kynd nesse and treuth allwaye preserue me. For innumerable troubles are come aboute me:
my synnes haue taken soch holde vpon me, that I am not able to loke vp: yee they are mo in nombre then the hayres of my heade, and my hert hath fayled me. O LORDE, let it be thy pleasure to deliuer me, make haist (o LORDE) to helpe me. Let them be asha med and cõfounded, that seke after my sou le, to destroie it: let them fall backwarde and be put to confucion, that wysh me euell.

Let thẽ soone be brought to shame, that cue ouer me: there there. But let all those that seke the, be ioyfull and glad in the: and let all soch as delyte in thy sauynge healthe, saye allwaye: the LORDE be praysed. As for me, I am poore & in mysery, but the LOR DE careth for me. Thou art my helper & redemer, make no longe tariẽge, o my God.

The XL. A psalme of Dauid.

BLessed is he, y considereth y poore: y
LORDE shal delyuer him in the tyme of trouble. The LORDE shal preserue him, and kepe him alyue: he shal make him to prospere vpon earth, and shal not de-lyuer him in to y wil of his enemies. The LORDE shal refiesh him, when he lyeth sick vpon his bedd, yee thou makest his bed in all his sicknesse. I sayde: LORDE be merci-full vnto me, heale my soule, for I haue synned agaynst the. Myne enemies speake euell vpõ me: whan shal he dye, and his name perishe? Though he came in to se, yet mea ned he falsede in his hert, heapinge myschefe vpon himself. All they that hate me, run me together agaynst me, and ymagin euell a-gaynst me. They haue geuen a wicked sen tence vpon me: when he lyeth, he shal ryse vp nomore. Yee euen myne owne familier fren de, whom I trusted, which dyd eate my bred, hath lift vp his hele agaynst me. But be thou mercifull vnto me (o LORDE) rayse thou me vp, and I shal reward them. By this I knowe thou fauourest me, that my enemie shal not triumphe ouer me. Thou hast vp holden me because of my innocency, and set me before thy face for euer. O blessed be y LORDE God of Israel, from hẽce forth and for euermore. Amen, Amen.

The XLI. A psalme of y childre of Corah.

LIke as the hert desyreth the water brokes, so longeth my soule after the, o God. My soule is a thurste for God, yee euẽ for the lyuynge God: wha shal
I come, & behold the face of God? My Psal. 79
teares are my meate daye and nyght, whyle
it is daylie sayde vnto me: where is now thy God? Now when I thinke there vpõ, I poure out my hert by my self: for I wolde say 1. Reg. 1
ne go hence with the multitude, & passe ouer
with them vnto the house of God, in y voy ce of prayse & thankesgeuynge, amonge soch as kepe holy daye. Why art thou so full Psal. 42 of heuynes (o my soule) & why art thou so vn quiete within me? O put thy trust in God, for I wil yet geue him thankes, for the helpe of his countenaũce. My God, my soule is vexed within me: therfore I remẽbre the len de of Jordane, & the litle hill of Hermonim.
One depe calleth another w the voyce of thy whystles, all thy wawes & water flou des are gone ouer me. The LORDE hath promised his louynge kyndnesse daylie, ther fore wil I prayse him in the nyght season, and make my prayer vnto y God of my life. I will saye vnto God my stony rock: why hast thou forgotten me? why go I thus heuely, whyle the enemie oppresseth me? Whyle
my bones are broken, & whyle myne enemies cast me in the tethe, daylie sayenge vnto me where is now thy God? Why art thou so heuy (o my soule) & why art thou so disquiete within me? O put thy trust in God, for I wil yet thanke him for the helpe of his countenaunce, and because he is my God.

The XLII. psalme.

GIue sentence vpon me (o God) & de fende my cause agaynst the vnhol people: Oh delyuer me from the de ceatfull & wicked man. For thou (o God) art my strẽgth: why hast thou shot me fro
the? Why go I then so heuely, whyle the en mie oppresseth me? Oh sende out y ligh & thy trueth, y they maye leade me & bryng me vnto thy holy hill and to thy dwelling
That I maye go in to the aulter of God,
euen vnto the God which is my ioye & plea
re, & vpon the harpe to geue thãkes vnto
o God, my God. Why art thou so heuy my soule) & why art thou so disquieted with me? O put thy trust in God, for I wil yet g

Deut. 6. b
WE haue herde with o^r eare (O God) o^r fathers haue tolde vs, what thou hast done in their tyme, of olde.

Thou art ỹ kinge & my God, thou sendest helpe vnto Jacob. Thorow ỹ, wil we ouerthrowe oure enemies: & in thy name will we treade them vnder, that ryse vp agaynst vs.

For I will not trust in my bowe, it is not my swerde ỹ shal helpe me. But it is thou that sauest vs frō oure enemies, and puttest them to confucion that hate vs. We will all waye make oure boast of God, and prayse

Oure hert is not turned backe, nether oure steppes gone out of thy waye. That thou smytest vs so in the place of the serpēt, & coverest vs with ỹ shadowe of death. If we had forgotten the name of oure God, & holdē vp oure hondes to any straunge God: Shulde not God fynde it out? for he knoweth the very secretes of the hert. But for thy sake we are kylled all the daie longe, and are counted as shepe apoynted to be slayne. Vp LORDE, why slepest thou? Awake, and cast vs not of for ever. Wherfore hydest thou thy face? wilt thou clene forget oure misery and oppressiō? For oure soule is brought lowe euen vnto the dust, and oure bely cleueth vn-

The XLIIII. A psalme of the children of Corah.

MY hert is dytinge of a good matter, I speake of that, which I haue made of the kynge: My tonge is ỹ penne of a ready wryter. Thou art the fayrest amonge the children of mē, full of grace are thy lippes, therfore God blesseth the for ever.

Gyrde the with thy swerde vpon thy thye (o thou mightie) with worshipe and renowne. Good lucke have thou with thine honoure, ryde on with the treuth, mekenesse & righteousnes: & thy right hōde shal teach ỹ wōderfull thinges. Thy arowes are sharpe, the people shalbe subdued vnto the, euen in the myddest amonge the kynges enemies.

Thy seate (o God) endureth for ever: the cepter of thy kyngdome is a right cepter.

Thou hast loued righteousnesse, & hated iniquite: wherfore God (which is thy God) hath anoynted the with the oyle of gladnes aboue thy felowes. All thy garmentes are like myrre, Aloes & Cassia, when thou comest out of thine yuerie palaces in thy beautifull glory. Kynges doughters gō in thy goodly araye, & vpon thy right honde standeth the quene in a vesture of the most fyne golde. Herken (o doughter) considre, & enclyne thine eare: forget thine owne people & thy fathers house. So shal the kynge haue pleasure in thy beutie, for he is thy LORDE, & thou shalt worshipe him. The doughters of Tyre shal be there with gyftes, thenche amonge the people shal make their supplicacion before the. The kynges doughter is all glorious within, hir clothinge is of wrought golde. She shalbe brought vnto the kynge in rayment of nedle worke, and maydens after her: soch as be next her shalbe brought vnto the. With ioye and gladnesse shal they be brought, and go into the kynges palace. In steade of thy fathers thou hast gotten children, whom thou shalt make prynces in all londes. I wil remembre thy name from one generacio to another therfore shal the people geue thankes vnto the, worlde without ende.

The XLV. A psalme of the children of Corah.

IN oure troubles and aduersite, we haue founde, that God is oure refuge, oure strength and helpe. Therfore wil we not feare, though the earth fell, and though the hilles were caried in to the myddest of the see.

Though the waters of the see raged & were never so troublous, & though the mountaynes shoke at the tempest of the same. Sela.

For there is a floude, which w^t his ryuers reioyseth y^e cite of God, the holy dwellynge of the most hyest. God is in y^e myddest of her, therfore shall she not be remoued: for God helpeth her, & y^t right early. The Heithen are madd, the kyngdomes make mocha doo: but whē he sheweth his voyce, y^e earth meketh awaye. The LORDE of hoostes is w^t vs, the God of Jacob is oure defence. Sela. O come hither, & beholde y^e workes of the LORDE, what destrucciōs he hath wrought vpō y^e earth. He hath made warres to ceasse in all the worlde: he hath broken the bowe, he hath knapped the speare in sonder, & brēt the charettes in the fyre. Be still thē & confesse y^t I am God: I wil be exalted amonge the Heithē, & I wil be exalted vpon earth. The LORDE of hoostes is w^t vs, the God of Jacob is oure defence. Sela.

The XLVI. A psalme of the children of Corah.

O Clappe youre hōdes together (all ye people) O synge vnto God with the voyce of thāke sgeuynge. For the LORDE the most hyest is to be feared, & he is the greate kynge vpō all y^e earth. He shal subdue the people vnder vs, & the Heithē vnder oure fete. He choseth vs for an heretage, the beautie of Jacob whom he loued. Sela. God is gone vp w^t a mery noyse, & the LORDE w^t the sownde of the trōpet. O synge prayses, synge prayses vnto God: O synge prayses, synge prayses vnto oure kynge. For God is kynge of all the earth, O synge prayses vnto him with vnderstondinge. God is kinge ouer the Heithē, God sitteth in his holy seate. The prynces of the people are gathered together vnto the God of Abraham: for God is farre farre hyer exalted, then the mightie lordes of the earth.

The XLVII. A psalme of the children of Corah.

GReate is y^e LORDE & hyelie to be praysed, in y^e cite of o^r God, enē vpō his holy hill. The hill of Sion is like a fayre plāte, wherof all the londe reioyseth: vpon the north syde lyeth the cite of the greate kinge. God is well knowne in his palaces, y^t he is the defence of the same. For lo, kynges are gathered, and gone by together. They marveled, to see soch thinges: they were astonied, & sodēly cast downe. Feare came there vpon thē, & sorowe as vpō a woman in hir trauayle. Thou shalt breake y^e shippes of the see, thorow the east wynde. Like as we haue herde, so se we in the cite of the LORDE of hoostes, in the cite of o^r God: God vpholdeth the same for euer. Sela. We wayte for thy louynge kyndnesse (o God) in the myddest of thy temple. O God, acordinge vnto thy name, so is y^e prayse vnto the worldes ende: thy right hōde is full of righteousnes. B

Oh let the mount Sion reioyse, & y^e doughters of Juda be glad because of thy iudgmētes. Walke aboute Sion, go rounde about her, and tell hir towres. Marke well hir walles, set vp hir houses: that it maye be tolde them y^t come after. For this God is o^r God for euer & euer, and he shal allwaie be o^r gyde. Psal. xcv.

The XLVIII. A psalme of the children of Corah.

GHeare this, all ye people: ponder it well, all ye that dwell vpō the earth. Hye & lowe, riche & poore, one w^t another. My mouth shal speake of wysdome, and my hert shal muse of vnderstondinge. I wil encline myne eare to the parable, & shewe my darcke speach vpon the harpe. Wherfore shulde I feare the euell dayes, whē the wickednesse of my heles cōpaseth me rounde aboute: They that put their trust in their good, & boost them selues in the multitude of their riches. No man maye deliuer his brother, ner make agrement for him vnto God. For it costeth more to redeme their soules, so that he must let that alone for euer. Yee though he lyue lōge, & se not y^e graue. For it shal be sene, y^t soch wyse mē shal dye & perishe together, as well as the ignoraunt and foolish, & leaue their goodes for other. Loke what is in their houses, it cōtinueth still: their dwellinge places endure from one generacion to another, & are called after their owne names vpon the earth. Neuertheles mā abydeth not in soch honō, but is cōpared vnto y^e brute beastes, & becōmeth like vnto thē. This waie of theirs is very foolishnesse, & yet their posterite prayse it w^t their mouth. Sela. They lye in the hell like shepe, death shal gnawe vpon them, & the righteous shal haue dominacion of them in the mornynge by tymes: their strength shal consume & hell shalbe their dwellinge. But God shal deliuer my soule from the power of hell when he receaueth me. Sela. O be not thou afrayed, whan one is made riche, & the glory of his house increased. For he shal carry nothing awaye w^t him when he dyeth neither shal his pompe folowe him. While he lyueth, he is counted an happier so lōge as he is in prosperite, mē speake good of him. But whē he soloweth his fathers generacion, he shal neuer se light eny more.

When a man is in honoure and hath no vnderstōdinge, he is compared vnto the brute beastes, and becommeth like vnto them.

The XLIX. A psalme of Asaph.

A THe LORDE euen the mightie God hath spokē, & called the worlde from the rysinge vp of the sonne vnto the goinge downe of the same. Out of Sion apeareth the glorious beutie of God. Our God shal come, and not kepe sylence: there goeth before him a consumynge fyre, and a mightie tempest rounde aboute him. He shal call the heauens from aboue, and the earth, that he maye iudge his people. Gather my saynctes together vnto me, these y set more by the couenaunt then by eny offeringe. And the heauens shal declare his righteousnesse, for God is iudge himself.

Isa. 2. a

Sela. Heare, o my people: let me speake, let me testifie amonge you, o Israel: I am God, euen thy God. I reproue the not because of thy sacrifice, y burntofferinges are allwaye before me. I wil take no bullockes out of thy house, ner gotes out of thy foldes. For all the beestes of the felde are myne, and thousandes of catell vpon the hilles.

I knowe all the foules vpon the mountaynes, and the wilde beastes of the felde are in my sight. Yf I be hongrie, I wil not tell the: for y whole worlde is myne, and all that therin is. Thynkest thou, that I wil eate the flesh of oxen, or drynke the bloude of geates? Offre vnto God prayse and thankesgeuynge, and paye thy vowes vnto the most hyest. And call vpō me in the tyme of trouble, so wil I heare the, that thou shalt thanke me. But vnto the vngodly sayeth God: Why doest thou preach my lawes, and takest my couenaunt in thy mouth? Where as thou hatest to be refourmed, and castest my wordes behynde the? Yf thou seist a thefe, thou runnest with him, and art partaker with the aduouterers. Thou letteste y mouth speake wickednesse, & thy tonge paynteth disceate. Thou syttest and speakest agaynst thy brother, yee and slaundrest thine owne mothers sonne. This thou doest, why I holde my tonge: and thinkest me to be euē soch one as thy self but I wil reproue the, set my self agaynst the. O considre this, ye that forget God: leste I plucke you awaie, and there be none to delyuer you. Who so offreth me thākes and prayse, he honoureth me: & this is the waye, wherby I wil shewe him the sauynge health of God.

The L. A psalme of Dauid.

HAue mercy vpon me (o God) after thy goodnes, & accordinge vnto thy greate mercies, do awaye myne offences. Wash me well fro my wickednesse, & clense me fro my synne. For I knowlege my faultes, and my synne is euer before me.

Against the only, against the haue I synned, and done euell in thy sight: that thou mightest be iustified in thy saynges, and shuldest ouercome when thou art iudged.

Beholde, I was borne in wickednesse, and in synne hath my mother conceaued me.

But lo, thou hast a pleasure in the trueth, and hast shewed me secrete wysdome me. O reconcile me with Isope, and I shal be clene: wash thou me, and I shalbe whyter then snowe. Oh let me heare of ioye and gladnesse, that the bones which thou hast broken, maye reioyse. Turne thy face fro my synnes, and put out all my myssededes. Make me a clene hert (o God) and renue a right sprete within me. Cast me not awaie from thy presence, and take not thy holy sprete fro me. O gene me the comforte of thy helpe agayne, and stablish me with thy free sprete. Then shal I teach thy wayes vnto the wicked, that synners maye be conuerted vnto the. Delyuer me from bloudegyltynesse o God, thou that art the God of my health, that my tonge maye prayse thy righteousnesse. Open my lippes (O LORDE) that my mouth maye shewe thy prayse.

For y thou haddest pleasure in sacrifice, I wolde gene it the: but thou delytest not in burntofferynges. The sacrifice of God is a troubled sprete, a broken and a cōtrite hert (o God) shalt thou not despise. O be fauorable and gracious vnto Sion, that the walles of Jerusalem maye be buylded. For then shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifice of righteousnesse, with the burntofferynges and oblacions: then shal they laye bullockes vpon thine aulter.

The LI. A psalme of Dauid.

WHy boastest thou thy self (thou Tyraunt) that thou canst do myschefe? Where as the goodnesse of God endureth yet daylie. Thy tonge ymagineth wickednesse, and with lyes it cutteth like a sharpe rasoure. Thou louest vngraciousnesse more thē good, to talke of lyes more then righteousnesse. Sela.

Thou louest to speake all wordes y maye do hurte, O thou false tōge. Therfore shal God cleane destroye the, smyte the in peces, plucke the out of thy dwellinge, and rote the out of the londe of the lyuinge. Sela.

The righteous shal se this, & feare, and laugh him to scorne. Lo, this is the mā, y toke not God for his strēgth, but trusted vnto the multitude of his riches, & was mighty in his wickednesse. As forme, I am like a grene olyue tre in y house of God: my trust is in the tender mercy of God for euer & euer.

I wil allwaye geue thankes vnto the, for that thou hast done: and wil hope in thy name, for thy sayntes like it well.

The LII. A psalme of Dauid.

THe foolish bodies saye in their herte: Tush, there is no God. Corrupte are they, and become abhominable in their wickednesses: there is not one, that doth good. God loked downe from heauen vpō the children of men, to se y ther were eny that wolde vnderstonde, or seke after God. But they are all gone out of y waye, they are all become vnprofitable: there is none y doth good, no not one. How cā they haue vnderstondinge, that are the workers of wickednes, eatinge vp my people as it were bred, & call not vpon God? They are afrayed, where no feare is: for God breaketh the bones of them that besege the: thou putteste them to confucion, for God despiseth them. Oh y the sauynge health were geuen vnto Israel out of Sion: Oh that the LORDE wolde delyuer his people out of captiuyte. Then shulde Jacob reioyse, & Israel shulde be right glad.

The LIII. A psalme of Dauid.

HElpe me (o God) for thy names sake, and delyuer me in thy strēgth. Heare my prayer (o God) considre the wordes of my mouth. For straungers are rysen vp agaynst me, and the mightie (which haue not God before their eyes) seke after my soule. Sela. But lo, God is my helper: it is he that vpholdeth my soule. He shall rewarde euell vnto myne enemies, and in thy treuth shalt thou destroye them. A free wil offeringe wil I geue the, and prayse thy name o LORDE, because it is so comfortable.

For thou hast delyuered me out of all my trouble, so that myne eye seyth his desyre vpō myne enemies.

The LIIII. A psalme of Dauid.

HEare my prayer (o God) and hyde not thy self from my peticion. Take hede vnto me and heare me, how piteously I mourne & cōplayne. The enemie crieth so, & the vngodly commeth on so fast: for they are mynded to do me some myschefe, so maliciously are they set agaynst me. My herte is heuy within me, and the feare of death is fallen vpon me. Fearfullnesse and tremblinge are come vpon me, and an horrible dede hath ouerwhelmed me. And I sayde: O that I had wynges like a doue, that I might fle somwhere, and be at rest. Lo, then wolde I get me awaye farre of, and remayne in the wilderneſſe. Sela.

I wolde make haist to escape, from the stormy wynde and tempest. Destroie their tonges (o LORDE) and deuyde them, for I se vnrighteousnes & strife in y cite. This goeth daye and night aboute the walles, myschefe and vyce are in the myddest of it. Gen. 11

Wickednesse is therin, disceate and gyle go not out of hir stretes. Yf it were myne enemie that reuyled me, I coude beare it: or yf one that ought me euell will dyd threaten me, I wolde hyde myself from him. But it is thou my companyon, my gyde and myne owne familier frēde. We had swete and secrete communicacion together, and louyngly walked we together in y house of God.

Let death come hastely vpon them, and let them go downe quick into hell, for wickednes is amonge them in their dwellinges.

As forme, I will call vnto God, and the LORDE shall helpe me. In the eueninge, mornynge and at noone daye wil I mourne and complayne: and he shal heare my voyce.

It is he that delyuereth my soule in peace, from them that laye waite forme: for they are many agaynst me. Yee euen God that endureth for euer, shal heare me, and bringe them downe. Sela.

For they wil not turne: and why? they feare not God. Yee they laye hondes vpon soch as be at peace with him, and so they breake his couenaunt. Their mouthes are softer then butter, & yet haue they batell in their mynde: their wordes are smoother then oyle, and yet be they very swerdes. O cast thy burthen (or care) vpon the LORDE, he shal norisshe the, and not leaue the righteous in vnquietnesse. But as for them, thou (o God) shalt cast them downe in to the pitte of destruccion. The bloudthurstie and disceatfull shal not lyue out half their daies. Neuertheleſſe my trust is in the. Matt. 6. Luc. 12. 1. Pet. 5.

The LV. A psalme of Dauid.

BEmercifull vnto me (o God) for me wil treade me downe: they are dayly fightinge & troublinge me. All enemies treade me daylie vnder their fete, for they be many, ỹ proudly fight agaynst me.

Neuertheles, whē I am afrayed, I put my trust in the. I wil comforte my self in Gods worde, yee I wil hope in God, and not feare: What can flesh then do vnto me?

They vexe me daylie in my wordes: all ỹ they ymagin, is to do me euell. They holde altogether, & kepe them selues close: they marck my steppes, how they maye catch my soule. But in vayne, for it shal escape thē: and why? thou (o God) in thy displeasure shalt cast downe such people. Thou tellest my flittinges, thou puttest my teares in thy bōtell, and nombrest them. When so euer I call vpon the, myne enemies are put to flight: wherby I knowe, that thou art my God. In Gods worde wil I reioyse, in the LORDES worde wil I comforte me. Yee in God do I trust, & am not afraied: what cā man thē do vnto me? Vnto the (o God) wil I paye my vowes, vnto ỹ wil I geue thākes & prayse. For thou hast deliuered my soule frō death, & my fete frō fallinge, ỹ I maye walke before God in ỹ light of ỹ lyuynge.

The LVI. A psalme of Dauid.

BE mercifull vnto me (o God) be mercifull vnto me, for my soule trusteth in ỹ: & vnder the shadowe of thy wynges shal be my refuge, vntill wickednesse be ouerpast.

I call vnto God ỹ most hyest, euē ỹ God ỹ shal helpe me vp agayne. He shal sende frō heauen, & saue me frō the reprofe of him that wolde swalowe me vp. Sela.

This shal God sende, for his mercy and faithfulnesse sake. I lye with my soule amonge the cruell lyons: euen amonge the children of men, whose tethe are speares and arowes, and their tonge a sharpe swerde.

Set vp thy self (o God) aboue the heauēs, and thy glory aboue all the earth. They haue layed a nett for my fete, & pressed downe my soule: they haue dygged a pyt before me, and are fallen into it them selues.

Sela. My hert is ready (o God) my hert is ready, to synge and geue prayse. Awake (o my glory) awake lute and harpe, I my self wil awake right early. I wil geue thākes vnto the (o LORDE) amonge the people, I wil synge prayses vnto the amonge the Heithē. For ỹ greatnes of thy mercy reacheth vnto the heauens, and thy faithfulnesse vnto the cloudes. Set vp thy self (o God) aboue the heauēs, & thy glory aboue all ỹ earth.

The LVII. A psalme of Dauid.

IF youre myndes be vpon righteousnesse in dede, then iudge the thinge that is right, o ye sonnes of men. But ỹ ymagin mischefe in youre hertes, and youre hondes deale with wickednesse. The vngodly are frowarde, euē from their mothers wombe: as soone as they be borne, they goe straie & speake lyes. They are as furious as the serpent, euen like the deaf Adder that stoppeth hir eares. That she shulde not heare the voyce of the charmer, charme he neuer so wysely. Breake their teth (o God) in their mouthes, smyte the chefe bones of the lyons whelpes in sonder, o LORDE.

That they maye fall awaye, like water ỹ runneth a pace: and that when they shote their arowes, they maye be brokē. Let thē cōsume awaye like a snale, & like the vntymely frute of a woman, and let them not se the Sonne. Or euer youre thornes be sharpe, the wrath shal take them awaye quycke, like a stormy wynde. The righteous shal reioyse when he seyth the vengeaunce, and shal wasshe his fete in the bloude of the vngodly. So that men shal saye: verely, there is a rewarde for ỹ righteous: doutles, there is a God that iudgeth the earth.

The LVIII. A psalme of Dauid.

DElyuer me fro myne enemies (o my God) & defende me frō thē ỹ rise vp agaynst me. O delyuer me frō the wicked doers, & saue me frō the bloudehuresshe mē. For lo, they lye waytinge for my soule ỹ mightie mē are gathered together against me, w'out eny offence or faute of me, o LORDE. They rūne & prepare thē selues, w'out my faute: Arise, come thou helpe me, & behold. Stōde vp o LORDE God of hoostes, thou God of Israel, to vyset all Heithē be not mercifull vnto thē ỹ offende of malicious wickednesse. Sela. Let thē go & fro, & runne about the cite youlinge like dogges. Beholde, they speake (agaynst me) w' their mouth, swerdes are vnder their lippes, for who reproueth thē? But thou (o LORDE) shalt haue them in derision, thou shalt laugh all Heithē to scorne. My strēgeth do I ascrybe vnto the, for thou (o God) art my defender. God sheweth me his goodnesse plenteously, God letteth me se my desyre vpō myne enemies. Slaye thē not, lest my people forget it: but scatre thē abrode with thy power & put thē downe, o LORDE oure defence. For ỹ synne of their mouth, for the wordes of their lippes, & because of their pryde, let thē be taken: & why? their preachinge is of cursynge & lyes. Cōsume them in ỹ wrath, cōsume thē ỹ they maye perish, & knowe ỹ it is God, which ruleth in Jacob and in all the wolde. Sela. Let thē go to & frō, & rūne about the cite, youlinge like dogges. Let thē runne here & there for meate, and grudge when they haue not ynough. As for me, I wil synge of thy power, & prayse thy mercy betymes in the mornynge: for thou art my defence and refuge in the tyme of my trouble.

Vnto the (o my strength) wil I synge, for thou (o God) art my defence, and my merciful God.

The LIX. A psalme of Dauid.

O God, thou y haste cast vs out and scatred vs abrode, thou y haste bene so sore displeased at vs, cōforte vs agayne. Thou y haste remoued the lōde & deuyded it, heale the sores therof, for it shaketh. Thou haste shewed thy people heuy thinges, thou haste geuen vs a drynke off wyne, y we slōbre withall. Yet haste thou geuē a tokē for soch as feare the, y they maye cast it vp in y treuth. Sela. That thy beloued might be delyuered, helpe them with thy right hande, and heare me. God hath spokē in his Sāctuary (which thinge reioyseth me) I wil deuyde Sichē, & mete out the valley of Suchoth Galaad is myne, Manasses is myne, Ephraim is the strength of my heade, Juda is my captayne. Moab is my washpotte, ouer Edom wil I stretch out my shue, Philistea shal be glad of me. Who will lede me in to the stronge cite? Who will bringe me in to Edom? Shalt not thou do it, o God, thou y haste cast vs out: thou God, y wentest not out w' o' hoostes? O be thou oure helpe in trouble, for vayne is the helpe of man. Thorow God we shal do greate actes, for it is he that shal treade downe oure enemies.

The LX. A psalme of Dauid.

HEare my crienge (o God) geue hede vnto my prayer. From the endes of y earth wil I call vnto the, whē my herte is in trouble: Oh set me vp vpō an hye rocke. For thou art my hope, a stronge towerforme agaynst the enemie. I will dwell in thy tabernacle for euer, that I maye be safe vnder the couerynge of thy wynges. Sela. For thou (o LORDE) haste herde my desyres, thou haste geuen an heretage vnto those that feare thy name. Thou shalt graunte the kynge a lōge life, that his yeares maye endure thorow out all generacions. That he maye dwell before God for euer: Oh let thy louynge mercy & faithfulnes preserue him. So wil I allwaye synge prayses vnto thy name, y I maye daylie performe my vowes.

The LXI. A psalme of Dauid.

MY soule wayteth only vpon God, for of him commeth my helpe. He only is my strēgth, my saluacion, my defence, so y I shal not greatly fall. Howlonge wil ye ymagin myschefe agaynst euery man? ye shal be slayne all y sorte of you: yee as a tottringe wall shal ye be, & like a broken hedge. Their deuyce is only how to put him out, their delyte is in lyes: they geue good wordes w' their mouth but curse w' their herte. Sela. Neuertheles, my soule abydeth only vpon God, for he is my God. He only is my strēgth, my saluacion, my defence: so y I shal not fall. In God is my health, my glory, my might, & in God is my trust. Oput yo' trust in him allwaye (ye people) poure out yo' hertes before him, for God is oure hope. Sela. As for men, they are but vayne, mē are discreat full: vpō the weyghtes they are al together lighter then vanite it self. O trust not in wronge & robbery, geue not yo' selues vnto vanite: yf riches increase, set not yo' herte vpon them. God spake once a worde, twyse haue I herde the same: that power belongeth vnto God. That thou LORDE art merciful, & that thou rewardest euery man accordinge to his workes.

The LXII. A psalme of Dauid.

O God, thou art my God: early wil I seke the. My soule thurstech for the, my flesh longeth after the in a barē & drie lōde, where no water is. Thus do I loke for the in thy Sāctuary, that I might behold y power & glory. For thy louynge kyndnesse is better then life, my lyppes shal prayse the. As lōge as I line wil I magnifie the, & lift vp my hondes in thy name. My soule is satisfied euē as it were with marry & fatnesse, when my mouth prayseth the with ioyfull lippes. In my bedde wil I remembre y, & whē I wake, my talkynge shalbe of the.

For thou haste bene my helper, & vnder the shadowe of y wynges wil I reioyse. My soule hangeth vpon the, thy right honde vpholdeth me. They seke after my soule, but in vayne, for they shal go vnder the earth. They shal fall into the swerde, & be a porcīō for foxes. But y kynge shal reioyse in God: all they that sweare by hym, shal be commēded, for the mouth of lyers shalbe stopped. Deut. 6

The LXIII. A psalme of Dauid.

HEare my voyce (o God) in my cōplaynte, preserue my life frō feare of y enemie hyde me from the gatheringe togeather of y frowarde, frō y hrape of wicked doers. Which whette their tōges like a swerde, & shute w' their venimous wordes like as w' arowes. That they maye priuely hurte y innocēt, & sodēly to hit him w' out eny feare.

They have devysed myscheefe, and commoned amonge them selues, how they maye laye snares: tush (saye they) who shall se them?

Re. 18. d

B They ymagin wickednesse, and kepe it secrete amonge them selues, every man in ỹ depe of his herte. But God shall sodenly shute with an arowe, ỹ they shall be wounded. Yee their owne tunges shall make them fall, insomoch that who so seyth thē, shal laugh thē to scorne. And all men that se it, shal sayen: this hath God done for they shal perceaue, ỹ it is his worke. The righteous shal reioyse in the LORDE, and put his trust in him: and all they ỹ are true off herte, shalbe glad therof.

The LXIIII. A psalme of Dauid.

A THou (o God) art prayse in Sion, and vnto the is the vowe performed. Thou heaerest the prayer, therfore cōmeth all flesh vnto the. Oure myßdedes prevayle agaynst vs, oh be thou mercyfull vnto oure synnes. Blessed is the man whō thou choosest and receauest vnto the, that he maye dwell in thy courte: he shall be satisfied with the pleasures of thy house, euen off thy holy temple. Heare vs accordinge vnto thy wōderfull righteousnesse, o God oure saluaciō: thou that art the hope of all the endes of ỹ earth, and off the brode see. Which in his strength setteth fast the moūtaynes, & is gyrded aboute with power. Which stilleth ỹ

B ragige of the see, the roaringe off his waues, and the woodnes of the people. They that dwell in ỹ vttemost partes are afrayed at thy tokens, thou makest both the morninge and euenynge starres to prayse ỹ. Thou visitest the earth, thou watrest it, and makest it very plenteous. The ryuer of God is full of waters, thou preparest man his corne, ād thus thou prouydest for the earth. Thou watrest hir forowes, thou breakest the harde clottes therof, thou makest it soft with ỹ droppes of rayne, and blessest the increase of it. Thou crowneste the yeare with thy good, and thy fotesteppes droppe fatnesse. The dwellinges of the wildernes are fatt also, ỹ they droppe withall, & the litle hilles are pleasaunt on euery syde. The foldes are full of shepe, the valleys stonde so thicke with corne ỹ they laugh and synge.

A The LXV. A psalme off Dauid.

Psal. 99. a

BE ioyfull in God (all ye lōdes) synge prayses vnto the honō of his name make his prayse to be glorious. Saye vnto God: O how wonderfull are thy workes: thorow the greatnesse of thy power shal thine enemies be confoūded. O ỹ all the worlde wolde worshipe the, synge of [illegible] and prayse thy name. Sela. O come hither and beholde the workes of God, which is [illegible] wonderfull in his doinges amonge the children of men. He turned the see into drye lande, so that they wente thorow the water on fote: therfore wil we reioyse in him. He rulet[h] with his power for euer, his eyes beholdeth the people: the rennagates shal not be able to exalte them selues. Sela. O magnifie o[ur] God (ye people) make ỹ voyce off his prayse to be herde. Which holdeth o[ur] soule in life, and suffreth not oure fete to slippe. For thou (o God) hast proued vs, thou hast tried vs [illegible] as syluer is tried. Thou hast brought vs [illegible] to captiuyte, and layed trouble vpon o[ur] loynes. Thou hast suffred men to ryde ouer [illegible] heades, we wēte thorow fyre and water, [illegible] thou hast brought vs out, and refreshed [illegible]

Therfore will I go into thy house w[ith] offeringes, to paye the my vowes, which I promised w[ith] my lippes, and spake with my mouth, when I was in trouble. I wil offre vnto the fatte brentsacrifices with the smoke of rāmes, I will offre bullockes and goates. Sela. O come hither and herkē (all ye that feare God) I wil tell you, what he hath done for my soule. I called vnto him w[ith] my mouth and gaue him prayses with my tōge. (If I enclyne vnto wickednes with my herte, the LORDE wil not heare me.) Therfore God hath herde me, ād considred the voyce off my prayer. Praysed be God, which hath not cast out my prayer, ner turned his mercy from me.

The LXVI. psalme.

GOd be mercifull vnto vs, blesse vs, & shewe the light off his countenaūce apon vs. Sela. That we may knowe ỹ waye vpō earth, ỹ sauynge health amonge all heithen. Let the people prayse the (o God) yee let all people prayse the. O let the people reioyse and be glad, that thou iudgest the folke righteously, and gouernest the nacions vpō earth. Let the people prayse the (o God) let all people prayse the. God (euen oure owne God) geue vs his blessinge, that the earth maye bringe forth hir increase. God blesse vs, and let all the endes of ỹ worlde feare him.

The LXVII. A psalme of Dauid.

LEt God aryse, so shal his enemies be scatered, and they that hate him shal flee before him. Like as the smoke vanisheth, so shalt thou dryue them awaye, and like as waxe melteth at the fyre, so shall the vngodly perish at the presence off God

But the righteous shal be glad & reioyse before God, they shalbe mery & ioyful. Oh synge vnto God, synge prayses vnto his name: magnifie him yt rydeth aboue the heaues (whose name is yt LORDE) & reioyse before hī. He is a father of yt fatherlesse, he is a defender of widdowes: euē God in his holy habitacō. He is the God yt maketh mē to be of one mynde in a house, & bryngeth yt presoners out of captiuite in due season, but letteth yt renna gates cōtinue in scarcenesse. O God, when thou wētest forth before yt people, whē thou wētest thorow yt wildernes. Sela. The earth shoke, & yt heaues dropped at the presence of God in Sinai, at yt presence of God which is yt God of Israel. Thou o God sendest a gracious rayne vpon thyne enheritaūce, & refreshest it, when it is drye. That thy beastes may dwell therin, which thou of thy goodnes hast prepared for the poore. The LORDE shal geue the worde, wt greate hoostes of Euāgelistes. Kinges wt their armies shal flie, & they of yt housholde shal deuyde yt spoyle. Yf so be yt ye lye amōge the pales, the doues fethers shalbe couered with syluer, & hir wynges of the colr of golde. When the Almightie setteth kynges vpō the earth, it shal be cleare euen in the darcknesse. The hill of Basan is Gods hill, the hill of Basan is a plētious hill. Why hoppe ye so, ye greate hilles? Je pleaseth God to dwell vpō this hill, ye the LORDE wil abyde in it for euer. The charettes of God are many M. tymes a thousande, the LORDE is amōge them in the holy Sinai. Thou art gone vp an hye, thou hast led captyuite captyue, & receaued giftes for mē: Yee euen for thy enemies, that they might dwell with the LORDE God. Prayse be the LORDE daylie, euē yt God which helpeth vs, & poureth his benefites vpō vs. Sela. The God yt is or Sauio, euē God the LORDE by whō we escape death. The God that smyteth his enemies vpō the heades & vpon the hayne scalpes: soch as go on still in their wickednes. The LORDE hath sayde: some wil I bringe agayne from Basan, some wil I bringe agayne frō the depe of the see. That thy fote maye be dipped in the blonde of thine enemies, & that thy dogges maye licke it vp.

It is well sene (o God how thou goest, how thou my God and kynge goest in the Sanctuary. The syngers go before, and then the mynstrells amonge the maydens with the tymbrels. O geue thankes vnto God the LORDE in the congregacion, for the welles of Israel. There litle Beniamin, the princes of Juda, the princes of Zabulō, and the princes of Nephthali beare rule amōge them. Thy God hath cōmitted strēgth vnto the, stablish the thinge (o God) that thou hast wroughe in vs. For thy tēples sake at Jerusalem shal kynges bringe presentes vnto the. Reproue the beestes amonge the rodes, the heape of bulles with the calues: those that dryue for money. Oh scatter the people that delyte in batayle. The princes shal come out of Egipte, the Morians lōde shal stretch out hir hondes vnto God. Synge vnto God, o ye kyngdomes of the earth: o synge prayses vnto the LORDE. Sela.

Which sytteth in the heauens ouer all frō the begynnge: Lo, he shal sende out his voyce, yee and that a mightie voyce. Ascrybe ye the power vnto God, his glory is in Israel, and his might in the cloudes. God is wonderfull in his Sanctuary, he is the God of Israel, he will geue strength and power vnto his people. Blessed be God.

The LXVIII. A psalme of Dauid.

Helpe me (o God) for the waters are come in euē vnto my soule. I sticke fast in the depe myre, where no grounde is: I am come in to depe waters, and the flodes wil drowne me. I am weery of crienge, my throte is drye, my sight fayleth me, for waytinge so longe vpon my God. They yt hate me without a cause, are mo then the hayres of my heade: they that are myne enemies & wolde destroye me giltlesse, are mightie: I am fayne to paye the thinges yt I neuer toke. God, thou knowest my symplenesse, and my fautes are not hyd from the. Let not them that trust in the (o LORDE God of hoostes) be ashamed for my cause: let not those yt seke the, be confounded thorow me, o God of Israel. And why? for thy sake do I suffre reprose, shame coureth my face. I am become a straunger vnto my brethren, and an aleaunt vnto my mothers children. For the zele of thine house hath euen eaten me, and the rebukes of them that rebuked the, is fallen vpon me. I wepte and chastened my self wt fastinge, and that was turned to my reprose. I put on a sacke cloth, and therfore they iested vpon me. They that satt in the gate, spake agaynst me, and the dronckardes made songes vpon me. But LORDE, I made my prayer vnto the in an acceptable tyme: & heare me (o God) with thy greate mercy & sure helpe. Take me out of the myre, yt I syncke not: Oh let me be delyuered frō the yt hate me, & out of yt depe waters. Let not the water flonde drowne me, that the d

The LXIX. A psalme of Dauid.

H Aist the (o God) to delyuer me, & to helpe me, o LORDE. Let thẽ be shamed & confounded that seke after my soule: let them be turned backwarde & put to confucion, that wysh me euell. Let them soone be brought to shame, ỹ crie ouer me: there there.

But let all those that seke the, be ioyfull & glad in the: and let all soch as delyte in thy sauynge health, saye alwaye: ỹ LORDE be prayed thine. As for me, I am poore & in misery, ha-

The LXX psalme.

I N the, o LORDE, is my trust, let me neuer be put to cõfucion, but rydde me & delyuer me thorow thy righteousnesse: encline thine eare vnto me, & helpe me. Be thou my stronge holde (where vnto I may alwaye flie) thou that hast promised to helpe me: for thou art my house of defence & my castell. Delyuer me (o my God) out of the hande of the vngodly, out of the hande of the vnrighteous & cruell man. For thou (o LORDE God) art the thinge that I lõge for, thou art my hope euen fro my youth. I haue leaned vpõ ỹ euer sens I was borne, thou art he that toke me out of my mothers wombe, therfore is my prayse allwaye of the. I am become a wonder vnto the multitude: but my sure trust is in the. Oh let my mouth be filled with thy prayse & honoure all the day long. Cast me not awaye in myne olde age, forsake me not when my strength fayleth me. For myne enemies speake agaynst me, & they that laye wayte for my soule, take their counsell together, sayenge: God hath forsaken him, persecute him, take him, for there is none to helpe him. Go not farre fro me, o God my God, haist the to helpe me. Let them be confounded & perish, that are agaynst my soule: let thẽ be couered with shame & dishonour, that seke to do me euell. As for me, I wil perciẽtly abyde allwaye, & wil euer encrease thy prayse. My mouth shal speake of thy righteousnesse & sauynge healthe all the day long, for I knowe no ende therof. Let me goune in the LORDE God) & I wil make mencion of thy power and righteousnesse only. Thou (o God) hast lerned me fro my youth vp vntill now, therfore wil I tell of ỹ wonderous workes. Forsake me not (o God) in myne olde age, when I am gray headed: vntil I haue shewed thyne arme vnto childers children, & thy power to all them that are yet for to come. Thy righteousnes (o God) is very hie, thou that doest greate thinges: o God, who is like vnto the? O what greate troubles & aduersite hast thou shewed me? & yet diddest thou turne & refresh me, yee & broughtest me from the depe of the earth agayne. Thou hast brought me to greate honoure, & comforted me on euery syde. Therfore wil I prayse the & thy faithfulnesse (o God) playenge vpon the lute, vnto the wil I synge vpon the harpe, o thou holy one of Israel. My lippes wolde fayne synge prayses vnto the: & wolde my soule, whom thou hast delyuered

My tonge talketh of thy righteousnesse all the daye longe, for they are confounded & brought vnto shame, y sought to do me euel.

The LXXI. A psalme of Salomon.

Geue the kinge thy iudgmēt (o God) and thy righteousnesse vnto the kynges sonne. That he maye gouerne thy people accordinge vnto right, and defende thy poore. That the mountaynes maye bringe peace, and the litle hilles righteousnes vnto the people. He shal kepe the symple folke by their right, defende the childrē of the poore, and punysh the wrongeous doer.

Thou shalt be feared as longe as y Sonne and the Moone endureth, from one generacion to another. He shal come downe like the rayne in to a flese of woll, and like the droppes that water y earth. In his tyme shal righteousnesse flourish, yee and abundaūce of peace, so longe as the Moone endureth.

His dominion shalbe from the one see to the other, and from the flonde vnto the worldes ende. They that dwell in the wildernes, shal knele before him, & his enemies shall licke the dust. The kynges of the see and of the Iles shal bringe presentes, y kinges of Arabia & Saba shall offre giftes. All kynges shal worshipe him, & all Heithē shal do him seruice. For he shal deliuer the poore whē he crieth, & the nedy y hath no helpe. He shall be fauorable to the symple & poore, he shal preserue the soules of soch as be in aduersite. He shal deliuer their soules from extorcion & wronge, & deare shal their bloude be in his sight. He shal lyue, & vnto him shalbe geuē of y golde of Arabia: prayer shal be made euer vnto him, & daylie shal he be praysed. There shalbe an heape of corne in the earth hye vpon the hilles, his frute shal shake like Libanus, & shal be grene in the cite, like grasse vpō the earth. His name shal endure for euer, his name shal remayne vnder the sonne amonge the posterites, which shal be blessed thorow him, & all the Heithen shal prayse him. Blessed be the LORDE God, euen the God of Israel, which only doth wōderous thinges. And blessed be the name of his maiesty for euer, and all londes be fulfilled with his glory. Amen, Amen.

The LXXII. A psalme of Asaph,

How louynge is God vnto Israel, to soch as are of a clene hert: Nertheless my fete were allmost gone, my treadinges had wel nye slipte. And why: I was greued at y wicked, to se the vngodly in soch prosperite. For they are in no parell of death, but stonde fast like a palace. They come in no misfortune like other folke, nether are they plaged like other men. And this is the cause that they be so puft vp in pryde, & ouerwhelmed with cruelte and vnrighteousnesse. Their eyes swell for fatnesse, they do euen what they lyst. Corrupte are they, and speake blasphemies maliciously, proude and presumptuous are their wordes. They stretch forth their mouth vnto the heauen, & their tonge goeth thorow the worlde. Therfore fall the people vnto them, and there out sucke they no small auauntage. Tush (saye they) how shulde God perceaue it: is there knowlege in the most hyest: Lo, these are the vngodly, these prospere in the worlde, these haue riches in possession. Shulde I then clense my hert in vayne (thought I) & wash my hondes in innocency: Wherfore shulde I be then punyshed daylie, & be chastened euery mourynge: Yee I had allmost also sayde euen as they: but lo, then shulde I haue condemned the generacion of thy children. Then thought I to vnderstonde this, but it was to harde for me. Vntill I wēte in to y Sanctuary of God, & considered the ende of these men. Namely, how thou hast set thē in a slippery place, that thou maiest cast thē downe headlynges & destroye thē. O how sodenly do they consume, perish, & come to a fearfull ende: Yee euen like as a dreame when one awaketh, so makest thou their ymage to vanish out of the cite. Thus my hert was greued, & it went euen thorow my reynes.

So foolish was I and ignorannt, and as it were a beest before the. Nevertheless, I am allwaye by the, thou holdest me by my right hande. Thou ledest me with thy cōsel, and afterwarde receauest me vnto glory. O what is there prepared for me in heauen: there is nothinge vpō earth, that I desyre in comparison of the. My flesh and my hert fayleth, but God is the strength of my hert, and my porcion for euer. For lo, they that forsake the, shal perishe, thou destroyest all them that committe fornicacion agaynst the. But it is good for me, to holde me fast by God, to put my trust in the LORDE God, and to speake of all thy workes.

The LXXIII. A psalme of Asaph.

O God, wherfore doest thou cast vs so cleane awaye: why is y wrath so hote agaynst y shepe of y pasture: O A

Come not vp; & y the pitte shut not hir mouth vpon me. Heare me (o LORDE) for thy louynge kyndnesse is comfortable: turne the vnto me accordynge vnto y greate mercy. Hyde not thy face from thy seruaūt, for I am in trouble: O haist y to helpe me. Drawe nye vnto my soule, and saue it: Oh delyuer me because of myne enemies. Thou knowest my reproffe, my shame & my dishonō: my aduersaries are all in thy sight. The rebuke breaketh my hert, & maketh me heuy: I loke, for some to haue pitie vpon me, but there is no man: & for some to cōforte me, but I fynde none. They gaue me gall to eate, & whē I was thurstie, they gaue me vyneger to drynke.

The LXIX. A psalme of Dauid.

Haste the (o God) to delyuer me, & to helpe me, o LORDE. Let thē be shamed & confounded that sēke after my soule: let them be turned backwarde & put to confusiō, that wysh me euell. Let them soone be brought to shame, y crie ouer me: there there.

But let all those that sēke the, be ioyfull & glad in the: and let all soch as delyte in thy saluynge health, saye alwaye: y LORDE be prayed thus for me, I am poore & in misery, haste to helpe me. Thou art my helpe, my redemer & my God: oh make no longe tarienge.

The LXX psalme.

In the, o LORDE, is my trust, let me neuer be put to cōfusiō, but rydde me & delyuer me thorow thy righteousnesse: encline thine eare vnto me, & helpe me. Be thou my stronge holde (where vnto I maye allwaye flee) thou that hast promised to helpe me: for thou art my house of defence & my castell. Delyuer me (o my God) out of the hande of the vngodly, out of the hande of the vnrighteous & cruell man. For thou (o LORDE God) art the thinge that I lōge for, thou art my hope euen fro my youth. I haue leaned vpō y euer sens I was borne, thou art he that toke me out of my mothers wombe, therfore is my prayse allwaye of the. I am become a wonder vnto the multitude, but my sure trust is in the. Oh let my mouth be filled with thy prayse & honoure all the dayes ge. Cast me not awaye in myne olde age, forsake me not when my strength fayleth me. For myne enemies speake agaynst me, & they that laye wayte for my soule, take their counsell together, sayenge: God hath forsaken him, persecute him, take him, for there is none to helpe him. Go not farre fro me, o God my God, haist the to helpe me. Let them be confounded & perish, that are agaynst my soule: let thē be couered with shame & dishonour, that sēke to do me euell. As for me, I wil perciētly abyde allwaye, & wil euer encrease thy prayse. My mouth shal speake of thy righteousnesse & sauynge health all the dayes lōge, for I knowe no ende therof. Let me goo to LORDE God) & I wil make mencion of thy power and righteousnesse only. Thou (o God) hast lerned me fro my youth vp vntil now, therfore wil I tell of y wonderous workes. Forsake me not (o God) in myne olde age, when I am gray headed: vntil I haue shewed thyne arme vnto childers children, & thy power to all them that are yet for to come. Thy righteousnes (o God) is very hie, thou that doest greate thinges: o God, who is like vnto the? O what greate troubles & aduersite hast thou shewed me? & yet didest thou turne & refresh me, yee & broughtest me from the depe of the earth agayne. Thou hast brought me to greate honoure, & comforted me on euery syde. Therfore wil I prayse the & thy faithfulnesse (o God) playenge vpon the lute, vnto the wil I synge vpon the harpe. o thou holy one of Israel. My lippes wolde fayne synge prayses vnto the: & so wolde my soule, whom thou hast delyuered

My tonge talketh of thy righteousnesse all the daye longe, for they are confounded & brought vnto shame, y sought to do me euel.

The LXXI. A psalme of Salomon.

Geue the kinge thy iudgmēt (o God) and thy righteousnesse vnto the kynges sonne. That he maye gouerne thy people accordinge vnto right, and defende thy poore. That the mountaynes maye bringe peace, and the litle hilles righteousnes vnto the people. He shal kepe the symple folke by their right, defende the childrē of the poore, and punysh the wrongeous doer.

Thou shalt be feared as longe as y Sonne and the Moone endureth, from one generacion to another. He shal come downe like the rayne in to a flese of woll, and like the droppes that water y earth. In his tyme shal righteousnesse flourish, yee and abundaūce of peace, so longe as the Moone endureth.

His dominion shalbe from the one see to the other, and from the flonde vnto the worldes ende. They that dwell in the wildernes, shal knele before him, & his enemies shal licke the dust. The kynges of the see and of the Iles shal bringe presentes, y kinges of Arabia & Saba shall offre giftes. All kynges shal worshipe him, & all Heithē shal do him seruice. For he shal deliuer the poore whē he crieth, & the nedy y hath no helpe. He shall be fauorable to the symple & poore, he shal preserue the soules of soch as be in aduersite. He shal deliuer their soules from extorcion & wronge, & deare shal their bloude be in his sight. He shal lyue, & vnto him shalbe geuē of y golde of Arabia: Prayer shal be made euer vnto him, & daylie shal he be praysed. There shalbe an heape of corne in the earth hye vpon the hilles, his frute shal shake like Libanus, & shal be grene in the cite, like grasse vpō the earth. His name shal endure for euer, his name shal remayne vnder the sonne amonge the posterites, which shal be blessed thorow him, & all the Heithen shal prayse him. Blessed be the LORDE God, euen the God of Israel, which only doth wōderous thinges. And blessed be the name of his maiesty for euer, and all londes be fulfilled with his glory. Amen, Amen.

The LXXII. A psalme of Asaph,

How louynge is God vnto Israel, to soch as are of a clene hert: Nertheless my fete were allmost gone, my treadinges had wel nye slipte. And why: I was greued at y wicked, to se the vngodly in soch prosperite. For they are in no parell of death, but stonde fast like a palace. They come in no misfortune like other folke, nether are they plaged like other men. And this is the cause that they be so puft vp in pryde, & ouerwhelmed with cruelte and vnrighteousnesse. Their eyes swell for fatnesse, they do euen what they lyst. Corrupte are they, and speake blasphemies maliciously, proude and presumptuous are their wordes. They stretch forth their mouth vnto the heaven, & their tonge goeth thorow the worlde. Therfore fall the people vnto them, and there out sucke they no small auauntage. Tush (saye they) how shulde God perceaue it: is there knowlege in the most hyest: Lo, these are the vngodly, these prospere in the worlde, these haue riches in possession. Shulde I then clense my hert in vayne (thought I) & wash my hondes in innocency: Wherfore shulde I be then punysshed daylie, & be chastened euery mourynge: Nee I had allmost also sayde euen as they: but lo, then shulde I haue condemned the generacion of thy children. Then thought I to vnderstonde this, but it was to harde for me. Vntill I were in to y Sanctuary of God, & considered the ende of these men. Namely, how thou hast set thē in a slippery place, that thou maiest cast thē downe headlynges & destroye thē. O how sodenly do they consume, perish, & come to a fearfull ende: Nee euen like as a dreame when one awaketh, so makest thou their ymage to vanish out of the cite. Thus my hert was greued, & it went euen thorow my reynes.

So foolish was I and ignorannt, and as it were a beest before the. Nevertheless, I am allwaye by the, thou holdest me by my right hande. Thou ledest me with thy counsel, and afterwarde receauest me vnto glory. O what is there prepared for me in heauen: there is nothinge vpō earth, that I desyre in comparison of the. My flesh and my herte fayleth, but God is the strength of my hert, and my porcion for euer. For lo, they that forsake the, shal perishe, thou destroyest all them that committe fornicacion agaynst the. But it is good for me, to holde me fast by God, to put my trust in the LORDE God, and to speake of all thy workes.

Thy waye was in the ſee, and thy pathes in the greate waters, yet conde no man knowe thy foteſteppes. Thou leddeſt thy people like a flocke of ſhepe, by the honde of Moſes and Aaron.

The LXXVII. A pſalme of Aſaph.

HEare my lawe (o my people) encline yo eares vnto the wordes of my mouth.

I wil open my mouth in parables, and ſpeake of thinges of olde. Which we haue herde and knowne, and ſuch as oure fathers haue tolde vs. That we ſhulde not hyde them from the children of the generacions to come: but to ſhewe the honoure of the LORDE, his might and wonderfull workes that he hath done. He made a couenaunt with Jacob, and gaue Iſrael a lawe, which he commaunded oure forefathers to teach their children. That their poſterite might knowe it, and the children which were yet vnborne.

To the intent that when they came vp, they might ſhewe their children the ſame. That they alſo might put their truſt in God, and not to forget what he had done, but to kepe his commaundementes. And not to be as their forefathers, a froward and querthwarte generacion, a generacion that ſet not their herte aright, and whoſe ſpirite was not true towarde God. Like as the children of Ephraim, which beynge harneſſed and carienge bowes, turned them ſelues backe in the tyme of battayll. They kepte not the couenaũt of God, and wolde not walke in his lawe.

They forgat what he had done, and the wonderfull workes that he had ſhewed for them. Marueleus thinges dyd he in the ſight of their fathers in the londe of Egypte, euen in the felde of Zoan. He deuyded the ſee and let them go thorow it, and made the waters to ſtonde like a wall. In the daye tyme he led them with a clonde, and all the night thorow with a light of fyre. He cloue the hard rockes in the wildernes, and gaue them drynke therof, as it had ben out of the greate depth. He brought waters out of the ſtony rocke, ſo that they guſhed out like the riuers. Yet for all this they ſynned agayn him, and prouoked the moſt hyeſt in the wildernes. They tempted God in their herte, and requyred meate for their luſt. For they ſpake agaynſt God and ſayde: Yee, yee, God ſhal prepare a table in the wylderneſſe, ſhall he? Lo, he ſmote the ſtony rocke, that the watery ſtreames guſhed out, and the ſtreames flowed withall: but how can he geue bred and prouyde fleſh for his people? When the LORDE herde this, he was wroth: ſo the fyre was kyndled in Jacob, and heuy diſpleaſure agaynſt Iſrael.

They thought then that God was their ſocoure, and that the hye God was their redemer. Neuertheleſſe, they dyd but flatter him in their mouthes, and diſſembled with him in their tonges. For their herte was not whole with him, nether continued they in his couenaunt. But he was so mercifull, that he forgaue their mysdedes, and destroyed them not: Yee many a tyme turned he his wrath awaye, and wolde not suffre his whole displeasure to aryse. For he Psal.101.b considered ỹ they were but flesh; euen a wynde that passeth awaye, and commeth not agayne. O how ofte haue they greued him in the wildernesse? How he smote their catell with haylestones, and their flockes with hote thõder boltes. How he sent vpon them ỹ furiousnesse of his wrath, anger & displeasure: with trouble and fallinge in of euel angels. When he made a waye to his fearfull indignaciõ, and spared not Exo.9.a their soules from death, yee and gaue their cattell ouer to the pestilence. When he smote Exo.13.e Psal.134.b all the firstborne in Egipte, the most principall and mightiest in ỹ dwellinges of Ham.

F But as for his owne people, he led them forth like shepe, and caried them in the wyldernesse like a flocke. He brought them out safely, that they shulde not feare, and ouerwhelmed their enemies with the see. He caried them vnto the borders of his Sanctuary: euen in to this hill, which he purchased Deut.9.a Iosu.6.a with his right hande. He dyd cast out the heithen before them, caused their londe to be deuyded amonge them for an heretage, and made ỹ tribes of Israel to dwell in their tẽtes. For all this they tempted and displeased the most hye God, and kepte not his couenaunt. But turned their backes and fell awaye like their forefathers, starynge aside like a broken bowe. And so they greued him with their hie places, & prouoked him with their ymages. When God herde this, he was wroth, and toke sore displeasure at Israel. Iere.7.a So that he forsoke the tabernacle in Silo, euen his habitacion wherin he dwelt amonge men. He delyuered their power in to captiuyte, and their glory in to the enemies hõde. He gaue his people ouer in to the G swerde, for he was wroth with his heretage.

The fyre consumed their yonge men, and their maydẽs were not geuen to mariage.

Their prestes were slayne with the swerde, and there were no wyddowes to make lamentacion. So the LORDE awaked as one out of slepe, and like a giaunte refreshed with wyne. He smote his enemies in ỹ hynder partes, and put them to a perpetuall shame. He refused the tabernacle of Joseph, and chose not the tribe of Ephraim. Neuertheles, he chose ỹ tribe of Juda, euen the hill of Sion which he loued. And there he buylded his temple on hye, and layed ỹ foundacion of it like ỹ grounde, that it might perpetually endure. He chose David also his seruaũt, and toke him awaye from the shepe foldes. As he was folowinge the yowes greate with yonge, he toke him, that he might fede Jacob his people, and Israel his enheritaunce. So he fed them with a faithfull and true hert, and ruled them with all ỹ diligence of his power.

The LXXVIII. A psalme of Asaph.

O God, ỹ heithen are fallen in to thine heretage: thy holy temple haue they defyled, and made Jerusalem an heape of stones. The deed bodies of thy seruauntes haue they geuen vnto ỹ foules of the ayre to be deuoured, and the flesh of thy sayntes vnto ỹ beestes of the londe. Their bloude haue they shed like water on euery syde of Jerusalem, and there was no mã to burie them. We are become an open shame vnto oure enemies, a very scorne and derision vnto them that are rounde about vs.

LORDE, how longe wilt thou be angrie? shal thy gelousy burne like fyre for euer? Poure out thy indignacion vpon the heithen that knowe the not, and vpon the kyngdomes that call not vpon thy name.

For they haue deuoured Jacob, and layed waiste his dwellinge place. O remẽbre not oure olde synnes, but haue mercy vpon vs (& that soone) for we are come to greate mysery.

Helpe vs (O God o^r Sauyo^r) for ỹ glory of ỹ name: o delyuer vs, & forgeue vs o^r synnes for ỹ names sake. Wherfore shall ỹ heithe saye: where is now their God? The wilde bore out of the wod hath wrutt it vp, ꝛ the beestes of the felde haue deuoured it. Turne ȳ agayne (thou God of hooستes) loke downe from heauen, beholde ꝛ visit this vynyarde.. Manteyne it, that thy right hōde hath plāted, ꝛ the sonne whom thou maydest so moch of for thy self. For why? it is brēt with fyre, ꝛ lyeth waist: o let thē perishe at the rebuke of thy wrath.

Let thy honde be vpon the man of thy right honde, ꝛ vpon the man whō thou maydest so moch off for thine owne self. And so wil not we go backe from the: oh let vs lyue, ꝛ we shal call vpon thy name. Turne vs agayne o LORDE God of hooستes, shewe the light of thy coūtenaūce, ꝛ we shal be whole.

The LXXX. A psalme of Asaph.

Synge merely vnto God which is o' strēgth make a chearful noyse vnto ȳ God of Jacob. Take ȳ psalme, bryng hither the tabret, the mery harpe ꝛ lute. Blowe vp the trōpettes in the new Moone, vpon o' solēpne feast daye. For this is the vse in Israel, ꝛ a lawe of the God of Jacob. This he ordened in Joseph for a testimony, when he came out of Egipte, ꝛ had herde a straūge lāguage. When he eased his shulder from the burthē, ꝛ when his hondes were delyuered frō the pottes. Whē thou calldeste vpon me in trouble, I helped the ꝛ herde the, what tyme as the storme fell vpō the, I proued the also at the water of strife. Sela. Exo. 2.b Exo. 19.c Exo. 17.a B

Heare o my people, for I assure the o Israel, yf thou wilt herken vnto me: There shal no straunge God be in the, nether shalt thou worshipe eny other God. I am the LORDE thy God, which brought the out of the lōde of Egipte: opē thy mouth wyde, ꝛ I shal fyll it. But my people wolde not heare my voyce, ꝛ Israel wolde not obeye me. So I gaue thē vp vnto their owne hertes lust, ꝛ let thē folowe their owne ymaginacions. O ȳ my people wolde obeye me, for yf Israel wolde walke in my wayes. I shulde soone put downe their enemies, ꝛ turne myne hōde agaynst their aduersaries. The haters of ȳ LORDE shulde mysse Israel, but their tyme shulde endure for euer. He shulde fede them with the fynest wheate floure, ꝛ satisfie them with hony out of the stony rocke. Exo. 20 Pro.1.c Rom 1.

The LXXXI. A psalme of Asaph.

God standeth in the congregacion of the goddes, ꝛ is a iudge amonge the iudges. How longe wil ye geue wrōge iudgment, ꝛ accepte the personnes of the vngodly? Sela. Defende the poore ꝛ fatherlesse, se that soch as be in nede ꝛ necessite haue right. Delyuer the outcaste ꝛ poore, ꝛ saue hym from the hande of the vngodly. Neuertheles, they wil not be lerned ꝛ vnderstonde, but walke on still in darcknesse: therfore must all the foundacions of the londe be moued. I haue sayde: ye are goddes, ye all are the childrē of ȳ most hyest. But ye shal dye like men, ꝛ fall like one of the tyrauntes. For lo, thy enemies make a murmuringe, ꝛ they ȳ hate the, lift vp their heade. They ymagin craftely agaynst thy people, ꝛ take councell agaynst thy secrete ones. But do thou to them as vnto the Madianites, vnto Sisera and vnto Jabin by ye broke of Tyson. Which perished at Endor, & became as the dōge of ye earth. Make their prynces like Oreb and Zeeb: yee make all their prynces like as Zebea and Salmana.

Which saye: we wil haue the houses of God in possession? O my God, make them like vnto a whele, and as the stuble before the wynde. Like as a fyre that burneth vp the wodd, & as the flame that consumeth the mountaynes. Persecute them euen so with thy tempest, & make them afrayed with thy storme. Make their faces ashamed (o LORDE) ye they maye seke thy name. Let thē be cōfounded & vexed euer more & more: Let thē be put to shame & perish. That they maye knowe, that thou art alone, that thy name is the LORDE, and that thou only art the mest hyest ouer all the earth.

The LXXXIII. A psalme of the children of Corah.

O how amiable are ye dwelliges, thou LORDE of hooستes? My soule hath a desyre & lōginge for ye courte of ye LORDE, my hert & my flesh reioyse in ye lyuynge God. For the sparow hath founde hir an house, & the swalowe a nest, where she maye laye hir yōge: euē ye aulters O LORDE of hooستes, my kynge & my God. O how blessed are they that dwell in thy house, they are allwaye praysinge ye. Blessed are ye men who se strēgth is in ye, in whose herte are ye wayes.

Which goinge thorow the vale of mysery, vse it for a well, and the poles are fylled with water. They go from strength to strength and so the God of Gods apeareth vnto thē in Sion. O LORDE God of hooستes, heare my prayer: herken o God of Jacob.

Beholde o God oure defence, loke vpon the face of thyne anoynted. For one daye in thy courte is better then a thousande: I had rather be a dore keper in the house of my God, then to dwell in the tentes of the vngodly. For the LORDE God is a light and defence, the LORDE wil geue grace & worshipe, and no good thinge shal he withholde from them, that lyue a godly life. O LORDE God of hooستes, blessed is the man, ye putteth his trust in the.

The LXXXIIII. A psalme of the children of Corah.

LORDE, thou barest a loue vnto thy londe, thou didest bringe agayne the captiuyte of Jacob. Thou didest forgeue the offence of thy people, and couerdest all their synnes. Sela.

Thou takest awaye all thy displeasure, & turnedest thyself from thy wrothful indignacion. Turne vs then (o God o' Sauioure) & let thine anger ceasse from vs. Wilt thou be displeased at vs for euer? wilt thou stretch out thy wrath from one generacion to another? Wilt thou not turne agayne, & quycken vs, that thy people maye reioyse in the?

I wil herken what the LORDE God wil saie, for he shal speake peace vnto his people and to his sayntes, that they turne not themselues vnto foolishnes. For his saluacion is nye them that feare him, so that glory shal dwell in oure londe. Mercy and trueth are met together, righteousnesse and peace kysse eche other. Trueth shal ryse out of ye earth, and righteousnesse shal loke downe from heuen. And why? the LORDE shal shewe lyuinge kyndnesse, and oure londe shal geue his encrease. Righteousnesse shal go before him, and prepare the waye for his commynge.

The LXXXV. psalme A prayer of Dauid.

BOwe downe thine eare (o LORDE) and heare me, for I am cōfortles and poore. O kepe my soule, for I am holy: my God, helpe thy seruaunt that putteth his trust in the. Be mercifull vnto me (o LORDE) for I call daylie vpon the. Cōforte the soule of thy seruaunt, for vnto the (o LORDE) do I lift vp my soule. For thou LORDE art good and gracious, & of greate mercy vnto all them that call vpon the.

Geue eare LORDE vnto my prayer, and ponder my humble desyre. In the tyme of my trouble I call vpon the, for thou hearest me. Amonge the goddes there is none like the o LORDE, there is not one that cā do as thou doest. All nacions whom thou hast made, shall come and worshipe before the o LORDE, and shal glorifie thy name. For thou art greate, thou doest wonderous thinges, thou art God alone. Lede me in thy waye (o LORDE) that I maye walke in thy trueth: O let my hert delyte in fearynge thy name. I thanke the o LORDE my God, & wil prayse thy name for euer. For greate is thy mercy towarde me, thou hast delyuered my soule from ye nethermost hell. O God, the proude are rysen agaynst me, and the cōgregacion of ye mighty seketh after my soule, & set not ye before their eyes. O LORDE God my Sauyō, I crie daye

entre in to thy presence, encline thine eare vnto my callynge. For my soule is full of trouble, & my life draweth nye vnto hell.
I am coūted as one of thē that go downe vn
to the pytte, I am euē as a mā that hath no strength. Fre amōge the deed, like vnto thē ỹ lye in the graue, which be out of remembraūce,

Thou hast layed me in the lowest pytte, in ỹ darckneſſe and in the depe. Thy indignacion lieth hard vpon me, and thou vexest me with all thy floudes. Sela. Thou hast put awaye myne acquāintaunce farre fro me, & made me to be abhorred of them: I am so fast in preson, that I can not get forth.
My sighte fayleth for very trouble: LOR-DE, I call daylie vpō the, and stretch out my hondes vnto the. Doest thou shewe wonders amonge the deed? Can the physiciās rayse them vp agayne, that they maye pray-se the? Maye thy louynge kyndnes be shew ed in the graue, or thy faithfulneſſe in destruccion? Maye thy wonderous workes be knowne in the darcke, or thy righteousnes
in the londe where all thinges are forgotte?
Vnto the I crie (o LORDE) and early cō meth my prayer before the. LORDE, why puttest thou awaye my soule? Wherfore hy dest thou thy face fro me? My strength is gone for very sorow and misery, with fearfulneſſe do I beare thy burthens. Thy wrothfull displeasure goeth ouer me, the feare of the oppresseth me. They come rounde aboute me daylie like water, and compasse me together on euery syde. My louers and frē des hast thou put awaye fro me, and turned awaye myne acquaintaunce.

God is greatly to be feared in the councell of the sayntes, & to be had in reuerence of all thē that are aboute him. O LORDE God of hoos tes, who is like vnto the in power? thy trueeth is rounde aboute the. Thou rulest
the pryde of the see, thou stillest the wawes therof, whē they arise. Thou breakest the proude, like one that is wounded, thou sca-trest thine enemies abrode with thy mighte arme. The heauēs are thine, the earth is thine: thou hast layed the foundaciō of the rou de worlde and all that therin is. Thou hast made the north and the south, Tabor and Hermon shal reioyse in thy name. Thou hast a mighte arme, stronge is thy hande,

se haue I anoynted him. My honde shal holde him fast, and my arme shal strength him. The enemie shal not ouercome him, and the sonne of wickednesse shal not hurte him. I shal smyte downe his foes before his face, and plage them that hate him.

My trueth also & my mercy shalbe with him, and in my name shal his horne be exalted. I wil set his honde in the see, and his righe honde in the floudes. He shal call me: thou art my father, my God, and the strength of my saluacion. And I wil make him my firstborne, hyer then the kinges of the earth.

My mercy wil I kepe for him for euermore, and my couenaunt shall stonde fast with him. His sede wil I make to endure for euer, yee and his Trone as the dayes of heauen. But yf his childrē forsake my lawe, and walke not in my iudgmentes. Yf they breake myne ordinaunces, and kepe not my commaundementes. I wil vyset their offences with the rodde, and their synnes with scourges. Neuertheles, my louynge kyndnesse wil I not vtterly take from him, ner suffre my trueth to fayle. My couenaunt wil I not breake, ner disanulle the thinge yt is gone out of my lippes. I haue sworne once by my holynesse, that I wil not fayle David. His sede shal endure for euer, and his seate also like as the Sonne before me. He shal stonde fast for euermore as the Moone, and as the faithfull witnesse in heauen.

Sela. But now thou forsakest and abhorrest thyne anoynted, and art displeased at him. Thou hast turned backe the couenaunt of thy seruaunt, and cast his crowne to the grounde. Thou hast ouer throwne all his hedges, and brokē downe his stronge holdes. All they that go by, spoyle him, he is become a rebuke vnto his neighbours. Thou settest vp the right hāde of his enemies, and makest all his aduersaryes to reioyse. Thou hast taken awaye the strength of his swerde, and geuest him not victory in the battayll. Thou hast put out his glory, and cast his Trone downe to the grounde. The dayes of his youth hast thou shortened, and couered him with dishonoure. Sela.

LORDE, how longe wilt thou hyde thy self? For euer? shal thy wraeth burne like fyre? O remembre how shorte my tyme is, hast thou made all men for naught? What man is he that lyueth, and shal not se death? Maye a mā delyuer his owne soule from the honde of hell? Sela.

LORDE, where are thy olde louynge kyndnesses, which thou swoorest vnto Dauid in thy trueth? Remēbre LORDE the rebuke that ye multitude of the people do vnto thy seruauntes, & how I haue borne it in my bosome. Wher w̄ thine enemies blaspheme the, & slaū der ye fotesteppes of ye anoynted. Thanked be to the LORDE for euermore: Amen, Amen.

The LXXXIX psalme. A prayer of Moses the man of God.

LORDE, thou art oure refuge from generacion to another. Before the mountaynes were brought forth, or euer the earth & the worlde were made, thou art God from euerlastinge and worlde wit out ende. Thou turnest man to destruccion, Agayne, thou sayest: come agayne ye children of men. For a thousands yeares in thy sight are but as yesterdaye that is past, and like as it were a night watch.

As soone as thou seatrest them, they are euen as a slepe, and fade awaye so dearly like the grasse. In the mornynge it is grene and groweth vp, but in the euenynge it is cutt downe and wythered. For we consume awaye in thy displeasure, and are afrayed at thy wrothfull indignacion. Thou settest oure misdedes before the, and oure secrete synnes in the light of thy countenaunce. For when thou art angrie, all ye dayes are gone, we bringe o' yeares to an end as it were a tayle that is tolde. The dayes of oure age are iij. score yeares & ten: & though men be so stronge that they come to iiij. score yeares, yet is their strength then but labour and sorowe: so soone passeth it awaye, & we are gone. But who regardeth the power of thy wrath, thy fearfull & terrible displeasure? O teach vs to nombre oure dayes, that we maye applie oure hertes vnto wysdome.

Turne the agayne (o LORDE) at the last, and be gracious vnto thy seruauntes. O satisfie vs with thy mercy, and that soone: so shal we reioyse and be glad all the dayes of oure life. Comforte vs agayne, now after the tyme that thou hast plaged vs, and for the yeares wherin we haue suffred aduersite.

Shewe thy seruauntes thy worke, & their children thy glory. And the glorious maiesty of the LORDE oure God be vpon vs: O prospere thou the worke of oure hondes vpon vs, o prospere thou oure hondy worke.

The XC. psalme.

WHo so dwelleth vnder ye defence of the most hyest, & abydeth vnder ye shadowe of ye allmightie: he shal saye vnto ye LORDE: o my hope, & my stronge holde, my God, in whō I wil trust. For he shalde liuer the frō the snare of the hunter, & frō the noysome pestilence. He shal couer the vnder his wynges, that thou mayest be safe vnder his fethers: his faithfulnesse and trueth shal be thy shylde and buckler. So y thou shalt not nede to be afrayed for eny bugges by night, ner for arowe that flyeth by daye.

For the pestilēce that crepeth in y darcknesse, ner for the sickenesse y destroyeth in the noone daye. A thousande shal fall besyde the, and ten thousande at thy right honde, but it shal not come nye the. Nee with thy eyes shalt thou beholde, and se the rewarde of the vngodly. For thou LORDE art my hope, thou hast set thy house of defence very hye. There shal no euell happen vnto the, nether shal eny plage come nye thy dwellinge. For he shall geue his angels charge ouer the, to kepe the in all thy wayes.

They shal beare the in their hondes, that thou hurte not thy fote agaynst a stone.

Thou shalt go vpō the Lyon and Adder, the yonge Lyon and the Dragon shalt thou treade vnder thy fete. Because he hath set his loue vpon me, I shal delyuer him: I shal defende him, for he hath knowne my name.

When he calleth vpon me, I shall heare him: yee I am with him in his trouble, wher out I wil delyuer him, and bringe him to honoure. With lōge life wil I satisfie him, & shewe him my saluacion.

The XCI. psalme.

IT is a good thinge to geue thankes vnto the LORDE, and to synge prayses vnto y name, o most hyest. To tell of thy louynge kyndnesse early in the morynge, and of thy trueth in the night season.

Vpon an instrumēt of ten strynges, vpon the lute and with a songe vpon the harpe.

For thou LORDE hast made me glad thorow thy workes, and I wil reioyse ouer the operacion of thy hondes. O LORDE, how glorious are thy workes, thy thoughtes are very depe. An vnwyse man wil not knowe this, & a foole wil not vnderstōde it. That the vngodly are grene as the grasse, and that all the workes of wickednes do flourish, to be destroyed for euer. But thou LORDE o most hyest, abydest worlde without ende.

For lo, thy enemies (o LORDE) lo, thy enemies shal perisshe, and all the workers of wickednes shalbe scatred abrode. But my horne shalbe exalted like the horne of an Vnicorne, & shal be anoynted with fresh oyle. Myne eye also shal se his lust of myne enemies, & myne eare shall heare his desyre of the wicked y ryse vp agaynst me. The righteous shal flourish like a palme tre, and growe like a Cedre of Libanus. Soch as be planted in the house of the LORDE, be frutefull, plenteous & grene. That they maye shewe, how true the LORDE my strēgth is, and that there is no vnrighteousnesse in him.

The XCII. psalme.

THe LORDE is kynge, and hath put on A glorious apparell, the LORDE hath put on his apparell, & gyrded himself with strēgth: he hath made the rennde worlde so sure, that it can not be moued. From that tyme forth hath y seate bene prepared, thou art from euerlastinge. The floudes arise (o LORDE) the floudes lift vp their noyse, y floudes lift vp their wawes. The wawes of the see are mightie, & rage horribly: but yet the LORDE that dwelleth on hye, is mightier. Thy testimonies (o LORDE) are very sure, holynesse becommeth thyne house for euer. Psal. 92. a

The XCIII. psalme.

O LORDE God, to whom vengeaunce belōgeth: thou God to whom vengeaunce belongeth, shewe thy self.

Arise thou iudge of the worlde, & rewarde the proude after their deseruynge. LORDE, how longe shal the vngodly, how longe shal the vngodly tryumphe? How longe shal all wicked doers speake so dispaynedly, and make soch proude boastynge? They smyte downe thy people (o LORDE) and trouble thine heretage. They murthur the widdowe and the straunger, and put the fatherlesse to death. And yet they saie: Tush, the LORDE seyth not, the God of Jacob regardeth it not. Take hede, ye vnwise amonge the people: o ye fooles, when wil ye vnderstonde? He that planted the eare, shal he not heare? he that made the eye, shal not he se? He that nurtureth the heithen, and teacheth a man knowlege, shal not he punysh? The LORDE knoweth the thoughtes of men, that they are but vayne. Blessed is the mā, whom thou lerneste (o LORDE) and teachest him in thy lawe. That thou mayest geue him pacience in tyme of aduersitee, vntill the pytte be dygged vp for the vngodly. For the LORDE wil not fayle his people, nether wil he forsake his inheritaunce. And why? iudgment shal be turned agayne vnto righteousnesse, and all soch as be true of hert shal folowe it. THe LORDE is kynge, the earth may be glad therof: yee the multitude of the Iles maie be glad therof. Clowdes and darcknesse are rounde aboute him, righteousnesse and iudgment are the habitacion of his seate. There goeth a fyre before him, to burne vp his enemies on euery syde. His lightenynges geue shyne vnto the worlde, the earth seyth it & is afraied. The hilles melt like wax at the presence of ỹ LORDE, at the presence of the LORDE of the whole earth. The very heauens declare his righteousnes, & all people se his glory. Confounded be all they that worshipe ymages, and delite in their Idols: worshipe him all ye goddes. Sion heareof it and reioyseth: yee all ỹ doughters of Iuda are glad because of thy iudgmentes, o LORDE. For thou LORDE art the most hyest ouer all the earth, thou art exalted farre aboue all goddes. O ye that loue the LORDE, se that ye hate the thinge which is euell: the LORDE preserueth the soules of his sayntes, he shal delyuer thē from the honde of the vngodly. There is spronge vp a light for the righteous, and a ioyfull gladnesse for soch as be true herted.

Reioyse therfore in the LORDE, ye righteous: and geue thankes for a remembraunce of his holynesse.

The XCVII. psalme.

O Synge vnto the LORDE a new songe, for he hath done marueylous thinges. With his owne right honde and with his holy arme hath he gotten the victory. The LORDE hath declared his sauynge healthe, and his righteousnes hath he openly shewed in the sight of the heithē.

He hath remembred his mercy and trueth towarde the house of Israel: so that all the endes of the worlde se the sauynge healthe of oure God. Shewe youre self ioyfull vnto the LORDE all ye londes, synge, reioyse and gyue thankes. Prayse the LORDE vpon the harpe, synge to the harpe with a psalme of thankesgeuynge. With trompettes also & shawmes: O shewe youre selues ioyfull before the LORDE the kynge. Let the see make a noyse and all ỹ therin is, yee the whole worlde & all that dwell therin. Let the floudes clappe their hondes, and let all the hilles be ioyfull together. Before the LORDE, for he is come to iudge the earth. Yee with righteousnes shall he iudge the worlde, and the people with equite.

The XCVIII. psalme.

THe LORDE is kynge, be the people neuer so vnpacient: he sytteth vpon the Cherubins, be the earth neuer so vnmete. The LORDE is greate in Sion, & hye aboue all people. O let men geue thãkes vnto thy greate & wonderful name, for it is holy. The kynges power loueth iudgment, thou prepareste equite, thou executeste iudgmẽt & righteousnes in Jacob. O magnifie the LORDE our God, & fall downe before his fote stole, for he his holy. Moses & Aaron amonge his prestes, & Samuel amonge soch as call vpõ his name: these called vpon the LORDE, & he herde thẽ. He spake vnto thẽ out of the cloudy piler, for they kepte his testimonies, & the lawe that he gaue them.

Thou herdeste thẽ (o LORDE our God) thou forgaueste thẽ o God, & punyshedst their owne invencions. O magnifie the LORDE oure God, and worshipe him vpõ his holy hill, for the LORDE oure God is holy.

The XCIX. psalme.

BE ioyfull in God (all ye lõdes) serue the LORDE w^t gladnes, come before his presence w^t ioye. Be ye sure, ỹ the LORDE he is God: Je is he ỹ hath made vs, & not we oure selues: we are but his people, & the shepe of his pasture. O go youre waye in to his gates thẽ with thankesgeuynge, & in to his courtes w^t prayse: be thãkfull vnto him, & speake good of his name. For the LORDE is gracious, his mercy is euerlastinge, and his trouth endureth from generacion to generacion.

The C. psalme A thãkesgeuynge of David.

MY songe shalbe of mercy and iudgment, yee vnto the (o LORDE) wil I synge. O let me haue vnderstondinge in the waye of godlyneſſe, vntill the tyme that thou come vnto me: & so shal I walke in my house w^t an innocent herte. I wil take no wicked thinge in honde, I hate the synne of vnfaithfulnesse, it shal not cleue vnto me. A froward herte shal departe fro me, I wil not knowe a wicked persomne.

Who so preuely slaundreth his neghboure, him wil I destroye: Who so hath a proude loke & an hye stomacke, I maye not awaye with him. Myne eyes shal loke for soch as be faithfull in the londe, ỹ they maye dwell with me: and who so ledeth a godly life, shal be my seruaunt. There shall no disceatfull personne dwell in my house, he that telleth lyes shal not tary in my sight. I shal soone destroye all the vngodly of the londe, that all wicked doers maye be roted out of the cite of the LORDE.

The CI. psalme.

PRayse the LORDE o my soule: O LORDE my God, thou art become exceadinge glorious, thou art clothed with maiesty and honoure. Thou deckest thy self with light, as it were w a garment, thou spredest out the heauen like a curtayne.

Thou voltest it aboue with waters, thou makest the cloudes thy charet, and goest vpon the wynges of the wynde. Thou makest thine angels spretes, and thy ministers flammes of fyre. Thou hast layed ỹ earth vpon hir foundacion, that it neuer moueth at eny tyme. Thou coueredst it with the depe like as with a garmēt, so that the waters stonde aboue the hilles. But at thy rebuke they fle, at the voyce of thy thonder they are afrayed. (Then are the hilles sene aloft, & the valleys beneth in their place which thou hast appoynted for thē.) Thou hast set them their boundes, which they maie not passe, that they turne not agayne to couer ỹ earth. Thou causest the welles to sprynge vp amonge the valleys, and the waters runne amonge ỹ hilles. That all the beastes of the felde maye haue drynke, & that the wylde asses maye quench their thyrste.

Aboue vpon the hilles haue the foules of the ayre their habitacion, and synge amonge the braunches. Thou watrest the hylles from aboue, the erth is fylled with ỹ frutes of thy workes. Thou bryngest forth grasse for the catell, and grene herbe for the seruyce of men. Thou bryngest fode out of the earth: wyne to make glad ỹ herte of mā, oyle to make him a chearfull countenaunce, & bred to strength mans herte. The trees of the LORDE are full of sappe, euen the trees of Libanus which he hath planted. There make the bydes their nestes, and the fyre trees are a dwellinge for the storcke. The hilles are a refuge for the wylde goates, and so are the stony rockes for ỹ conyes. Thou hast appoynted the Moone for certayne seasons, the Sonne knoweth his goinge downe. Thou makest darcknesse, that it maye be night, wherin all the beastes of the forest do mone. Yee and the yonge lyons which roare after the praye, and seke their meate at God. But when the Sonne ariseth, they get them awaye together, and lye them downe in their dennes. Then goeth man forth to his worke, and to till his londe vntill the euentynge. O LORDE, how manifolde are thy workes, right wysely hast thou made thē all: yet the earth is full of thy riches. So is this greate and wyde see also, wherin are thinges crepinge innumerable, both small and greate beastes. There go the shippes ouer, and there is that Leuiathan, whom thou hast made, to take his pastyme therin. They wayte all vpō the, that thou mayest geue them meate in due season. Whē thou geuest it them, they gather it: whē thou openest thine honde, they are fylled with good. But when thou hydest thy face, they are troubled: yf thou takest awaye their breth, they dye, & are turned agayne to their dust. Agayne, when thou lattest thy breth go forth, they are made, and so thou renuest the face of the earth. The glorious magesty of the LORDE endureth for euer, and the LORDE reioyseth in his workes. The earth trēbleth at the loke of him, he doth but touch the hilles and they smoke. I will synge vnto the LORDE as longe as I lyue, I wil prayse my God whyle I haue my beinge. O that my wordes might please him, for my delyte is in the LORDE. As for synners, they shal be cōsumed out of the earth, and the vngodly shal come to an ende: but prayse thou the LORDE, o my soule. C Exo.32.a 1.cor.10.a Rom.1.c Sauio, which turned ... in Egipte.

Heithen compased me rounde aboute, but in the name of the LORDE wil I destroye them.

They kepte me in on euery syde, but in the name of the LORDE, I wil destroye them.

They came aboute me like bees, & were as hote as the fyre in the thornes, but in the name of the LORDE I wil destroye them.

They thrust at me, that I might fall, but the LORDE was my helpe. The LORDE is my strēgth, & my songe, & is become my saluacion. The voyce of ioye & myrth is in the dwellynges of ỹ rightuous, for ỹ right hande of the LORDE hath gotte the victory.

The right hande of the LORDE hath the preeminence, the right hāde of the LORDE hath gotte the victory. I wil not dye, but lyue, and declare the workes of the LORDE.

The LORDE hath chastened & correcte me, but he hath not geuen me ouer vnto death.

Open me the gates of rightuousnes, ỹ I maye go in there thorow, & geue thankes vnto the LORDE. This is the doore of the LORDE, the rightuous shall entre in thorow.

I thanke the, ỹ thou hast herde me, & art become my saluacio. The same stone which the buylders refused, is become the heade stone in the corner. This was the LORDES doinge, & it is marueloꝰ in oꝰ eyes. This is the daye which the LORDE hath made, we wil reioyse and be glad in it. Helpe now LORDE, o LORDE sende vs now prosperite.

Blessed be he that cōmeth in the name of the LORDE, we wish you good lucke, yee that be of the house of the LORDE. God is the LORDE, & hath shewed vs light: O garnish the solempne feast with grene braunches, vnto the hornes of ỹ aulter. Thou art my God, & I wil thanke the: thou art my God, and I wil prayse the. O geue thankes vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, & his mercy endureth for euer.

ז I am horribly afrayed for the vngodly / ẏ forsake thy lawe.
ז Thy statutes are my songes in the house of my pylgremage.
ז I thyncke vpon thy name / O Lord / in the nyght season / and kepe thy lawe.
ז This I haue myne awne / for I kepe thy cõmaundementes.

ח Heth.

Thou art my portyon / O Lorde / I am purposed to kepe thy lawe.
ח I make myne humble petycyon in thy presence with my whole herte / O be mercyfull vnto me accordynge vnto thy worde.
ח I call myne awne wayes to remembrance / and turne my fete in to thy testimonies.
ח I make haste / and prolonge not the time to kepe thy commaundementes.
ח The congregacyons of the vngodly haue robbed me / but I forget not thy lawe.
ח At mydnight stande I vp / to geue thankes vnto the / for the iudgmentes of thy righteousnesse.
ח I am a companyon of all them that feare the / and kepe thy commaundementes.
ח The earth / O Lorde / is full of thy mercy. O teach me thy statutes.

ט Teh.

ט O Lord / thou hast dealt frendly with thy seruaunt / accordynge vnto thy worde.
ט O learne me thy kyndnesse / and vnderstandynge knowledge / for I beleue thy cõmaundementes.
ט Before I was troubled / I went wrong / but now I kepe thy worde.
ט Thou art good & frendly / O teach me thy statutes.
ט The proude ymaginacyons vpon me / but I kepe thy commaundemẽtes with my whole herte.
ט Their herte is as fat as brawne / but my delyte is in thy lawe.
ט It is good for me ẏ I haue ben in trouble / that I maye learne thy statutes.
ט The lawe of thy mouth is dearer vnto me / then thousandes of golde and syluer.

י Jod.

י Thy hãdes haue made me and fashioned me / O geue me vnderstãdynge / that I may learne thy commaundementes.
י They ẏ feare the / wyll be glad when they see me / because I put my trust in thy worde.
י I knowe / O Lorde / that thy iudgmentes are right / and that thou of very faithfulnesse hast caused me to be troubled.
י O let thy mercyfull kyndnesse be my comforte / accordynge to the promises that thou hast made vnto thy seruaunt.
י O let thy louyng mercies come vnto me / that I maye lyue / for thy lawe is my delyte.
י Let the proude be cõfounded / which vniustly handle me so falsly.
י But let soch as feare the / and knowe thy testymonies / be turned vnto me.
י O lett myne herte be vndefyled in thy statutes that I be not ashamed.

כ Caph.

כ My soule longeth for thy sauynge health / for my trust is in thy worde.
כ Myne eyes lõge sore for thy worde / saying / O when wylt thou comforte me?

for I am become like a botell in ỹ smoke/ yet do not I forget thy statutes.

How many are the dayes of thy seruaũt? when wylt thou be auẽged of myne aduersaries?

The proude haue dygged pyttes for me/ which are not after thy lawe.

All thy commaundementes are true/ they persecute me falsly/ O be thou my helpe.

They haue allmost made an ende of me vpon earth/ but I forsake not thy cõmaundementes.

O quycke me after thy louyng kyndnesse/ & so shall I kepe ỹ testimonyes of thy mouth.

ל Lamed.

O Lord/ thy worde endureth for euer in heauen.

Thy trueth also remayneth frõ one generacion to another: thou hast layed ỹ foundacion of the earth/ and it abydeth.

They contynue this daye according to thine ordynaunce/ for all thynges serue the.

If my delyte were not in thy lawe/ I should perysshe in my trouble.

I will neuer forget thy commaundementes/ for with them thou quickenest me.

I am thyne/ O helpe me/ for I seke thy commaundementes.

The vngodly laye wayte for me to destroye me/ but I consydre thy testimonyes.

I se that all thyngs come to an ende/ but thy commaundement is exceadynge broade.

מ Mem.

O what loue haue I vnto thy lawe: all the daye long is my talkynge of it.

Thou through thy commaundement hast made me wyser then myne enemies/ for it is ever with me.

I haue more vnderstandyng then all my techers/ for thy testymonies are my studie.

Yea I am wyser then ỹ aged; for I kepe thy commaundementes.

I refrayne my fete frõ euery euell waye/ that I maye kepe thy wordes.

I shrynck not from thy iudgmentes/ for thou teachest me.

O how swete are thy wordes vnto my mouth!

Yee more then hony vnto my mouth.

Through thy cõmaundementes I get vnderstandyng/ therfore I hate all false wayes.

The CXXXVIII. A psalme of Dauid.

O LORDE, thou searchest me out, and knowest me. Thou knowest my downe sytting & my vprisynge, thou vnderstodest my thoughtes a farre of. Thou compassest about my path & about my bedd, & spyest out all my wayes. For lo, there is not a worde in my tõge, but thou (o LORDE) knowest it altogether. Thou hast fashioned me behynder before, & layed thine hõde vpon me. Soch knowlege is too wonderfull & excellẽt for me, I can not atteyne vnto it. Whither shal I go then from thy spirite? Or, whither shal I flie from thy presence? If I clymme vp into heauen, thou art there: yf I go downe to hell, thou art there also. If I take the wynges of the morninge, & remayne in the vttermost parte of the see: Euen there also shal thy honde lede me, and thy right hande shal holde me. If I saye: peraduẽture the darckneſſe shal couer me, then shal my night be turned to daye. Yee the darckneſſe is no darckneſſe with the, but the night is as clear as the daye, the darckneſſe & light are both alike. For my reynes are thyne, thou hast couered me in my mothers wombe. I wil geue thãkes vnto the, for I am wõderously made: marueloꝰ are thy workes, and that my soule knoweth right well. My bones are not hyd from the, though I be made secretly, and fashioned beneth in the earth. Thine eyes se myne vnperfitnesse, they shall all writte ī thy boke: my dayes were fashioned, when as yet there was not one of them. How deare are ỹ coũcels vnto me o God? O how greate is the summe of them? If I tell them, they are mo in nombre then the sande: when I wake vp, I am present with the. Wilt thou not slaye ỹ wicked (oh God) that the blodethyrstie might departe fro me? For they speake vnright of the, thine enemies exalte them selues presumptuously. I hate them (o LORDE) that hate the, & maye not awaye with thoſe that ryse vp vpaynst the? Yee I hate them right sore, euen as are they myne enemies. Trye me (o God) and seke the grounde of myne hert: proue me, & examen my thoughtes. LORDE shal buyl well, yf there be eny waye of wickednesse together ỹ cutteth me, & lede me in the waye euerlastinge.

The CXXXIX. A psalme of Dauides. He

The CXLIIII. A psalme of Dauid.

I Wil magnifie the (o my God and kyng)
I wil prayse y name for euer and ever.
Euery daye wil I geue thankes vnto
the, and prayse y name for euer and euer.
Greate is the LORDE, and marueloues worthy to be praysed, there is no ende of his great-

those that be downe. The eyes of all way wayte vpon the, and thou geuest them their meate
in due season. Thou openest thine hãde, and fyllest all thinges lyuynge with plentefulnesse. The LORDE is righteous in all his wayes, & holy in all his wo?kes. The LORDE is nye vnto all them that call vpon him, yee all soch as call vpon him faithfully.
He fulfilleth the desyre of them that feare
him, he heareth their crie, and helpeth them.
The LORDE preserueth all them that lo
him, but scatereth abrode all the vngodly.

And as for his iudgment and equi-

Blessed is the man that hath not walked in the counsell of the vngodly, nor stande in the waye of synners, nor sytteth in the chayre of the scornefull. But his delyte is in the lawe of the LORDE, and in his lawe doeth he exercise himself day and nyght. He shal be like vnto a tree that is planted by the ryuers of waters, that wil bringe forth his fruite in due season. His leafe shal not fade, and all that he doeth shal prosper. The vngodly are not so, but are like vnto the chaffe, which the wynde scatereth from the face of the earth. Therfore the vngodly shal not stande in the iudgment, nether synners in the congregacion of the righteous. For the LORDE knoweth the waye of the righteous, but the waye of the vngodly shal perishe.

Why do the heathen so furiously rage together, and why do the people imagine a vayne thinge? The kynges of the earth stande vp, and the rulers take counsell together against the LORDE, and against his anoynted, saying: Let vs breake their bondes a sunder, and cast away their cordes from vs. He that dwelleth in heauen shal laughe them to scorne, the LORDE shal have them in derision. Then shal he speake vnto them in his wrathe, and vexe them in his sore displeasure. Yet am I set a kynge by him vpon Sion his holy hyll, that I should preache of the LORDES decree. The LORDE hath said vnto me: Thou art my sonne, this day haue I begotten the. Aske of me, and I shal geue the the heathen for thyne enheritaunce, and the vttermost partes of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt breake them with a rodde of yron, and throwe them in pieces like a potters vessell. Be learned now therfore ye kynges, and receaue instruction ye that are iudges of the earth. Serue the LORDE in feare, and reioyse vnto him with reuerence. Kysse the sonne, lest he be angrie, and so ye perishe from the righteous waye, when his wrathe beginneth to burne but a litle. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him.

A prayer of Dauid, when he fled from Absalon his sonne.

LORDE, how are they encreased that trouble me? many are they that rise vp against me. Many one there be which saye of my soule: There is no helpe for him in his God. But thou LORDE art my defender, my worshippe, and the lifter vp of my head. I cryed vnto the LORDE with my voyce, and he heard me out of his holy hyll. I laye and slept, and rose vp agayne, for the LORDE susteyned me. I wil not feare though there stande ten thousande people against me rounde about. Arise LORDE, helpe me my God: for thou smytest all myne enemies vpon the cheke bone, and breakest the teeth of the vngodly. Helpe belongeth vnto the LORDE, and thy blessynge vpon thy people.

To him that excelleth vpon Neginoth, a psalme or songe of Dauid.

HEare me when I call, o God of my righteousnesse: thou hast set me at large when I was in trouble, haue mercy vpon me, and heare my prayer. O ye sonnes of men, how long wil ye turne my glory to shame? how long wil ye loue vanitie, and seke after leasynge? Knowe this, that the LORDE hath chosen him an holy one for himself: the LORDE wil heare when I call vpon him. Stande in awe, and synne not: commune with your owne hertes vpon your beddes, and be styll. Offer the sacrifice of righteousnesse, and put your trust in the LORDE. There be many that say: Who wil shewe vs any good? LORDE lyft thou vp the lyght of thy countenaunce vpon vs. Thou hast put gladnesse in my hert, more than in the time that their corne and wyne encreased. I wil laye me downe in peace and take my rest: for it is thou LORDE only that makest me dwell in safetie.

To him that excelleth vpon Nehiloth, a psalme or songe of Dauid.

GIue eare vnto my wordes o LORDE, consyder my meditacion. Hearken vnto the voyce of my calynge, my King and my God: for vnto the wil I make my prayer. My voyce shalt thou heare betymes o LORDE, betymes wil I direct my prayer vnto the, and wil loke vp. For thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickednesse, nether shal eny euyl dwell with the. The fooles shal not stande in thy sight, for thou hatest all them that worke vanitie. Thou destroyest all them that speake leasynge, the LORDE abhorreth the bloudy and deceatfull man. But I wil come into thyne house even vpon the multitude of thy mercy, and in thy feare wil I worshippe before the temple of thy holynesse. LORDE leade me in thy righteousnesse because of myne enemies, make thy waye playne before my face. For there is no fayth in their mouth, their inwarde parte is very wickednesse, their throte is an open sepulchre, they flatter with their tonge. Destroye them o God, that they fall from their owne imaginacions, and cast them out for the multitude of their vngodlynesse, for they are rebellious against the. And let all them that put their trust in the reioyse, they shal euer be geuynge of thanke: for thou defendest them, they that loue thy name shal be ioyfull in the. For thou LORDE wilt geue thy blessynge vnto the righteous, and with thy fauoure defende him as with a shylde.

Chap. II. How wisdome maye be gotten, and what profit commeth of it.

Chap. III. He exorteth us to the feare of God and to pacience: he commendeth wysdome, & requyreth us to cleue vnto the same.

Chap. IIII. A fatherly exortacion vnto wys-me with the profit therof, and how we ought to refrayne the mēbres of oure body frō euell.

Chap. V. He exorteth vnto wysdōe, and wa-warre of harlottes: he telleth what harme ye folowe therout, whē men medle with soch teacheth men, louyngly to cleue vnto their ma-ried wyues, and descrybeth the ende of the re-godly.

Chap. VI. He warneth men to bewarre of sure tishipe, exorteth the slouthfull to labourr, sh-weth the wikednesse of false tonges, and requ-reth men to bewarre of aduoutry, because it more perlous then theft or felony.

Chap. VII. He exorteth vnto wisdome, shew-the condicions of harlottes, and what hurt he-peneth vnto soch as encline to the prouocacio-and desyres of the flesh.

Chap. VIII. Wysdome calleth men swetely vn-her, and telleth them what treasure and powe-she hath. A cōmendacion and prayse of wys-dome, wherout euery mā is exorted to cleue vn-to her.

Chap. IX. Wysdome crieth vpō the ignoraūt, and promiseth them greate thinges. The foo-lish maner of a light woman.

Chap. X. From this chapter forth vnto the XXXI, there are described many swete, lowely and wyse sentences, which teach men wysdome and what profit commeth of it: Agayne, how men maye auoyde foolishnesse, and the hurte therof.

Chap. XXXI Wysdome warneth us to bewarre of euell women, and descrybeth the cōuersacion, maner, & behauoure of an honest maried wyfe.

These are the prouerbes of Salomon the sonne of Dauid kynge of Israel: to lerne wysdome nurtoure, vnderston dinge, prudence, righteousnesse, iudgment and equite. That the very babes might haue wyt, and that yonge men might haue knowlege and vnderstondinge. By hearinge, the wyse mā shal cōme by more wysdome: and by experience, he shal be more apte to vnderstonde a parable, and the interpretacion therof: the wordes of the wyse, and the darcke speaches of the same. The feare of the LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome. But fooles despyse wysdome and nurtoure.

The first Chapter.

MY sonne, heare thy fathers doctryne, and forsake not the lawes of yͤ mother: for that shal bringe grace vnto thy heade, & shal be a cheyne about thy necke. My sonne, cōsente not vnto synners, yf they entyse the, and saye: come wyth us, let us laye wayte for bloude, & lurke preuely for the innocēt wyth out a cause: let us swalowe thē vp like yͤ hell, let us deuoure thē quycke and whole, as those that go downe in to the pytt. So shal we fynde all maner of costly riches, and fyll oure houses wyth spoyles. Cast in thy lott amonge us, we shal haue all one purse.

My sonne, walke not thou wͤ them, refray neͤ yͤ fote frō their wayes. For their fete rūne to euell, & are haistie to shed bloude. But in vayne is yͤ net layed forth before the byrdes eyes. Yee they thē selues laye wayte one for anothers bloude, and one of thē wolde slaye another. These are the wayes of all soch as be couetous, that one wolde rauysh anothers life.

Wysdome crieth without, & putteth forth hir voyce in the stretes. She calleth before yͤ congregacion in yͤ open gates, and sheweth hir wordes thorow yͤ cite, sayenge: O ye childrē, how lōge wil ye loue childyshnesse? how longe wil yͤ scorners delyte in scornynge, & yͤ vnwyse be enemies vnto knowlege? O turne you vnto my correccion: lo, I wil expresse my mynde vnto you, and make you vnderstōde my wordes. Seinge then that I haue called, and ye refused it: I haue stretched out my honde, and no mā regarded it, but all my cōcels haue ye despysed, and set my correccios at naught. Therfore shal I also laugh in yͤ destruccion, and mocke you, when yͤ thinge that ye feare cōmeth vpon you: euen whē yͤ thinge that ye be afrayed of, falleth in sodenly like a storme, and yͤ misery like a tempest: yee whā trouble and heuynesse cōmeth vpon you. Then shal they call vpō me, but I wil not heare: they shal seke me early, but they shal not fynde me: And yͤ because they hated knowlege, and receaued not yͤ feare of yͤ LORDE, but abhorred my councell, and despysed my correccion. Therfore shal they eate yͤ frutes of their owne waye, and be fylled wͤ their owne councels: for yͤ turnynge awaye of yͤ vnwyse shal slaye thē, & yͤ prosperite of fooles shalbe their owne destrucciō. But who so harkeneth vnto me, shal dwell stfely, and haue ynough without eny feare of euell. Pro.3.c

The II. Chapter.

A MY sonne, yf thou wilt receaue my wordes, and kepe my cōmaundemētes by the, that thine eare maye herken vnto wysdome, applie thine herte then to vnderstōdinge. For yf thou criest after wysdome, & callest for knowlege: yf thou seke st after her as after money, and dyggest for her as for treasure: Thē shalt thou vnderstonde yͤ feare of the LORDE, and fynde yͤ knowlege of God. For it is the LORDE that geueth wysdome, out of his mouth cōmeth knowlege and vnderstondinge. He preserueth yͤ welfare of the righteous, and defendeth them yͤ walke innocently: he kepeth them in yͤ right path, and preserueth yͤ waye of his sayntes. Then shalt thou vnderstonde righteousnesse, iudgment and equite, yee and euery good path. Yf wysdome entre in to thine herte, and yͤ soule delyte in knowlege: then shal councell preserue the, and vnderstondinge shal kepe the. What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I. The wysdome of God calleth vs by the mouth of Salomõ, exorteth vs, and geueth vs warnynge to eschue the wicked: whose [r]e godly cõuersacion in worde and worke, and [p]e nyshyment also of the same, is here descrybed.

Chap. II. How wisdome maye be gotten, and what profit commeth of it.

Chap. III. He exorteth us to the feare of God and to pacience: he commendeth wysdome, [a]requyreth us to cleue vnto the same.

Chap. IIII. A fatherly exortacion vnto wis[d]me with the profit therof, and how we ought to refrayne the mẽbres of oure body frõ euell.

Chap. V. He exorteth vnto wysdõe, and to [b]warre of harlotres: he telleth what harme [c]ye folowe therout, whẽ men medle with [s]ch, [a]teacheth men, louyngly to cleue vnto their [m]ried wyues, and descrybeth the ende of the [u]godly.

Chap. VI. He warneth men to bewarre of [s]uretishipe, exorteth the slouthfull to labour, [s]weth the wikednesse of false tonges, and re[q]reth men to bewarre of aduoutry, because it [i]s more perlous then theft or felony.

Chap. VII. He exorteth vnto wisdome, sheweth the condicions of harlottes, and what hurt they [b]peneth vnto soch as enclyne to the prouocacions and desyres of the flesh.

Chap. VIII. Wysdome calleth men swetely vnto her, and telleth them what treasure and power she hath. A cõmendacion and prayse of wysdome, wherout euery mã is exorted to cleue vnto her.

Chap. IX. Wysdome crieth vpõ the ignorant, and promiseth them greate thinges. The foolish maner of a light woman.

Chap. X. From this chapter forth vnto the XXXI, there are described many swete, lowdy and wyse sentences, which teach men wysdome and what profit commeth of it: Agayne, how men maye auoyde foolishnesse, and the hurt therof.

Chap. XXXI Wysdome warneth us to bewarre of euell women, and descrybeth the cõuersacion, maner, & behauoure of an honest maried wyfe.

These are the prouerbes of Salomon the sonne of Dauid kynge of Israel: to lerne wyßdome nurtourt, vnderstondinge, prudence, righteousnesse, iudgment and equite. That the very babes might haue wyt, and that yonge men might haue knowlege and vnderstondinge. By hearinge, the wyse mā shal cōme by more wysdome: and by experience, he shal be more apte to vnderstonde a parable, and the interpretacion therof: the wordes of the wyse, and the darcke speaches of the same. The feare of the LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome. But fooles despyse wysdome and nurtoure.

The first Chapter.

MY sonne, heare thy fathers doctryne, and forsake not the lawes of ỳ mother: for that shal bringe grace vnto thy heade, & shal be a cheyne aboute thy necke. My sonne, cōsente not vnto synners, yf they entyse the, and saye: come wyth us, let us laye wayte for bloude, & lurke preuely for the innocēt wyth out a cause: let us swalowe thē vp like ỳ hell, let us deuoure thē quycke and whole, as those that go downe in to the pytt. So shal we fynde all maner of costly riches, and fyll oure houses wyth spoyles. Cast in thy lott amonge us, we shal haue all one purse.

My sonne, walke not thou wt them, refray me ỳ fote frō their wayes. For their fete rūne to euell, & are haistie to shed bloude. But in vayne is ỳ net layed forth before the byrdes eyes. Yee they thē selues laye wayte one for anothers bloude, and one of thē wolde slaye another. These are the wayes of all soch as be couetous, that one wolde rauysh anothers life.

Wyßdome crieth without, & putteth forth hir voyce in the stretes. She calleth before ỳ congregācion in ỳ open gates, and sheweth hir wordes thorow ỳ cite, sayenge: O ye childrē, how lōge wil ye loue childyshnesse? how longe wil ỳ scorners delyte in scornynge, & ỳ vnwyse be enemies vnto knowlege? O turne you vnto my correccion: lo, I wil expresse my mynde vnto you, and make you vnderstōde my wordes. Seinge then that I haue called, and ye refused it: I haue stretched out my honde, and no mā regarded it, but all my cōcels haue ye despysed, and set my correcciōs at naught. Therfore shal I also laugh in yō destruccion, and mocke you, when ỳ thinge that ye feare cōmeth vpon you: euen whē ỳ thinge that ye be afrayed of, falleth in sodenly like a storme, and yō misery like a tempest: yee what trouble and heuynesse cōmeth vpon you. Then shal they call vpō me, but I wil not heare: they shal seke me early, but they shal not fynde me: And ỳ because they hated knowlege, and receaued not ỳ feare of ỳ LORDE, but abhorred my councell, and despysed my correccion. Therfore shal they eate ỳ frutes of their owne waye, and be fylled wt their owne councels: for ỳ turnynge awaye of ỳ vnwyse shal slaye thē, & ỳ prosperite of fooles shalbe their owne destrucciō. But who so harkeneth vnto me, shal dwell sasely, and haue ynough without eny feare of euell. Pro. 3. c

The II. Chapter.

A MY sonne, yf thou wilt receaue my wordes, and kepe my cōmaundemētes by the, that thine eare maye herken vnto wysdome, applie thine herte then to vnderstōdinge. For yf thou criest after wyßdome, & callest for knowlege: yf thou seekest after her as after money, and dyggest for her as for treasure: thē shalt thou vnderstonde ỳ feare of the LORDE, and fynde ỳ knowlege of God. For it is the LORDE that geueth wyßdome, out of his mouth cōmeth knowlege and vnderstondinge. He preserueth ỳ welfare of the righteous, and defendeth them ỳ walke innocently: he kepeth them in ỳ right path, and preserueth ỳ waye of his sayntes. Then shalt thou vnderstonde righteousnesse, iudgment and equite, yee and euery good path. Yf wyßdome entre in to thine herte, and ỳ soule delyte in knowlege: then shal councell preserue the, and vnderstondinge shal kepe the. That thou mayest be delyuered frō ỳ euell waye, and from the man ỳ speaketh frowarde thinges. From soch as leaue the hye strete, and walke ỳ wayes of darcknesse: which reioyse in doynge euell, and delyte ī wicked thinges: whose wayes are croked, and their pathes slaunderous. Iaco. 1. a Eccls. 1. And. 7. c Iob. 28 b 3. reg 3 b 4. c.

B That thou mayest be delyuered also from the straunge woman, and from her that is not thine owne: which geueth swete wordes, forsaketh the hußbande of hir youth, and forgetteth the couenaunt of hir God. For hir house is enclyned vnto death, and hir pathes vnto hell. All they that go in vnto her, come not agayne, nether take they holde of the waye of life. Pro. 7. a And. 5. a

C That thou mayest walke in ỳ good waye, and kepe the pathes of the righteous. For the iust shal dwell in the lende, and the inno centes shal remayne in it: but the vngodly shalbe roted out of ỳ londe, and the wicked doers shalbe taken out of it.

The III. Chapter.

A Deu.11.a

MY sonne, forget not my lawe, but se ỳ thine hert kepe my cõmaundemẽtes. For they shal prolõge ỳ dayes & yeares of ỳ lyfe, & bringe ỳ peace. Let mercy & faithfulnes neuer go from ỳ: bynde thẽ about ỳ necke, & wryte them in the tables of thine herte. So shalt thou fynde fauõ and good vnderstondinge in ỳ sight of God and men. Put thy trust in ỳ LORDE with all thine herte, and leane not vnto thine owne vnderstondinge. In all thy wayes haue respecte vnto him, and he shal ordre thy goinges. Esa.5.c Rom.12.c Be not wyse in thine owne conceate, but feare ỳ LORDE and departe from euell: so shal thy nauel be whole, and thy bones stronge.

B Prou.4.b Deut.26.a Mala.3.b Exo.23.c and 34.c 1 Pet.4.b Tob.12.c Heb.12.a Apo 3.d

Honoure the LORDE wt ỳ substaunce, & wt ỳ firstlinges of all thine encrease: so shal thy barnes be fylled with plenteousnesse, and thy presses shal flowe ouer with swete wyne. My sonne, despyse not the chastenynge of ỳ LORDE, neither faynte when thou art rebuked of him. For whõ the LORDE loueth, him he chasteneth: and yet delyteth in him euen as a father in his owne sonne. Well is him that fyndeth wyßdome, & opteyneth vnderstondinge, for the gettinge of it is better then eny marchaundise of syluer, & the profit Pro.8.a of it is better then golde. Wyßdome is more worth thẽ precious stones, & all ỳ thinges ỳ thou canst desyre, are not to be compared vnto her. Vpon hir right hande is longe life, & vpon hir left hande is riches & honõ.

Hir wayes are pleasaunt wayes, and all Gen.2.b hir pathes are peaceable. She is a tree of life to them that laye holde vpon her, and blessed are they that kepe her fast.

With wyßdome hath ỳ LORDE layed the foũdacion of ỳ earth, & thorow vnderstondinge hath he stablished ỳ heauẽs. Thorow his wißdome ỳ depthes breake vp, & ỳ cloudes droppe downe the dew. My sonne, let not these thinges departe from thyne eyes, but kepe my lawe and my councell: so shal it be life vnto thy soule, & grace vnto ỳ mouth.

Then shalt thou walke safely in ỳ waye, & thy fote shal not stomble. Pro.3.c Yf thou slepest, thou shalt not be afrayed, but shalt take thy rest & slepe swetely. Thou neddest not to be afrayed of eny sodane feare, neither for the violent russhinge in of the vngodly, when it commeth.

For the LORDE shal be beside the, & kepe thy fote ỳ thou be not taken. Refuse not to do good vnto him that shulde haue it, so longe as thine hande is able to do it. Saye d not vnto thy neghboure: go thy waye & come agayne, tomorow wil I geue the: where as thou hast now to geue him. Intende no hurte vnto thy neghboure, seynge he hopeth to dwell in rest by the. Stryue not lightly wt eny man, where as he hath done ỳ no harme. Folowe not a wicked man, and chose none of his wayes: for the LORDE abhorreth the frowarde, but his secrete is amonge the righteous. The curse of the LORDE is in the house of the vngodly, but he blesseth the dwellinges of the righteous.

As for the scornefull, he shal laugh vt to scorne, but he shal geue grace vnto the lowly. The wyse shal haue honõ in possesion, but shame is the promociõ that fooles shal haue.

The IIII. Chap.

HEare (O ye children) the fatherly exortaciõ, & take good hede, that ye may lerne wyßdome. For I shal geue you a good reward, yf ye wil not forsake my lawe. For when I myself was my fathers deare sonne, and tenderly beloued of my mother, he taught me also, sayenge: let thine herte receaue my wordes, kepe my commaundementes, and thou shalt lyue.

Get the wyßdome, get the vnderstondinge, forget not ỳ wordes of my mouth, & shake not from them. Forsake her not, and she shal preserue the: loue her, and she shal kepe the. The chefe poynte of wyßdome is, that thou be wyllynge to opteyne wyßdome, and before all thy goodes to get the vnderstondynge. Make moch of her, and she shal promote the: for yf thou embracest her, she shal bringe the vnto honoure.

She shal make the a gracious heade, and garnish the with ỳ crowne of glory. Heare my sonne, and receaue my wordes, that the yeares of thy life maye be many. I wil shewe the ỳ waye of wyßdome, and lede the in the right pathes. So that yf thou goest therin, there shal no straytnesse hynder the: and when thou runnest, thou shalt not fall. Take fast holde of doctryne, let her not go: kepe her, for she is thy life.

Come not in the path of the vngodly, and walke not in the waye of the wicked.

Eschewe it, & go not therin: departe aside, & passe ouer by it. For they can not slepe except they haue first done some myschefe nether take they eny rest, excepte they have fyrst done some harme. For they eate the bred of wickednesse, and drinke the wyne of robbery. The path of the righteous shyneth as the light, and is euer brighter & brighter vnto the parfecte daye. But ye waye of the vngodly is as the darckenesse, wherin me fall, or they be awarre.

My sonne, marcke my wordes, and enclyne thine eare vnto my sayinges. Let them not departe from thine eyes, kepe them euen in the myddest of thine herte. For they are life vnto all those that finde the, and healthe vnto all their bodies. Kepe thine hert with all diligence, for there vpon hangeth life. Put awaye from the a froward mouth, and let the lippes of slaunder be farre from the. Let thine eyes beholde the thinge ye is right, & let thine eye lydde loke straight before the. Ponder the path of thy fete, so shal all ye waye es be sure. Turne not aside, nether to the right hande ner to the lefte, but withholde thy fote from euell.

The V. Chapter.

My sonne, geue hede vnto my wysdome, & bowe thine eare vnto my prudence: ye thou mayest regarde good counsell, and that thy lippes maye kepe nurtoure. For the lippes of an harlot are a droppinge hony combe, and hir throte is softer then oyle. But at ye last she is as bitter as wormwod, and as sharpe as a two edged swerde. Hir fete go downe vnto death, and hir steppes pearse thorow vnto hell. She regardeth not the path of life, so vnstedfast are hir waye es, that thou canst not knowe them. Heare me therfore (o my sonne) and departe not fro the wordes of my mouth. Kepe thy waye farre from her, and come not nye ye dores of hir house. That thou geue not thine honor vnto another, and thy yeares to the cruell. That other men be not fylled with thy goodes, & that thy labours come not in a straunge house. Yee that thou mourne not at the last (when thou hast spent thy body and goodes) and then saye: Alas, why hated I nurtoure: why dyd my hert despyse correccion: Wherfore was not I obedient vnto the voyce of my teachers, & herkened not vnto them that informed me: I am come almost in to all myssfortune, in the myddest of the multitude and congregacion. Drinke of the water of thine owne well, and of the ryuers that runne out of thine owne spriges. Let ye welles flowe out a brode, that there maye be ryuers of water in the stretes. But let them be only thine owne, & not straungers with the.

Let thy well be blessed, and be glad with the wife of thy youth. Louynge is the hynde, and frendly is the Roo: let her brestes alwaye satisfie the, and holde the euer content with hir loue. My sonne, why wilt thou haue pleasure in an harlot, and embrace the bosome of another woma: For euery mas wayes are open in the sight of the LORDE, and he ponndereth all their goinges. The wickednesses of the vngodly shal catch him self, and with the snares of his owne synnes shal he be trapped. Because he wolde not be reformed, he shal dye: and for his greate foolishnesse he shal be destroyed.

My sonne, yf thou be suertie for ye neighboure, thou hast fastened thine honde wt another ma: yee thou art bounde with thine owne wordes, and taken wt thine owne speach. Therfore (my sonne) do this, discharge thy self, for thou art come i to ye neighbours daunger. Go thy waye then soone, & intreate thy neighboure: let not thyne eyes slepe, ner thine eye lydde slomber. Saue thy self as a doo fro ye honde, & as a byrde fro the honde of the fouler. Go to the Emmet (thou slogarde) consydre hir wayes, & lerne to be wyse

She hath no gyde, no teacher, no leder: yet in the sommer she prouideth hir meate, & gathereth hir foode together i ye haruest. How longe wilt thou slepe, thou slogish ma: Wha wilt thou aryse out of thy slepe: Yee slepe on still a litle, slomber a litle, folde thine handes together yet a litle, that thou mayest slepe: so shal powerte come vnto the as one ye trauayleth by the waye, & necessite like a wapened man. A dissemblynge person, a wicked man goeth with a froward mouth: he wynck eth with his eyes, he token eth wt his fete, he poynteth wt his fyngers, he is euer ymageninge myschefe & frowardnesse in his hert, & causeth discorde. Therfore shal his destruccion come hastely vpo him, sodenly shal he be all tobroken, and not be healed.

There be sixe thinges, which the LORDE hateth, & the seuenth he vtterly abhoreth: A proude loke, a dyssemblynge tonge, hades that shed innocent bloude, an herte ye goeth aboute wt wicked ymaginacios, fete that be swift in rennynge to do myschefe, a false wytnesse ye bringeth vp lyes, & soch one as soweth discorde amonge brethren. My sonne, kepe thy fathers comaundemetes, & forsake not ye lawe of thy mother. Put the vp together in thine herte, and bynde the aboute thy necke. That they maye lede the where thou goest, preserue the when thou art a slepe, & ye when

And.7.a. euell woman, & from the flaterynge tonge of the harlott: ỹ thou lust not after her beuty in thine herte, & lest thou be take wᵗ hir fayre lokes. An harlot wil make a mā to begg his bred, but a maried woman wil hunt for ỹ precious life. Maye a man take fyre in his bosome, and his clothes not be brent? Or can one go vpon hote coales, and his fete not be hurte? Euen so, who so euer goeth in to his neghbours wife, and toucheth her, can not be vngiltie. The VII. Chapter.

A Ent.11.a. Nū.15.d. MY sonne, kepe my wordes, & laye vp my cōmaundemētes by the. Kepe my cōmaundemētes & my lawe, euē as the aple of thine eye, & thou shalt lyue. Bynde them vpon thy fyngers, & wryte thē in the table of thine hert. Saye vnto wysdome: thou art my sister, and call vnderstondinge thy kynswoman: that she maye kepe ỹ frō ỹ straūge womā, & frō ỹ harlot which geueth swete wordes. For out of the wyndowe of my house I loked thorow the trelies, & beholde the simple people: & amonge other yonge folkes I spyed one yonge foole goinge ouer the stretes, by the corner in the waye towarde the harlottes house in the twylight of of the euenynge, when it begāne now to be B night and darcke. And beholde, there mett him a womā in an harlottes apparell (a disceatfull, wātom & an vnstedfast womā: whose fete coude not abyde in ỹ house, now is she without, now i ỹ stretes, & lurketh ī euery corner) she caught ỹ yōge mā, kyssed him & was not ashamed, sayēge: I had a vowe to paye, & this daye I perfourme it. Therfore came I forth to mete the, that I might seke thy face, and so I haue founde the. I haue decked my bed with coueringes & clothes of Egipte. My bed haue I made to smell of Myrre, Aloes and Cynamom. Come, let vs lye together, & take oure pleasure till it be daye light. For the good man is not at home, he is gone farre of. He hath taken the bagg of mone ye with him, who can tell whē he cōmeth home? Thus with many swete wordes she ouercame him, and with hir flateringe lippes she wanne him.

Immediatly he foloweth her, as it were an oxe led to the slaughter (and like as it were to the stockes, where fooles are punyshed) so longe till she hath wounded his lyuer with hir darte: like as yf a birde haisted to the snare, not knowinge that the parell of his life lyeth there vpō. Heare me now therfore (o my sonne) and marcke the wordes of my mouth. Let not thine herte wandre in hir wayes, & be not thou disceaued in hir pathes. For many one hath she wounded and cast downe, yee many a stronge mā hath she slayne. Her house is the waye vnto hell, where men go downe to the chambers of death.

The VIII. Chapter.

DOth not wysdome crie? doth not vnderstondinge put forth hir voyce? Stondeth she not in the hye places in the stretes & wayes? doth she not crie before the whole cite, & in the gates where men go out & in? It is you, o ye men (sayeth she) whom I call. Vnto you (o ye childrē of mē) lift I vp my voyce. Take hede vnto knowledge o ye ignoraūt, be wyse in herte o ye fooles. Geue eare, for I wil speake of greate matters, & open my lippes to tell thinges that be right. For my throte shal be talkynge of ỹ trueth, & my lippes abhorre vngodlynesse. All the wordes of my mouth are righteous, there is no frowardnesse ner falsede therin. They are all playne to soch as wil vnderstonde, & right to thē that fynde knowlege. Receaue my doctryne therfore and not syluer, & knowlege more then fyne golde. For wysdome is more worth then precious stones, yee all the thinges that thou cāst desyre, are not to be compared vnto it.

I wysdome haue my dwellynge wᵗ knowlege, and prudent councell is myne owne. With me is the feare of the LORDE, and ỹ eschuynge of euell. As for pryde, disdayne, an euell waye, & a mouth that speaketh wicked thinges, I vtterly abhorre thē. I can giue councell, and be a gyde: I haue vnderstondinge, I haue strength.

Thorow me, kynges reigne: thorow me, princes make iust lawes. Thorow me, lordes beare rule, and all iudges of ỹ earth execute iudgmēt. I am louynge vnto those that loue me, and they that seke me early, shal fynde me.

Riches & honoure are wt me, yee excellent goodes & rightuousnes. My frute is better thē golde & precious stone, & myne encrease more worth then fyne syluer. I walke in ỹ waye of rightuousnes, & in the strete of iudgment. That I maye sende prosperite to those that loue me, & to encrease their treasure.

The LORDE himself had me in possessiō in the begynnynge of his wayes, or euer he begame his workes afore tyme. I haue benē ordened frō euerlastige, & frō ỹ beginnynge or euer the earth was made. When I was borne, there were nether depthes ner springes of water. Before the foundacions of ỹ mountaynes were layed, yee before all hilles was I borne. The earth and all that is vpon the earth was not yet made, no not the grounde it self. For when he made the heauens, I was present: whā he set the depthes in ordre: whan he hanged the cloudes aboue: whan he fastened the sprynges of the depe: Whan he shutt the see within certayne bowndes, that ỹ waters shulde not go ouer their marckes. When he layed the foundacions of the earth, I was with him, ordringe all thinges, delytinge daylie & reioysynge all waye before him. As for the roūde cōpase of his worlde, I make it ioyfull, for my delyte is to be amōge the children of men.

Therfore harken vnto me (o ye children) for blessed are they that kepe my wayes.

O geue eare vnto nurtoure, be wyse, and refuse it not. Blessed is ỹ man that heareth me, watchinge daylie at my gates, & geuynge attendaunce at the postes of my dores.

For who so fyndeth me, fyndeth life, and shal optayne fauoure of the LORDE. But who so offendeth agaynst me, hurteth his owne soule. All they that hate me, are the louers of death.

The IX. Chapter.

WYsdome hath buylded herself an house, and hewen out seuen pilers: she hath slaughted, poured out hir wyne, and prepared hir table. She hath sent forth hir maydens to crie vpō the hyest place of the cite: Who so is ignoraūt, let him come hither. And to the vnwise she sayde: O come on youre waye, eate my bred, and drynke my wyne, which I haue poured out for you. Forsake ignoraūce, and ye shall lyue: and se that ye go in the waye of vnderstondinge.

Who so reproueth a scornefull personne, getteth him self dishonoure: and he that rebuketh the vngodly, staynyeth himself.

Reproue not a scorner, lest he owe the euell wil: but rebuke a wyse man, and he wil loue the. Geue a discrete man but an occasion, & he wilbe the wyser: teach a rightuous man, and he wil increase. The feare of the LORDE is the begynnynge of wysdome, & the knowlege of holy thinges is vnderstondinge. For thorow me ỹ dayes shalbe prolonged, and the yeares of thy life shal be many. Yf thou be wyse, ỹ wysdome shal do ỹ self good: but yf thou thynkest scorne therof, it shalbe thine owne harme. A foolish restlesse woman, full of wordes, and sochone as hath no knowlege, sytteth in the dores of hir house vpō a stole aboue in the cite, to call soch as go by and walke straight in their wayes. Who so is ignoraunt (sayeth she) let him come hither, and to the vnwyse she sayeth: stollen waters are swete, & the bred that is preuely eaten, hath a good taist.

But they cōsider not that death is there, and that hir gestes go downe to hell.

The X. Chapter.

These are prouerbes of Salomon.

A WYse sonne maketh a glad father, but an vndiscrete sonne is the heuynesse of his mother. Treasures that are wickedly gotten, profit nothinge, but rightuousnesse delyuereth from death. The LORDE wil not let the soule of the rightuous suffre hōger, but he putteth ỹ vngodly frō his desyre. An ydle hande maketh poore, but a quycke laboringe hande maketh riche.

Who so gathereth in Sommer, is wyse: but he that is slogish in harueste, bringeth himself to confucion. Louynge and fauorable is the face of the rightuous, but ỹ forehead of the vngodly is past shame, and presumptuous. The memoriall of the iust shall haue a good reporte, but the name of the vngodly shal stynke. A wyse man wil receaue warnynge, but a foole wil sooner be smytten in the face. He that leadeth an innocent life, walketh surely: but who so goeth a wrōge waye, shalbe knowne. He ỹ wynketh with his eye, wil do some harme: but he that hath a foolish mouth, shalbe beaten. The mouth of a rightuous man is a well of life, but ỹ mouth of the vngodly is past shame, & presumptuous. Euell will stereth vp strife, but loue couereth ỹ multitude of synnes.

In ỹ lippes of him ỹ hath vnderstōdinge a mā shal fynde wysdome, but ỹ rodde belōgeth to ỹ backe of ỹ foolish. Wyse mē laye vp knowlege, but ỹ mouth of ỹ foolish is nye destrucciō. The rich mās goodes are his strō ge holde, but pouerte oppresseth the poore.

The righteous laboureth to do good, but the vngodly vseth his increase vnto synne.

E To take hede vnto ỹ chastenynge of nurture, is ỹ waye of life: but he that refuseth to be reformed, goeth wrōge. Dissemblynge lippes kepe hatred secretly, and he that speaketh eny slaunder, is a foole. Where moch bablinge is, there must nedes be offence: he that refrayneth his lippes, is wysest of all. An innocent tonge is a noble treasure, but the herte of the vngodly is nothinge worth. The lippes of the righteous fede a whole multitude, but fooles shal dye in their owne folý. The blessynge of the LORDE maketh rich mē, as for care full trauayle, it doth nothinge therto. A foole doth wickedly ỹ maketh but a sporte of it: neuertheles it is wysdome for a man to bewarre of soch.

The thinge that the vngodly are afrayed of, shal come vpon them, but the righteous shal haue their desyre. The vngodly is like a tempest that passeth ouer ỹ is nomore sene, but the righteous remayneth sure for euer. As vyneger is to the teth, and as smoke is vnto ỹ eyes, euē so is a slogish personne to them that sende him forth. The feare of ỹ LORDE maketh a lōge life, but ỹ yeares of ỹ vngodly shal be shortened. The pacient abydinge of the righteous shalbe turned to gladnesse, but the hope of the vngodly shal perish. The waye of the LORDE geueth a corage vnto ỹ godly, but it is a feare for wicked doers. The righteous shal neuer be ouerthrowne, but ỹ vngodly shal not remaynge in the londe. The mouth of the iust wilbe talkynge of wysdome, but the tonge of the frowarde shal perish. The lippes of the righteous are occupied in acceptable thinges, but the mouth of the vngodly taketh them to the worst.

The XI. Chapter.

A FAlse balaunce is an abhominacion vnto the LORDE, but a true weight pleaseth him. Where pryde is, there is shame also and confucion: but where as is lowlynes, there is wysdome. The innocent dealynge of the iust shal lede them, but the vnfaithfulnesse of the despysers shalbe their owne destruccion. Riches helpe not in the daye of vengeaunce, but righteousnesse delyvereth frō death. The righteousnes of ỹ innocent ordreth his waye, but the vngodly shal fall in his owne wickednesse. The righteousnesse of the iust shal delyuer them, but the despysers shalbe taken in their owne vngodlynesse. When an vngodly man dyeth, his hope is gone, the confydence of riches shal perish. The righteous shalbe delyuered out of trouble, ỹ the vngodly shal come in his steade. Thorow ỹ mouth of ỹ dyssembler is his neghboure destroyed, but thorow knowlege shal the iust be delyuered. When it goeth well with the righteous, the cite is mery: and when the vngodly perish, there is gladnesse. When the iust are in wealth, the cite prospereth: but whan the vngodly haue the rule, it decayeth. A foole bryngeth vp a slaunder of his neghboure, but a wyse man wil kepe it secrete. A dyssemblynge person wil discouer preuy thinges, but he that is of a faithfull hert, will kepe councel. Where no good councel is there the people decaye: but where as are many that can gene councell, there is wealth. He that is suerte for a straunger, hurteth himself: but he that medleth not with suerteshippe, is sure. A gracious womā manteyneth honestie, as for the mightie, they manteyne ryches. He ỹ hath a gentle liberall stomacke, is merciful: but who so hurteth his neghbo', is a tyraūt.

The laboure of the vngodly prospereth not, but he that soweth righteousnes, shal receaue a sure rewarde. Like as righteousnes bryngeth life, euē so to cleve vnto euell, bryngeth death. The LORDE abhorreth a sayned hert, but he hath pleasure in them that are vndefyled. Jt shal not helpe ỹ wicked, though they laye all their hondes togethe, but the sede of the righteous shalbe preserued. A fayre woman without discrete maners, is like a rynge of golde in a swynes snoute. The iust laboure for peace and tranquylite, but the vngodly for disquyetnesse.

Some man geueth out his goodes, and is the richer, but ỹ nygarde (hauynge ynough) wil departe from nothinge, and yet is euer in pouerte. He that is lyberall in genynge, shal haue plenty: and he that watereth, shal be watered also himself. Who so hoordeth vp his corne, shalbe cursed amonge the people: but blessynge shal light vpon his heade that selleth it. He that laboureth for honestý fyndeth his desyre: but who so seketh after myschefe, it shal happē vnto him. He that trusteth in his riches, shal haue a fall, but ỹ righteous shal florish as the grene leaf.

Who so maketh disquyetnesse in his owne house, he shal haue wynde for his heretage, and the foole shal be seruaunt to the wyse.

The frute of the righteous is as the tree of life, a wyse man also wynneth mens soules. Jf ỹ righteous be recōpēsed vpō earth, how moch more thē the vngodly ỹ synner?

The XII. Chapter.

Who so loueth wyßdome, wil be content to be refourmed: but he that hateth to be reproued, is a foole. A good man is acceptable vnto the LORDE, but ỳ wicked wyl he condempne. A man cā not endure in vngodlynesse, but ỳ rote of ỳ righteous shal not be moued. A stedfast woman is a crowne vnto hir hußbonde: but she that behaueth herself vnhonestly, is a corrupcion in his bones. The thoughtes of ỳ righteous are right, but the ymaginacion of the vngodly are disceatfull. The talkynge of the vngodly is, how they maye laye wayte for blonde, but the mouth of ỳ righteous wil delyuer them. Or euer thou canst turne the aboute, the vngodly shal be ouerthrowne, but the house of the righteous shal stōde. A man shalbe commended for his wyßdome, but a foole shal be despysed. A simple man which laboureth and worketh, is better thē one that is gorgious and wanteth bred. A righteous man regardeth the life of his catell, but the vngodly haue cruell hertes. He that tilleth his lōde, shal haue plenteousnesse of bred: but he ỳ foloweth ydylnes, is a very foole. The desyre of ỳ vngodly huntеth after myschefe, but the rote of the righteous bryngeth forth frute. The wicked falleth in to the snare thorow ỳ malyce of his owne mouth, but the iust shal escape out of parell. Euery man shal enioye good acordinge to the innocency of his mouth, and after the workes of his hādes shal he be rewarded. Loke what a foole taketh in honde, he thinketh it well done: but he that is wyse, wyl be cōceled. A foole vttereth his wrath in all the haist, but a discrete man forgeueth wronge. A iust man will tell the trueth, & shewe the thinge ỳ is right: but a false wytnesse disceaueth. A slaunderous personne pricketh like a swerde, but a wyse mans tonge is wholsome. A true mouth is euer constāt, but a dyssemblinge tōge is soone chaunged. They that ymagin euell in their mynde, wil disceaue: but the councelers of peace shal heaue ioye folowinge thē. There shal no myssfortune happen vnto the iust, but the vngodly shal be fylled with misery. The LORDE abhorreth disceatfull lippes, but they that laboure for treuth, please him. He that hath vnderstōdinge, can hyde his wyßdome: but an vndiscrete herte telleth out his foolishnesse. A diligēt hande shal beare rule, but the ydle shal be vnder tribute. Heuynesse discorageth ỳ herte of man, but a good worde maketh it glad agayne. The righteous is liberall vnto his neghboure, but the waye of the vngodly wil disceaue them selues. A disceatfull man shal synde no vantage, but he that is content & that he hath, is more worth thē golde. In the waye of righteousnesse there is life, as for eny other waye, it is the path vnto death.

The XIII. Chapter.

A Wyse sonne wyll receaue his fathers warnynge, but he ỳ is scornefull, wyll not heare when he is reproued. A good mā shal enioye the frute of his mouth, but he that hath a frowarde mynde, shalbe spoyled. He that kepeth his mouth, kepeth his life: but who so speaketh vnaduysed, fyndeth harme. The slogarde wolde fayne haue, and can not get his desyre: but the soule of the diligent shal haue plenty. A righteous man abhorreth lyes, but the vngodly shameth both other and himself. Righteousnesse kepeth the innocēt in the waye, but vngodlynesse ouerthrowe the symer. A

Some men are riche, though they haue nothinge: agayne, some mē are poore hauynge greate riches. With goodes euery man delyuereth his life, and the poore wyl not be reproued. The light of the righteous maketh ioyfull, but the candle of the vngodly shal be put out. Amonge the proude there is euer strife, but amonge those that do all thinges with aduysement, there is wyßdome. Haskely gottē goodes are soone spent, but they that be gathered together with the hande, shal increase. Longe tarienge for a thinge that is dysferred, greueth ỳ herte: but when the desyre commeth, it is a tre of life. Who so despyseth the worde, destroyeth himself: but he that feareth the cōmaundement, shal haue peace. The lawe is a wel of life vnto the wyse, that it maye kepe him from the snares of death. Good vnderstondinge geueth fauoure, but harde is the waye of the despysers. A wyse man doth all thinges with discrecion, but a foole wil declare his foly. An vngodly messāger bryngeth myschefe, but a faithfull embassitoure is wholsome. He that thinketh scorne to be refourmed, commeth to powerte and shame: but who so receaueth correccion, shal come to honoure. uyneſſe. An vnfaithfull personne shal be fylled with his owne wayes, but a good mã wyl bewarre of soch. An ignorant body beleueth all thinges, but who so hath vnder stondinge, loketh well to his goinges. A wyse man, feareth, and departeth from euell, but a foole goeth on presumptuously. An vnpacient man handeleth foolishly, but he
that is well aduysed, doth other wayes.
C The ignorant haue foolishnes in possessiõ,
but the wyse are crowned with knowlege.
The euell shal bowe them selues before ỹ
good, and the vngodly shal wayte at the do res of the rightuous. The poore is hate euen of his owne neyghbours, but the rich hath many frendes. Who so despyseth his neyghbo², doth amysse: but blessed is he that hath pyte of the poore. They that ymag gin wickednes, shalbe disapoynted: but they that muse vpõ good thinges, vnto soch shal happen mercy and faithfulnesse. Diligẽt labo² bryngeth riches, but where many wane wordes are, truly there is scarcenesse.

Riches are an ornament vnto the wyse,
but the ignorauncе of fooles is very foolish-nesse. A faithfull wytnesse delyuereth soles, but a lyar dysceaueth them. The feare of the LORDE is a stronge holde, for vnto his he wyl be a sure defence. The feare of the LORDE is a well of life, to auoyde the snare of death. The increase and prosperite of the comons is the kynges honoure, but the decaye of the people is the confusiõ of the prynce. Pacience is a token of wißdome, but wrath and haistie displeasure is a token of foolishnesse. A mery herte is the life of the body, but rancoure consumeth away
the bones. He that doth a poore man wro-ge, blasphemeth his maker: but who so hath pitie of the poore, doth honoure vnto God.
The vngodly is afrayed of euery parel,
but the rightuous hath a good hope euen in death. Wyßdome resteth in the herte of him that hath vnderstondinge, and he wyl teach them that are vnlerned. Rightuous nes setteth vp the people, but wyckednes bryngeth folke to destruccion. A discre seruaunt is a pleasure vnto ỹ kynge, but one ỹ is not honest, prouoketh him vnto wrath.

The xv. Chapter.

A Softe ãswere putteth downe displea sure, but frowarde wordes prouoke vnto anger. A wyse tonge commendeth knowlege, a foolish mouth blabbeth out nothinge but foolishnesse. The eyes of the LORDE loke in euery place, both vpon ỹ good and badd. A wholsome tonge is a tre of life, but he that abuseth it, hath a bro ken mynde. A foole despyseth his fathers correccion, but he ỹ taketh hede whan he is reproued, shal haue ỹ more vnderstõdinge.
In the house of the rightuous are grea
te riches, but in the increase of the vngodly
there is mysorder. A wyse mouth powreth out knowlege, but ỹ herte of the foolish doth not so. The LORDE abhorreth ỹ sacrifice of the vngodly, but the prayer of the rightuous is acceptable vnto him. The waye of the vngodly is an abhominaciõ vn-

ȳ LORDE, but who so foloweth righteous nes, him he loueth. He that forsaketh ȳ right strete, shalbe sore punyshed: & who so hateth correccion, falleth in to death. The hell & hir payne is knowne vnto the LORDE, how moch more then the hertes of men?

A scornefull body loueth not one ȳ rebuketh him, nether wil he come amonge ȳ wyse. A mery herte maketh a chearfull countenaunce, but an vnquyet mynde maketh it heuy. A wyse herte wil seke after knowlege, but ȳ mouth of fooles medleth with foolishnesse. All the dayes of the poore are miserable, but a quyete herte is as a cōtynuall feast. Better is a litle with the feare of the LORDE then greate treasure, for they are not without sorowe. Better is a meace of porage with loue, then a fat ore w̄ euell will.

A angrie man stereth vp strife, but he ȳ is pacient stilleth discorde. The waye of ȳ slouthfull is full of thornes, but ȳ strete of the righteous is well clensed. A wyse sonne maketh a glad father, but an vndiscrete body shameth his mother. A foole reioyseth in foolish thinges, but a wyse man loketh well to his owne goinges. Vnadvysed thoughtes shal come to naught, but where as are men ȳ can geue councell, there is stedfastnesse. O how ioyfull a thinge is it, a man to geue a conuenient answere? O how pleasaunt is a worde spoken in due season? The waye of life ledeth vnto heauē, ȳ a man shulde be warre of hell beneth.

The LORDE wyl breake downe ȳ house of ȳ proude, but he shal make fast ȳ borders of ȳ wyddowe. The LORDE abhoreth ȳ ymaginacions of ȳ wicked, but pure wordes are pleasaunt vnto him. The couetous man wretteth vp his owne house, but who so hateth rewardes, shal lyue. A righteous mā museth in his mynde how to do good, but ȳ mynde of the vngodly ymagineth, how he maye do harme. The LORDE is farre from the vngodly, but he heareth ȳ prayer of the righteous. Like as ȳ clearnesse of ȳ eyes reioyseth ȳ herte, so doth a good name fede ȳ bones. The eare ȳ harkeneth vnto wholsome warnynge, and enclyneth therto, shall dwell amonge ȳ wyse. He that refuseth to be reformed, despyseth his owne soule: but he that submytteth himself to correccion, is wyse.

The XVI. Chapter.

The feare of ȳ LORDE is ȳ right scyēce of wyßdome, and lowlynes goeth before honō. A man maye well purpose a thinge in his harte, but ȳ answere of ȳ tonge cōmeth of ȳ LORDE. A mā thinketh all his waies to be clene, but it is ȳ LORDE ȳ fashioneth ȳ myndes. Commytte thy workes vnto ȳ LORDE, and loke what thou deuyseſt, it shal prospere. The LORDE doth all thinges for his owne sake, yee & when he kepeth ȳ vngodly for ȳ daye of wrath. Pro. 21 a Psal. 32. b Psal. 36. a

The LORDE abhoreth all presumptuous & proude hertes, there maye nether strength ner power escape. With louynge mercy & faithfulnesse synnes be forgeuen, and who so feareth ȳ LORDE eschueth euell. When a mans wayes please ȳ LORDE, he maketh his very enemies to be his frendes. Better is it to haue a litle thinge w̄ righteousnes, thē greate rentes wrongeously gotten. A mā deuyseth a waye in his herte, but it is ȳ LORDE ȳ ordreth his goinges. When ȳ prophecy is in ȳ lippes of ȳ kynge, his mouth shal not go wrōge in iudgment. A true measure & a true balaūce are ȳ LORDES, he maketh all weightes. It is a greate abhominaciō when kynges are wycked, for a kynges seate shulde be holden vp w̄ righteousnesse. B Pro 19. c

Righteous lippes are pleasaūt vnto kynges, and they loue him ȳ speaketh ȳ trueth. The kynges displeasure is a messaunger of death, but a wyse man wyl pacifie him. The cherefull countenaūce of ȳ kynge is life, and his louynge fauō is as the euenynge dewe. To haue wyßdome in possession is better then golde, and to get vnderstondynges, is more worth then syluer. The path of ȳ righteous eschueth euell, & who so loketh well to his wayes, kepeth his owne soule. Pro. 11. a and 20. b Pro. 8. a C

Presumptuousnes goeth before destruccion, and after a proude stomake there foloweth a fall. Better it is to be of humble mynde w̄ the lowly, then to deuyde ȳ spoyles w̄ ȳ proude. He ȳ handleth a matter wysely, opteyneth good: & blessed is he, ȳ putteth his trust in ȳ LORDE. Who so hath a wyse vnderstondinge, is called to councell: but he ȳ can speake fayre, getteth more riches. Vnderstondinge is a well of life vnto him ȳ hath it, as for ȳ chastenynge of fooles, it is but foolishnesse. The herte of the wyse enformeth his mouth, and amendeth ȳ doctryne in his lyppes. Psal. 2. b

Fayre wordes are an hony combe, a refreshinge of ȳ mynde, & health of ȳ bones.

There is a waye ȳ men thinke to be right, but the ende therof leadeth vnto death. A troublous soule disquyeteth hir selfe, for hir owne mouth hath brought her therto. An vngodly personne stereth vp euell, and in his lippes he is as an whote burnynge fyre. Pro 14. b Deut. 12. a Esa. 55. b D

BEtter is the poore that lyueth godly, then the blasphemer that is but a foole. Where no discrecion is, there the soule is not well: and who so is swifte on fote, stombleth hastely. Foolishnesse maketh a man to go out of his waye, & then is his herte vnpacient agaynst the LORDE. Riches make many frendes, but the poore is forsake of his owne frendes. A false wytnesse shal not remayne vnpunyshed, and he that speaketh lyes shal not escape. The multitude hangeth vpō greate men, & euery man fauoureth hym that geueth rewardes. As for the poore, he is hated amonge all his brethren: yee his owne frendes forsake him, & he that geueth credēce vnto wordes, getteth nothinge. He that is wyse, loueth his owne soule: and who so hath vnderstondinge, shal prospere. A false wytnesse shal not remayne vnpunyshed, & he yᵗ speaketh lyes shal perishe. Delicate ease becōmeth not a foole, moch more vnsemely is it, a bonde man to haue yᵉ rule of prynces. A wyse man putteth of displeasure, & it is his honō to let some fautes passe.

The kynges displeasure is like yᵉ roaringe of a lyō, but his frēdshipe is like the dewe vpō yᵉ grasse. An vndiscrete sonne is yᵉ heuynes of his father, & a braulynge wife is like the topp of an house, where thorow it is euer droppynge. House & riches maye a mā haue by yᵉ heretage of his elders, but a discrete wo mā is the gifte of the LORDE. Slouthfulnes bryngeth slepe, & an ydell soule shal suffer hōger. Who so kepeth the cōmaundemēt, kepeth his owne soule: but he yᵉ regardeth not his waye, shal dye. He yᵉ hath pitie vpon the poore, lēdeth vnto yᵉ LORDE: & loke what he layeth out, it shalbe payed him agayne. Chastē yᵉ sonne whyle there is hope, but let not yᵉ soule be moued to slaye hī. For greate wrath bryngeth harme, therfore let him go, and so mayest thou teach him more nurtoure. O geue eare vnto good councell, & be content to be reformed, that thou mayest be wyse here after. There are many deuices in a mās herte, neuertheles the cōcell of yᵉ LORDE shal stōde. It is a mans worshipe to do good, & better it is to be a poore mā, then a dyssembler. The feare of the LORDE preserueth the life, yee it geueth plēteousnes, without the visitacīō of any plage. A slouthfull body shuteth his honde in to his bosome, so yᵗ he can not put it to his mouth. Yf thou smytest a scorneful persōne, the ignoraūt shal take better hede: & yf thou reproueste one yᵗ hath vnderstondinge, he wil be yᵉ wyser. He yᵉ hurteth his father or shuteth out his mother, is a shamefull & an vnworthy sonne. My sonne, heare nomore the doctrine yᵗ leadeth the awaye from the wordes of vnderstondinge.

A false wytnes laugheth iudgmēt to scorne, & the mouth of the vngodly eateth vp wickednes. Punyshmentes are ordened for the scornefull, and stripes for fooles backes.

The XX. Chapter.

WYne is a voluptuous thinge, & drōckennes causeth sedicion: who so delyteth therin, shal neuer be wyse. The kynge ought to be feared as the roaringe of a lyon, who so prouoketh him vnto anger, offendeth agaynst his owne soule. It is a mans honoure to kepe himself from strife, but they yᵗ haue pleasure in braulinge, are fooles euery one. A slouthfull body wyl not go to plowe for colde, therfore shal he go a begginge in Sommer, and haue nothinge. Wyse councell in the herte of man is like a water in the depe of the earth, but he that hath vnderstondinge, bryngeth it forth. Many there be that are called good doers, but where shal one fynde a true faithful mā? Who so ledeth a godly and an innocent life, happie shal his children be, whom he leaueth behynde him.

A kynge that sytteth in iudgment, and loketh well aboute him, dryueth awaye all euell. Who can saye: my hert is cleane, I am innocent from synne? To vse two maner of weightes, or two maner of measures, both these are abhominable vnto the LORDE.

A childe is knowne by his conuersacion, whether his workes be pure and right. As for the hearinge of the eare & the sight of yᵉ eye, yᵉ LORDE hath made thē both. Delyte not thou in slepe, lest thou come vnto powerte: but opē thine eyes, & thou shalt haue bred ynough. It is naught, It is naught (saye men) whan they haue it, but whan it is gone, they geue it a good worde.

A mouth of vnderstōdinge is more worth
then golde, many precious stones, and costly
o.6.a d 27. b Jewels. Take his garment that is suertie
C for a straunger, & take a pledge of him for ẏ vnknowne mans sake. Euery mā liketh the bred that is gotten with disceate, but at the last is mouth shalbe fylled with grauell.

Thorow councell the thinges that men deuyse go forwarde: & with discrecion ought warres to be taken in honde. Medle not with him that bewrayeth secretes, and is a slaunderer, and disceaueth with his lippes.
ro.20.b Who so curseth his father and mother, his goinges, for what is he, that vnderstondeth his owne wayes? It is a snare for a man Reg.15 to blaspheme that which is holy, & then to go aboute ẏ vowes. A wyse kynge destro-yeth ẏ vngodly, & bryngeth the whele ouer them. The lanterne of ẏ LORDE is ẏ breth of man, & goeth thorow all the inwarde par ro.29.b tes of the body. Mercy & faithfulnes preserue the kynge, & with louynge kyndnes his seate is holden vp. The strength of yonge men is their worshipe, & a gray heade, is an honō vnto ẏ aged. Wounde dryue awaye euell, and so do stripes the inwarde partes of the body. The XXI. Chapter.

A THe kynges hert is in the hande of the
.Reg.1.c LORDE, like as are the ryuers of water: he maye turne it whyther so euer
he wyll. Euery man thinketh his owne wa ye to be right, but the LORDE iudgeth ẏ herlich.6.b tes. To do righteousnesse and iudgmēt is more acceptable to the LORDE thē sacrifice.

A presumptuous loke, a proude stomacke, & the lanterne of the vngodly is synne. The deuyses of one that is diligent, bryngе plen-teousnes: but he ẏ is vnaduysed, commeth vn to powerte. Who so hoordeth vp riches ẏ ẏ disceatfulnes of his tonge, he is a foole, &
like vnto them that seke their owne death.
The robberies of the vngodly shalbe their owne destruccion, for they wolde not do the B thynge that was right. The wayes of the rit.1.c frowarde are straunge, but ẏ workes of him ro.25.d ẏ is cleane, are right. It is better to dwell in a comer vnder ẏ house toppe, then with a braulinge woman in a wyde house.

The soule of the vngodly wysheth euell,
and hath no pitie vpon his neghbeure.

When the scornefull is punyshed, the ignorannt take ẏ better hede: & when a wyse man is warned, he wil receaue the more vn-derstondinge. The righteous enformeth the house of the vngodly, but ẏ vngodly go on still after their owne wickednesse. Who so stoppeth his eare at the criēge of the poo re, he shal crie himself and not be herde. A preuy rewarde pacifieth displeasure, and a gifte in the bosome stilleth furiousnesse.

The iust delyteth in doynge the thynge
that is right, but the workers of wickednesse abhorre the same. The man that wandreth out of the waye of wysdome, shal remayne in the cōgregacion of ẏ deed. He ẏ hath pleasure in banckettes, shal be a poore man:
Who so delyteth in wyne and delicates, shal
not be riche. The vngodly shalbe geuen for the righteous, & the wicked for the iust.

It is better to dwell in a wylderneſſe, thē with a chydinge and an angrie woman. In a wyse mans house there is greate treasure and plenteousnesse, but a foolish body spendeth vp all. Who so foloweth righteous-nesse and mercy, fyndeth both life, righteous-nesse and honō. A wyse man wynneth the cite of the mightie, and as for the strength ẏ they trust in, he bryngeth it downe. Who so kepeth his mouth and his tonge, the same kepeth his soule from troubles. He ẏ is prowde & presumptuous, is called a scornefull mā,
which in wrath darre worke maliciously.

The voluptuousnesse of the slouthfull is his owne death, for his hādes wyll not labō.
He coueteth and desyreth all the daye longe, but the righteous is allwaye geuynge & kepeth nothinge backe. The sacrifice of the vngodly is abhominacion, for they offer the thinge ẏ is gotten ẏ wickednes. A false wytnesse shal perishe, but he ẏ wilbe content to heare, shal allwaye haue power to speake himself. An vngodly man goeth forth rashly, but the iust reformeth his owne waye.

There is no wysdome, there is no vnder-stondinge, there is no councell agaynst the LORDE. The horse is prepared agaynst ẏ daye of battayll, but the LORDE geueth
the victory.

The XXII. Chapter.

A Good name is more worth then greate riches, and louynge fauō is better then syluer and golde. Whether riches or powerte do mete vs, it commeth all of God. A wyse man seyth the plage and hy-deth himself, but the foolish go on still and are punyshed. The ende of lowlynes & the feare of God, is riches, honō, prosperite and healthe. Speares and snares are in ẏ waye of the frowarde, but he ẏ wil kepe his soule, let him fle frō soch. Yf thou teachest a childe in his youth what waye he shulde go, he shall not leaue it when he is olde. The rich ruleth

the poore, and ẏ borower is seruaunt to ẏ len der. He ẏ soweth wickednesse, shal reape so rowe, & the rodde of his plage shal destroye him. A louynge eye shalbe blessed, for he geueth of his bred vnto ẏ poore. Cast out ẏ scornefull man, and so shal strife go out wt him, yee variaunce and slaunder shal cease.
Who so delyteth to be of a clene herte and of gracious lyppes, ẏ kynge shal be his frende.
The eyes of ẏ LORDE preserue knowlege,
but as for ẏ wordes of ẏ despyteful, he bryn geth them to naught. The slouthfull body sayeth: there is a lyō wt out, I might be slay ne in ẏ strete. The mouth of an harlot is a depe pytt, wherin he falleth that ẏ LORDE is angrie withall. Foolishnes sticketh in the herte of ẏ lad, but ẏ rod of correccion driueth
it awaye. Who so doth a poore man wronge to increase his owne riches, geueth (cōmōly) vnto the rich, and at the last commeth to po uerte himself. My sonne, bowe downe thine eare, and herken vnto the wordes of wyßdo me, applye ẏ mynde vnto my doctryne: for it is a pleasaunt thinge yf thou kepe it in thine herte, and practise it in thy mouth: that thou mayest allwaye put ẏ trust in the LORDE.
Haue not I warned ẏ very oft with councell and lerninge: ẏ I might shewe ẏ the treuth
and that thou wt the verite mightest answerethem ẏ laye eny thinge against ẏ? Se ẏ thou robbe not ẏ poore because he is weake,
and oppresse not ẏ simple in iudgment: for ẏ LORDE himself wyl defende their cause, and do violence vnto them ẏ haue vsed violence.
Make no frēdshipe with an angrie wylfull man, and kepe no company wt ẏ furious: lest thou lerne his wayes, and receaue hurte vnto thy soule. Be not thou one of them ẏ bynde their hande vpō promyse, and are suertie for dett: for yf thou hast nothinge to paye, they shal take awaye thy bed from vnder the.
Thou shalt not remeue the lande marcke, which thy fore elders haue sett. Seist thou not, ẏ they which be diligent in their busines stonde before kynges, and not amonge the symple people?

The XXIIII Chapter

When thou sytest at the table to ea-te wt a lorde, ordre thy silf maner
lywt ẏ thinges that are set before ẏ Measure thine appetite: and yf thou wilt rule thine owne self, be not ouer gredy of his meate, for meate begyleth and disceaueth.
Take not ouer greate trauayle and labō to be riche, bewarte of soch a purpose. Why wilt thou set thine eye vpon ẏ thinge, which sodenly vanisheth awaye? For riches make them selues wynges, and take their flight li ke an Aegle into ẏ ayre. Eate not thou wt ẏ envyous, and desyre no his meate, for he hath a marvelous herte. He sayeth vnto ẏ:
eate and drynke, where as his herte is not wt
ẏ. Yee ẏ morsels that thou hast eaten shalt thou perbreake, and lese those swete wor-des. Tel not thinge into ẏ eares of a foole, for he wyl despyse the wyßdome of thy wor-
des. Remoue not ẏ olde lande marke, and co me not within ẏ felde of the fatherlesse: For he ẏ deliuereth them is mightie, euen he shal defende their cause agaynst the. Applie thi ne herte vnto lernynge, and thine eare to the wordes of knowlege. Withholde not correccion from ẏ childe, for yf thou beatest him wt
the rodde, he shal not dye therof. Thou smy test him wt the rodde, but thou delyuerest his soule from hell. My sonne, yf ẏ herte recea-ue wyßdome, my herte also shal reioyce: yee myreynes shal be very glad, yf ẏ lyppes spea ke the thinge ẏ is right. Let not thine herte be gelous to folowe symers, but kepe ẏ still in the feare of the LORDE all the daye lōge:
for the ende is not yet come, and thy pacient abydinge shal not be in vayne. My sonne, ne eare & be wyse, so shal thine hert prospere
in the waye. Kepe no company wt wyne beb bers and ryotous eaters of flesh: for soch as be dronckardes and ryotous, shal come to po uerte, & he that is geuen to moch slepe, shal go wt a ragged cote. Gene eare vnto thy father that begat the, and despyse not thy mother whan she is olde. Labō for to get ẏ treuth: sell not awaye wyßdome, nourtō & vn derstōdinge (for a righteous father is marue lous glad of a wyse sonne, & delyteth in hī) so shal thy father be glad, and thy mother that bare the, shal reioyse. My sonne, geue me thyne herte, and let thine eyes haue pleasure in my wayes. For an whore is a depe graue, and an harlot is a narow pytt. She lur-keth like a these, and those that be not awar-re she bugeth vnto her. Where is wo? whe re is sorow? where is strife? where is braulynge? where are woundes without cause? where be reed eyes? Euen amonge those that be euer at the wyne, and seke out where the best is. Loke not thou vpon the wyne, how reed
it is, and what a colō it geueth in the glasse.
Ie goeth downe so fitly, but at the last it by

teth like a serpēt, and styngeth as an Adder.
So shal thine eyes loke vnto straunge women, & thine herte shal muse vpon frowarde thinges. Yee thou shalt be as though thou slepte, in ẏ myddest of ẏ see, or vpō ẏ toppe of the mast. They wounded me (shalt thou saie) but it hath not hurte me, they smote me, but I felt it not. Whē I am wel wakened, I wil go to ẏ drynke agayne.

The XXIIII. Chapter.

A BE not thou gelous ouer wicked mē, & Pro.23.b 24.c desyre not thou to be amonge them.
For their herte ymagineth to do hurte, & their lippes talke of myschefe. Thorow wyßdome an house shalbe buylded, & wt̄ vnderstondinge it shalbe set vp. Thorow discrecion shal ẏ chābers be fylled wt̄ all costly & pleasaunt riches. A wyse mā is strōge, yee a mā of vnderstōdinge is better, thē he ẏ is mightie of strēgth. For with discrecion must warres be takē in honde, and where as are many ẏ can geue councell, there is ẏ victory. Wyßdome is an hie thinge, yee euē to ẏ foole, for he darre not opē his mouth in ẏ gate. He ẏ ymagineth myschefe, maye wel be called an vngracious personne. The thoughte of ẏ foolish is synne, & ẏ scornefull is an abhominacion vnto mē.
B Yf thou be ouerseue & necligēt in tyme of nede, thē is thy strēgth but small. Delyuer thē ẏ go vnto death, & are led awaie to be slaine, & be not necligēt therin. Yf thou wilt saye: I knewe not of it. Thynkest thou ẏ he which made ẏ hertes, doth not cōsidre it? & ẏ he which regardeth ẏ soule, seith it not? Shal not he recōpence euery man acordinge to his workes? My sonne, thou eatest hony & ẏ swete hony cōbe, because it is good & swete in thy mouth. Euen so shall ẏ knowlege of wysdome be vnto ẏ soule, as soone as thou hast gottē it. And there is good hope, yee ẏ hope shal not be in vayne.
C Laye no preuy wayte wickedly vpon ẏ house of ẏ rightuous, Psal.33.c 36 d & disquiete not his restinge place. For a iust mā falleth seuen tymes, & ryseth vp agayne, but ẏ vngodly fall in to wickednes. Reioyce not thou at ẏ fall of thine enemie, and let Pro.17.a not thine herte be glad whan he stombleth. Lest ẏ LORDE (when he seyth it) be angrie, Pro.23.b 24.a & turne his wrath from him vnto the. Let not ẏ wrath & gelousy moue ẏ, to foolew ẏ wicked and vngodly. And why? ẏ wicked Iob 21.b Pro 13.a hath nothinge to hope for, & ẏ cādle of the Pro.20.a vngodly shall be put out. My sonne, feare thou ẏ LRODE & ẏ kinge, & kepe no cōpany wt̄ ẏ slaunderous: for their destruccion shal come sodenly, & who knoweth ẏ fall of thē both?

These are also ẏ saiēges of ẏ wyse.

It is not good, to haue respecte of any personne in iudgmēt. He ẏ saieth to ẏ vngodly: thou art rightuous, him shall the people curse, yee ẏ comōtie shal abhorre him. But they ẏ rebuke ẏ vngodly shalbe cōmended, & a riche blessinge shal come vpō thē. He maketh him self to be well loued, that geueth a good answere. First make vp ẏ worke ẏ is wt̄ out, & loke well vnto ẏ which thou hast in ẏ felde, & thē buylde thine house. Bere no false wytnesse agaynst ẏ neghbō, & hurte him not wt̄ ẏ lyppes. Saye not: I wil hādle him, euē as he hath dealte wt̄ me, & wil rewarde euery mā acordinge to his dedes. I went by ẏ felde of ẏ slouthfull, & by ẏ vynyarde of the foolish mā. And lo, it was all couered wt̄ nettels, & stode full of thistles, & ẏ stone wall was brokē downe. This I sawe, & cōsidered it wel: I loked vpō it, & toke it for a warnynge. Yee slepe on still a litle, slōber a litle, folde thine hōdes together yet a litle: so shall pouerte come vnto the as one ẏ trauayleth by ẏ waye, & necessite like a wapened man.

The XXV. Chapter.

THese also are Salomons prouerbes, which the men of Ezechias kinge of Juda gathered together. It is the honō of God to kepe a thinge secrete, but ẏ kinges honō is to search out a thinge. The heauen is hie, ẏ earth is depe, and ẏ kinges hert is vnsearcheable. Take ẏ dresse from ẏ syluer, & there shalbe a cleane vessell therof. Take awaye vngodlinesse frō ẏ kynge, & his seate shal be stablished wt̄ rightuousnes.
Put not forth ẏ self in ẏ presence of ẏ kynge, & prease not in to ẏ place of greate men. Better it is ẏ it be sayde vnto ẏ: come vp hither, then thou to be set downe in ẏ presence of ẏ prynce, whom thou seyst with thine eyes. Be not haistie to go to the lawe, lest happlie thou ordre ẏ self so at ẏ last, ẏ thy neghbō put ẏ to shame. Handle thy matter wt̄ ẏ neghbō himself, & discouer not another mans secrete: lest whan men heare therof, it turne to ẏ dishonō, & lest thine euell name do not ceasse. A worde spoken in due season, is like apples of golde in a syluer dysshe.
The correccion of the wyse is to an obedient eare, a golden cheyne and a Jewel of golde. Like as the wynter coole in the harueste, so is a faithfull messaunger to him that sent him, & refreßsheth his masters mynde.
Who so maketh greate boastes & geueth nothinge, is like cloudes & wynde without rayne. With pacience maye a prynce be pacified, & wt̄ a soft tonge maye rigorousnes be brokē. Yf thou findest hony, eate so moch as is sufficiēt for ẏ: lest thou be ouer full, & perbreake it out againe. Withdrawe ẏ foote frō thy neghbours house, lest he be weery of the, and so abhorre the. Who so beareth false wytnesse agaynst his neghboure, he is a very speare, a swearde & a sharpe arowe. The hope of the vngodly in tyme of nede, is like a rotten toth and a slippery foote. Who so syngeth alsonge to a wicked herte, clotheth hī with ragges in the colde, and poureth vyneger vpon chalke. Yf thine enemie honger, fede him: yf he thyrst, geue him drynke: for so shalt thou heape coales of fyre vpō his heade, and the LORDE shal rewarde the. The north wynde dryueth awaye the rayne, euen so doth an earnest sober countenaūce a backbyters tonge. It is better to syt in a corner vnder the rofe, then wt a braulynge woman in a wyde house. A good reporte out of a farre countre, is like colde water to a thyrstie soule. A righteous man fallynge downe before the vngodly, is like a troubled well and a sprynge yt is destroyed. Like as it is not good to eate to moch hony, euen so he that wyll search out hye thynges, it shal be to heuy for him. He that can not rule him self, is like a cite, which is broken downe, and hath no walles.

The XXVI. Chapter.

LIke as snowe is not mete in sommer, ner rayne in harueste: euen so is worshipe vnsemely for a foole. Like as yt hyrde and the swalowe take their flight and flee here and there, so the curse that is geuen in vayne, shal not light vpon a man. Vnto the horse belongeth a whyppe, to the Asse a brydle, and a rodde to the fooles backe. Gene not the foole an answere after his foolishnesse, lest thou become like vnto him: but make yt foole an answere to his foolishnesse, lest he be wyse in his owne cōceate. He is lame of his fete, yee droncken is he in vanite, that cōmitteth eny thinge to a foole. Like as it is an vnsemely thīge to haue legges & yet to halte, euē so is a parable in yt fooles mouth. He yt setteth a foole in hye dignite, yt is euē as yf a man dyd cast a precious stone vpō yt galous. A parable in a fooles mouth, is like a thorne yt pricketh a droncken man in yt hande. A man of experience discerneth all thinges well, but who so hyreth a foole, hyreth soch one as wyl take no hede. Like as the dogg turneth agayne to his vomite, euen so a foole begynneth his foolishnesse agayne a fresh. Yf thou seyest a man yt is wyse in his owne conceate, there is more hope in a foole then in hī. The slouthfull sayeth: there is a leoparde in yt waye, and a lyon in yt myddest of the stretes. Like as the dore turneth aboute vpon the tresholde, euen so doth the slouthfull welter himself in his bedd. The slouthfull body thrusteth his hōde in to his bosome, and it greueth him to put it agayne to his mouth. The slogarde thinketh him self wyser, then vij. men that sytt and teach. Pro. 19. d

Who so goeth by and medleth with other mens strife, he is like one yt taketh a dogg by yt eares. Like as one shuteth deadly arowes and dartes out of a preuy place, euen so doth a dyssembler with his neghboure, And then sayeth he: I dyd it but in sporte. Where no wodd is, there the fyre goeth out: and where the backbyter is taken awaye, there the strife ceaseth. Coles kyndle heate, and wodd yt fyre: euen so doth a braulinge felowe stere vp variaunce. A slaunderers wordes are like flatery, but they pearse yt inwarde partes of yt body. Venymous lippes & a wicked herte, are like a potsherde couered wt syluer drosse. An enemie dyssembleth with his lippes, and in the meane season he ymagineth mysche se: but whā he speaketh fayre, beleue him not, for there are seuen abhominaciōs in his herte. Who so kepeth euell will secretly to do hurte, his malyce shal be shewed before the whole congregacion. Who so dyggeth vp a pytt, shal fal therin: and he yt weltreth a stone, shal stomble vpon it hymselfe. C Psal. 10. a Eccli. 28. Eccls. 10. Eccli. 27.

A dyssemblynge tonge hateth one that rebuketh him, and a flaterīge mouth worketh mysche fe.

The XXVII. Chapter.

MAke not thy booste of tomorow, for thou knowest not what maye happen todaye. Let another mā prayse the, & not thine owne mouth: yee other folkes lippes, and not thyne. The stone is heuy, and the sonde weightie: but a fooles wrath is heuyer then they both. Wrath is a cruell thīge, and furiousnesse is a very tempest: yee who is able to abyde envye? An open rebuke is better, then a secrete loue. Faithfull are the woundes of a louer, but yt kysses of an enemie are disceatfull. He that is full, abhorreth an hony combe: but vnto him that is hōgrie, euery sower thinge is swete. He that ofte tymes flytteth, is like a byrde yt forsaketh hir nest. The herte is glad of a swete oyntment and sauoure, but a stomacke that cā geue good councell, reioyseth a mans neghboure. Thyne owne frende and thy fathers frende se thou forsake not, but go not in to thy brothers house in tyme of thy trouble. A Eze. 28. a Luc. 12. b Iaco. 4. Eccli. 22. Pro. 140. Luc. 22. B

A
Eccl.35.c The vngodly flyeth no man chasynge him, but the righteous stondeth stiff as a lyon. Because of synne y londe doth oft chaunge hir prynce: but thorow men of vnderstondinge & wysdome a realme endureth longe. One poore man oppressinge another by violence, is like a contynuall rayne that destroyeth y frute. They that forsake the lawe, prayse y vngodly: but soch as kepe the lawe, abhorre them. Wicked Cor.2.b men discerne not the thinge y is right, but Pro.19.a they that seke after the LORDE, discusse all thinges. A poore man ledynge a godly life, is better then the riche that goeth in frowarde wayes. Who so kepeth the lawe, is
B a childe of vnderstondinge: but he y fedeth ryotous men, shameth his father. Who so increaseth his riches by vsũtage & wynnynge, let him gather them to helpe the poore withall. He that turneth awaye his eare from hearinge y lawe, his prayer shalbe abhorred. Who so ledeth y righteous man an euell waye, shal fall in to his owne pyt, but y iust shal haue the good in possession.
The rich man thynketh him self to be wyse, but the poore that hath vnderstondinge, cã perceaue him wel ynough. When righteous men are in prosperite, thẽ doth honoure flourish: but when the vngodly come vp, y state of men chaungeth. He that hydeth his synnes, shall not prospere: but who so knowlegeth them and forsaketh them, shall haue mercy. Well is him that stõdeth all waye in awe: as for him that hardeneth his herte, he shal fall in to mischefe. Like as a roaringe lyon and an hongrie beer, euen so is an vngodly prynce ouer the poore people.
Where the prynce is without vnderstondinge, there is greate oppression & wronge: but yf he be soch one as hateth couetousnesse, he shal longe raigne. He that by violẽce sheddeth eny mans bloude, shal be a renagate vnto his graue, and no man shalbe able to succor him. Who so leadeth a godly and an innocẽt life, shalbe safe: but he that goeth frowarde wayes, shall once haue a fall. He y tylleth his londe, shal haue plenteousnesse of bred: but he that foloweth vanitie, shal haue powerte ynough. A faithfull man is greatly to be commẽded, but he that maketh to moch haist for to be riche, shal not be vngiltie. To haue respecte of Pro.24.c persõnes in iudgment is not good: And why? he will do wronge, yee euen for a peece of bred. He that will be rich all to soone, hath an euell eye, and considereth not, that powerte shall come vpon him. He that rebuketh a man, shall fynde more fauoure at y last, thẽ he that flatreth him. Who so robbeth his father and mother, and sayeth it is no synne: the same is like vnto a murtherer.
He that is of a proude stomacke, stereth vp strife: but he that putteth his trust in y LORDE, shalbe well fedd. He that trusteth in his owne hert, is a foole: but he that dealeth wisely, shalbe safe. He that geueth vnto the poore, shal not wante: but he that turneth awaye his eyes from soch as be in necessite, shall suffre greate powerte himself.
Whan the vngodly are come vp, men are fayne to hyde them selues: but whẽ they perish, the righteous increase.

The XXIX. Chapter.

He that is stiffnecked & wyll not be reformed, shal sodenly be destroyed without eny helpe. Where ỳ righteous haue the ouer hande, ỳ people are in prospe rite: but where the vngodly beareth rule, there ỳ people mourne. Who so loueth wyßdome, maketh his father a glad man: but he ỳ kepeth harlottes, spēdeth awaye ỳ he hath. With true iudgment ỳ kynge setteth vp the londe, but yf he be a man ỳ taketh giftes, he turneth it vpsyde downe. Who so flatreth his neghbō, layeth a nette for his fete. The synne of ỳ wicked is his owne snare, but ỳ righteous shal be glad and reioyse. The righteous considreth the cause of the poore, but the vngodly regardeth no vnderstondynge. Wicked people bringe a cite in decaye, but wyse men set it vp agayne. Yf a wyse man go to lawe with a foole (whether he deale with him frendly or roughly) he getteth no rest. The bloudethyrstie hate the righteous, but the iust seke his soule. A foole poureth out his spirite altogether, but a wyse man kepeth it in till afterwarde.

Yf a prynce delyte in lyes, all his seruauntes are vngodly. The poore and the lender mete together, the LORDE lightneth both their eyes. The seate of the kinge ỳ faithfully iudgeth the poore, shal continue sure for euermore. The rodde and correccion mynistre wyßdome, but yf a childe be not loked vnto, he bryngeth his mother to shame. When the vngodly come vp, wickednesse increaseth: but the righteous shall se their fall. Nurtoure thy sonne with correccion, and he shal comforte the, yee he shal do the good at thine hert. Where no prophet is, there the people perisshe: but well is him that kepeth the lawe. A seruaūt wil not be the better for wordes, for though he vnderstonde, yet wil he not regarde them.

Yf thou seyst a man that is haistie to speake vnaduysed, thou mayest trust a foole more then him. He that delicately bryngeth vp his seruaunt from a childe, shal make him his master at length. An angrie man stereth vp strife, and he that beareth euell wyll in his mynde, doth moch euell. After pryde commeth a fall, but a lowly spirite bryngeth greate worshipe. Who so kepeth company with a theffe, hateth his owne soule: he heareth blasphemies, & telleth it not forth.

He that feareth men, shal haue a fall: but who so putteth his trust in the LORDE, shal come to honō. Many there be that seke ỳ princes fauoure, but euery mans iudgment commeth from the LORDE.

The righteous abhorre the vngodly: but as for those that be in ỳ right waye, ỳ wicked hate them.

The XXX. Chapter.

The wordes of Agur the sonne of Jake.

The prophecie of a true faithfull man, who God hath holpen, whom God hath cōforted & norished. For though I am ỳ leest of all, & haue no mās vnderstōdinge (for I neuer lerned wißdome) yet haue I vnderstōdinge & am wel enfourmed in godly thinges. Who hath clymmed vp into heauen? Who hath come downe from thence? Who hath holden ỳ wynde fast in his hāde? Who hath cōprehended ỳ waters in a garment? Who hath set all the endes of ỳ worlde? What is his name, or his sonnes name? Canst thou tell? All the wordes of God are pure & cleane, for he is a shylde vnto all them, that put their trust in him. Put thou nothinge therfore vnto his wordes, lest he reproue the, and thou be founde as a lyar.

Two thinges I requyre of the, that thou wilt not denye me before I dye. Remoue fro me vanite and lyes: geue me nether pouerte ner riches, only graunte me a necessary lyuynge. Lest yf I be to full, I denye ỳ, & saye: what felowe is ỳ LORDE? And lest I beinge constrayned thorow pouerte, fall vnto stealinge, and forsweare the name of my God.

Accuse not a seruaunt vnto his master, lest he speake euell of the also, and thou be hurte.

He that bryngeth vp an euell report vpō the generacion of his father and mother, is not worthy to be commended.

The generacion that thynke them selues cleane, shal not be clensed from their fylthynesse. There are people ỳ haue a proude loke, and cast vp their eye lyddes. This peoples tethe are swerdes, and with their chaft bones they consume and deuoure the symple of the earth, and the poore from amonge mē.

This generacion (which is like an horsleche) hath two doughters: ỳ one is called, fetch hither: the other, bringe hither.

There be thre thinges that are neuer satisfied, and the fourth saieth neuer hoo. The hell, a womans wombe, and the earth hath neuer water ynough. As for fyre, it saieth neuer: hoo. Who so laugheth his father to scorne, and setteth his mothers commaūdement at naught: the rauens pycke out his eyes in the valley, and deuoured be he of the yongle Aegles.

There be thre thinges to hye for me, and as for the fourth, it passeth my knowlege.

The waye of an Aegle in ỹ ayre, ỹ waye of a serpent ouer ỹ stone, ỹ waye of a shippe in ỹ see, & ỹ waye of a mā wt a yonge womā. Soch is the waye also of a wyse ỹ breaketh wedlocke, which wypeth hir mouth like as whā she hath eatē, & sayeth: As for me, I haue done no harme. Thorow thre thinges the earth is disquieted, & the fourth maye it not beare: Thorow a seruaūt ỹ beareth rule, thorow a foole ỹ hath greate riches, thorow an ydle housewife, & thorow an handmayden ỹ is heyre to hir mastres. There be foure thinges in the earth, the which are very litle: but in wyßdome they exceade the wyse. The Emmettes are but a weake people, yet gather they their meate together in ỹ harueſt. Pro. 6. a

The conyes are but a feble folke, yet make they their couches amonge the rockes. The greshoppers haue not a gyde, yet go they forth together by heapes. The spyder laboureth wt hir hādes, & ỹ in ỹ kynges palace.

There be thre thinges ỹ go stiffly, but the goinge of the fourth is the goodlieſt of all. A Lyon which is kynge of beastes, & geueth place to no man: A cock ready to fight: A rāme: And a kynge ỹ goeth forth wt his people.

Yf thou be sō foolish to magnifie ỹ self, or medlest wt eny soch thinge, thē laye thine hāde vpon ỹ mouth. Who so chyrneth mylck, maketh butter: he that rubbeth his nose, maketh it blede, and he that causeth wrath, bryngeth forth strife.

The XXXI. Chapter.

THese are the wordes of Kynge Lamuel, & ỹ lesson ỹ his mother taught him. My sonne, thou sonne of my body: O my deare beloued sonne, geue not ouer thy substaunce & mynde vnto women, which are the destrucciō euē of kynges. O Lamuel, geue kinges no wyne, geue kynges & princes no stronge drynke: lest they beinge dronken forget the lawe, & regarde not ỹ cause of the poore, & of all soch as be in aduersite. Geue stronge drynke vnto soch as are condempned to death, & wyne vnto those ỹ mourne: that they maye drynke it, & forget their misery & aduersite. Be thou an aduocate & stonde in iudgment thyself, to speake for all soch as be dōme & succourles. Wyth ỹ mouth defende ỹ thinge ỹ is laufull and right, and ỹ cause of ỹ poore and helpleſſe.

Who so fyndeth an honest faithful womā, she is moch more worth thē perles. The herte of hir husbande maye safely trust in her, so that he shal haue no nede of spoyles. She wil do him good & not euel all ỹ dayes of hir life. She occupieth woll & flax, & laboureth gladly wt hir handes. She is likē a marchauntes shippe, that bryngeth his vytayles from farre. She is vp in ỹ nyghe season, to prouyde meate for hir household, & foode for hir maydens. She considreth lōde, & byeth it, and wt the frute of hir handes she planteth a vynyarde. She gyrdeth hir loynes with strength, and courageth hir armes. And yf she perceaue that hir housewifrie doth good, hir candle goeth not out by nyght. She layeth hir fyngers to the spyndle, & hir hande taketh holde of ỹ rocke. She openeth hir hande to ỹ poore, yee she stretcheth forth hir hādes to soch as haue nede. She feareth not ỹ the colde of wynter shal hurte hir house, for all hir housholde folkes are duble clothed. She maketh hir self fayre ornamētes, hir clothinge is whyte sylke & purple. Hir huſbāde is moch set by in ỹ gates, whē he sytteth amonge ỹ rulers of ỹ londe. She maketh cloth of sylke & selleth it, and delyuereth a gyrdle vnto ỹ marchaūt. Strēgth and honoure is hir clothinge, & in the latter daye she shal reioyse. She openeth hir mouth with wyßdome, & in hir tōge is the lawe of grace. She loketh wel to the wayes of hir housholde, & eateth not hir bred with ydilnes. Hir children arise & call hir blessed, & hir huſbande maketh moch of her. Many daughters there be ỹ gather riches together, but thou goest aboue thē all.

As for fauō, it is disceatfull, and beutie is a vayne thinge: but a woman that feareth the LORDE, she is worthy to be prayſed. Geue her of the frute of hir handes, and let hir owne workes prayse her in the gates.

Chap. X. XI In these two chapters are many wyse and profitable sentences, wel worthy to be considered of euery man.

Chap. XII. In this chapter the preacher sheweth his whole meanynge, as though he wolde saye: As for all the thinges that be vnder the Sonne (wher of I haue spoken) I haue cōsidered them, and proued them metely wel by experience. And this is the conclucion, that there is nothynge stedfast and durable but God himself, whō men ought to feare, and to haue his cōmaundementes before their eyes euen from their youth vp

The first. Chap. Fo. xlvij.

The first Chapter.

These are the wordes of the preacher, the sonne of David, kynge of Jerusalem.

A Ll is but vanite (saieth ỳ preacher) all is but playne vanite. For what els hath a mā, of all the labō ỳ he taketh vnder the Sonne? One generacio passeth awaye, another commeth, but the earth abydeth still. The Sōne aryseth, the Sonne goeth downe, & returneth to his place, ỳ he maye there ryse vp agayne. The wynde goeth toward ỳ South, & setcheth his cōpase aboute vnto the North, & so turneth in to himself agayne. All floudes runne in to the see, & yet the see is not fylled: for loke vnto what place the waters runne, thence they come agayne. All thinges are so harde, ỳ no mā can expresse them. The eye is not satisfied wt sight, the eare is not fylled wt hearinge. The thinge ỳ hath bene, cōmeth to passe agayne: & ỳ thinge ỳ hath bene done, is done agayne, there is no new thinge vnder the Sonne. Is there eny thinge, wherof it maye be sayde: lo, this is new? For it was lōge ageo in the tymes ỳ haue bene before vs. The thinge ỳ is past, is out of remēbraunce: Euē so the thīges that are for to come, shal no more be thought vpō amōge thē that come after. I myself ỳ preacher, beynge kynge of Israel & Jerusalē, applyed my mynde to seke out & search for the knowlege of all thīges ỳ are done vnder heauē. Soch trauayle & labō hath God geuē vnto ỳ childrē of mē, to exercyse thē selues therī.

lob 14.b

Pro.27.c Eccli.14. Eccls.3.

B

Thus I haue considered all the thinges that come to passe vnder the Sōne, & lo, they are all but vanite & veracion of mynde. The croked can not be mayde straight, & the fautes cā not be nōbred. I cōmoned wt myne owne herte, saiyēge: lo, I am come to a greate estate, and haue gottē more wysdome, thē all they ỳ haue bene before me in Jerusalem. Yee myn hert had greate experiēce of wysdome & knowlege, for there vnto I applyed my mynde: ỳ I might knowe what were wysdome & vnderstōdinge, what were errō & foolishnes. And I perceaued ỳ this also was but a veracion of mynde: for where moch wysdome is, there is also greate trauayle & disquietnes: & ỳ more knowlege a man hath, the more is his care.

1.Pet.1. and 4.c

The II. Chapter.

A The sayde I thus in my hert: Now go to, I wil take myne ease & haue good dayes. But lo, that was vanite also: in so moch that I sayde vnto laughter: thou art madd, and to myrth: what doest thou?

So I thought in my herte, to withdrawe my flesh from wyne, to applye my mynde vnto wyßdome, and to comprehēde foolishnes vntill the tyme that (amonge all ẏ thinges which are vnder ẏ Sonne) I might se what were beſt for men to do, so longe as they lyue vnder heauen.

reg.3.4 6.7 I made gorgious fayre workes, I buyl ded me houses, and planted vynyardes: I made me orchardes and gardens of pleasure, and planted trees in them of all maner frutes. I made poles of water, to water ẏ grene and fruteſull trees withall. I bought ſeruauntes and maydēs, and had a greate houſholde. As for catell and ſhepe, I had more ſubſtaunce of them, then all they ẏ were before me in Jeruſalem. I gathered ſyluer & golde together, euen a treaſure of kynges & londes.

reg.4.9 I prouided me ſyngers and womē which coude playe of inſtrumentes, to make men myrth and paſtime. I gat me drynkynge cuppes alſo and glaſſes. (Shortly) I was greater & in more worſhipe, then all my predeceſſours in Jeruſalē. For wyßdome remayned with me: & loke what ſo euer myne eyes deſyred, I let them haue it: & wherin ſo euer my herte delyted or had eny pleasure, I withholde it not from it. Thus my hert reioyſed in all ẏ I dyd, and this I toke for the porcion of all my trauayle, But whan I conſidered all the workes ẏ my handes had wrought, and all the labours that I had taken herin: lo, all was but vanite and vexacion of mynde, & nothinge of eny value vnder ẏ Sonne Then turned I me to conſidre wyßdome, errour and fooliſhneſſe (for what is he amonge men, that might be compared to me ẏ kynge in ſoch workes:) and I ſawe, that wyßdome excelleth fooliſhneſſe, as farre as light doth darkneſſe. For a wyſe man beareth his eyes aboute in his heade, but the foole goeth in the darkneſſe. I perceaued alſo that they both had one ende.

Then thought I in my mynde: Yf it happen vnto the foole as it doth vnto me, what nedeth me then to laboure eny more for wyßdome: So I confeſſed within my harte, that this alſo was but vanite. For the wyſe are euer as litle in remembraunce as the fooliſh, and all the dayes for to come ſhalbe forgotten, yee the wyſe man dyeth aswell as ẏ foole. Thus begāne I to be weery of my life, in ſo moch that I coude awaye with nothinge that is done vnder the Sonne, for all was but vanite & vexacion of mynde: Yee I was weery of all my laboure, which I had taken vnder the Sonne, becauſe I ſhulde be fayne to leaue them vnto another man, that cōmeth after me: for who knoweth, whether he ſhalbe a wyſe mā or a foole: And yet ſhall he be lorde of all my labours, which I with ſoch wyßdome haue taken vnder the Sonne. Is not this a vayne thinge:

So I turned me to refrayne my mynde from all ſoch trauayle, as I toke vnder the Sonne: for ſo moch as a man ſhulde weery him ſelf with wyßdome, with vnderſtondinge and opportunite, and yet be fayne to leaue his labours vnto another, ẏ neuer ſweate for them. This is alſo a vayne thinge and a greate miſery. For what getteth a mā of all ẏ labō & trauayle of his mynde, ẏ he taketh vnder the Sonne, but heuyneſſe, ſorowe & diquyetnes all ẏ dayes of his life: In ſo moch that his herte can not reſt in the night. Is not this alſo a vayne thinge: Is it noe better then for a mā to eate and drynke, and his ſoule to be mery in his laboure: Yee I ſawe that this alſo was a gifte of God: For who maye eate, drynke, or bringe eny thige to paſſe without him: And why: he geueth vnto mā, what it pleaſeth him: whether it be wyßdome, vnderſtondinge, or gladneſſe. But vnto the ſynner he geueth weerynes and ſorow, that he maye gather and heape together ẏ thinge, ẏ afterwarde ſhalbe geuen vnto him whom it pleaſeth God. This is now a vayne thinge, yee a very diſquietneſſe and vexacō of mynde.

The III. Chapter.

Every thinge hath a tyme, yee all that is vnder the heauen, hath is conuenient ſeason. There is a tyme to be borne, and a tyme to dye. There is a tyme to plāte, and a tyme to plucke vp the thinge, ẏ is planted: A tyme to ſlaye, and a tyme to make whole: A tyme to breake downe, and a tyme to buylde vp: A tyme to wepe, and a tyme to laugh: A tyme to mourne, and a tyme to daunſe: A tyme to caſt awaye ſtones, and a tyme to gather ſtones together: A tyme to enbrace, & a tyme to refrayne from enbracynge: A tyme to wynne, and a tyme to leſe: A tyme to ſpare, and a tyme to ſpende: A tyme to cutt in peces, and a tyme to ſowe together: A tyme to kepe ſylēce, and a tyme to ſpeake: A tyme to loue, & a tyme to hate: A tyme of warre, and a tyme of peace.

What hath a mā els (that doth eny thinge) but weryneſſe and laboure: For as touchinge the trauayle and careſulneſſe which God hath geuen vnto mē, I ſe that he hath geuen it them, to be exerciſed in it. All this hath he ordened marueloꝰ goodly, to euery thinge his due tyme. He hath plãted ignorãnce also in the hertes of men, ẏ they shuld not fynde out ẏ grounde of his workes, which he doth from ẏ beginninge to ẏ ende. So I perceaued, ẏ in these thinges there is nothinge better for a man, thẽ to be merye to do well so longe as he lyueth. For all ẏ a man eateth & drynketh, yee what so euer a mã enioyeth of all his labó, ẏ same is a gift of God. I cõsidered also ẏ what so euer God doth, it cõtinueth for euer, & ẏ no thinge can be put vnto it ner take from it: & ẏ God doth it to ẏ intent, ẏ men shulde fear him. The thinge ẏ hath bene, is now: & the thinge ẏ is for to come, hath bene afore tyme, for God restoreth agayne the thinge that was past. Moreouer, I sawe vnder ẏ Sonne, vngodlynesse in the steade of iudgment, & iniquite in steade of righteousnesse.

Then thought I in my mynde: God shal separate the righteous from the vngodly, & then shal be the tyme & iudgmẽt of all counsels & workes. I cõmoned wt̃ myne owne herte also cõcernynge the childrẽ of men: how God hath chosen them, and yet letteth thẽ apeare, as though they were beastes: for it happeneth vnto men as it doth vnto beastes, & as the one dyeth, so dyeth ẏ other: yee they haue both one maner of breth, so ẏ (in this) a man hath no preemynence aboue a beest, but all are subdued vnto vanite. They go all vnto one place, for as they be all of dust, so shal they all turne vnto dust againe.

Who knoweth the spriete of man ẏ goeth vpwarde, and the breth of the beest ẏ goeth downe in to the earth? Wherfore I perceaue, ẏ there is nothyinge better for a man, then to be ioyfull in his laboure, for that is his porcion. But who wil bringe him to se the thinge, that shal come after him?

The IIII. Chapter.

SO I turned me, and considered all the violent wronge that is done vnder the Sonne: and beholde, the teares of soch as were oppressed, and there was no man to comforte them, or that wolde delyuer and defende them from the violence of their oppressours. Wherfore I iudged those that are deed, to be more happie then soch as be alyue: yee him that is yet vnborne to be better at ease thẽ they both, because he seith not the miserable workes that are done vnder the Sonne. Agayne, I sawe that all trauayle and diligence of laboure was hated of euery man. This is also a vaine thinge, and a veracion of mynde. The foole foldeth his handes together, & eateth vp his owne flesh. One handfull (saieth he) is better wt̃ rest, thẽ both ẏ handes full with labó and trauayle. Moreouer, I turned me, and B beholde yet another vanite vnder the Sonne. There is one man, no mo but himself alone, hauynge nether childe ner brother: yet is there no ende of his carefull trauayle, his eyes can not be satisfied with riches, (yet doth he not remembre himself, & saye:) For whem do I take soch trauayle? For whose pleasure do I thus consume awaye my lyfe? This is also a vayne and miserable thinge. Therfore two are better then one, for they maye well enioye the profit of their laboure. If one of them fall, his companyon helpeth him vp againe: But wo is him that is alone, for yf he fall, he hath not another to helpe him vp. Agayne, when two C slepe together, they are warme: but how can a body be warme alone? One maye be ouercome, but two maye make resistaũce: A thre folde cable is not lightly broken. A poore childe beynge wyse, is better then an olde kinge, that doteth, and can not bewarre in tyme to come. Some one commeth out of Gen 41.b
preson, & is made a kynge: & another which 1.Re. 16.c
is borne in the kyngdome, commeth vnto po 3.Re.12.c
uerte. And I perceaued, ẏ all men lyuynge vnder thẽ Sonne, go wt̃ the seconde childe, that commeth vp in the steade of the other. As for the people that haue bene before him, and that come after him, they are innumerable: yet is not their ioye the greater thorow him. This is also a vayne thinge and a veracion of mynde. Whan thou commest in to the house of God, kepe thy fote, and drawe nye, that thou mayest heare: that is better then the offeringes of fooles, 1.Reg.15.c for they knowe not what euell they do.

The V. Chapter.

BE not hastie with thy mouth, & let A not thine hert speake eny thige rashly before God. For God is in heauen, & thou vpon earth, therfore let thy wordes be fewe. For where mech carefulnesse is, there are many dreames: & where many wordes are, there men maye heare fooles. If Deu.23.d
thou make a vowe vnto God, be not slacke Barue.5.c
to perfourme it. As for foolish vowes, he hath no pleasure in them. If thou promyse eny thinge, paye it: for better it is that thou make no vowe, then that thou shuldest promise, and not paye. Vse not thy mouth to cause ẏ flesh for to synne, ẏ thou saye not before the angell: my foolishnesse is in ẏ saute,

For thē God wil be angrie at thy voyce, and destroye all ẏ workes of thine handes.

And why? where as are many dreames & many wordes, there are also dyuerse vanities: but loke ẏ thou feare God. If thou seyst the poore to be oppressed and wrongeously dealt withall, so ẏ equite & the right of the lawe is wraisted in the londe: maruell not thou at soch iudgmēt, for one greate mā kepeth touch with another, and the mightie helpe thē selues together. The whole londe also with the feldes and all that is therin, is in subiecciō and bondage vnto ẏ kinge.

Ecclis. 4. a

B He that loueth money, wil neuer be satisfied with money: and who so delyteth in riches, shal haue no profit therof. Is not this also a vayne thinge? Where as many riches are, there are many also that spende them awaye. And what pleasure more hath he that possesseth them, sauynge that he maye loke vpon them with his eyes? A labouringe man slepeth swetely, whether it be litle or moch that he eateth: but the abundaunce of the riche wil not suffre him to slepe.

Iob 20. c

Yet is there a sore plage, which I haue sene vnder the Sonne (namely) riches kepte to the hurte of him ẏ hath them in possessiō.

Iob 1. c

For oft times they perisshe with his greate misery and trouble: and yf he haue a childe, it getteth nothinge. Like as he came naked out of his mothers wombe, so goeth he thither agayne, and carieth nothinge awaye with him of all his laboure. This is a miserable plage, ẏ he shal go awaye euen as he came. What helpeth it him then, ẏ he hath labored in the wynde? All the daies of his life also must he eate in the darcke, with greate carefulnesse, sicknesse & sorow.

Eccls. 2. d

Therfore me thinke it a better and a fayrer thinge, a man to eate and drynke, and to be refreshed of all his laboure, ẏ he taketh vnder the Sonne all the dayes of his life which God geueth him, for this is his porcion. For vnto whom so euer God geueth riches, goodes and power, he geueth it him to enioye it, to take it for his porcion, and to be refreshed of his laboure: this is now the gifte of God. For he thinketh not moch how longe he shal lyue, for so moch as God fylleth his hert with gladnesse.

The VI. Chapter.

A There is yet a plage vnder ẏ Sonne, & it is a generall thinge amonge mē: when God geueth a man riches, goodes & honoure, so that he wanteth nothinge of all that his herte can desyre: and yet God geueth him not leue to enioye the same, but another man spēdeth them. This is a vayne thinge & a miserable plage. If a man begett an hundreth children, and lyue many yeares, so that his dayes are many in nombre, and yet can not enioye his good, nether be buried: as for him I saye, that an vntymely byrth is better then he. For he cōmeth to naught, & goeth his waye in to darckenes, and his name is forgotten. Moreouer, he seyth not the Sonne, and knoweth of nothinge nether here ner there: Nee though he lyued two thousande yeares, yet hath he no good life. Come not all to one place? All the laboure that a man taketh, is for himself, and yet his desyre is neuer fylled after his mynde. For what hath the wyse more then the foole? What helpeth it the poore, that he knoweth to walke before the lyuynge? The sight of the eyes is better, then that the soule shulde so departe awaye. Howbeit this is also a vayne thinge and a disquietnesse of mynde. What is more excellent then man? yet can he not in the lawe get the victory of him that is mightier thē he: A vayne thinge is it to cast out many wordes, but what hath a man els?

The VII. Chapter.

FOr who knoweth what is good for man lyuynge, in ẏ dayes of his vayne life, which is but a shadowe? Or who wil tell a man, what shal happen after him vnder the Sonne? A good name is more worth then a precious oyntment, and the daye of death is better thē ẏ daye of byrth.

It is better to go in to an house of mournynge, then in to a bancket house. For there is the ende of all men, and he that is lyuinge, taketh it to herte. It is better to be sory then to laugh, for whē the countenaunce is heuy, the herte is ioyfull. The herte of ẏ wyse is in the mournynge house, but the hert of the fooliſh is in the house of myrth. It is better to geue eare to the chastenynge of a wyse man, then to heare the songe of fooles. For the laughinge of fooles is like ẏ crackynge of thornes vnder a pott. And ẏ is but a vayne thinge.

Who so doeth wronge, maketh a wyse man to go out of his witt, and destroyeth a gentle hert. The ende of a thinge is better then the begynnynge. The pacient of sprete is better then the hie mynded. Be not haistely angrie in ẏ mynde, for wrath resteth in the bosome of a foole. Saye not thou: What is the cause that ẏ dayes of ẏ olde tyme were better, then they ẏ be now? for that were no wyse question. Wysdom is better then riches, yee moch more worth then the eye sight. For wysdome defendeth as well as moneye, and the excellent knowlege and wysdome geueth life vnto him that hath it in possession. Consider the worke of God, how that no man can make the thinge straight, which he maketh croked. Vse well the tyme of prosperite, and remembre the tyme of myssortune: for God maketh the one by the other, so that a man can fynde nothinge els.

C These ij. thinges also haue I cõsidred in ỹ tyme of vanite: ỹ the iust man perisheth for his righteousnes sake, & the vngodly liueth in his wickednesse. Therfore bethou nether to righteous ner ouer wyse, ỹ thou perish not: be nether to vnrighteous also ner to fooliish, lest thou die before thy tyme. It is good for the to take holde of this, & not to let ỹ go out of thy hande. For he ỹ feareth God shal escape them all.

Wysdome geueth more corage vnto the wyse, then ten mightie men of the citie: for there is not one iust vpõ earth, ỹ doth good, & sinneth not. Take not hede vnto euery worde ỹ is spoken, lest thou heare thy seruaunt curse the: for thine owne hert knoweth, that thou thy self also hast oft tymes spokẽ euell by other men. All these thinges haue I proued because of wysdome: for I thought to be wyse, but she wente farther fro me then she was before, yee & so depe that I might not reach vnto her. I applied my mynde also vnto knowlege, and to seke out sciẽce, wisdome and vnderstondinge: to knowe the foolishnesse of the vngodly, and the erroure of dotinge fooles. And I founde, that a woman is bytterer then death: for she is a very angle, hir hert is a nett, and hir handes are cheynes. Who so pleaseth God shal escape from her, but the synner will be taken wt her.

Beholde (sayeth ỹ preacher) this haue I diligently searched out & proued, ỹ I might come by knowlege: which as yet I seke, and fynde it not. Amonge a thousande men I haue founde one, but not one woman amonge all. Lo, this onely haue I founde, that God made man iust & right, but they seke dyuerse sotylties, where as no man hath wysdome & vnderstõdinge, to gene answere there vnto.

The VIII. Chapter.

WYsdome maketh a mãs face to shyne, but malice putteth it out of fauoure. Kepe the kynges commaundemẽt (I warne the) & the ooth ỹ thou hast made vnto God. Be not haistie to go out of his sight, & se thou cõtynue in no euell thinge: for what so euer it pleaseth him, ỹ doeth he. Like as when a kynge geueth a charge, his commaundement is mightie: Euen so who maye saye vnto him: what doest thou? Who so kepeth the commaundement, shall sele no harme: but a wyse mans herte discerneth tyme and maner: For euery thinge wil haue opportunite and iudgment, and this is the thinge that maketh men full of carefulnes & sorowe. And why? a man knoweth not what is for to come, for who wyll tell him: Nether is there eny mã ỹ hath power ouer ỹ spirete, to kepe stil ỹ spirete, ner to haue eny power in the tyme of death: It is not he also that can make an ende of the batayll, ne ther maye vngodlynes delyuer him ỹ medleth withall. Iob 9 Leui

B All these thinges haue I considered, and applied my mynde vnto euery worke that is vnder the Sonne: how one man hath lordshipe vpon another to his owne harme. For I haue oft sene ỹ vngodly brought to their graues, and fallen downe from the hye and glorious place: in so moch ỹ they were forgotten in the cite, where they were had in so hye & greate reputacion. This is also a vayne thinge. Because now that euell workes are not haistely punyshed, the hert of man geueth him self ouer vnto wickednesse: But though an euell personne offende an hundreth tymes, and haue a longe life: yet am I sure, that it shal go well with thẽ that feare God, because they haue him before their eyes. Agayne, as for the vngodly, it shall not be well with him, nether shal he prolõge his dayes: but euen as a shadowe, so shall he be that feareth not God. Pſal.

C Yet is there a vanite vpon earth: There be iust men, vnto whom it happeneth, as though they had the workes of the vngodly: Agayne, there be vngodly, with whom it goeth as though they had the workes of ỹ righteous. This me thinke also a vaine thinge. Therfore I commende gladnesse, because a man hath no better thinge vnder the Sonne, then to eate and drynke, and to be mery: for that shal he haue of his labour all the daies of his life, which God geueth him vnder the Sonne. When I applied my mynde to lerne wysdome, and to knowe the trauayle that is in the worlde (and that of soch a fashion, ỹ I suffred not myne eyes to slepe nether daye ner nyght) I vnderstode of all ỹ workes of God, that it is not possible for a man, to attayne vnto ỹ workes that are done vnder ỹ Sonne: and though he bestowe his labour to seke them out, yet can he not reach vnto the: yee though a wyse man wolde vndertake to knowe them, yet might he not fynde them.

The IX. Chapter.

A FOr all these thinges purposed I in my mynde to seke out. The righteous and wyse yee and their workes also are in the hande of God: and there is no man that knoweth ether the loue or hate of the thinge that he hath before him. It happeneth vnto one as vnto another: It goeth
c with the righteous as with the vngodly: with the good & cleane as with the vncleane: with him that offereth as with him that offereth not: like as it goeth with the vertuous, so goeth it also with the synner: As it happeneth vnto the periured, so happeneth it also vnto him that is afrayed to be man swome. Amonge all thinges ỹ come to passe vnder the Sonne, this is a misery, that it happeneth vnto all alyke. This is the cause also that the hertes of men are full of wickednesse, & madd foolishnesse is in their hertes as longe as they lyue, vntill they dye.

B And why? As longe as a man lyueth, he is careles: for a quyck dogg (saye they) is better thē a deed lion: for they that be lyuynge, knowe ỹ they shall dye: but they ỹ be deed, knowe nothinge, nether deserue they eny more. For their memoriall is forgotte, so ỹ they be nether loued, hated ner envyed: nether haue they eny more parte in ỹ worlde, in all ỹ is done vnder the Sonne. Go thou ỹ waye then, eate thy bred with ioye, & drynke ỹ wyne wt gladnesse, for thy workes please God. Let thy garmētes be all waye whyte, & let ỹ itt.6.b heade want no oyntmēt. Vse thy self to lyue
p.5.c ioyfully wt thy wife whom thou louest, all ỹ daies of thy life (which is but vayne) ỹ God
C hath geuē the vnder the Sonne, all ỹ dayes of thy vanite: for ỹ is thy porcion in this life, of all thy labo' & trauayle ỹ thou takest vnder the Sonne. What so ever thou takest in hande to do, that do with all thy power: for amōge the deed (where as thou goest vnto) there is nether worke, councell, knowlege ner wyßdome.

So I turned me vnto other thinges vnder ỹ Sonne, and I sawe, that in runnynge, it helpeth not to be swift: in batayll, it helpeth not to be stronge: to fedynge, it helpeth not to be wyse: to riches, it helpeth not to be sutyll: to be had in fauoure, it helpeth not to be connynge: but that all lyeth in tyme & fortune. For a man knoweth not his tyme, but like as the fysshe are take with the angle, and as the byrdes are catched wt the snare: Euē so are men taken in the perilous tyme, when it commeth sodenly vpon them.

This wißdome haue I sene also vnder ỹ Sōne, & me thought it a greate thinge. There was a litle cite, & a fewe mē within it: so there came a greate kynge & besieged it, & made greate bulwarkes agaynst it. And in the cite there was founde a poore man (but he was wyse) which wt his wyßdome delyuered the cite: yet was there no body, ỹ had eny respecte vnto soch a symple man. Then sayde I: wyßdome is better then strength. Neverthe les, a symple mans wyßdome is despysed, & his wordes are not herde. A wise mans councell that is folowed in sylence, is farre above the crienge of a captaine amōge fooles. For wyßdome is better then harnesse: but one vnthryft alone destroyeth moch good.

The X. Chapter.

DEed flyes ỹ corruppe swete oynment & make it to stynck, are somthinge more worth then the wyßdome & honō' of a foole. A wyse mans hert is vpon the right hande, but a fooles hert is vpon the left. A dotinge foole thinketh, ỹ euery mā doth as foolishly as himself. If a principall spirete be geuē the to beare rule, be not negligēt thē in thine office: for so shal greate wickednesse be put downe, as it were wt a medecyne. Another plage is there, which I haue sene vnder the Sonne: namely, ỹ ignoraunce ỹ is comonly amonge princes: in ỹ a foole sytteth in greate dignite, & the riche are sett downe beneth: I se seruauntes ryde vpon horses, & princes goinge vpon their fete as it were seruauntes. But he ỹ dygged vp a pytt, shall fall therin himself: & who so breaketh downe the hedge, a serpent shal byte him. Who so remoueth stones, shall haue trauayle withall: and he that heweth wod, shalbe hurt therwith.

When an yron is blont, and ỹ poynt not sharpened, it must be whett againe, and that with might: Euen so doth wißdome folowe diligence. A babler of his tonge is no better, then a serpent that stynged without hyssynge. The wordes out of a wyse mans mouth are gracious, but the lippes of a foole wil destroye himself. The begynnynge of his talkynge is foolishnes, and the laste worde of his mouth is greate madnesse. A foole is so full of wordes, that a man can not tell what ende he wyll make: who wyl then warne him to make a conclucion? The labour of ỹ foolish is grevous vnto thē, while they knowe not how to go in to the cite.

Wo be vnto the (O thou realme and londe) whose kynge is but a childe, and whose princes are early at their banckettes. But well is the (O thou realme and londe) whose kinge is come of nobles, and whose princes eate in due season, for strength and not for lust. Thorow slouthfulnesse the balkes fall downe, and thorow ydle hādes it rayneth in at the house. Meate maketh men to laugh, and wyne maketh them mery: but vnto money are all thinges obedient. Wysh the kynge no euell in ỳ thought, and speake no hurte of ỳ ryche in thy preuy chambre: for a byrde of the ayre shal betraye thy voyce, and that fethers shal shewe thy wordes.

The XI. Chapter.

SEnde thy vytayles ouer the waters, and so shalt thou fynde thē after many yeares. Geue it awaye amonge seuen or eight, for thou knowest not what misery shal come vpō earth. Whē the cloudes are full, they poure out rayne vpon the earth. And whē ỳ tre falleth, (whether it be towarde the south or north) in what place so euer it fall, there it lyeth. He that regardeth ỳ wynde, shal not sowe: and he that hath respecte vnto the cloudes, shal not reape. Now like as thou knowest not the waye of the wynde, ner how ỳ bones are fylled in a mothers wombe: Euen so thou knowest not the workes of God, which is the workemaster of all.

Cease not thou therfore with thy handes to sowe thy sede, whether it be in ỳ morninge or in the euenynge: for thou knowest not whether this or that shall prospere, & yf they both take, it is the better. The light is swete, & a pleasaunt thinge is it for the eyes to loke vpon the Sonne. Yf a man lyue many yeares, and be glad in them all, let him remembre the dayes of darckenesse, which shal be many: & when they come, all thinges shal be but vanite. Be glad then (O thou yonge man) in thy youth, and lat thine hert be mery in thy yonge dayes: folowe the wayes of thine owne hert, and the lust of thine eyes: but be thou sure, that God shal bringe the in to iudgment for all these thinges.

The XII. Chapter.

PVt awaye displeasure out of ỳ hert, & remoue euell from thy body: for childehode and youth is but vanite. Remembre thy maker in thy youth, or euer the dayes of aduersite come, and or the yeares drawe nye, when thou shalt saye: I haue no pleasure in them: before the Sonne, ỳ lighte, ỳ Moone and the starres be darckened, and or the cloudes turne agayne after the rayne: when the kepers of the house shall tremble, and when the stronge men shal bowe them selues: when the Myllers stonde still because they be so fewe, and when the sight of the wyndowes shal waxe dymme: whan the dores in the stretes shal be shutt, and whan ỳ voyce of the Myller shall be layed downe: whan men shall ryse vp at the voyce of the byrde, and whan all ỳ doughters of musyck shalbe brought lowe: whan men shal feare in hye places, and be afrayed in the stretes: whan the Almonde tre shalbe despysed, the greshopper borne out, and whan greate powerte shall breake in: when man goeth to his longe home, and the mourners go about the stretes. Or euer the syluer lace be taken awaye, and or the golden bende be broken: Or the pott be broken at the well, & the whele vpon the Cisterne: Or dust be turned Eccls.3.
againe vnto earth from whence it came, and or the spirite returne vnto God, which gaue it. All is but vanite (sayeth the preacher) all is Eccls.1.2
but playne vanite.

The same preacher was not wyse alone, but taught the people knowlege also: he gaue good hede, sought out the grounde and set forth many parables. His diligence was to fynde out acceptable wordes, right scripture, and the wordes of trueth. For the wordes Heb.4.c of ỳ wyse are like prickes and nales that go thorow, wherwith men are kepte together for they are geuen of one shepherde onely. Therfore be warre (my sonne) that aboue these thou make the not many & innumerable bookes, nor take diuerse doctrynes in hande, to weery thy body withall.

Lat vs heare the conclucion of all thinges: Feare God, and kepe his comaundements, for that toucheth all men: For God shall iudge all workes and secrete thinges, whether they be good or euell.

The ende of Ecclesiastes, called the Preacher.

Salomons Balettes, called Cantica Canticorum.

The first Chapter.

A

That thy mouth wolde geue me a kysse, for ỳ brestes are more pleasaunt then wyne, & that because of the good and pleasaunt sauoure. Thy name is a swete smellynge oyntment, therfore do the maydens loue the: yee that same moueth me also to renne after the.

Cicle.7. a

The kynge hath brought me into his preuy chambre. We wil be glad & reioyce in the, we thynke more of thy brestes then of wyne: well is them that loue the.

B

I am black (o ye doughters of Jerusalē) like as the tentes of the Cedarenes, and as the hanginges of Salomon: but yet am I faire & welfauoured withall. Maruell not at me ỳ I am so black, & why: ỳ Sonne hath shyned vpō me. For whan my mothers childrē had euell wil at me, they made me ỳ keper of the vnyarde. Thus was I fayne to kepe a vnyarde, which was not myne owne.

Ecn.25. b
Par.3. c

Tell me (o thou whom my soule loueth) where thou fedest, where thou restest at the noone daye: lest I go wronge, and come vnto the flockes of thy companyons.

If thou knowe not ỳ self (o thou fayrest amōge women) thā go ỳ waye forth after ỳ foresteppes of the shepe, as though thou woldest fede ỳ goates beside ỳ shepherdes tentes. There wil I tary for the (my loue) wt myne hooste & with my charettes, which shal be no fewer then Pharaos.

Exo. 14. b

C

Then shal thy chekes & thy neck be made fayre, & hanged wt spāges & goodly iewels: a neck bande of golde wil we make ỳ wt syluer bottons. When the kynge sytteth at the table, he shal smell my Nardus: for a bōdell of Myrre (o my beloued) lyeth betwixte my brestes. A cluster of grapes of Cypers, or of the vnyardes of Engaddi, art thou vnto me, O my beloued.

Cant. 4. a

O how fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou: thou hast doues eyes. O how fayre art thou (my beloued) how well fauored art thou? Oure bed is decte with floures, ỳ sylinges of oure house are of Cedre tre, & oure balkes of Cypresse.

The II. Chapter.

I Am the floure of the felde, and lylie of the valleys: as the rose amonge the thornes, so is my loue amonge the daughters.

Like as the aple tre amonge the trees of the wodd, so is my beloued amonge the sonnes. My delite is to sitt vnder his shadowe, for his frute is swete vnto my throte. He bryngeth me in to his wyne seller, and loueth me specially well. Refresh me wt grapes, cōforte me with apples, for I am sick of loue. His left hāde lyeth vnder my heade, & his right hande enbraceth me.

I charge you (o ye doughters of Jerusalem) by the Roes & hyndes of the felde, ỳ ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her, till she be content herself.

Me thynke I heare the voyce of my beloued: lo, there commeth he hoppinge vpon ỳ mountaynes, and leapinge ouer the litle hilles. My beloued is like a Roo or a yonge hart. Beholde, he stondeth behynde ỳ wall, he loketh in at the wyndowe, & pepeth throw the grate.

My beloued answered & sayde vnto me: O stōde vp my loue, my doue, my beutyfull, & come: for lo, the wynter is now past, the rayne is awaie & gone. The floures are come vp in the felde, the twystinge tyme is come, the voyce of the turtle doue is herde in oure londe. The fygetre bryngeth forth hir fyges, the vynes beare blossoms, and haue a good smell.

O stōde vp my loue, my beutyfull, and come (my doue) out of the caues of the rockes, out of the holes of the wall. O let me se thy countenaunce and heare thy voyce, for swete is thy voyce and fayre is thy face. Gett vs the foxes, yee the litle foxes that hurte ỳ vynes, for oure vynes beare blossoms.

My loue is myne, and I am his, (which fedeth amōge the lylies) vntill the daye breake, and till the shadowes be gone. Come again prevely (o thy beloued) like as a Roo or a yonge harte vnto the mountaynes.

The III. Chapter.

BY night in my bedd, I sought him, whom my soule loueth: yee diligently sought I him, but I founde him not. I wil get vp (thought I) and go aboute the cite: vpon the market and in all ỳ stretes will I seke him whom my soule loueth, but whan I sought him, I founde him not. The watchmen that go aboute ỳ cite, founde me. Sawe ye not him, whom my soule loueth?

So whan I was a litle past them, I foude him whom my soule loueth. I haue got ten holde vpon him, and wyl not let him go,
vntill I bringe him into my mothers house,
and into hir chambre that bare me.

I charge you (o ye doughters of Jerusalē)
by the Roes and hyndes of the felde, that ye wake not vp my louer nor touch her, till she be content herself.

Who is this, that commeth out of ỳ wylderneſſe like pilers of smoke, as it were a smell of Myrre, frankencense and all maner spyces
of the Apotecary?

Beholde, aboute Salomōs bedsteade there stonde LX. valeaunt men of the mightie in Israel. They holde swerdes euery one, & are experte in warre. Euery man hath his swerde vpō his thee, because of feare in the night.

Kynge Salomon hath made himself a bedsteade of the wodd of Libanus, the pilers are of syluer, the coueringe of golde, ỳ seate of purple, ỳ grounde pleasauntly paued for the doughters of Jerusalem.

Go forth (o ye doughters of Sion) and be holde kynge Salomon in the crowne, wher with his mother crowned him in the daye of his mariage, and in the daye of the glad-nesse of his hert.

The IIII. Chapter.

O how fayre art thou (my loue) how fayre art thou? thou hast doues eyes besyde that which lyeth hid within.
Thy hayrie lockes are like a flocke of shepe that be clypped, which go first vp from the washinge place: where euery one beareth
two twyns, and not one vnfrutefull amōge them. Thy lippes are like a rose coloured ry-bande, thy wordes are louely: thy chekes are like a pece of a pomgranate, besydes that which lyed hyd within. Thy neck is like the tower of Dauid buylded with bulworkes, wher vpon there hāge a thousande sheldes, yee all the weapēs of the giaūtes. Thy two brestes are like two twyns of yonge roes, which fede amōge the lilies. O that I might go to the mountayne of Myrre, and to the hyll of frankynsense: till the daye breake, and till the shadowes be past awaye. Thou art all fayre (o my loue) & no spotte is there in the.

Come to me from Libanus (o my spouse) come to me from Libanus; come soone the next waye from the toppe of Amana, from the toppe of Sanir and Hermon, from the Lyons dennes and from the mountaynes of ỳ leopardes. Thou hast woūded my hert (o my sister, my spouse) thou hast wounded my hert, with one of thine eyes, and with one cheyne of thy neck. O how fayre and louely are thy brestes, my sister, my spouse: Thy bres tes are more pleasaunt then wyne, and the smell of thy oyntmentes passeth all spices.
Thy lippes (o my spouse) droppe as the hony
combe, yee mylck and hony is vnder thy ton ge, and the smell of thy garmentes is like the smell of frankynsense. C

Thou art a well kepte garden (o my sister, my spouse) thou art a well kepte water spryn ge, a sealed well. The frutes that sproute in the, are like a very paradyse of pōgranates wt swete frutes: as Cypresse, Nardus, Saffron, Calmus, and all the trees of Libanus: Myrre, Aloes, and all the best spyces. Thou art a well of gardens, a well of lyuynge waters, which renne downe from Libanus. Vp thou northwynde, come thou southwynde, and blowe vpō my gardē, that the smell ther of maye be caried on euery syde: Yee that my beloued maye come into my garden, & eate of the frutes and apples that growe therin. 2

The V. Chapter.

COme into my garden o my sister, my spouse: I haue gathered my Myrre wt my spyce. I wil eate my hony and my hony cōbe, I wil drynke my wyne & my mylk Eate o (ye frendes) drynke and be mery, o ye beloued.

As I was a slepe, & my hert wakynge, I herde the voyce of my beloued, whā he knocked. Open to me (sayde he) o my sister, my loue, my doue, my derlinge: for my heade is full of dew, and ỳ lockes of my hayre are full of the night droppes.

I haue put off my cote, how cā I do it on B agayne? I haue washed my fete, how shal I fyle them agayne? But whan my loue put in his hande at the hole, my hert was moued to warde him: so that I stode vp to open vnto my beloued. My hādes dropped wt Myrre, &
the Myrre ranne downe my fyngers vpon ỳ lock. Neuertheleſſe whā I had opened vnto my beloued, he was departed, and gone his waye.

Now like as afore tyme whan he spake, C
my hert coude no longer refrayne: Euen so now I sought hi, but I conde not fynde him:
I cried vpon him, neuertheleſſe he gaue me no answere. So the watchmen that wente a-boute the cite, foūde me, smote me, and wou-ded me: Yee they that kepte the walles, tok awaye my garmēt fro me. I charge you ther fore (o ye doughters of Jerusalem) yf ye fynde
my beloued, that ye tell him, how that I am sick for loue.

Who is thy loue aboue other louers, O thou fayrest amonge wemen? Or, what can thy loue do, more then other louers, that thou chargest vs so straitly?

As for my loue, he is whyte and reade coloured, a synguler personne amonge many thousandes: his heade is the most fyne golde, the lockes of his hayre are bussyed, browne as the euenynge: his eyes are as the eyes of doues by the water brokes, washen with D mylck, and remaynynge in a plenteous place: his chekes are like a garden bedd, where in the Apotecaryes plāte all maner of swete thinges: his lippes droppe as the floures of the most pryncipall Myrre, his hādes are full of golde rynges and precious stones. His body is as the pure yuery, decte ouer with Sa-
Eccl..24.c phyres: his legges are as the pilers of Marbell, sett vpon sokettes of golde: his face is as Libanus, and as the bewty of the Cedre trees: his throte is swete, yee he is alltogether louely. Soch one is my loue (o ye doughters of Jerusalem) soch one is my loue.

Whither is thy loue gone thē (o thou fayrest amonge wemē) whither is thy loue departed, that we maye seke him with the?

The VI. Chapter.

A MY loue is gone downe in to his garden, vnto ỹ swete smellinge beddes, that he maye refresh himself in the garden, and gather floures. My loue is myne, and I am his, which fedeth amonge the lilies.

Thou art pleasaunt (o my loue) euen as louelynesse itself, thou art fayre as Jerusalem, glorious as an armye of men with their bāners (Turne awaye thine eyes fro me, for Canti.4.a they make me to proude) Thy hayrie lockes are like a flocke of goates vpon ỹ mount of Galaad. Thy teth are like a flock of shepe ỹ be clypped, which go out of the washinge place: where euery one beareth two twyns, & not one vnfruteful amōge them. Thy chekes are like a pece of a pomgranate, besydes ỹ which lyeth hid within. There are thre score 3.Re.11.a quenes, foure score concubynes, and yonge wemē without nombre. But one is my doue,
B my derlynge. She is the onely beloued of hir mother, & deare vnto her that bare her. Whē the daughters sawe her, they sayde she was blessed: yee the quenes and concubines praysed her. What is she this, that peepeth out as the mornynge? fayre as the Moone, excellent as the Sonne, glorious as an armye of men with their banners?

I wente downe in to the nutt garden, to se what grew by the brokes, to loke yf the vynyarde flonsshed, and yf the pomgranates were shot forth. Then the charettes of the prynce of my people made me sodenly afrayed. Turne againe, turne againe (o thou Sulamite) turne agayne, turne agayne, that we maye loke vpon the.

The VII. Chapter.

WHat pleasure haue ye more in ỹ Sulamite, than when she daunseth amonge the men of warre? O how pleasaunt are thy treadinges with thy shoes, thou prynces daughter? Thy thees are like a fayre iewell, which is wrought by a cunnynge workmaster: Thy nauell is like a rounde goblett, which is neuer without drynke. Thy wombe is like an heape of wheate, set about with lilies: Thy two brestes are like two twyns of yonge roes: Thy neck is as it were a tower of yuery: Thyne eyes are like the water poles in Hesebon, besyde the porte of Bathrabbim: Thy nose is like the tower of Libanus, which loketh towarde Damascus. That heade that standeth vpon the is like Carmel: The hayre of thy heade is like the kynges purple folden vp in plates.

O how fayre and lovely art thou (my derlynge) in pleasures? Thy stature is like a date tre, and thy brestes like the grapes. I sayde: I wil clymme vp in to the date tre, and take holde of his braunches. Thy brestes also shalbe as the vyne grapes, the smell of thy nostrels like the smell of apples, and thy throte like the best wyne.

This shalbe pure & cleare for my loue, his lippes and teth shal haue their pleasure. There wil I turne me vnto my loue, and he shal turne him vnto me. O come on my loue, let vs go forth in to the felde, and take our lodginge in the vyllages. In the mornynge wil we ryse by tymes, and go se the vynyarde: yf it be spronge forth, yf the grapes be growne, & yf the pomgranates be shotte out. There wil I geue the my brestes: Then shal the Mandragoras geue their smell besyde oure dores: There (o my loue) haue I kepte vnto the all maner of frutes, both new and olde.

The VIII. Chapter.

O That I might fynde the without? kysse ỹ, whom I loue as my brother which suckte my mothers brestes: & that thou woldest not be offended, yf I toke the and brought the in to my mothers house: that thou mightest teach me, and that I might geue the drynke of spyced wyne and of the swete sappe of my pomgranates. His left hande lyeth vnder my heade, & his right hande embraceth me.

I charge you(o ye daughters of Jerusalē)
ye wake not vp my loue ner touch her,
she be content herself. What is she this,
cometh vp from the wildernes, and lea vpon hir loue? I am the same that wa-the vp amonge the aple trees, where thy her beare ỳ, where ỳ mother brought in to the worlde.
O set me as a seale vpō thine hert, and as ale vpon thine arme: for loue is mighte
the death, & gelousy as the hell. Hir coaare of fyre, and a very flamme of the LOR
: so many waters are not able to quench
, neither maye ỳ streames drowne it. Yee
a man wolde geue all the good of his hou
for loue, he shulde counte it nothinge.
When oure loue is tolde oure yonge sister,
hose brestes are not yet growne, what shal e do vnto her? If she be a wall, we shal nde a syluer bollworke there vpon: If she a tower, we shal festen her with bordes of ede tre.
If I be a wall, & my brestes like towres,
then am I as one that hath founde fauoure
in his sight.

Salomon had a vynyarde at Baal Hamon, this vynyarde delyuered he vnto the ke pers: ỳ euery one for the frute therof shulde geue him a thousande peces of syluer. But my vynyarde(o Salemon) geueth the a thou sande, and two hundreth to ỳ kepers of the frute.

Thou that dwellest in the gardens, O let me heare thy voyce, that my company-ons maye herken to the same. O get the awaye (my loue) as a roo or a yonge hert
vnto the swete

This is the prophecy of Esay the sonne of Amos, which he shewed vpon Juda and Jerusalem: In the tyme of Osias, Joathan, Ahas, and Ezechias kynges of Juda.

The first Chapter.

Eare o heauen, herken o earth, for the LORDE speaketh: I haue norished & brought vp children, and they are fallen awaye fro me. An oxe knoweth his LORDE, and an Asse his maisters stall, but Israel knoweth nothinge, my people hath no vnderstondinge. Alas for this synful people, which are experte in blasphemies, a frawerde generacion, vnnatural children. They haue forsaken the LORDE, they haue prouoked the holy one of Israel vnto anger, and are gone backward. Wherfore shulde ye be plaged eny more? For ye are euer fallinge awaye. The whole heade is sick, and the herte is very heuy. From the sole of the foote vnto the heade, there is no whole parte in all yo^r body: but all are woundes, botches, sores and strypes, which can nether be helped, bounde vp, molified, ner eased with eny oyntment.

Youre londe lieth waist, youre cities are brent vp, youre enemies deuoure youre londe, and ye must be fayne to stonde, and loke vpon it: and it is desolate, as it were with enemies in a batell. Moreouer y^e doughter of Syon is left alone like a cotage in a vynyarde, like a watchouse in tyme of warre, like a beseged citie. And excepte the LORDE of hostes had left us a few alyue: we shulde haue bene as Sodoma, & like vnto Gomorra.

Heare the worde of the LORDE ye tyraūtes of Sodoma: and herken vnto the lawe of oure God, thou people of Gomorra. Why offre ye so many sacrifices vnto me? I am discontent for the brent offringes of wethers, and with y^e fatnesse of fedbeastes. I haue no pleasure in the blonde of bullockes, lambes and gootes. When ye apeare before me, who requyreth you to treade within my porches? Offre me no mo oblacions, for it is but lost laboure. I abhorre youre incense. I maye not awaye with youre newmoones, youre Sabbathes and solempne dayes. Youre fastinges are also in vayne. I hate youre new holy dayes and fastinges, euen fro my very harte. They make me weery, I can not abyde them. Though ye holde out yo^r hondes, yet turne I myne eyes from you. And though ye make many prayers, yet heare I nothinge at all, for youre hondes are full of blonde.

Wasshe you, make you clene, put awaye yo^r euell thoughtes out of my sight, cease from doinge of euell and violence. Lerne to do right, applie youre selues to equyte, delyuer the oppressed, helpe the fatherlesse to his right, let the wydowes complaynte come before you. Now go to (saieth the LORDE) we wil talke together. Is it not so? Though youre synnes be as read as scarlet, shal they not be whyter then snowe? And though they were like purple, shall they not be like whyte woll? Is it not so? Yf ye be louynge & obedient, ye shal emoye the best thinge that groweth in the londe. But yf ye be obstinate and rebellious, ye shalbe deuoured with the swerde: for thus the LORDE hath promised with his owne mouth.

How happeneth it then that the rightuous citie (which was full of equite) is become vnfaithfull as an whore? rightuousnes dwelt in it, but now murthur. Thy Siluer is turned to drosse, and thy wyne myxte w^t water. Thy princes are traytours and companyons of theues. They loue giftes altogether, and folowe rewardes. As for the fatherles, they helpe him not to his right, nether wil they let the wydowes causes come before them. Therfore speaketh the LORDE God of hostes the mighty one of Israel: Ah I must ease me of myne enemies, and auenge me vpō thē. And therfore shal I laye my honde vpon the, and burne out thy drosse from the fyneste and pureste, and put out all thy leade, & set thy iudges agayne as they were somtyme, and thy Senatours as they were from y^e begynnynge. Then shalt thou be called the rightuous citie, the faithfull citie. But Sion shalbe redemed with equyte, and hyr captiuyte with rightwousnesse. For the transgressours and vngodly, and soch as are become vnfaithfull vnto the LORDE, must all together be vtterly destroyed.

And excepte ye be ashamed of the oke-trees wherin ye haue so delited, and of the gardēs that ye haue chosen: ye shalbe as an

Esa.29.b to drie strawe, and he that made them to a sparke. And they shal both burne together, so that no man shalbe able to quench them.

The seconde Chapter.

A THe worde that Esaye the sonne of Amos, vpon Juda and Jerusalem. It will be also in processe of tyme: That the hill where the Mich.4.a the house of the LORDE is buylded, shal be set Zach.8.d aboue all hilles. And all heithē shal preasse vnto him and the multitude of people shall go vnto Psal.121.a him, speakinge thus one to another: vp, let Iere.31.a us go to the hill of the LORDE, and to the house of the God of Jacob: that he maye shewe Psal.49.a us his waye, and that we maye walke in his Acto.1.a pathes. For the lawe shal come out of Syon, and the worde of God from Jerusalem, and shal geue sentence amonge the heithen, and shal reforme the multitude of people: So that they shal breake their swerdes and speares, to make sythes, sycles and sawes therof.

Ioel.3.b From that tyme forth shal not one people lift vp wapen agaynst another, nether Mich.4.b shal they lerne to fight from thens forth. It is to the that I crie (o house of Jacob) vp, let us walke in the light of the LORDE. But thou art scatred abrode with thy people (o house of Jacob) for ye go farre beyonde your fathers, whether it be in Sorcerers (whom ye haue as the phylistynes had) or in calkers of mens byrthes, wherof ye haue to many. As soone as youre londe was ful of syluer and golde, and no ende of youre treasure: so soone as youre londe was ful of stronge horses and no ende of youre charettes:
Deut.8.c and 17.d
Esa.44.b. Immediatly was it ful of Idols also, euen workes of youre owne hondes, which ye youre selues haue facioned, and youre fyngers haue made. There kneleth the man, there falleth the man downe before them, so that thou canst not brynge him awaye from thence.

And therfore get the soone in to some rock, and hyde the in the grounde from the sight
2.Tess.1.b of the fearful iudge, and from the glory of his Magestie. Which casteth downe the high lokes of presumptuous personnes, and bryngeth lowe the pryde of mā, and he only shall Esa.5.b be exalted in that daye. For the daye of the LORDE of hostes shal go ouer all pryde and presumpciō, vpon all thē that exalte thē selues, and shal brynge them all downe: vpō all high stoute Cedre trees of Libanus, and vpon all the okes of Basan, vpon all high hilles, and vpon all stoute mountaynes, vpon all costly towres, and vpon all stronge walles, vpon all shippes of the see, and vpon euery thinge that is glorious and pleasaunt to loke vpon.

And it shall brynge downe the pryde of man, and laye mans presumptuousnesse full lowe, and the LORDE shal only haue the victory in that daye. But the Idols shal vtterly be roted out. Men shal crepe in to holes of stone, and in to caues of the earth, from the sight of the fearfull iudge, and from the glory of his magestie: what tyme as he shal make him vp to shake the earth. Then, the shal mā cast awaye his goddes of syluer and golde (which he neuertheles had made to honoure thē) vnto Molles and Backes: that he maye the better crepe in to the caues and rockes, and in to the cliffes of hard stones, from the sight of the fearful iudge and from the glory of his Magestie.

The thirde Chapter.

EVery man can eschue a persone moued to anger, for what doth he wysely? Euen so shal the LORDE of hooستes take awaye fro Jerusalē and Juda, all possessiōs and power, all meat and drinke, the captayne and the soudyar, the iudge and the prophete, the wyse and the aged mā, the worshipful of fiftie yeare olde, and the honorable: the Senatours, and men of vnderstondinge: the masters of crafte and oratours. And I shal geue you children to be youre princes (saieth the LORDE) and babes shall haue the rule of you. One shal euer be doinge violence and wronge to another. The boye shal presume agaynst the elder, and the vyle persone agaynst the honorable. Yee one shal take a frende of his owne kynred by the bosome, and saye: thou hast clothinge, thou shalt be oure heade, for thou mayest kepe us from this fall and parell.

Then shall he sweare and saye: I can not helpe you. Moreouer, there is nether meate nor clothinge in my house, make me no ruler of the people. For Jerusalem and Juda must decaye, because that both their wordes and councels are agaynst the LORDE, they prouoke the presence of his magestie vnto anger. The chaunginge of their countenaunce bewrayeth them, yee they declare their owne synnes them selues, as the Sodo mites, & hyde thē not. Wo be vnto their soules, for they shalbe heuely rewarded. Then shal they saye: O happie are the godly, for they maye enioye the frutes of their studies. But wo be to ỹ vngodly and vnrighteous for they shalbe rewarded after their workes. O my people, rybaudes oppresse ỹ, and women haue rule of the.

O my people, thy leders deceaue the, and treade out the waye of thy footsteppes. The LORDE is here to comon of the matter, and stondeth to geue iudgment with the people. The LORDE shal come forth to reason with the Senatours and prynces of his people, and shal saye thus vnto them: Ye ye that haue burnt vp my vynyearde, the robbery of the poore is in youre house. Wherfore do ye oppresse my people, and marre ỹ faces of the innocentes? thus shal the God of hooستes reuyle them.

Moreouer thus saieth ỹ LORDE: Seinge the doughters of Sion are become so proude, and come in with stretched out neckes, and with vayne wanton eyes: seinge they come in trippinge so nycely with their fete: Therfore shal the LORDE shaue the heades of the doughters of Sion, and make their bewtie bare in that daye. In that daye shal the LORDE take awaye the gorgiousnes of their apparel, and spanges, cheynes, partlettes, and colares, bracelettes and hooues, ỹ goodly floured, wyde and broderd raymēt, bussh es and headbandes, rynges and garlādes, holy daye clothes and vales, kerchues and pynnes, glasses and smockes, bonettes and taches.

And in steade of good smell there shalbe stynck amonge them. And for their gyrdles there shalbe lowse bondes. And for weliset haye there shalbe baldnesse. In steade of a stomacher, a sack cloth, and for their bewty wythrednesse and sonneburnynge. Their husbondes and their mightie men shall perish with the swerde in batell.

The fourth Chapter.

AT that tyme shall their gates mourne and complayne, and they shal syt as desolate folck vpon the earth. Then shal seuen wyues take holde of one man, and saye: we will laye all oure meat and cloothinge togethyr in comon, only that we maye be called thy wyues, and that this shamefull reprofe maye be take fro vs. After that tyme shal the braunch of ỹ LORDE be beutiful and mightie, and ỹ frute of the earth shalbe faye and pleasaunt for those Israelites that shall springe therof. Then shall the remnaunt in Sion and the remnaunt at Jerusalem be called holy: namely all soch B as are written amonge the lyuynge at Jerusalem: what tyme as the LORDE shall wasly awaye the desolacion of the doughters of Sio, ad pourge the blonde out from Jerusalē, wt ỹ wynde of his smoke and fyre.

Moreouer vpon all the dwellinges of the hill of Sion and vpon their whole congregacion, shal the LORDE prouyde a cloude and smoke by daye, and the shyninghe of a flammynge fyre by nyght, for all their glory shalbe preserued. And Jerusalem shall be a tabernacle for a shadowe because of hete in the daye tyme, a place and refuge where a man maye kepe him for wether and rayne.

The V. Chapter

NOw well than, I will synge my beloued frende a songe of his vynyearde. A My beloued frende hath a vyneyearde in Iere. 2. c a very frutefull plenteous grounde. This Matth. 21.
he hedged, this he walled rounde aboute, and planted it with goodly grapes. In the myddest of it buylded he a towre, and made a wyne presse therin And afterwarde when he loked ỹ it shulde bringe him grapes, it brought forth thornes. I shewe you now my cause (o ye Cityzens of Jerusalem and whole Juda:) Judge I praye you betwixte me: and my wynegardinge. What more coude haue bene done for it, that I haue not done? Wherfore then hath it geuen thornes, where I loked to haue had grapes of it? Iere. 2. d

Well, I shall tell you how I will do wt my vynyarde: I will take the hedge from it, that it maye perish, and breake downe ỹ wall, that it maye be troden vnder fote. I will laye it waist, that it shall nether be twysted nor cut, but beare thornes and briares. I wil also forbyd ỹ cloudes, that they shal not rayne vpon it. As for the vynyarde of the LORDE of hooستes it is the house of Israel, and whole Juda his fayre plantinge. Of these he loked for equyte, but se there is wronge: for righteousnesse, lo, It is but misery.

Wo to you that ioyne one house to another, and bringe one londe so nigh vnto another, till ye can get no more grounde. Wil ye dwell vpon the earth alone? The LORDE of hooستes rowneth me thus i myne eare: shal not many greater and more gorgious houses be so waist, that no man shall dwell in thē? And ten akers of vynes shal geue but a Quarte, and xxx. bushels of sede shal geue but three. B Esaie 22. g and 56. a

The vj Chapter.

IN the same yeare y kynge Osias dyed, I sawe the LORDE sittinge vpon an Y 3 Reg. 22 Reg. 2 Par. high and glorious seate, and his trayne fylled y palace. From aboue stakred the Seraphins, wherof euery one had sex wynges. With twayne ech couered his face, w twayne his fete, and with twayne dyd he flye. They cried also ech one to other on this maner: holy, holy, holy is the LORDE Apoc. B of hoosties. The whole worlde is ful of his glory. Yee the geastes and dorechekes moued at their crienge, and the house was ful of smoke. Then I sayde: O wo is me. For I
M Mat. Mar. Luc. Act. Iohā Rom. was astomished: that I (which am a man of vnclene lippes, and dwell amonge people y hath vnclene lippes also:) Shulde se y Kynge and LORDE of hoosties with myne eyes.

Then flewe one of the Seraphins vnto me, hauinge a hote cole in his honde, which he had taken from the aulter with the tonges, and touched my mouth, and sayde: lo, this hath touched thy mouth, & thy vnrightouousnes is taken awaye, and thy synne forgeuen. After this I herde the voyce of the LORDE takinge advysement on this maner: Whom shall I sende, and who wilbe oure messaunger? Then I sayde: here am I, sende me. And so he sayde: go, and tel this people: ye shall heare in dede, but ye shal not vnderstonde, ye shal plainly se, and not perceaue. Harden the harte of this people, stoppe their eares, and shut their eyes, that they se not w their eyes, heare not with their eares, and vnderstonde not with their hartes, and conuerte and be healed.

Then spake I: LORDE, how longe shal

swered: vntil the cities be vtterly without inhabitours, and ỹ houses without men, till the lõde be also desolate, and lye vnbuyl ded. For the LORDE shal take the men far re awaye, so that the londe shal lye waist Neuertheles, the tenth parte shal remay ne therin, for it shal conuerte and be frute ful. And likewise as the Terebyntes and Oketrees bringe forth their frutes, so shal the holy sede haue frute.

The seuenth Chapter.

IT happened in the tyme of Ahas the sonne of Jonathas, which was the son ne of Joathan Kynge of Juda: that Re zin the Kinge of Siria, and Poca Rome lies sonne, Kynge of Israel: wente vp to ward Jerusalem to besege it (but wanne it not.) Now when the house of Dauid (that is Ahas) herde worde therof, ỹ Siria and Ephraim were confederate together: his herte quaked (yee and ỹ hertes also of his people) like as a tre in the felde, that is moued with the wynde.

Then sayde God vnto Esay: go mete Ahas (thou and thy sonne Sear Jasub) at the heade of ỹ ouer pole, in the fote path by the fullers grounde, and saye vnto him: take hede to thy self and be still, but feare not, nether be faynt harted, for these two tales: that is: for these two smokynge fyre brandes, the wrath and furiousnes of Re zin the Sirian and Romelies sonne: becau se that the Kynge of Siria Ephraim and Romelies sonne haue wekedly conspyred agaynst the, sayenge: We will go downe in to Juda, vexe thẽ, and bringe them vn der vs, and set a Kynge there, euen the son ne of Taball. For thus saieth the LORDE God ther to, It shall not so go forth, ne ther come so to passe: for the head citie of ỹ Sirians is Damascus, but the head of Da mascus is Rezin. And after fyue and three score yeare, shal Ephraim be no more a peo ple. And the chefe citie of Ephraim is Sa maria, but the head of Samaria is Rome lies sonne. And yf ye beleue not, there shall no promyse be kepte with you.

Moreouer, God spake vnto Ahas, sayen ge requyre a token of the LORDE thy God, whether it be towarde the depth beneth or towarde ỹ hight aboue. Thẽ sayde Ahas: I will requyre none, nether will I tempte the LORDE. The LORDE answered: Then he are to, ye of the house of Dauid: Is it not ynough for you, that ye be greuous vnto men, but ye must greue my God also? And therfore the LORDE shal geue you a token of him self: Beholde, a virgin shal cõceaue and beare a sonne, and shal call his name Emanuel. Butter and hony shal he eate, ỹ he maye knowe the euel, and chose ỹ good. But or euer that childe come to knowlege, to eschue the euel and chese the good: The londe (that thou art so afrayde for) shalbe declate of both hir kynges. Luc. 1 d Math. 1 d

The LORDE also shal sende a tyme vpon the, vpon thy people, and vpõ thy fathers house (soch as neuer came sence the tyme ỹ Ephraim departed from Juda) thorow ỹ kynge of the Assirians. For at the same ty me shal the LORDE whistle for the flyes ỹ are aboute the water of Egipte, and for ỹ Beyes in the Assirians londe. These shall come, and shal light all in the valeyes, in ỹ vowtes of stone, vpon all grene thinges, and in all corners. 2. Par. 32 a Esa. 36 a

At the same tyme shal the LORDE shaue the hayre of the heade and the fete and the beerd clene of, with the rasoure that he shall paye them withall beyonde the wa ter: namely, with ỹ kynge of the Assirians. At the same tyme shall a man lyue with a cowe, and two shepe. Then because of the aboundaunce of mylck, he shal make but ter and eat it. So that euery one which re mayneth in the londe, shal eate butter and hony. At the same tyme all vynyardes (though there be a thousand vynes in one, and were solde for a thousand siluerlinges) shalbe turned to briers and thornes. Like as they shal come in to the londe with aro wes and bowes, so shal all the londe be come briers and thornes. And as for all hil les that now are hewen downe, thou shalt not come vpõ them, for feare of briers and thornes. But the catel shal be dryuen thi ther, and the shepe shal fede there. 2. Par. 32 e

The viij Chapter.

MOreouer the LORDE sayde vnto me: Take the a greate leaf, and wryte in it, as men do with a penne, that he spede him to robbe, and haist him to spoyle. And Jmmediatly I called vnto me faithful wyt nesses: Vrias the preist, and Zacharias ỹ sonne of Barachias. After that went Jn to the prophetisse, that now had conceaued and borne a sonne. Then sayde the LOR DE to me: geue him this name: Maherscha lal haschbas, that is: a spedie robber, an ha stie spoyler. For why, or euer the childe shal haue knowlege to saye: Abi and Jm, ỹ is father, and mother: shal ỹ riches of Dama scus and ỹ substaunce of Samaria be take awaye, thorow the kynge of ỹ Assirians. Esa. 30 b 4. Re. 16 b 4. Re. 17 a

B The LORDE spake also vnto me, sayenge: for so moch as the people refuseth the stilrenninge water of Silo, and put their delite in Rezin and Romelies sonne: Behold de, the LORDE shal bringe mightie and great floudes of water vpon them: namely, ỹ kynge of the Assirians with all his power. Which shall poure out his furyousnes vpō euery man, and renne ouer all their bankes. And shal breake in vpon Juda, increasinge in power, till he get him by the throte. He shal fyl also the wydenesse of thy londe wt his brode wynges, O Emanuel. Go together ye people, and gather you, herken to all ye of farre countrees. Mustre you, and gather you: mustre you and gather you, take youre councel together, yet must youre councel come to nought: go in honde withal, yet shal it not prospere. Excepte Emanuel: (that is God) be with us. For the LORDE chastised me, and toke me by ỹ honde, and warned me, sayenge vnto me: that I shulde not walcke in the waye of this people. He sayde moreuer: rounde with none of thē, who so euer saye: yonder people are bounde together. Neuertheles feare them not, nether be a frayde of them, but sanctifie the LORDE of hoostes, let him be youre feare and drede. For he is the sanctifienge, and stone to stomble at, ỹ rock to fall vpon, a snare and net to both the houses: to Israel, and the inhabitours of Jerusalem. And many shal stomble, fall, and be brokē vpon him: yee they shalbe snared and taken.

And therfore yf they saye vnto you: aske councel at the sōythsayers, witches, charmers and coniurers, then make them this answere: Is there a people enywhere, that areth not councel at his God: whether it be concernynge the dead, or the lyuynge? Yf eny man want light, let him loke vpon the lawe and the testimony, whether they speake not after this meanynge. Yf he do not this, he stombleth and suffreth hūger. Psal. 19.

The ix. Chapter

EVen like as in tyme past it hath bene well sene, that ỹ londe of Zabulon and the londe of Nepthali (where thorow the see waye goeth ouer Jordane in to the londe of Galilee) was at the first in litle trouble, but afterward sore vexed.

Neuertheles ỹ people that haue dwelt in darcknesse, shal se a greate light. As for them that dwel in the londe of the shadowe of death, vpon them shal the light shyne. Shalt thou multiplie the people, and not increase the ioye also? They shal reioyse before the euen as men make mery in haruest, and as men that haue gotten the victory, when they deale the spoyle. For thou shalt breake the yocke of the peoples burthen: the staff of hys shulder, and the rod of his oppressoure, as in ỹ daye at Madiā.

Moreuer all temerarious and sedicious power (yee where there is but a cote fyled wt bloude) shalbe burnt, and fede the fyre. For vnto us a childe shalbe borne, and vnto us a sonne shalbe geuē. Upō his shulder shal the kyngdome lye, and he shalbe called wt his owne name: The wōderous geuer of councel, the mightie God, the everlastinge father, the prynce of peace, he shal make no ende to encrease the kyngdome and peace, and shal syt vpon the seate of David and in his kyngdome, to set vp the same, to stablish it with equyte and righteousnesse, from thence forth for euermore. This shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hoostes bringe to passe.

The LORDE sent a worde in to Jacob, the same is come in to Jsrael. All the people also of Ephraim, and they that dwel in Samaria, can saye with pryde and hie stomackes, on this maner: The tyle worcke is fallen downe, but we will buylde it with harder stones. The Molbery tymbreys broken, but we shal set it vp agayne with Cedre. Neuertheles, the LORDE shal prepare Rezin the enemie agaynst thē, and sodre their aduersaries, that ỹ Sirians shal laye holde vpon them before, and the Philistynes behynde, and so deuoure Jsrael with open mouth.

After all this, the wrath of the LORDE shal not ceasse, but yet his hande shalbe stretched out still. For the people turneth not vnto him, that chastiseth them, neither do they seke the LORDE of hooſtes. Therfore the LORDE ſhal rote out of Iſrael both heade and tale, braunch and twygge in one daye. By the heade, is vnderſtonde the Senatoure and honorable man, and by ỹ tale, the prophet that preacheth lyes. For all they which enfourme the people that they be in a right caſe, ſoch be diſceaners. Soch as men thynke alſo to be perfecte amonge theſe, are but caſt awaye.

Therfore ſhal the LORDE haue no pleaſure in their yonge mẽ, nether fauoure their fatherleſſe and wydowes. For thei are altogether ypocrites and wicked, and all their mouthes ſpeake foly. After all this ſhal not the LORDEs wrath ceaſſe, but yet his honde ſhalbe ſtretched out ſtill. For the vngodly burne, as a fyre in the breyers and thornes: And as it were out of a fyre in a wod or a redebuſh, ſo aſcendeth the ſmoke of their pryde.

For this cauſe ſhal ỹ wrath of the LORDE of hooſtes fall vpon the londe, and the people ſhalbe conſumed, as it were with fyre, no man ſhal ſpare his brother. Yf a man do turne him to the right honde, he ſhal fameſh, or to the lefte hande to eat, he ſhal not haue ynough. Euery man ſhal eate the fleſh of his owne arme: Manaſſes ſhal eate Ephraim, and Ephraim Manaſſes, and they both ſhal eate Juda. After all this ſhal not the LORDEs wrath ceaſſe, but yet ſhal his honde be ſtretched out ſtill.

WO be vnto you ỹ make vnrightuous lawes, and deuyſe thinges, which be to harde for to kepe: wherthorow the poore are oppreſſed, on euery ſyde, and the innocẽtes of my people are there with robbed of iudgment: that wyddowes maye be youre praye, and that ye maye robbe the fatherleſſe. What will ye do in tyme of the viſitacion and deſtruction, that ſhal come from farre? To whom will ye reme for helpe? or to whom will ye geue youre honoure, that he maye kepe it? that ye come not amonge the preſoners, or lye amonge the deed? After all this ſhal not the wrath of the LORDE ceaſſe, but yet ſhal his honde be ſtretched out ſtill.

Wo be alſo vnto Aſſur, which is a ſtaff of my wrath, in whoſe honde is the rod of my punyſhment. For I ſhal ſende him amonge thoſe ypocritiſh poeple, amonge the people that haue deſerued my diſſauoure ſhal I ſend him: that he maye vtterly robbe them, ſpoyle them, and treade them downe like the myre in the ſtrete. Howbeit his meanynge is not ſo, nether thynketh his harte of this faſhion. But he ymagineth only, how he maye ouerthrowe and deſtroye moch people, for he ſaieth: are not my princes all kynges? Is not Calno as eaſie to wynne, as Charchamis? Is it harder to conquere Antiochia then Arphad? Or is it lighter to ouercome Damaſcus thẽ Samaria? As who ſay: I were able to wynne the kingdome of the Idolaters and their goddes, but not Jeruſalem and Samaria. Shal I not do vnto Jeruſalem and their ymages, as I dyd vnto Samaria and their ymages?

Wherfore the LORDE ſaieth: As ſoone as I haue perfourmed my whole worcke vpon the hyl of Syon and Jeruſalem: thẽ will I alſo vyſet the noble and ſtoute kynge of Aſſiria, with his wyſdome and pryde. For he ſtondeth thus in his owne cõceite: This do I, thorow the power of myne owne honde, and thorow my wiſdome: For I am wyſe, I am he that remoue the londes of the people, I robbe their princes: and (like one of the worthies) I dryue them from their hie ſeates. My honde hath founde out the hooſtes of the people, as it were a neſt. And like as egges, that were layde here and there, are gathered together: So do I gather all countrees. And there is no man, ỹ darre be ſo bolde, as to touch a fether, that darre open his mouth, or once whiſper.

But doth the axe booſt itſelf, agaynſt him ỹ heweth therwith, or doth the ſawe make eny krakinge, agaynſt him that ruleth it? That were euen like, as yf the rod dyd exalte it ſelf agaynſt him, that beareth it: or as though ỹ ſtaff ſhulde magnifie it ſelf, as who ſaye: it were no wodd. Therfore ſhal the LORDE of hooſtes ſende him pouerte in his riches, and burne vp his power, as it were with a fyre. But the light of Iſrael ſhalbe ỹ fyre, and his Sanctuary ſhalbe the flame, and it ſhal kyndle, and burne vp his thornes and breyers in one daye, yee all the glory of his woddes and feldes ſhalbe conſumed with body and ſoule. As for him ſelf, he ſhalbe as one chaſed awaye. The trees alſo of his felde ſhalbe of ſoch a nombre, that a childe maye tell them.

After ỹ daye ſhal the remnaunt of Iſrael, and ſoch as are eſcaped out of the houſe of Jacob, ſeke no more cõforte at him that ſmote them, but ſhal conforte them ſelues with faithfulneſſe and treuth in the LOR-

DE, the holy, one of Israel. The remnaunt, yee and the posteryte of Jacob, shal cõuerte vnto God the mighty one. For though thy people (o Israel) be as the sonde of the see, yet shal but the remnaunt of them only converte vnto him. Perfecte is the iudgmẽt of him that floweth in rightousnesse: and therfore ỹ LORDE of hoostes shal perfectly fulfil the thinge, that he hath determyned in the myddest of the whole worlde. Therfore thus saieth the LORDE God of hoostes: Thou my people, that dwellest in Sion, be not afrayde for the kinge of the Assirians: he shal wagg his staff at the, yee and beate the with the rodd, as the Egiptiãs dyd sometyme: But soone after, shal my wrath and my indignacion be fulfylled agaynst their blasphemies.

Moreover the LORDE of hoostes shal prepare a scourge for him, like as was the punyshmẽt of Madiã vpõ ỹ mount of Oreb. And he shal lift vp his rod ouer the see, as he dyd sometyme ouer the Egiptians. Then shal his burthen be taken from thy shulders, and his yock from thy neck, yee the same yock shal corrupte for very fatnesse. He shal come to Aiath, and go thorow toward Migron. But at Machmas shal he muster his hooste, and go ouer ỹ foorde. Gaba shal be their restinge place, Rhama shalbe afrayde, Gabea Saul shal fle awaye. The voyce of ỹ noyse of thy horses (o doughter Gallim) shalbe herde vnto Iais and to Anathoth, which also shalbe in trouble. Madmena shal tremble for feare, but the citesyns of Gabim are mãly, yet shal he remayne at Nob that daye. After that, shal he lift vp his honde agaynst the mount Sion, and agaynst the hill of Jerusalem. But se, the LORde God of hoostes shal take awaye the proude from thence, wt feare. He shal hew downe the proude, and fel the hie mynded. The thornes of the wod shal be rooted out wt yron, and Libanus shal haue a mightie fal.

The xj. Chapter.

AFter this there shal come a rod forth of ỹ Kynrede of Jesse, and a blossome out of his rote. The sprete of the LORDE shal light vpon it: the sprete of wysdome, and vnderstondinge: the sprete of councel, and strength: ỹ sprete of knowlege, and of the feare of God: and shal make him feruent in the feare of God. For he shal not geue sentẽce, after the thinge ỹ shal be brought before his eies, nether reproue a matter at the first hearinge: but with rightousnesse shal he iudge the poore, and with holynes shal he reforme the symple of the worlde.

He shal smyte ỹ worlde with ỹ staff of his mouth, & with ỹ breath of his mouth shal he slaye the wicked. Rightousnesse shalbe the gyrdle of his loynes, treuth and faithfulnesse the gyrdinge vp of his raynes. Thẽ shal ỹ wolfe dwel with the lãbe, and the leoparde shal lye downe by the gote. Bullokes, lyons and catel shal kepe compony together, so that a litle childe shal dryue them forth. The cowe and the Bere shal fede together, and their yongones shal lye together. The lyõ shal eate strawe like the oxe, or the cowe. The childe whyle he sucketh, shal haue a desyre to the serpentes nest, and whẽ he is weened, he shal put his hande in to the Cockatryce denne. No man shal do euel to another, no man shal destroy another, in all the hill of my Sanctuary. For the earth shalbe ful of ỹ knowlege of ỹ LORDE, euen as though the water of the see flowed ouer the earth.

Then shal the Gentiles enquere after the rote of Jesse (which shalbe set vp for a token vnto the Gentiles) for his dwellinge shalbe glorious. At the same tyme shal the LORDE take in honde agayne, to conquer ỹ remnaunt of his people (which are lefte alyue) from the Assiriãs, Egiptians, Arabians, Morians, Elamites, Caldeyes, Antiochiãs and Jõdes of the see. And he shal set vp a tokẽ amonge the Gentiles, and gather together ỹ dispersed of Israel, yee and the outcastes of Juda from the foure corners of ỹ worlde. The hatred of Ephraim, and ỹ enmyte of Juda shalbe clene rooted out. Ephraim shal beare no euel wil to Juda, and Juda shal not hate Ephraim: but they both together shal flye vpõ the shulders of the Philistynes toward the West, and spoyle them together that dwell toward the East. The Joumytes and the Moabites shal let their hõdes fall, and the Ammonites shalbe obedient vnto them.

The LORDE also shal cleue the tunges of the Egipciãs see, and with a mightie wynde shal he lift vp his honde ouer Nilus, and shal smyte his seuẽ streames and make men go ouer drye shod. And thus shal he make a waye for his people, ỹ remayneth from the Assirians, like as it happened to ỹ Israelites, what tyme they departed out of the londe of Egipte.

The xij. Chapter.

SO that then thou shalt saye: O LORDE, I thanke the, for thou wast displeased at me, but thou hast refrayned thy wrath, and hast mercy vpon me. Beholde, God is my healthe, in whom I trust, and am not afrayde. For the LORDE God is my strength, and my prayse, he also shalbe my refuge. Therfore with ioye shal ye drawe water out of the welles of the Sauioure, and then shal ye saye: Let vs gene thankes vnto the lorde, and call vpon his name, and declare his councels amonge the people, and kepe them in remembraunce, for his name is excellēt. O synge praises vnto the LORDE, for he doth greate thinges, as it is knowne in all the worlde. Crie out, and be glad, thou that dwellest in Sion, for greate is thy prince the holy one of Israel.

The XIII. Chapter.

THis is the heuy burthē of Babilō, which Esaye the sonne of Amos dyd se. Make some tokēs to the hie hilles, call vnto them, holde vp youre hōde, that the princes maye go in at the doze. For I will sende for my debites and my gyaūtes (sayeth the LORDE) and in my wrath I will call for soch, as tryumphe in my glory.

With that, me thought I herde in the moūtaynes, a noyse, like as it had bene of a greate people: and a rußshinge, as though the kyngdomes of all nacions had come together. (And the LORDE of hoostes was the captayne of the whole armye.) As they had come not only out of farre countrees, but also from the endes of the heauēs: Euē the LORDE himself with the minsters of his wrath, to destroye the whole lōde. Mourne therfore, for the daye of the LORDE is at honde, and commeth as a destroyer from the allmighty. Then shall all hondes be letten downe, and all mens hertes shal melt awaie, they shal stonde in feare, carefulnesse and sorowe shal come vpō them, and they shal haue payne, as a woman that traueleth with childe. One shall euer be abaßshed of another, and their faces shal burne, like the flāme.

For lo, the daye of the LORDE shall come, terrible, full of indignacion and wrath: to make the londe waist, and to root out the synne therof. For the starres and planetes of heauen shal not geue their light, the Sonne shalbe quenched in the rysinge, and the Mone shal not shyne with his light. And I will punysh the wickednesse of the worlde, and the synnes of the vngodly, sayeth the LORDE. The hye stomackes of the proude will I take awaye, and will laye downe the boostinge of tyrauntes. I will make a man dearer thē fyne golde, and a man to be more worth, thē a golden wedge of Ophir. Moreouer, I will so shake the heauē, that the earth shall remoue out of hir place.

Thus shall it go w̄ Babilon, in the wrath of the LORDE of hoostes in the daye of his fearfull indignacīō. And Babilon shalbe as an hunted or chased doo, and as a flocke w̄out a shepherde. Euery mā shal turne to his owne people, and fle echone into his owne londe. Who so is founde alone, shalbe shot thorow: And who so gather together, shalbe destroyed w̄ the swerde. Their children shalbe slayne before their eyes, their houses spoyled, and their wyues rauyshed. For lo, I shall bringe vp the Medes agaynst thē, which shal not regarde syluer, nor be desyrous of golde. Then shall yonge mens bowes be knapped asunder. The Medes shal haue no pitie vpō womē w̄ childe, and their faces shall not spare the childrē. And Babilō (the glory of kigdomes and bewtie of the Caldees honō) shalbe destroyed, euē as God destroyed Sodom and Gomorra. It shal neuer be more inhabited, nether shal there be eny more dwellinge there, from generacion to generacion. Gen. 19. c

The Arabians shall make no mo tentes there, nether shall the shepardes make their folde there eny more: but wylde beastes shal lie there, and the houses shalbe full of greate Oules. Estriches shal dwell there, and Apes shal daunse there: The litle Oules shall crie in the palaces, one after another, and Dragōs shalbe in the pleasaūt perlours. And as for Babilons tyme, it is at honde, and hir dayes maye not be longe absent.

The XIIII. Chapter.

BVt the LORDE wilbe mercyfull vnto Jacob, and wyll take vp Israel agayne, and set thē in their owne lōde. Straūgers shal cleue vnto thē, and get thē to the house of Jacob. They shal take the people, and cary thē home w̄ thē. And the house of Israel shal haue thē in possession, for seruaūtes and maydēs in the lōde of the LORDE. They shal take those prisoners, whose captyues they had bene afore: and rule those, the had oppressed thē. When the LORDE now shal bringe the to rest, frō the trauayle, feare, and harde bondage the thou wast laden with all: then shalt thou vse this mockage vpon the kinge of Babilon, and saye: How happeneth it the the oppressour leaueth of: Jt the golden tribute come to an ende: Doutles the LORDE hath broken the staff of the vngodly, and the cepter of the lordly. Which whē he is wroth, smyteth the people w̄ durable strokes, and in his wōders he persecuteth thē, and tameth thē cōtinually. And therfore the whole worlde is now at rest and quyetnesse, and men synge for ioye. A B Abdie 1. d Zach. 2. b D

B Yee euen the Fyrre trees and Cedres of Libanus reioyse at thy fall, sayenge: Now ỳ thou art layde downe, there come no mo vp to destroye vs. Hell also trembleth at thy commynge, All mightie men and princes of the earth, steppe forth before the. All kynges of the earth stonde vp frō their seates, that they maye all (one after another) synge and speake vnto the. Art thou wounded also as we? art thou become like vnto vs? Thy pompe and thy pryde is gone downe to hell: Mothes shalbe layde vnder the, & wormes shalbe thy coueringe.

Luc.10.c

How art thou fallen from heauen (o Lucifer) thou faire mornige childe? hast thou gotten a fall euen to the grounde, thou that (notwithstondinge) dyddest subdue the people? And yet thou thoughtest in thine harte: I

Apo.12.d

C will clymme vp in to heauen, and make my seate aboue the starres of God, I wyll syt vpon the glorious mount toward the North, I wyll clymme vp aboue the clowdes, & wilbe like the highest of all. Yet darre I laye, ỳ thou shalt be brought downe to the depe of hell. They that se the, shal narowly loke vpō the, and thinke in them selues, sayenge: Is this the man, that brought all londes in feare, and made ỳ kingdomes afrayde: Is this he that made the worlde in a maner waist, & and layde the cities to the grounde, which let not his prisoners go home?

How happeneth it, that the kynges of all people lie, euery one at home in his owne palace, with worshipe, and thou art cast out of thy graue like a wilde braunch: like as dead mens rayment that are shott thorow with the swerde: as they that go downe to the stones of the depe: as a dead coarse that is troden vnder fete: and art not buried wt them? Euen because that thou hast waisted thy lōde, and destroyed thy people. For the generacion of the wicked shalbe without honō, for euer. There shal a waye be sought to destroye their childrē, for their fathers wickednes: they shal not come vp agayne to possesse the londe, and fyll the worlde ful of castels and townes.

D I wil stonde vp agaynst them (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and root out ỳ name and generacion of Babilon (saieth the LORDE) & wil gene it to the Otters, and wil make water poddels of it. And I wil swepe them out with the besome of destruccion, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes. The LORDE of hoostes hath sworne an ooth, sayēge: It shal come to passe as I haue determined: & shalbe fulfilled as I haue deuysed. The Assirians shalbe destroyed in my londe, and vpon my mountaynes wyll I treade them vnder fote. Wherthorow his yocke shall come from you, & his burthen shalbe taken from youre shulders. This deuyce hath God taken thorow the whole worlde, and thus is his honde stretched out ouer all people. For yf the LORDE of hoostes determe a thinge, who wyl dysanulle it? And yf he stretch forth his honde, who wil holde it in agayne?

Esa.37.8

The same yeare that kynge Achas dyed, God threatned by Esay on this maner: Reioyse not (thou whole Palestina) as though ỳ rod of him ỳ beateth the were broken: for out of ỳ serpentes rote, there shal ware a bekatrice, & the frute shalbe a fyrie worme. But the poore shall fede of the best thinges, and the symple shal dwell in safetie. Thy rote wil I destroye wt honger, and it shall slaye ỳ remnaunt. Mourne ye portes, wepe ye Citie And feare thou (o whole Palestina) for there shal come frō the North a smoke, whose power no man maye abyde. Who shall then maynteyne the messages of the Gentyles? But the LORDE stablisheth Syon, & the poore of my people shall put their trust in him.

The XV. Chapter.

This is ỳ heuy burthē vpō Moab: Ar of Moab was destroyed (as me thought) in the night season: The walles of Moab perished in the night, & vanished awaye: They wēte to Baith and Dibon in the hie places for to wepe: Moab did mourne frō Nabo & Medba: All their heades were colled, and all their beardes shauen. In their stretes were they gyrded aboute with sack cloth. In all the toppes of their houses & stretes was there nothinge, but mournynge and wepinge. Hesebon and Eleale cried, that their voyce was herde vnto Jahaz. The worthies also of Moab bleared and cried for very sorow of their myndes: Wo is my hert for Moabs sake. They fled vnto the cite of Zoar, which is like a fayre fruteful bullock, they went vp to Luhith, wepinge. The waye toward Horonaim was ful of lamentacion for ỳ hurt. The waters of Nimrim were dried vp, the grasse was wythred, the herbes destroyed, & what necessary grene thinge there was beside. In like maner the thinge ỳ was left ouer of their substaunce, they caried it by water to Araby. The crie went ouer the whole londe of Moab: from Eglaim vnto Beer, was there nothinge but mournynge. The waters of Dimon were full of blonde, for ỳ enemie had sent thither a bonde of men, who

as a lyon, layde waite for the remnaunt of the londe, and for them ỹ were escaped.

The xvj. Chapter.

A Then sent the lordes of the lõde a mã of warre, from the rocke that lieth toward the deserte, vnto the hill of the doughter Sion (For as for the doughters of Moab, they were as it had bene a trymblinge byrde, ỹ is put out of hir nest, by the fery of Arnon) which messaunger sayde: gather youre councel, come together, couer vs with youre shadowe in the myddaye, as the night doth: hyde the chased, & bewraye not thẽ that are fled, let the persecuted Moabites dwel amõge you, be oure open refuge agaynst the destroyer: for the aduersary oppresseth vs, the robber vndoeth vs, & the tyraunte dryueth vs out of oure londe. But ỹ Trone of youre kingdome is ful of grace, therfore he that sytteth vpon it w^t faithfulnesse & treuth in the house of Dauid, knowe the thinge & do his diligence to helpe shortly, accordinge to Equite and righteousnes. As for Moabs pride (shal they answere) it is wel knowne. And all though they be excellent, prõude, arrogant, & hie mynded: yet is their strength nothinge like. And therfore Moab complayneth vnto Moab, wher thorow they come all to mourne: & now ỹ they be smytten, they take their denyce benethby the bryck wall, and make their cõplaynte.

The suburbes also of Hesebon were mase waste, & the princes of the Gentyles hewed downe ỹ vynyardes of Sibma, which were planted with noble grapes, and spred vnto Jazer, and went vnto the ende of the deserte, whose braunches stretched their selues forth beyonde the see. Therfore I mourned for Jazer, & for ỹ vynyardes of Sibma w greate sorow. I poured my teares vpon Hesebon & Eleale, for all their songes were layde downe, in their harueste & gatheringe of their grapes: Myrth and chere was gone out of ỹ felde & vynyardes, in so moch, that no man was glad ner synge. There wẽte no treader in to the wynepresse, their mery chere was layde downe. Wherfore my bely rõbled (as it had bene a lute) for Moabs sake, & myne inwarde membres, for the bryck walles sake. For it happened thus also: whẽ Moab sawe that she was turned vp syde downe, she went vp an hie in to hir sanctuary, to make hir prayer there, but she might not be helped. This is the denyce, which the LORDE toke in honde at that tyme agaynst Moab. But now the LORDE sayeth thus: In thre yeare shal ỹ power of Moab w^t their põpe (which is greate) be minished, like as ỹ burthẽ of an hyred seruaunte: And as for ỹ remnaunt of them, they shalbe lesse then a fewe, and not reken̄ed moch worthy.

The xvij. Chapter.

This is the heuy burthẽ vpõ Damascus: A Beholde, Damascus shal be nomore a cite, but an heape of broken stones. The cities of Aroer shalbe waist. The catel shal lie there, & nomã shal fraye thẽ awaye. Ephraim shal no more be strõge, & Damascus shal no more be a kyngdome. And as for ỹ glory of ỹ remnaunt of ỹ Sirians, it shalbe as the glory of the childrẽ of Israel, saieth ỹ LORDE of hoostes. At that tyme also shal ỹ glory of Jacob be very poore, & his fatnes leane. It shal happẽ to thẽ, as when one shereth in harueste, which cutteth his handful w^t the sickle, & when one gatheth ỹ sheaues together in the valley of Rephaim, there remayneth yet some eares ouer. Or as whẽ one shaketh an olyue tre, which fyndeth but two or three olyue beries aboue in the toppe, and foure or fyue in the braunches. Thus the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken. B Esa. 24. b

Then shal man cõuerte agayne vnto his maker, & turne his eyes to the holy one of Israel And shal not turne to the aulters that are ỹ worke of his owne hõdes, nether shal he loke vpon groaues & ymages, which his fyngers haue wrought. At the same tyme shal their stronge cities be desolate, like as were once ỹ forsakẽ plowes & corne, which they forsoke, for feare of ỹ children of Israel. C 4. Re. 7. d

So shalt thou (o Damascus) be desolate, because thou hast forgottẽ God ỹ Sauiour, & hast not called to remẽbraunce ỹ rock of thi stregth, Wherfore thou hast also set a fayre plãte, & grafted a straunge braunch. In the daye when thou diddest plante it, it was greate, and gaue soone the frute of thi sede: But in the daye of harueste, thou shalt reape an heape of sorowes & miseries.

Wo be to the multitude of moch people, D that russh in like the see, and to the heape of folke, that renne ouer all like greate waters. For though so many people increase as the flowinge waters, and though they be armed, yet they fle farre of, and vanish awaye like the dust with the wynde vpon an hill, and as the whyrle wynde thorow a storme. Though they be fearful at night, yet in the mominge it is gone with thẽ, This is their porcion, that do vs harme, and heretage of them, that robbe vs. Esa. 37. f

The xviij. Chapter.

A WO be to the londe of flienge shippes, which is of this syde ye floude of Ethiopia: which sendeth hir message ouer the see in shippes of redes vpō ye water, and sayeth: go soone, and do ye message vnto a straunge and harde folke: to a fearful people, & to a people ye is further then this: to a desperate and pylled folke, whose londe is deuyded from vs with ryuers of water. Yee all ye yt fyt in the compasse of the worlde, and dwell vpon the earth: when the token shalbe geuen vpō the mountaynes, then loke vp: and when the horne bloweth, then herken to, for thus hath ye LORDE sayde vnto me. I layde
B me downe, and pondred the matter in my house, at the noone daye when it was hote: and there fel a myslinge shower, like a dew, as it happeneth in harueste. But the frutes, were not yet ripe cut of, and the grapes were but yonge and grene. Then one smote of the grapes with an hoke, yee he hewed downe also the buwes and the braunches, & dyd cast thē awaye. And thus they were laydē waist, for the foules of the mountaynes, and for ye beastes of the earth together. So ye the foules sat ther vpon, and the beastes of the earth wyntered there. Then shal there be a present brought vnto the LORDE of hoostes: euen that harde folke, that fearful folke, and that further is thē this: ye desperate and pylled folke (whose londe is deuyded from vs with floudes of water) vnto the place of the name of the LORDE of hooDeut.12.a stes: euen vnto the hill of Sion.

The xix. Chapter.

A THis is the heuy burthen vpon Egipte:
Iere.46.a Behold, the LORDE wil ryde vpon a Eze.29.a swifte cloude, and come in to Egipte. And Luc.21.d the goddes of Egipte shal trymble at his cōmynge, and the hert of Egipte shal quake within her. For thus saieth the LORDE: I wil stere vp the Egiptians one agaynst a nother amonge them selues, so that one Mar.13.a shalbe euer agaynst his brother and neghboure, yee one cite agaynst another, and one kyngdome agaynst another. And Egipte shalbe choked in hir self. Whē they axe counsel at their goddes, at their prophetes, at their soythsayers and witches: then will I bringe their councel to naught.

B I wil delyuer Egipte also in to the hondes of grenous rulers, and a cruel kinge shal haue the rule of them. The water of the see shalbe drawē out, Nilus shal synke awaye, & be dronke vp. The ryuers also shalbe drawen out, the welles shal decreace and drie awaye. Rede and rush shal fayle, the grasse by the waters syde or vpon ye ryuers banke, yee and what so euer is sowen by the waters, shalbe wythered, destroyed, & brought to naught. The fyshers shall mourne, all sochas cast angles in the water, shal complayne, & they that spriede their nettes in the water, shalbe sayne harted. Soch as labour vpon flax & sylcke, shal come to pouerte, & they also that weeue fyne workes. All the pounde of Egipte, all the policie of their Moates & diches shal come to naught.

Nee the vndiscrete princes of Zoan, the councel of the wyse Senatours of Pharao, shal turne to foolishnesse: Those that darre boast & saye of Pharaos behalfe: I am come of wyse people. I am come of ye olde regall progeny. But where are now thy wyse mē? Let them tel the & shewe the, what the LORDE of hoostes hath taken in honde agaynst Egypte. Fooles are those princes of Zoan, & proude are the princes of Noph: yee they dysceaue Egypte mith the nobilite of their stocke. For the LORDE hath made Egypte dronckē with the spriete of erroure, and they shal vse it in all matters: euē like as a dronkē mā goeth spewinge aboute. For Egipte shal lacke good councel, so ye they shal not knowe what to do, nether beginnynge nor ende, nether vpon the lōde nor water. Thē shal ye Egiptiās be like vnto wemē, afrayde & astoned, at the liftinge vp of the hōde, which ye LORDE of hoostes shal lifte vp ouer them.

The londe of Juda also shal make the Egiptians afrayde, who so doth but speake vpon it, shal put them in feare: And that because of the councel, which ye LORDE of hoostes hath devysed agaynst them. Then shal the fyue cities of Egipte speake with the Canaanites tunge, and sweare by the LORDE of hoostes, & Heliopolis shalbe one of them. At the same tyme shal the LORDE of hoostes have an aulter in the myddest of the londe of Egipte, with this title ther by: Vnto the LORDE. This shalbe a token or testimony vnto the LORDE of hoostes in the londe of Egipte, when they shal crie vnto him, because of those that oppresse them: that he shal sende them a captayne and a Sauiour to delyuer them.

Moreover, Egipte shalbe bought vnto the LORDE, and the Egiptians also shal knowe the LORDE at the same tyme: they shal do him reuerence with peace offringes, and with meat offringes: they shal promyse him offringes, yee & paye him also. Thus the LORDE shal smyte Egipte, & heale it againe: ye

shal they turne to ỹ LORDE, and he also shal haue mercy vpō them, and saue them. Then shal there be a comon waye out of Egipte into Assiria. The Assirians shal come in to Egipte, and the Egypcians in to Assiria.
The Egipcians also and the Assirians shal both haue one Gods seruyce. Then shal Israel with honoure be the thirde to Egipte and Assur. And the LORDE of hooستes shal blesse them, sayenge: Blissed is my people of the Egipcians, Assur is the worke of my hō des, but Israel is myne enheritaunce.

The xx. Chapter.

A The same yeare that Harthan came to Aschod, where Sargō the kinge of the Assirians sent him, what tyme as he also be seged Aschdod, & wāne it ỹ same seasō: Thē spake the LORDE vnto Esaye ỹ sonne of Amos, sayenge: go and lowse of ỹ sack cloth frō thy loynes, and put of ỹ shues from thy fete. And so he dyd, goinge naked & barefote. Then sayde the LORDE: where as my ser uaunt Esaye goeth naked and barefote, it is a token and signifienge of the thinge, that after thre yeare shal come vpō Egipte and Ethiopia. For euen thus shal the kinge of the Assirians drive both yonge and olde, as prisoners naked and barefote, out of Egi-pte and Ethiopia, And shal dyscouer ỹ sha B me of Egipte. They shalbe also at their wit tes ende, and ashamed one of another: the Egipcians of the Moryans, and the Morians of the Egipcians, at the sight of their glory.

Moreouer they that dwel in ỹ Iles shal
saye euen the same daye: beholde, this is ou re hope, to whom we fled to seke helpe, that we might be delyuered from the kinge of ỹ Assirians. How will we escape?

The xxi. Chapter.

A This is the heuy burthē of the waist see:
A grieuous visiō was shewed vnto me,
like as when a storme of wynde and rayne rusheth in from the wylderneesse, that terri ble londe. Who so maye disceaue (sayde the voyce) let him disceaue: Who so maye distro ye, let him distroye. Vp Elam, besege it o Madai, for I will still all their gronynges.
With this, the raynes of my backe were ful of payne: panges came vpon me, as vpon a woman in hir trauayle. When I herde it, I was abasshed: and whē I loked vp, I was afrayde. Myne herte paunted, I trembled for feare. The darckneesse made me fearfull in my mynde.

B Yee soone make redy the table (sayde this voyce) kepe the watch, eate and drynke: Vp ye captaynes, take you to youre shylde, for thus the LORDE hath charged me: go thy waye, and set a watchmā, that he maye tell what he seyth. And whē he had wayted di ligētly, he sawe two horsmen: the one rydin

ge vpon an Asse, the other vpon a camel.
And the lyon cried: LORDE, I haue stonde waytinge all the whole daye, and haue kepte my watch all the night. With ỹ came there one rydinge vpon a charet, which answered, and sayde: Babilon is fallen, she is Iere. 51. a turned vpsyde downe, and all ỹ ymages of Apo. 14. b and 18. a hir goddes are smytten to ỹ grounde. This (o my felowe throsshers and fanners) haue
I herde of the LORDE of hooستes the God of Israel, to shewe it vnto you.

The heuy burthen of Duma.

One of Seir cried vnto me: watchman, Iere. 49. b
what hast thou espied by night? Watchman, what hast thou espied by night? The watchman answered: The daye breaketh on, and the night is cōmynge: Yf youre re-queste be earneste, then axe, and come agayne.

The heuy burthen vpon Arabia.

At euen ye shal abyde in the wod, in the C waye toward Dedanim. Mete the thurstie Esa. 16. a with water, (o ye citisens of Hema) mete those with bred that are fled. For thei shal runne awaye from the weapen, from the drawē swerde, from the bēt bowe, and from the greate batell. For thus hath the LOR-DE spoken vnto me: ouer a yeare shal all the power of Cedar be gone, like as when the of fice of an hyred seruaunte goeth out: And, the remnaunt of the good Archers of Ce- Iere. 49. c dar, shalbe very few: For the LORDE God of Israel hath spoken it.

The xxij. Chapter.

The heuy burthen, apon the valley of Visions.

What hast thou there to do, that thou A clymmest vp in to the house toppe, o thou citie of miracles, sedicious and wil-full? seinge, thy slayne mē are nether killed
w̄ swerde, ner deed in batel? For all thy ca-ptaynes gat them to their horses from the ordinaunce, yee they are altogether rydden awaye, and fled farre of. When I perceaued ỹ, I sayde: awaye fro me, ỹ I maye wepe bytterly. Take no laboure for to cōforte me, Iere. 9. a as touchinge the destruction of my people. Luce 19. d
For this is ỹ daye of the LORDE of hooستes, wherin he will plage, treade downe, and we

de out the valley of Visiõs, and breake downe the walles, with soch a crack, that it shal geue a sownde in the mountaynes.

B I sawe the Elamites take the quyuers to carte and to horse, and that the walles were bare from harnesse. Thy goodly valleys were ful of Charettes, the horse men made them soone to besege the gates. Then was the couerinye of Juda put from thence, and then was sene the sege of the tymbre house. There shal ye se the rifres in the walles of 3.Reg.5.b the cite of Dauid, wherof there shalbe many. Ye shal gather togeither the waters of the lower pole, and tel the houses of Jerusalẽ, and breake of some of thẽ to kepe ỽ walles. And ye shal make a pyt betwyxte ỽ twayne walles of the water of the olde pole, and nothinge regarde him, that toke it in honde and made it. And at the same tyme shal ỽ LORDE of hoostes cal mẽ to wepinge mourninge, to baldnesse and puttinge on of sack clothe. But they to fulfil their lust and wilfulnes, slaugter oxẽ, they kyll shepe, they Sap.2.b eate costly meate, & drynke wyne: let vs eate
1.Cor.15.c and drinke, tomorow we shal die. Neuerthelesse whẽ the LORDE of hoostes herde of it, he sayde: yee, yf this wickednes of yours shalbe remitted, ye must die for it. This hath ỽ LORDE God of hoostes spoken.

C Thus sayeth the LORDE God of hoostes:
Esa.36.a Go in to the treasury vnto Sobna the gouernoure, and saye vnto him: What hast thou here to do? & from whẽce comest thou: that thou hast made the a graue here? For he had caused a costly tombe of stone to be made for himself, and a place to lye in to be hewen out of a rock. Beholde the LORDE shal cast the out by violence, he will deck the of another fashion, and put vpon the a straunge clothe. He shal carie ỽ in to a farre coũtre, like a ball with his hondes. There shalt thou die, there shal the pompe of thy charettes haue an ende: thou vylleyne of the house of thy LORDE: I wil shute the out of thine office, and put the from thine estate.

D After this wil I cal my seruaunt Eliakim, ỽ sonne of Helkia, and araye him with thy cote, and gyrde him with thy gyrdle, and I wil geue thy power in to his honde. He shalbe a father of the citisens of Jerusa-Apo.1.d lem, and of the Kynred of Juda. I will also Iob 12.b laye the keye of Dauids house vpon his shulders, and yf he open, no man shal shit, and yf he do shyt, no man shal open. I wil fasten Zach.10.a him to a nale in the place of the most hie faithfulnesse, and he shalbe vpon the glorius trone of his fathers house. They shal hãge vpon him all the glory of his fathers house, of the children and childers childrẽ, all apparel small and great, all instrumentes of measure & musike. This shal come to passe, (saieth the LORDE of hoostes) when the nale, ỽ is fastened to the place of the highest faithfulnesse: shalbe pluckt of, And whẽ the weight that hangeth vpon it, shal fall, be broken, and hewen in peces. For the LORDE himself hath sayde it.

The xxiij. Chapter.

NN heuy burthen vpon Tirus. Mourne ye shippes of Tharsis, for she is throwne downe to the grounde, and conquered of them, that are come from Cithim. The Jndwellers of the Jlondes, the marchauntes of Sidon, and they that occupied the se (of whom thou wast ful somtyme) are at a poynte. For by see were there frutes brought vnto the, and all maner of corne by water. Thou wast the comon marcket of al people. Sidõ is sory for it, yee and all ỽ power of the see cõplaneth, and saieth: O ỽ Jhad neuer traueled with childe, that Jhad neuer borne eny, ỽ Jhad nether norished boye, ner brought vp doughter. As soone as Egipte perceaueth it, she wilbe as sory as Tirus it self. Go ouer the see, Mourne ye ỽ dwel in the Jles. Js not that the glorious cite, which hath bene of longe antiquite whose natyues dwellinge farre of, commende her so greatly? Who hath deuysed soch thinges vpon Tirus the crowne of al cities, whose marchaũtes and captaynes were the highest and principal of the worlde? Euẽ the LORDE of hoostes hath deuysed it, B that he maye put downe al pompe, and minish all the glory of the worlde. Go thorow thy londe (o thou doughter of the see) as men go ouer the water, and there is not a gyrdle more.

Thus the LORDE that remoueth the kingdomes, and hath taken in hande agaynst that mightie Canaan to rote it out:) hath stretched out his honde ouer the see, and sayde: From hence forth shalt thou make no more myrth (o thou doughter Sidon) for thou shalt be put downe of the Cethẽs. Stonde vp therfore, and go where the enemie wil carie the, where thou shalt also haue no rest. Beholde (for thyne ensample:) The Caldees were soch a people, that no man was like them, Assur buylded them: he set vp his castels & palaces, and broke them downe agayne. And therfore mourne (ye shippes of the see) for youre power shalbe throwne downe.

After that, shal the lxx yeares of Tirus (euen as longe as their kinges life was) be forgotten. And after lxx. yeares, it shal happē to Tirus as with an harlot that playeth vpon a lute. Take thy lute (saie men to her) and go aboute the citie, thou art yet an vnknowne wensche, make pastyme with dyuerse balettes, wherby, thou mayest come in to acquaintaunce. Thus shal it happen
a after lxx. yeares. The LORDE shal viset the citie of Tirus, and it shal come agayne to hyr Marchaundyse, and shal occupie with al the Kingdomes that be in the worlde. But all hir occupiēge and wynnynge, shalbe
b halowed vnto the LORDE. For then shal they laye vp nothinge behinde them nor vpon heapes: but the marchaūdise of Tirus shal belōge vnto the citisens of the LORDE, to the fedinge and susteninge of the hūgrie, and to the clothinge of the aged.

The xxiiij. Chapter.

A BEholde, ỹ LORDE shal waist and plage the worlde, he shal make the face of the b earth desolate, & scatre abrode ỹ inhabitours therof. Then shal the preist be as the people, the master as the seruaunt, the dame, like the mayde, the seller like the byer, he that lēdeth vpon vsury, like him ỹ borroweth vpō vsury, the creditoure, as the detter. Yee miserably shal ỹ worlde be waysted & clene destroyed. For ỹ LORDE hath so determed in himself. The earth shalbe heuye and decaye: The face of ỹ earth shal perish & fal awaye, the prouide people of ỹ worlde shal come to naught, For ỹ earth is corrupte of hir indwellers.

B For why they haue offended ỹ lawe, chaunged the ordinaūces, and made the euerlastinge testamēt of none effecte, And therfore shal the curse deuoure the earth: for they ỹ dwel therō, haue synned. wherfore they shal be brent also, and those that remayne, shalbe very few. The swete wyne shal mourne, the grapes shalbe weake, and all ỹ haue bene merie in harte, shal sighe. The myrth of tabrettes shalbe layde downe, the chere of the ioyful shal ceasse, and the pleasure of flutes shal haue an ende: there shal no more wyne be dronke with myrth, the beer shal be bytter to thē that drinke it, the wicked cities shalbe broken downe, all houses shalbe shut, that no man maye come in.

In the stretes shal there be lift vp a crie because of wyne, all mens chere shal vanish awaye, and all ioye of the earth shal passe. Desolacion shal remayne in the cities, and the gates shalbe smytten with waistnesse. For it shal happen vnto all londes and to all people, like as when a mā smyteth downe ỹ olyues, ỹ are left vpon the tre: or seketh after grapes, when the wyne gatheringe is out. And those same (that remayne) shal lift vp their voyce, and be glad, & shal magnifie the glory of the LORDE, euen from the sē, & pray se the name of the LORDE God of Israel, in the valeis and Ilōdes. We heare songes sunge to the prayse of the righteous, frō al the endes of the worlde. Therfore I must speake: O my vnfrutfulnesse, o my powerte, Wo is me, all is ful of synneres, which offende of purpose and malice. And therfore, (o thou that dwellest vpon the earth) there is at hōde for the, feare, pyt and snare. Who so escapeth the terrible crie, shal fall in to the pyt. And yf he come out of the pyt, he shalbe takē with the snare. For the wyndowes aboue shalbe opened, and the foundacion of the earth shal moue.

The earth shal geue a greate crack, it shal haue a sore ruyne, and take an horrible fall. The earth shal stacker like a dronken man, and be takē awaye like a tent. Hir misdedes shal lie so heuye vpō her, ỹ she must fall, and neuer rise vp agayne. At the same tyme shal the LORDE mustre together the hie hooste aboue, and ỹ kynges of the worlde vpon the earth. These shalbe coupled together as prisoners be, and shalbe shut in one warde and punished innumerable daies. The Moone and the Sonne shalbe ashamed, when the LORDE of hoostes shal rule them at Jerusalem vpon the mount Sion, before and with his excellent councel.

The xxv. Chapter

A GLORDE, thou art my God, I wil praise the, and magnifie ỹ name: For thou bringest marvelous thinges to passe, acordinge to thine olde councels, truly and stedfastly. Thou makest of townes, heapes of b stone: and of head cities, broken walles: The palaces of the wicked destroyest thou out of the citie, that they shal neuer be buylded againe. Therfore the very rude people must magnifie the, and the cities of the cruel heithen must feare the. For thou art the poore mans helpe, a strēgth for the needful in his necessite. Thou art a defence agaynst euel wether, a schadowe agaynst the hete. But vnto the presumptuous, thou art like a strōge whyrle wynde, that casteth downe the boostinge of the vngodly, thou kepest men from heate with the shadow of the cloudes, thou cuttest of the braunches of tyraūntes.

B Moreuer the LORDE of hoostes shal once prepare a feast for all people vpō the hill: A plenteous, costly, pleasaunt feast, of fat and welfed beastes, of swete and most pure thinges. Upon the hill shal he take awaye the syde vale yᵗ hãgeth before yᵉ face of al people,

But Moab shalbe thorosshẽ downe vnder him, like as the straw is trodẽ vnder fete in a dõge hill. For he shal stretch out his hõdes vpon him, like as a swimmer doth to swymme. And wᵗ the power of his hondes shal he caste downe his hie pompe. As for his strõge holdes ⁊ hie walles: he shal burue them, caste thẽ downe, and fell thẽ to the grounde in to dust.

after the all the night lõge, ⁊ my mynde haisteth frely to the. For as soone as thy iudgment is knowne to the worlde, thẽ the inhabitours of the earth lerne rightuousnesse.

B But the vngodly (though he haue recaued grace) yet lerneth he not rightuousnesse, but in that place where he is punished, he offendeth, ⁊ feareth not the glory of the LORDE.

LORDE, they wil not se thine hie honde, but they shal se it, and be confounded: whẽ thou shalt deuoure them with the wrath of the people, and with the fyre of thine enemies. But vnto vs (LORDE) prouyde for peace: for thou workest in vs all yᵉ workes. O LORDE oure God, though soch lordes haue dominacion vpon vs as knowe not the: yet graũte, that we maye only hope in the, and kepe thy name in remembraunce. The malicious Tyrauntes whẽ they die, are neither in life nor in the resurrectiõ, for thou visitest thẽ and rootest thẽ out, and destroyest all the memory all of them. Agayne, thou increacest the people (o LORDE), thou increacest the people, thou shalt be praysed and magnified in all yᵉ endes of the worlde. The people that seke vnto the in trouble, that same aduersite which they complane of is vnto thẽ a chastenynge before the. Like as a wife wᵗ childe (whẽ hir trauayle cõmeth vpõ her) is ashamed, crieth and suffreth the payne: Euẽ so are we (o LORDE) in thy sight. We are with childe, we trauayle, ⁊ beare, ⁊ with the spirete we bringe forth health, wherethorow the earth is vndestroyed, and the inhabitours of the worlde perish not.

But as for thy dead men and ours, that be departed, they are in life and resurrection. They lie in the earth, they wake, ⁊ haue ioye: for yᵉ dew is a dew of life ⁊ light. But yᵉ place of the malicious Tyrauntes is fallẽ awaye. So go now my people in to thy chãbre, and shut the doore to the, and suffre now yᵗ twicklinge of an eye, till the wrath be ouerpast. For beholde, the LORDE wil go out of his habitacion, ⁊ vyset the wickednes of thẽ that dwell vpon earth. He wil discouer the blonde that she hath deuoured, she shal neuer hyde thẽ, that she hath murthured.

The xxvij. Chapter.

T Hen the LORDE with his heuye, great and lõge swearde shal vyset Leuiathã, that inuincible serpẽt: euẽ Leuiathã yᵉ crokid serpent, and shal slaye the Wallfish in yᵉ se. At the same tyme shal mẽ synge of the vyneyarde of Muscatel. I the LORDE kepe it, and water it in due season. I watch daye ⁊ nighe, that no man breake in to it. I beare no euel wil in my mynde. Who will compell me, that I greatly forgettinge all faithfulnesse, shulde burne it vp at once wᵗ thornes ⁊ bushes? Or who will enforce me to kepe or make peace? It wil come to this poynte, yᵗ Jacob shalbe rooted againe, and Israel shalbe grene ⁊ beare floures, ⁊ they shal fyll yᵉ whole worlde wᵗ their frute. Smyteth he not his smyter, as euel as he is smyttẽ himself? Destroieth he not yᵉ murtherers, as he is murthured? Euery mã recõpenseth wᵗ yᵉ measure yᵗ he receaueth: He museth vpõ his sore wyn de, as vpō the dayes of extreme heate. And therfore shal the iniquite of Jacob be thus reconciled. And so shal he take awaye all ỹ frute of his synnes.

As for aulter stones, he shal make them all as stones beaten to poulder: the Groues and Idols shal not stonde. The stronge cities shalbe desolate, and ỹ fayre cities shal be left like a wildernes. The catel shal fede and lie there, and the shepe shal eate it vp.

C Their harueste shal be brent, their wyues which were their bewtie when they came forth: shalbe defyled. For it is a people without vnderstōdinge, and therfore he ỹ created them, shal not fauoure them: and he ỹ made them, shal not be merciful to thē. In ỹ tyme shal ỹ LORDE shute from ỹ swifte water of Euphrates, vnto ỹ ryuer of Egipte. And there shal the children be chosen out one by one. Then shal the greate trompet be blowen, so that those which haue bene destroyed in the Assirians londe, and tho se that be scatred abrode in Egipte: shal come & worshipe the LORDE at Jerusalē, vpō the holy mount.

The xxviij. Chapter.

A WO be to ỹ crowne of pryde, to ỹ dronkē Ephraemites, and to the faydinge floure, to the glory of his pōpe, ỹ is vpō the toppe of the plēteous valley: which mē be ouerladen w̄ wyne. Beholde, the strength and power of the LORDE shal breake in to the londe on euery syde, like a tempest of hale, that beareth downe stronge holdes, and like an horrible, mightie and ouer flowinge water. And the proude crowne of the dronken Ephraemites, shal be troden vnder foote. And as for the faydinge floure, the glory of his pompe, which is vpon the toppe of the plenteous valley: it shal happen vnto him, as to an vntymely frute before the harueste come. Which as soone as it is sene, is by and by deuoured, or euer it come well in a mans honde.

And then shal the LORDE of hooستes be a ioyful crowne, and a glorious garlāde vnto the remnaunt of his people. Vnto the lowly, he shalbe a spriete of iudgment, and vnto them that dryue awaye the enemies from ỹ gates, he shalbe a spriete of strēgth.

B But they go wronge by ỹ reason of wyne, they fall and stacker because of stronge drynke. Nee euē the prestes and prophetes themselues go amisse, they are dronken with wyne, and weake braned thorow stronge drynke. They erre in seinge, and in judgmēt they fayle. For all tables are so ful of vomyte and fylthynes, ỹ no place is clene. What is he amonge them, ỹ can teach, instructe or enfourme the childrē, which are weened from suck or taken from the brestes: of eny other fashion, then: Commaunde ỹ maye be commaunded, byd ỹ maye be byddē, forbyd that maye be forbyddē, kepe backe ỹ maye be kepte backe, here a litle, there a litle. And therfore the LORDE also shal speake w̄ lispinge lippes and w̄ a straunge lāguage vnto this people, to whom he spake afore of this maner: This shal bringe rest, ỹ one refresh the weery, ye this shal bringe rest. But they had no will to heare. And therfore the LORDE C shal answere their stubbournes (cōmaunde ỹ maye be cōmaunded, byd ỹ maye be byd den, forbyd ỹ maye be forbyddē, kepe backe ỹ maye be kepte backe, here a litle, there a litle) That they maye go forth, fall backwarde, be brussed, snared and taken. Wherfore heare the worde of the LORDE, ye mockers that rule the LORDEs people, which is at Jerusalē. For ye cōforte yo' selues thus: Tush, death & we are at a poynte, & as for hell, we haue made a cōdicion with it: that though there breake out eny sore plage, it shal not come vpon vs. For with disceate wil we escape, and with hynblenes will we defende o' selues. Therfore thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I will laye a stone in Sion, a greate stone, a costly corner stone for a sure foundacion: ỹ who so putteth his truste in him, shal not be confouded. Righteousnes wil I set vp agayne in ỹ balaunce, and iudgment in the weightes. The tēpest of hale shal take awaye yo' refuge, that ye haue to disceaue withal, and ỹ ouerflowinge waters shal breake downe yo' stronge holdes of dissimulaciō. Thus the appoyntmēt that ye haue made w̄ death, shalbe done awaye, and the cōdicion that ye made with hell, shal not stōde. When the greate destructiō goeth thorow, it shal all to treade you, Jt shal take you quyte awaye before it. For it shal go forth early in the mornynge, and contynue only ỹ daye and ỹ night. And the very feare only shal teach you, when ye heare it. For ỹ bedde shal be so narow ỹ a mā cā not lye vpon it. And the coueringe to small, that a mā maye not wynde him self therin. For the LORDE shal steppe forth as he dyd vpon the mount Perazim, and shal take on as he dyd vpō the dale of Gabaon: that he maye bringe forth his deuyce, his straunge deuyce: and fulfil his worke, his wonderful worcke. And therfore make no mockes at it, that youre captiwyte increase not: for Jha-

ne herde the LORDE of hooſtes ſaye, that there ſhal come a ſoden deſtruction and plage vpon the whole earth. Take hede, and beare my voyce, ponder and merck my wordes wel. Goeth not the huſbonde man euer in due ſeaſon earneſtly to his londe: he moweth & ploweth his grounde to ſowe. And whē he hath made it playne, he ſoweth it with fitches or comyn. He ſoweth ſ wheate and Barlye in their place, Milium and Rye alſo in their place. And ſ he maye do it right, his God teacheth him and ſheweth him. For he treadeth not the fitches out with a wayne, nether bringeth he the cart here and there ouer the comyn, but he throſheth ſ fitches out with a flale, and the comyn with a rod. As for the wheate, he grindeth it to make bred therof, In as moch as he can not bringe it to paſſe w treadinge out. For nether the bruſſinge that the cart wheles make, ner his beaſtes can grynde it. A WO vnto the o Ariel Ariel, thou cite that Dauid wāne. Take yet ſome yeares, and let ſome feaſtes yet paſſe ouer: then ſhal Ariel be beſeged, ſo that ſhe ſhal be heuy and ſorouful, and ſhal be vnto me euen as a lyon. And thou ſhalt be brought lowe, and ſpeake out of the earth, and thy wordes ſhal go humbly out of ſ grounde. Thy voyce ſhal come out of the earth, like the voyce of a witch, and thy talkinge ſhal groane out of the myre. For the multitude of thine enemies ſhalbe like mealduſt. Thou ſhalt be viſited of the LORDE of hooſtes with thondre, earth quake, and with a greate crack, with the whyrle wynde, tempeſt, and with the flame of a conſumynge fyre. But now the multitude of all the people, that went out agaynſt Ariel: the whole hooſte, the ſtronge holdes, and ſege: is like a dreame which apeareth in the night. It is like as when an hungrie man dreameth that he is eatynge, and when he awaketh, he hath nothinge: like as when a thurſtie man dreameth that he is drinkinge, and when he awaketh, he is faynt, and his ſoule vnpacient.

Pſal. 72.c

So is the multitude of all people, that muſtre them ſelues agaynſt the hill of Sion. But ye ſhalbe at youre wittes ende, ye ſhalbe abaſſhed: ye ſhal ſtacker, and rele to and fro. Ye ſhalbe dronken, but not of wyne. Ye ſhal fall, but not thorow dronkenes: For the LORDE ſhal geue you an hard ſlepinge ſpirite, and holde downe youre eyes: namely yo prophetes and heades which ſhulde ſe, them ſhal he couer. And all viſions ſhalbe vnto you, as the wordes that ſtonde in a ſealed lettre, when one offreth it to a man that is lerned, and ſayeth: rede vs this lettre. Thē he anſwereth: I cā not rede it, for it is ſhutt. But yf it be genē to one ſ is not lerned, or ſayde vnto him: rede this lettre: Then ſayeth he. I can not rede.

Therfore thus ſayeth the LORDE: For ſo moch as this people draweth nye me w their mouth, and prayſeth me highly with their lippes (where as there herte neuerthles is farre fro me, and the feare which they owe vnto me, that turne they to mens lawes and doctrynes) therfore wil I alſo ſhewe vnto this people, a maruelous terrible and greate thinge (Namely this:) I wil deſtroye the wiſdome of their wiſe, and the vnderſtōdinge of their lerned men ſhal periſh. Wo be vnto them that ſeke ſo depe, to hyde their ymaginacion before the LORDE, which rehearce their coūcels in ſ darkne, and ſaye: who ſeith vs, or who knoweth vs?

Which ymaginacion of yours is euen as when the potters claye taketh adviſemēt, as though the worke might ſaye to ſ worke maſter: make me not, or as when an erthen veſſel ſaieth of the potter: he vnderſtondeth not. Se ye not that it is hard by, that Libanus ſhalbe turned in to Charmel, and that Charmel ſhalbe taken as a wodde? Then ſhal deaf men vnderſtonde the wordes of the boke, and the eyes of the blynde ſhal ſe without eny cloude or darknes. The oppreſſed ſhal holde a mery feaſt in the LORDE, and the poore people ſhal reioyſe in the holy one of Iſrael.

Then ſhal the furious people ceaſſe, and ſ mockers ſhal be put awaye, and all they ſ do wronge ſhalbe rooted out, ſoch as laboure to drawe mē vnto ſynne: and ſ diſcerne him, which reproueth them in the gate, & ſoch as turne good perſonnes to vanite.

And therfore the LORDE (euen the defender of Abraham) ſaieth thus vnto the houſe of Jacob: Now ſhal not Jacob be aſhamed, nor his face cōfounded, when he ſeith amonge his children (whom my hondes haue made) ſoch as halowe my name amonge them: that they maye ſanctifie the holy one of Jacob, and feare the God of Iſ rael: and that they which afore tyme were of an erroneous spriete, haue now vnderstondinge, and y^t^ soch as before coude not speake, are now lerned in my lawe.

The xxx. Chapter.

WO be to those shrenkinge children (saieth the LORDE) which seke councel, but not at me: which take a webbe in honde, but not after my will: that they maye heape one synne vpon another. They go downe into Egipte, (and axe me no councel) to seke helpe at the power of Pharao, and cõforte in the shadowe of the Egipcias. But Pharaos helpe shalbe youre cõfucion, and the comforte in the Egipcians shadowe shalbe youre owne shame. Youre rulers haue bene at Zoan, and yo^r^ messaungers came vnto Hanes. But ye shal all be ashamed of the people y^t^ maye not helpe you, which shal not bringe you strength or comforte, but shame and confucion.

Youre beastes haue borne burthens vpõ their backes towarde the South, thorow the waye that is ful of parell and trouble, because of the lyõ and lyones, of the Cockatrice and shutynge dragon. Yee the Mules bare youre substaunce, and the Camels brought yo^r^ treasure vpon their croked backes, vnto a people that can not helpe you. For the Egipcians helpe shalbe but vane and lost. Therfore I tolde you also y^t^ youre pryde shulde haue an ende. Wherfore go hẽce, and write them this in their tables, and note it in a booke: that it maye remayne by their posterite, and be stil kepte. For it is an obstinate people, vnfaithful children, children that will not heare the lawe of the LORDE.

They darre saye to the prophetes: Intromitte youre selues with nothinge, and vnto y^t^ Soythsayers: tell us of nothinge for to come, but speake frendly wordes vnto vs, and preach vs false thinges. Treade out of the waye, go out of the path, turne the holy one of Israel from vs. Therfore thus saieth the holy one of Israel: In as moch as ye haue cast of youre bewtie, and conforted youre selues with power and nymblenesse, and put youre confidence therin: therfore shal ye haue this myschefe agayne for youre destruction and fall, like as an hie wall, that falleth because of some rifte (or blast,) whose breakinge cometh sodenly.

And youre destruction shalbe like as an erthẽ pot, which breaketh no man touchinge it, yee and breaketh so sore, that a man shal not fynde a sheuer of it to fetch fyre in, or to take water with all out of the pyt. For the LORDE God, euen the holy one of Israel hath promised thus: With stilsittinge and rest shal ye be healed, In quyetnesse and hope shal youre strength lie. Notwithstondinge ye regarde it not, but ye will saie: No, for thus are we cõstrayned to fle vpõ horses. (And therfore shall ye fle) we must ryde vpon swift beasties, and therfore youre persecutours shal yet be swifter. A thousand of you shal fle for one, or at the most for fyue, which do but only geue you euell wordes: vntil ye be desolate, as a ship mast vpon an hie mountayne, and as a beaken vpon an hill.

Yet stondeth the LORDE waitinge, that he maye haue mercy vpon you, and lifteth him self vp, that he maye receaue you to grace. For the LORDE God is righteous. Happie are all thei that wate for him. For thus (o thou people of Sion and ye citisens of Jerusalem) shal ye neuer be in heuynes, for doutlesse he will haue mercy vpon the. As soone as he heareth the voyce of thy crie, he will helpe the. The LORDE geueth you the bred of aduersite, and the water of trouble. But thine instructer fleyth not farre from the, y^f^ thine eyes loke vnto thine instructer, and thine eares harken to his worde, that crieth after the and saieth: This is the waye, go this, and turne nether to the right honde nor the leffte.

Moreuer yf ye destroye the syluer workes of youre Idols, and cast awaye the golden coapes that ye deckt them withall (as fylthynes) and saie, get you hence: Thẽ wil he geue rayne to the sede, that ye shal sowe in the earth, and geue you breade of the encrease of the earth, so that all shalbe plenteous and abundaunt. Thy catel also shal he fede in the brode medowes. yee thyne oxẽ and Mules that till the grounde, shal eate good fodder, which is pourged w^t^ y^e^ fanne. Goodly ryuers shal flowe out of all his mountaynes and hilles. In the daye of the greate slaughter when the towers shal fall, the Moone shal shyne as the Sonne and y^e^ Sõne shyne shalbe senẽfolde, and haue as moch shyne, as in seuen dayes beside.

In that daye shal the LORDE bynde vp y^e^ brussed sores of his people, and heale their woundes. Beholde, the glory of the LORDE shal come from farre, his face shal burne, that no man shalbe able to abyde it, his lippes shal wagge for very indignacion, and his tunge shal be as a consumynge fyre. But ye shal synge, as the vse is in ye night of the holy solempnite. Ye shal reioyse from youre hert, as they that come with the pipe, when they go vp to the mount of the

The xxxj. Chapter.

A WO vnto them that go downe into Egipte for helpe, and trust in horses, and conforte them selues in Charettes, because they be many, and in horse me because they be lustie and stronge. But they regarde not the holy one of Israel, and they aske no question at the LORDE. Where as he nevertheles plageth ye wicked, and yet goeth not from his worde, wha he steppeth forth and taketh the victory agaynst the housholde of the frauwerde, and against the helpe of euel doers. Now the Egiptians are men, and not God, and their horses flesly and not spirete. And as soone as the LORDE stretcheth out his honde, then shal the helper fall, and he that shulde haue bene helped, and shal altogether be destroyed. For thus hath the Apo.5.a LORDE spoke vnto me: Like as the Lyon or
Gen.49.b lyos whelpe roareth vpon the pray that he hath gotten, and is not afrayde, though ye multitude of shepardes crie out vpon him, nether abashed for all the heape of them: So shal the LORDE of hoostes come downe from the mount Sion, and defende his hill.
Deut.32.b Like as byrdes flotre aboute their nestes, so shal the LORDE of hoostes kepe, saue, defende and deliuer Jerusalem. Therfore (o ye childre of Israel turne agayne, like as ye haue exceaded in youre goinge back. For in ye daye euery man shal cast out his Idols of syluer and golde, which ye haue made with youre synful hondes. Assur also shalbe slayne with the swerde, not wt a mans swerde. A swerde shal deuoure him, but not a mans swerde. And he shal fle from the slaughter, and his seruauntes shalbe taken prisoners. He shal go for feare to his stronge holdes, and his prynces shal fle from his badge. This hath ye LORDE spoke, whose light burneth in Sion, and his fyre in Jerusalem.

The xxxij. Chapter.

BEholde, the kinge shal gouerne after ye rule of rightuousnes, and ye princes shal rule accordinge to the balaunce of equite. He shalbe vnto me, as a defence for the wynde, and as a refuge for the tempest, like as ayre of water in a thurstie place, and ye schadowe of a greate rock in a drue lode. The eyes of the seinge shall not be dymme, and the eares of them that heare, shal take diligete hede. The hert of the vnwise, shal attayne to knowlege, and the vnparfite tuge shal speake planely and distinctly. Then shal the mygarde be no more called gentle, ner the churle lyberall. But the churle wil be churlishly mynded, and his hert wil worke euell and playe the ypocrite, and ymagyn abhominacios agaynst God, to make the hungrie leane, and to withholde drinke from the thurstie: These are the perlous weapons of the cuvetous, these be his shamefull councels: that he maye begyle the poore with disceatful workes, yee euen there as he shulde geue sentence with the poore. But the liberall person ymagineth honest thinges, and commeth vp with honesty.

Vp (ye rich and ydle cities), harken vnto my voyce. Ye careles cities, marcke my wordes. After yeares and dayes shal ye be brought in feare, o ye careless cities. For Harvest shalbe out, and the grape gatheringe shal not come. O ye rich ydle cities, ye that feare no parell, ye shalbe abashed and remoued: when ye se the barennesse, the vastednesse and preparinge to warre. Ye shal knock vpo youre brestes, because of the pleasaunt felde, and because of the fruteful vynyarde. My peoples felde shal bringe thornes and thistels, for in euery house is voluptuousnes & in the cities, wilfulnes. The palaces also shalbe broken, and the greatly occupide cities desolate. The towers and bulwerckes shalbe become dennes for euermore, the pleasure of Mules shalbe turned to pasture for shepe: Vnto the tyme that ye spirete be poured vpon vs from aboue.

Then shal the wilderneesse be a fruteful

felde & the plenteous felde shalbe rekened for a wodde. Then shal equyte dwel in the deserte, and righteousnesse in a fruteful londe. And the rewarde of righteousnesse shalbe peace, and hir frute rest and quietnesse for euer. And my people shal dwel in the ynnes of peace, in my tabernacle and pleasure, where there is ynoughin thē all. And whē the hale falleth, it shal fall in the wodde and in the citie. O how happy shal ye be, whē ye shal safely sowe youre sede beside all waters & dryue thither the fete of youre oxē & asses.

The xxxiij. Chapter.

THerfore wo vnto the (o robber) shalt not thou be robbed also? and vnto the that laiest wait, as who saye there shulde no wayte be layde for the: Wo vnto the which doest hurte, euen so shalt thou be hurt also. And as thou layest waite, so shal wait be layde for the also.

LORDE be merciful vnto vs, we wait for the. Thine arme is at a poynte to vyset vs, but be thou oure health in the tyme of trouble. Graūte that the people maye fle at the anger of thy voyce, & that at thy vpstondinge the Gentiles maye be scatred abrode, and that their spoyle maye be gathered, as the greshoppers are comonly gathered togeather in to the pyt. Stonde vp LORDE, thou that dwellest on hie: Let Siō be fylled with equyte and righteousnesse. Let treuth and faithfulnesse be in hir tyme: power, health, wisdome, knowlege & the feare of God are hir treasure. Beholde, their aungels crie with out, the messaungers of peace wepe bytterly. The stretes are waist, there walketh no man therin, the appoyntmen is broken, the cities are despised, they are not regarded, the desolate earth is in heuynes. Libanus taketh it but for a sporte, that it is hewen downe: Saron is like a wyldernes: Basā & Charmel are turned vpside downe. And therfore saieth ỹ LORDE: I wil vp, now wil I get vp, now wil I aryse. Ye shal conceaue stubble, and beare strawe, & youre spirite shal be the fyre, that it maye consume you: & the people shalbe burnt like lyme, & as thornes burne that are hewen of, & cast in the fyre.

Now herken to (ye that are farre of) how I do with them, & cōsidre my glory, ye that be at honde. The synners at Sion are afrayde, a sodane fearfulnesse is come vpon the ypocrytes. What is he amonge us (saye they) that will dwell by that consumynge fyre? which of vs maye abyde that euerlastinge heate? He that ledeth a godly life (saye I) & speaketh the treuth: he that abhorreth to do violence and disceate: he that kepeth his hōde that he touch no rewarde: which stoppeth his eares, that he heare no conucel agaynst the innocent: which holdeth downe his eyes, that he se no euel. He it is, that shal dwel on hie, whose sauegarde shalbe in the true rocke, to him shalbe geuen the right true meat & drynke. His eyes shal se the kynge in his glory: & in the wyde worlde, and his herte shal delite in the feare of God. What shal then become of the scrybes of the Senatoure? what of him that teacheth childrē? There shalt thou not se a people of a straunge tūge, to haue so diffused a lāguage, that it maye not be vnderstonde: nether so straunge a speache, but it shal be perceaued. C 1.Cor.14.d

There shal Sion be sene, the head citie of oure solempne feastes. There shal thine eyes se Jerusalem that glorious habitation: the tabernacle that neuer shal remoue, whose nales shal neuer be taken out worlde without ende, whose coardes euerychone shal neuer corruppe: for the glorious Magesty of the LORDE shal there be present amōge vs. In that place (where fayre broade ryuers & streames are) shal nether Gallye rowe, ner greate shippe sale. For the LORDE shalbe oure capteyne, the LORDE shalbe oure lawe geuer, The LORDE shalbe oure kinge, & he himself shalbe oure Sauioure. There are the coardes so layd abrode, that they cā not be better: The mast set vp of soch a fashion, that no bāner ner sale hāgeth therō: but there is dealed greate spoyle, yee lame men runne after the pray. There lieth no mā that saieth: I am sick, but all euel is taken awaye from the people, that dwel there. Heb.9.b

The xxxiiij. Chapter.

COme ye heithen & heare, take hede ye people. Herkē thou earth & all that is therin: thou rounde cōpasse & al that groweth ther vpon: for the LORDE is angrie with al people, & his displeasure is kindled agaynst all the multitude of them, to curse them, & to slaye them. So that their slayne shalbe cast out, & their bodies stincke: that euē the very hilles shalbe wet with the bloude of them. All the starres of heauen shalbe consumed, & the heauen shal folde together like a roll, & all the starres therof shall fall, like as the leaues fall from the vynes and fygetrees. For my swearde (saieth he) shalbe bathed in heauen, & shal immediatly come downe vpon Idumea, and vpon the people which I haue cursed for my vengeaunce. A Iaco.4.c 2.Pet.3.b

And the LORDES swearde shalbe full of bloude, & be rustie with the fatnesse & bloude

of lambes and gootes, with the fatnesse of neeres of the wethers. For the LORDE shal tyl a great offringe in Bosra, and in the lon
B de of Idumea. There shal the Vnicornes fall with the Bulles, (that is with the gia untes) and their londe shalbe washed with bloude, & their grounde corrupte with fatnesse. Vnto the also (o Sion) shal come the be recompensed. Thy floudes shalbe turned to pytch, and thine earth to brymstone, & therwith shal the londe be kyndled, so that it shal not be quenched daye ner night: But smoke euermore, & so forth to lie waist. And Soph.2.b no man shal go thorow thy londe for euer:

But Pellicanes, Storkes, great Oules, and Rauens shall haue it in possession, & dwell therein.

C For God shal sprede out the lyne of deso-lacion vpon it, & weye it with the stones of emptynes. When kinges are called vpō, the re shalbe none, and all princes shalbe awa-
ye. Thornes shal growe in their palaces, nettels & thistles in their stronge holdes, y
the dragons maye haue their pleasure the-rin, & that they maye be a courte for Estri-struous beasties mete one an other, & the wyl de kepe company together. There shal the lamia lye, & haue hir lodginge. There shall the hedghogge buylde, digge, be there at home, and bringe forth his yongeones. The re shal the kytes come together, ech one to

Deut.28. Seke thorow the scripture of the LORDE & rede it. There shal none of these thinges be left out, there shal not one (ner soch like) fayle. For what his mouth commaundeth, that same doth his spriete gather together let, or to whom he dealeth it with the line:

those shal possesse the enheritaunce from ge

The xxxv. Chapter.

BVt the deserte & wilderneesse shal re-

ghtned, and the eares of the deaff opened.
Then shal the lame man leape as an herte,
& the domme mās tūge shal geue thankes.

In the wilderneesse also there shal welles
springe, and floudes of water in the deserte.
The drie grounde shal turne to ryuers, and the thurstie to springes of water. Where as dragons dwelt afore, there shal growe swe-te floures and grene russhes. There shalbe footpathes & comon stretes, this shalbe called the holy waye. No vnclene person shal go thorow it, for the LORDE him self shal go with thē that waye, and the ignoraūt shal not erre. There shalbe no lyon, and no rauy shinge beast shall come therin nor be ther, but men shal go there fre and safe. And the

and heuynes, it shal vanish awaye.

The xxxvj. Chapter.

IN the xiiij. yeare of kinge Ezechias, came Sennacherib kinge of the Assi-rians downe, to laye sege vnto all the stronge cities of Juda And the kinge of the Assirās sent Rabsaches from Lachis toward Je rusalem, agaynst kinge Ezechias, with a gre uous hooste. which set him by the condite of the ouerpole, in the waye that goeth tho-row y fullers lōde. And so there came forth vnto him Eliachim Helchias sonne the pre-sydent, Sobna the scribe, and Joah Asaphs sonne the Secretary.

And Rabsaches sayde vnto them: Ta
Ezechias, that the greate kinge of Assiria sayeth thus vnto him: What presumpcion is this, that thou trustest vnto? Thou thinkest (peraduēture) that thou hast councel & power ynough, to mayntene this warre:
els wher to trustest thou, that thou castest
thi self of fro me? lo, Thou puttest thy trust in a broken staff of rede (I meane Egipte) which he that leaneth vpon, it goeth in to his honde & shuteth him thorow. Euen so is Pharao the kinge of Egipte, vnto all the that trust in him. But y thou woldest saye to me: We trust in y LORDE oure God: A go odly god, in dede: whose hie places & aulte-res Ezechias toke downe, and commaunded Juda and Jerusalem, to worshipe only befo re the aulter. Abyde the, thou hast made a condicion with my lorde the kinge of the As sirias, that he shulde geue the two thousan-

be horses: Art thou able to set mē there vp? Seinge now that thou canst not resist the power of the smallest prynce that my LORDE hath, how darrest thou trust in ỹ charettes and horsemen of Egipte? Moreouer, thinkest thou ỹ I am come downe hither, to destroye this londe with out the LORDES will? The LORDE sayde vnto me: go downe in to that londe, that thou mayest destroye it.

Then sayde Eliachim, Sobna & Johah vnto Rabsaches: Speake to vs thy seruauntes (we praye the) in the Sirians language, for we vnderstonde it well: And speake not to vs in the Jewes tunge, lest the folcke heare, which lieth vpon the wall. Then answered Rabsaches: Thinke ye, ỹ the kinge sent me to speake this only vnto you? hath he not sent me to thē also, that lie vpō the wall? that they be not cōpelled to eate their owne donge, and drinke their owne stale with you?

And Rabsaches stode stiff, & cried with a loude voyce in the Jewes tūge, and sayde: Now take hede, how the greate kinge of the Assiriās geueth you warnynge. Thus saieth the kinge: Let not Ezechias disceaue you, for he shal not be able to delyuer you. Moreouer, let not Ezechias comforte you in the LORDE, when he saieth: The LORDE with out doute shal defende vs, & shal not geue ouer this cite in to the hondes of the kinge of the Assiriās, beleue him not. But thus saieth the kinge of Assiria: opteyne my fauoure, enclyne to me: So maye euery mā enioye his vynyardes and fygetrees, and drinke the water of his cisterne: vnto the tyme that I come myself, & bringe you in to a londe, ỹ is like youre owne: wher in is wheat and wyne, which is both sowen with sede, and planted with vynyardes. Let not Ezechias disceaue you, when he sayeth vnto you: the LORDE shal delyuer vs.

Might the goddes of the Gentiles kepe euerymans londe, from the power of the kinge of the Assirians? Wher is the God of Hemath & Arphad? Where is the God of Sepharnaim? And who was able to defende Samaria out of my honde? Or which of all the goddes of the lōdes, hath delyuered their countre out of my power, so that the LORDE shulde delyuer Jerusalem fro my honde? Vnto this, Ezechias messaungers helde their tunges, and answered not one worde: for the kinge had charged them, that they shulde geue him none answere. So came Eliachim Elchias sonne the presidēt, Sobna the scrybe, and Joah Asaphs sonne the Secretary, vnto Ezechias with rente clothes, & tolde him the wordes of Rabsaches.

The xxxvij. Chapter.

When Ezechias herde that, he rente his clothes, & put on a sack cloth, & went in to the temple of the LORDE. But he sent Eliachim the presidēt, Sobna the scrybe wt the eldest prestes clothed in sack, vnto the Prophet Esay the sonne of Amos, & they sayde vnto him: Thus saieth Ezechias: this is the daye of trouble, of plage & of wrath: like as when a childe cometh to the byrth, but the woman hath no power to bringe it forth. The LORDE thy God (no doute) hath well considered the wordes of Rabsaches, whom his lorde ỹ kinge of the Assirians hath sent, to defie & blaspheme the lyuynge God: with soch wordes, as the LORDE ỹ God hath herde right well. And therfore lift vp ỹ prayer for the remnaunt, that yet are left. So the seruauntes of kinge Ezechias came to Esay.

A 4. Reg. 19. a

And Esay gaue them this answere: Saie thus vnto youre lorde: thus saieth the LORDE: Be not afrayde of the wordes that thou hast herde, wherwith the kinge of Assiriās seruauntes haue blaspheined me. Beholde, I will cause a wynde go ouer him, as soone as he heareth it, he shal go agayne in to his countre, there will I distroye him with the swerde. Now when Rabsaches returned, he founde ỹ kinge of Assiria layenge sege to Lobna, for he had vnderstonde, that he was departed from Lachis. For there came a rumoure, ỹ Taracha kinge of Ethiopia was come forth to warre agaynst him.

1. Reg. 25. c

And when the kinge of Assiria herde ỹ, he sent other messaungers to kinge Ezechias, with this commaundement. Saye thus to Ezechias kinge of Juda: Let not thy God disceaue the, in whom thou hopest, & saiest: Jerusalē shal not be geuē in to the hondes of the kinge of Assiria. For thou knowest well, how the kinges of Assiria haue handled all the londes, that they haue subuerted, & hapest thou to escape? Were the people of the Gētiles (whom my progenitours cōquered) delyuered at eny tyme thorow their goddes? As namely, Gozan, Haran, Rezeph, & the childrē of Eden, which dwell at Thalassar. Where is the kinge of Hemath, & the kinge of Arphad, & the kinge of the citie Sepharnaim, Ena and Ava? Now when Ezechias had receaued ỹ lettre of the messaungers, & red it, he went vp in to the house of the LORDE, & opened the lettre before ỹ LORDE. And Ezechias prayed before the LORDE on this maner: O LORDE of hoostes, thou God of Israel, which dwellest vpō Cherubim. Thou art the God, that only is God of all the kingdomes of the worlde, for thou only hast created hayē & earth. Encline thine eare LORDE & cōsidre, open thine eyes (o LORDE,) & sē, and pondre all the wordes of Sēnacherib, which hath sent his embassage to blaspheme the, the lyuynge God. It is true (o LORDE) that the kinges of Assiria haue cōquered all kingdomes & londes, & cast their goddes in the fyre. Notwithstōdinge those were no goddes but the workes of mens hondes, of wodd or stone, therfore haue they destroyed them. Delyuer vs then (o LORDE oure God) from the hondes of Sennacherib, ỹ all kingdomes of the earth maye knowe, that thou only art ỹ

D LORDE. Then Esay the sonne of Amos sent vnto Ezechias, sayenge: Thus saieth ỹ LORDE God of Israel: Where as thou hast made thy prayer vnto me, as touchinge Sennacherib, this is the answere, that the LORDE hath geuen concernynge him: Despised art thou, & mocked (o doughter of Sion) he hath shaken his heade at the, o doughter of Jerusalem. But thou Sennacherib, whom hast thou defied or blaspemed? And agaynst whō hast thou lifted vp thy voyce, & exalted thy proude lokes? euen agaynst the holy one of Israel. Thou with thy seruauntes hast blasphemed the LORDE, and thus holdest thou of thy selfe: I couer the hie mountaynes, & sydes of Libanus with my horsmen. And there wil I cut downe the hie Cedre trees & the fayreste Fyrre trees. I will vp in to the heyth of it & in to the chefest of his timbre woddes. Yf there be no water, I wil graue & drynke. And as for waters of defence, I shal drie them vp with the sete of myne hooste. Yee (saiest thou) hast thou not herde, what I haue taken in honde, & brought to passe of olde tyme? That same wil I do now also: waist, destroye, & bringe the stronge cities vnto heapes of stones. For their inhabitours shalbe like lame men, brought in feare & confounded. They shalbe like the grasse & grene herbes in the felde, like the hay vpō house toppes, that wythereth, afore it be growne vp.

Act. 9. a

E I knowe thy wayes, thy goinge forth & thy cōmynge home, yee & thy madnesse agaynst me. Therfore thy furiousnesse agaynst me, & thy pryde is come before me. I wil put a rynge in ỹ nose, & a bridle byt in the chawes of the, & turne the aboute, euē the same waye thou camest. I wil geue the also this token (o Ezechias) this yeare shalt thou eate that is kepte in stoare, & the next yeare soch as groweth of himself, and in the thirde yeare ye shal sowe and reape, yee ye shal plante vynyardes, and enioye the frutes therof.

And soch of the house of Juda as are escaped, shal come together, and the remnaunt shal take rote beneth, & bringe forth frute aboue. For the escaped shal go out of Jerusalē, & the remnaunte from the mount Sion. And this shal the gelousy of the LORDE of hoostes bringe to passe. Therfore thus saieth the LORDE, cōcernynge the kinge of the Assirians: He shall not come in to the citie, and shal shute no arowe in to it, there shall no shilde hurte it, nether shal they graue aboute it. The same waye that he came, shal he returne, and not come at this citie, saieth the LORDE. And I wil kepe and saue the citie (saieth he) for myne owne, & for my seruaunte Dauids sake.

Thus the angel went forth, and slewe of the Assirians hooste, an clxxxv. thonsande. And when men arose vp early (at Jerusalē:) Beholde, all laye ful of deed bodies. So Sennacherib the kinge of the Assirians brake vp, and dwelt at Ninive. Afterwarde it chaunsed, as he prayed in the tēple of Nesrah his god, that Adramalech and Sarazer his owne sonnes slewe him with the swearde, and fled in to the londe of Ararat. And Esarhadon his sonne reigned after him.

The xxxviij. Chapter.

NOt longe afore this, was Ezechias dead sick: And the prophet Esay the sonne of Amos came vnto him, and sayde: Thus commaundeth the LORDE: Set thyne house in ordre, for thou must dye, and shalt not escape. Then Ezechias turned his face toward the wall, & prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: Remembre (o LORDE) that I haue walked before the in treuth and a stedfast hert, and haue done the thinge that is pleasaunt to the. And Ezechias wepte sore. Then sayde God vnto Esay: Go and speake vnto Ezechias: The LORDE God of Dauid thy father sendeth ỹ this worde: I haue herde thy prayer, and considred thy teares: beholde, I will put xv yeares mo vnto thy life, and delyuer the and the citie also, from the honde of the kinge of Assiria, for I will defende the a te. And take the this token of the LORDE, ỹ he will do it, as he hath spoken: Beholde, I will returne the shadowe of Achas Diall, ỹ now is layed out with the Sonne, and bringe it ten degrees backward. So the Sonne turned ten degrees backward, the which he was descended afore.

A thankesgeuynge, which Ezechias kinge of Juda wrote, when he had bene sicke, & was recouered.

I thought I shulde haue gone to the gates of hell in my best age, and haue wanted the residue of my yeares.

I spake within my self: I shal neuer viset the LORDE God in this life: I shal neuer se man, amonge the dwellers of the worlde

Myne age is folden vp together and taken awaye fro me, like a sheperdes cotage: my lyfe is hewen of, like as a weeuer cutteth of his webb.

Whyl I was yet takinge my rest, he hewed me of, & made an ende of me in one daie.

I thought I wolde haue lyued vnto the morow, but he bruised my bones like a lyon, and made an ende of me in one daye.

Then chatred I like a swalowe, and like a Crane, and mourned as a doue.

I lift vp myne eyes into ye hight: O LORDE, (sayde I) violence is done vnto me, be thou suertie for me.

What shal I speake or say, et that he maye this doo: ye I maye lyue out all my yeares, yee in the bytternesse of my life:

Verely (LORDE,) men must lyue in bytternesse, & all my life must I passe ouer therin: For thou raysest me vp, and wakest me. But lo, I wilbe wel content with this bytternes.

Neuertheles my cõuersacion hath so pleased ye, that thou woldest not make an ende of my life, so that thou hast cast all my synnes behynde thy backe.

For hell prayseth not the, death doth not magnifie the.

They that go downe into the graue, praise not thy treuth: but the lyuynge, yee the lyuynge acknowlege the, like as I do this daye. The father telleth his children of thy faithfulnesse.

Delyuer vs (o LORDE) and we wil synge prayses in thy house, all the dayes of oure life.

And Esay sayde: take a playster of fyges, and laye it vpon the sore, so shal it be whole. Then saide Ezechias: O what a greate thinge is this, that I shal go vp into the house of the LORDE.

The xxxix. Chapter.

At the same tyme Merodach Baladã, Baladãs sonne kinge of Babilon, sent lettres and presentes to Ezechias. For he vnderstode, how that he had bene sick, & was recouered agayne. And Ezechias was glad therof, & shewed them the cõmodities of his treasure: of syluer, of golde, of spyces & rootes, of precious oyles, all that was in his cubboordes and treasure houses. There was not one thinge in Ezechias house, & so thorow out all his kingdome, but he let them se it.

Thẽ came Esay the prophet to kinge Ezechias, and sayde vnto him: What haue ye men sayde, and from whence came they vnto the? Ezechias answered: They came out of a farre countre vnto me: out of Babilon. Esay sayde: what haue they looked vpon in thyne house? Ezechias answerde: All that is B in myne house, haue they sene: and there is no thinge in my treasure, but I shewed it them.

Then sayde Esay vnto Ezechias: Vnder 4. Re. 2. e stode the worde of the LORDE of hoostes, Behold, the tyme wil come, that euery thinge which is in thine house, and all that thy progenitours haue layde vp in stoare vnto this daye, shalbe caried to Babilon, and nothinge left behinde. This sayeth the LORDE. Yee and parte of thy sonnes that shal come of the, and whom thou shalt get, shalbe caried hence, and become gelded chamberlaines in the kinge of Babilons courte: Then sayde Ezechias to Esay: Now God prospere his owne councel, which thou hast tolde me. He sayde moreouer: So that there be peace, and faithfulnesse in my tyme.

The xl. Chapter.

BE of good chere my people, be of good chere (saieth youre God) Conforte Jerusalem, and tell her: that hir trauale is at an ende, that hir offence is pardoned, that she hath receaued of the LORDES honde sufficient correction for all hir synnes. A voyce crieth: Prepare ye waye for the LORDE in the wylderneſſe, make straight ye path for oure God in the deserte. Let all valleis be exalted, and euery mountayne and hill be layde lowe. What so is croked, let it be made straight, and let the rough places be made playne feldes. For the glory of the LORDE Ioh. 1. b shal apeare, & all flesh shal se it, for why, ye mouth of the LORDE hath spoken it.

The same voyce spake: Now crie. And I Psal. 89. a all flesh is grasse, and that all the bewtie ther- Iaco. 1. b of, is as the floure of the felde. When the 1. Pet. 1. d grasse is wytthered, the floure falleth awaye. Euen so is the people as grasse, when the breath of the LORDE bloweth vpon them. Neuertheleſſe whether the grasse wyther, Matt. 5. d or the floure fade awaye: Yet the worde of Psal. 32. b oure God endureth for euer. Moreouer the Iaco. 1. b voyce cried thus: Go vp vnto the hill (o Sion) thou that bringest good tidinges, lift vp thy voyce with power, o thou preacher Jerusalem. Lift it vp without feare, and say vnto the cities of Juda: Behold, youre God: Esa. 52. e beholde, the LORDE, euen the almightie shal come with power, & beare rule with his arme. Beholde, he bringeth his treasure with him, and his workes go before him. He shal fede his flock like an hirdman. He shal gather the lambes together with his arme, and carie them in his bosome, & shal kindly intreate those that beare yonge.

Who hath holden the waters in his fist? Who hath measured heauen with his spanne, and hath comprehended all the earth of ỹ worlde in thre fyngers? Who hath weyed the mountaynes and hilles? Who hath reformed the mynde of the LORDE? Or who is of his councel to teach him? At whom hath he asked cõcel, to make him vnderstõde, and to lerne him the waye of iudgment: to teach him science, and to enstructe him in the waye of vnderstõdinge? Beholde, all people are in cõparison of him, as a droppe to a bucket full, and are counted as the leest thinge ỹ the balaunce weyeth. Beholde, ỹ Iles are in comparison of him, as the shadowe of the Sonne beame. Libanus is not sufficiẽt to minister fyre for his offringe, and all the beastes therof are not ynough to one sacrifice. All people in comparison of him, are rekened, as nothinge, yee vayne vanite and emptynesse.

Psal.61.b

C To whom then will ye likẽ God? or what similitude will ye set vp vnto him? Shal the caruer make him a carued ymage? and shal the goldsmyth couer him with golde, or cast him in to a fourme of syluer plates? Moreouer shal the ymage maker (ỹ the poore man which is disposed, maye haue somthinge to set vp also) seke out and chose a tre, that is not rotten, and carue therout an ymage, ỹ moueth not? Knowe ye not this? Herde ye neuer of it? Hath it not bene preached vnto you sence the begynnynge? Haue ye not bene enformed of this, sence the foundacion of ỹ earth was layde: That he sytteth vpon the Circle of the worlde, and that all the inhabitours of the worlde are in cõparison of him, but as greshoppers: That he spredeth out the heauẽs as a coueringe, that he stretcheth them out, as a tent to dwell in: That he bringeth princes to nothinge, and the iudges of the earth to dust: so that they be not planted nor sowen agayne, nether their stocke rooted agayne in the earth? For as soone as he bloweth vpon them, they wither & fade awaye, like the strawe in a whirle wynde.

Esa.44.c

D To whom now wil ye liken me, & whom shal I be like, saieth the holyone? Lift vp youre eyes an hie, and consider. Who hath made those thinges, which come out by so greate heapes? and he can call them all by their names. For there is nothinge hyd vnto the greatnesse of his power, strength, and might. How maye then Jacob thinke, or how maye Israel saye: My wayes are hyd from the LORDE, and my God knoweth not of my iudgmentes. Knowest thou not, or hast thou not herde, that the euerlastinge God, the LORDE which made all the corners of the earth, is nether weery nor faynt, and that his wisdome can not be comprehended: but that he geueth strength vnto the weery, and power vnto the faynte? Children are weery and faynt, and the strongest men fall: But vnto them that haue the LORDE before their eyes, shal strength be encreased, Aegles wynges shal growe vpon them: When they runne, they shal not fall: and when they go, they shal not be weery.

The xlj. Chapter.

BE still (ye Iondes) and herken vnto me. Be stronge ye people, Come hither, and shew youre cause, we will go to the lawe together. Who rayseth vp ỹ iuste from the rysinge of the Sonne, and calleth him to go forth? Who casteth downe the people, and subdueth the kinges before him: that he maye throwe them all to the groũde with his swearde, and scatre them like stuble with his bowe? He foloweth vpon them, and goeth safely himself, and cometh in no footpath with his fete. Who hath made, created, and called the generacions from the begynnynge? Euen I the LORDE, which am the first, and with the last.

Beholde ye Iles, that ye maye feare, and ye endes of the earth, that ye maye be abasshed, draw nye, and come hither. Euery man hath exorted his neghboure, and brother, and bydden him be stronge. The Smyth consorted the moulder, & the Ironsmyth the hammerman, sayenge: It shalbe good, that we fasten this cast worke: and then they fastened it with nales, that it shulde not be moued. And thou Israel my seruaunt: Jacob my electe sede of Abrahã my beloued, whom I led from the endes of the earth by the honde: For I called the from farre, & saide vnto the: Thou shalt be my seruaunt: I haue chosen the, & will not cast ỹ away: be not afrayde, for I wil be with ỹ. Lake not behinde ỹ, for I wil be thy God, to strẽgth ỹ, helpe ỹ, & to kepe ỹ with this right hõde of myne. Beholde, all they that resist the, shal come to confucion and shame: and thine aduersaries shalbe destroyed & brought to naught. So that who so seketh after them, shal not fynde them. Thy destroyers shal perish, & so shall they that vndertake to make batell agaynst the. For I thy LORDE & God, wil strength thy right honde. Euen I that saye vnto the: Feare not, I will helpe the. Be not afrayde thou litle worme Jacob, and thou despysed Israel: For I will helpe the, saieth the LORDE, & the holyone of Israel thine auenger. Beholde, I wil make the a treadinge cart & a new flale, y thou mayest throsshe & grynde the mountaynes, and bringe the hilles to pouder. Thou shalt fanne them, & the wynde shal carie them awaye, & the whyrlwynde shal scatre the. But thou shalt reioyse in the LORDE, and shalt delite in praysinge the holyone of Israel.

C When the thurstie and poore seke water & fynde none, & when their tunge is drie of thurst: I geue it them, saieth the LORDE. I the God of Israel forsake them not. I bringe forth floudes in the hilles, & welles in the playne feldes. I turne y wildernes to ryuers, and the drie londe to condytes of water. I plante in the wayst grounde trees of Cedre, Boxe, Myrre and olyues. And in the drie, I set Fyrre trees, elmes and hawthornes together. All this do I, y they altogether maye se and marcke, perceaue with their hertes, & considre: that the honde of the LORDE maketh these thinges, and that the holyone of Israel bringeth them to passe. Stonde at youre cause (saieth the LORDE) and bringe forth youre strōgest grounde, counceleth the kinge of Jacob. Let the goddes come forth them selues, and shewe vs the thinges y are past, what they be: let thē declare thē vnto vs, y we maye take them to herte, and knowe them herafter. Ether, let thē shewe vs thinges for to come, and tel vs what shalbe done herafter: so shal we knowe, that they be goddes. Shewe somthinge, ether good or bad, so wil we both knowlege y same, & tel it out.

D Beholde, ye goddes are of naught, & yo' makinge is of naught, but abhomination hath chosen you. Neuertheles I haue waked vpone from the North, & he shal come. And another from the East, which shal call vpō my name, & shal come to the prynces, as the Potter to his claye, & as y potter treadeth downe the myre. Who tolde y afore? So wil we confesse & saye, that he is rightuous. But there is none that sheweth or declareth eny thinge, there is none also that heareth youre wordes. Beholde, I will first graūte thē of Sion & Jerusalem to be Euangelistes. But when I cōsidre: there is not one amonge thē y prophecieth, nether (when I axe him) y answereth one worde. Lo, wicked are they & vayne, with the thinges also that they take in honde: yee wynde are they, and emptynesse, with their ymages together.

The xlij. Chapter.

A Beholde now therfore, this is my seruaunt whom I will kepe to my self: my electe, In whom my soule shalbe pacified. I will geue him my spirite, that he maye shewe forth iudgment & equyte amonge the Gentiles. He shal not be an outcryer, ner an hie mynded person. His voyce shall not be herde in y stretes. A brussed rede shal he not breake, & the smokinge flax shal he not quench: but faithfully & truly shal he geue iudgmēt. He shal nether be ouersene ner haistie, that he maye restore rightuousnesse vnto the earth: & the Gētiles also shal kepe his lawes. For thus saieth God the LORDE vnto him (Euen he that made the heauens, and spred them abrode, & set forth the earth with hir encrease: which geueth breath vnto the people that is in it, & to them that dwel therin) I the LORDE haue called y in rightuousnesse, & led the by the honde. Therfore wil I also defende the, & geue the for a couenaunt of the people, & to be the light of the Gētiles. That thou mayest open the eyes of the blinde, let out the prysoners, & them that syt in darknesse, out of the dongeon house. I my self, whose name is the LORDE, which geue my power to none other, nether myne honoure to the goddes: shewe you these new tidinges, and tel you them or they come, for olde thinges also are come to passe.

Synge therfore vnto the LORDE, a newe songe of thākes geuynge, blow out his prayse vnto the ende of the worlde. They that be vpon the see, & all that is therin, prayse him, the Iles & they that dwel in them. Let the wildernes with hir cities lift vp hir voyce, the townes also that be in Cedar. Let them be glad that syt vpon rockes of stone, and let them crie downe from the hie mountaynes: ascribinge almightynes vnto the LORDE, & magnifienge him amonge the Gētiles. The LORDE shal come forth as a gyaunte, and take a stomacke to him like a fresh man of warre. He shal roare and crie, and ouercome his enemies.

I haue longe holden my peace (saieth the LORDE) shulde I therfore be stil, and kepe sylence for euer? I will crie like a trauelinge woman, and once wil I destroye, and deuoure. I wil make waist both mountayne & hill, and drie vp euery grene thinge, that groweth theron. I wil drie vp the floudes of water, & drinke vp the ryuers. I wil bringe the blinde into a strete, that they knowe not: and lede them in to a fotepath, that they are ignoraunt in. I shal make darknesse light before the, & the thinge ye is croked, to be straight. These thinges will I do, & not forget them.

They are like, as yf thou vnderstodest moch, and keptest nothinge: or yf one herde well, but were not obedient. and because I set by the, and loued the. I pulled all men for the, and delyuered vp all people for thy sake, that thou shuldest not feare, for I was with the. I wil bringe thy sede from the east, and gather the together from the west. I wil saye to the north: let go. And to the south, kepe not backe: But bringe me my sonnes from farre, and my doughters from the endes of the worlde: Namely, all those that be called after my name: For the haue I created, fashioned, and made for myne honoure.

Bringe forth that people, whether they B
haue eyes or be blynde, deaf or haue eares. All nacions shal come in one, and be gathered in one people. But which amonge yonder goddes shall declare soch thinges, & tell vs what is to come? Let them bringe their witnesses, so shal they be fre: for the men shal heare it, and saye: it is truth. But I bringe you witnesses (saith the LORDE) euen those that are my seruauntes, whom I haue chosen: to the intent that ye might be certified, and geue me faithful credence: yee and to cōsidre, that I am he, before whom there was neuer eny God, and that there shal be none after me. I am only the LORDE, and without me is there no Sauioure. I geue warnynge, I make whole, I teach you, that there shulde be no straunge God amonge you. And this recorde must ye beare me youre selues (saieth the LORDE) that I am God. And euen he am I from the begynnynge, and there is none, that can take eny thinge out of my honde. And what I do, can no man chaunge.

Thus saieth the LORDE the holyone of C
Israel youre redemer: For youre sake I will sende to Babilon, and bringe all the strongest of them from thence: Namely, the Caldees that boost them of their shippes: Euen I the LORDE youre holy one which haue made Israel, and am youre kinge. Moreouer, thus saieth the LORDE (Euen he that maketh a waye in the see, and a footpath in the mightie waters: which bringeth forth the charettes and horses, the hooste and the power, that they maye fall a slepe and neuer ryse, and be extincte, like as tow is quenched.

For I ſhall geue water in ỹ wilderneſſe, and ſtreames in the deſerte: that I maye geue drike to my people, whom I chooſe. This people haue I made for my ſelf, and they ſhal ſhewe forth my prayſe. For thou (Jacob) woldeſt not call vpon me, but thou haddeſt an vnluſt towarde me, o Iſrael. Thou gaueſt me not thy yonge beaſtes for burntoffringes, nether dideſt honoure me with thy ſacrifices. Thou boughteſt me no deare ſpice with thi money, nether pouredeſt the fat of thy ſacrifices vpon me. Howbeit I haue not bene chargeable vnto the in offrinｇes, nether greuous in Incenſe.

But thou haſt ladē me with thy ſynnes, and weeried me with thy vngodlynes: Where as I yet am euen he only, that for myne owne ſelfes ſake do awaye thine offences, & forget thy ſynnes: ſo that I wil neuer thinke vpon them. The xliij. Chapter.

SO heare now, o Jacob my ſeruaunt, and Iſrael whom I haue choſē. For thus ſaieth the LORDE, that made the, faſhioned the, and helped the, euen from thy mothers wombe: Be not afrayde (o Jacob my ſeruaunte,) thou righteous, whom I haue choſen. For I ſhal poure water vpon the drie grounde, and ryuers vpon the thurſtie. I ſhal poure my ſpirite vpon thi ſede, and myne encreaſe vpō thy ſtocke. They ſhal growe together, like as the graſſe, and as the Willies by the waters ſide. One will ſaye: I am the LORDES. Another wil call vnder the name of Jacob. The thirde ſhal ſubſcrybe with his honde vnto ỹ LORDE, and geue him ſelf vnder the name of Iſrael.

Moreouer, thus hath the LORDE ſpokē: euen the kinge of Iſrael, and his auenger, ỹ LORDE of hooſtes: I am the firſt, and the laſt, and without me is there no God. For what is he, that euer was like me, which am from euerlaſtinge? Let him ſhewe his name and do wherthorow he maye be lickened vnto me. Let him tell you forth planely thinges, that are paſt and for to come: yee and that without eny feare or ſtoppe. For haue not I euer tolde you hytherto, & warned you? Ye can beare me recorde youre ſelues. Is there eny God excepte me? or eny maker, that I ſhulde not knowe him?

Wherfore all caruers of Idols are but vayne, and their laboure loſt. They muſt beare recorde them ſelues, that (ſeinge they can nether ſe ner vnderſtonde) they ſhalbe confounded. Who ſhulde now make a god, or faſhiō an Idol, that is profitable for nothinge? Behold all the felaſhippe of thē muſt be brought to confucion. Let all the workmaſters of them come and ſtonde together from amonge men: they muſt be abaſhed and confoūded one with another. The ſmyth taketh yron, and tempreth it with hote coles, and faſhioneth it with hammers, & maketh it wt all the ſtrength of his armes: Yee ſomtyme he is fayne for very hunger, and ſo thurſtie, that he hath no more power. The carpenter (or ymage caruer) taketh me the tymbre, and ſpredeth forth his lyne: he marketh it with ſome coloure: he playneth it, he ruleth it, ād ſquareth it, and maketh it after the ymage of a man, and acordinge to the bewtie of a man: that it maye ſtonde in the temple.

Moreouer, he goeth out to hewe downe Cedre trees: he bringeth home Elmes and okes, and other tymbre of the wodd. Or els the Fyrre trees which he planted himſelf, ād ſoch as the rayne hath ſwelled, which wodde ſerueth for mē to burne. Of this he taketh and warmeth himſelf withall: he maketh a fyre of it to bake bred. And after warde maketh a god there of, to honoure it: and an Idol, to knele before it. One pece he burneth in the fyre, with another he roſteth fleſh, that he maye eate roſte his bely full: with the thirde he warmeth himſelf, and ſaieth: A ha: I am well warmed, I haue bene at the fyre. And of the reſidue, he maketh him a god, and an Idol for himſelf. He kneleth before it, he worſhippeth it, he prayeth vnto it, and ſayeth: delyuer me, for thou art my god.

Yet men nether conſidre ner vnderſtonde, because their eyes are ſtopped, that they can not ſe: and their hertes, that they can not perceaue. They pondre not in their myndes (for they haue nether knowlege ner vnderſtōdinge) to thinke thus: I haue brēt one pece in the fyre, I haue baked bred wt ỹ, & drie vp euery grene thinge, that groweth theron. I wil drie vp the floudes of water, & drinke vp the ryuers. I wil bringe the blinde into a strete, that they knowe not: and lede them in to a fotepath, that they are ignoraunt in. I shal make darknesse light before thē, & the thinge ỹ is croked, to be straight. These thinges will I do, & not forget them. Esa. 44.b And therfore let them conuerte, and be ashamed earnestly, that hope in Idols, & saye to fashioned ymages: ye are oure godes.

C Heare, o ye deaf men, and sharpen youre Matt. 15.b sightes to se (o ye blinde.) But who is blynder, thē my seruaunt? Or so deaf, as my messaungers, whom I sent vnto them? Esa.44.d But who is he amonge you, ỹ pondreth this in his mynde, ỹ considereth it, & taketh it for a warnynge in tyme to come?

Who suffred Jacob to be trodden vnder fote, and Israel to be spoyled? dyd not the Baruc.1.d Tobi.3.a Dan.9.a LORDE? A Esa.41.b Ut now, the LORDE that made the .Rc.17.g (o Jacob) and he that fashioned the Deut.7.a (o Israel) saieth thus: Feare not, for Deu.26.d I will de sende ỹ. and because I set by the, and loued the. I pul led all men for the, and deliuered vp all people for thy sake, that thou shuldest not feare, for I was with the. I wil bringe thy sede from the east, and gather the together from the west. I wil saye to the north: let go. And to the south, kepe not backe: But bringe me my sonnes from farre, and my doughters from the endes of the worlde: Namely, all those that be called after my name: For thē haue I created, fashioned, and made for myne honoure.

Bringe forth that people, whether they D haue eyes or be blynde, deaf or haue eares. All nacions shal come in one, and be gathered in one people. But which amonge yonder goddes shall declare soch thinges, & tell vs what is to come? Let them bringe their witnesses, so shal they be fre: for thē men shal heare it, and saye: it is truth. But I bringe you witnesses (saith the LORDE) euen those that are my seruauntes, whom I haue chosen: to the intent that ye might be certified, and geue me faithful credence: yee and to cōsidre, that I am he, before whom there was neuer eny God, and that there shalbe none after me. I am only the LORDE, and without me is there no Sauioure. I geue warnynge, I make whole, I teach you, that there shulde be no straunge God amonge you. And this recorde must ye beare me youre selues (saieth the LORDE) that I am God. And euen he am I from the begynnynge, and there is none, that can take eny thinge out of my honde. And what I do, can no man chaunge.

Thus saieth the LORDE the holy one of C Israel youre redemer: For youre sake I will sende to Babilon, and bringe all the strongest of them from thence: Namely, the Caldees that boost them of their shippes: Euen I the LORDE youre holy one which haue made Israel, and am youre kinge. Moreouer, thus saieth the LORDE (Euen he that maketh a waye in the see, and a fotpath in the mightie waters: which bringeth forth the charettes and horses, the hooste and the power, that they maye fall a slepe and neuer ryse, and be extincte, like as tow is quenched.

Ye remembre not thinges of olde, and re- garde no thinge that is past. Therfore behol de, I shal make a new thinge; and shortly shall it apeare: Ye shall well knowe it, I tolde it you afore, but I will tell it you agayne.

I will make stretes in the deserte, and ry D

ners of water in the wilderneſſe. The wilde beaſtes ſhal worſhippe me: the dragon, and the Eſtrich. For I ſhall geue water in ỹ wilderneſſe, and ſtreames in the deſerte: that I maye geue drȳke to my people, whom I chooſe. This people haue I made for my ſelf, and they ſhal ſhewe forth my prayſe. For thou (Jacob) woldeſt not call vpon me, but thou haddeſt an vnluſt towarde me, o Iſrael. Thou gaueſt me not thy yonge beaſtes for burnt offringes, nether dideſt honoure me with thy ſacrifices. Thou boughteſt me no deare ſpice with thi money, nether pouredeſt the fat of thy ſacrifices vpon me. Howbeit I haue not bene chargeable vnto the in offrīges, nether greuous in Incenſe.

But thou haſt ladē me with thy ſynnes, and weeried me with thy vngodlynes: Whereas I yet am euen he only, that for myne owne ſelfes ſake do awaye thine offences, & forget thy ſynnes: ſo that I wil neuer thinke vpon them. Put me now in remembraunce (for we will reaſon together) & ſhewe what thou haſt for the, to make the quyte. Thy firſt father offended ſore, and thy rulers haue ſynned agaynſt me Therfore I ether ſuſpended, or ſlewe the cheefeſt princes: I dyd curſe Jacob, and gaue Iſrael into reproſe.

The xliij. Chapter.

SO heare now, o Jacob my ſeruaunt, and Iſrael whom I haue choſē. For thus ſaieth the LORDE, that made the, faſhioned the, and helped the, euen from thy mothers wombe: Be not afrayde (o Jacob my ſeruaunte,) thou righteous, whom I haue choſen. For I ſhal poure water vpon the drie grounde, and ryuers vpon the thurſtie. I ſhal poure my ſpirite vpon thi ſede, and myne encreaſe vpō thy ſtocke. They ſhal growe together, like as the graſſe, and as the Willies by the waters ſide. One will ſaye: I am the LORDES. Another wil call vnder the name of Jacob. The thirde ſhal ſubſcryde with his honde vnto ỹ LORDE, and geue him ſelf vnder the name of Iſrael.

Moreouer, thus hath the LORDE ſpokē: euen the kinge of Iſrael, and his auenger, ỹ LORDE of hooſtes: I am the firſt, and the laſt, and without me is there no God. For what is he, that euer was like me, which am from euerlaſtinge? Let him ſhewe his name and do wherthorow he maye be lickened vnto me. Let him tell you forth planely thinges, that are paſt and for to come: yee and that without eny feare or ſtoppe. For haue not I euer tolde you hytherto, & warned you? Ye can beare me recorde youre ſelues. Is there eny God excepte me? or eny maker, that I ſhulde not knowe him?

Wherfore all caruers of Idols are but vayne, and their labourē loſt. They muſt beare recorde them ſelues, that (ſeinge they can nether ſe ner vnderſtonde) they ſhalbe confounded. Who ſhulde now make a god, or faſhiō an Idol, that is profitable for nothinge? Beholde all the felaſhippe of thē muſt be brought to confucion. Let all the workmaſters of them come and ſtonde together from amonge men: they muſt be abaſhed and confoūded one with another. The ſmyth taketh yron, and tempreth it with hote coles, and faſhioneth it with hammers, & maketh it wt all the ſtrength of his armes: Yee ſomtyme he is faynt for very hunger, and ſo thurſtie, that he hath no more power. The carpenter (or ymage caruer) taketh me the tymbre, and ſpredeth forth his lyne: he marketh it with ſome colour: he playneth it, he ruleth it, ād ſquareth it, and maketh it after the ymage of a man, and acordinge to the bewtie of a man: that it maye ſtonde in the temple.

Moreouer, he goeth out to hewe downe Cedre trees: He bringeth home Elmes and okes, and other tymbre of the wodd. Or els the Fyrre trees which he planted himſelf, ād ſoch as the rayne hath ſwelled, which wodde ſerueth for mē to burne. Of this he taketh and warmeth himſelf withall: he maketh a fyre of it to bake bred. And after warde maketh a god there of, to honoure it: and an Idol, to knele before it. One pece he burneth in the fyre, with another he roſteth fleſh, that he maye eate roſte his bely full: with the thirde he warmeth himſelf, and ſaieth: A ha: I am well warmed, I haue bene at the fyre. And of the reſidue, he maketh him a god, and an Idol for himſelf. He kneleth before it, he worſhippeth it, he prayeth vnto it, and ſayeth: delyuer me, for thou art my god.

Yet men nether conſidre ner vnderſtonde, becauſe their eyes are ſtopped, that they can not ſe: and their hertes, that they can not perceaue. They pondre not in their myndes (for they haue nether knowlege ner vnderſtōdinge) to thinke thus: I haue brēt one pece in the fyre, I haue baked bred wt ỹ, coles there of, I haue rosted flesh withall, & eaten it: Shal I now of the residue make an abhominacion, and fall downe before a rotten pece of wodd? The kepinge of dust, and folishnesse of herte hath turned them a syde: so that none of them can haue a fre conscience to thinke: maye not I erre?

Cõsidre this (o Jacob and Israel) for thou art my seruaũt. I haue made the, that thou mightest serue me. O Israel, forget me not. As for thyne offences, I dryue them awaye like the cloudes, and thy synnes as the myst. Turne ẏ agayne vnto me, & I will delyuer ẏ.

Esa.43.d

Be glad ye heavens, whom the LORDE hath made, let all ẏ is here beneth vpon the earth, be ioyfull. Reioyse ye mountaynes & woddes, with all the trees that are in you: for ẏ LORDE shal redeme Jacob, & shewe his glory vpon Israel. For thus saieth the LORDE thy redemer, euen he that fashioned the from thy mothers wombe: I am the LORDE, which do all thinges my self alone. I only haue spred out the heauens, and I only haue layde the foundacion of the earth. I destroye the tokens of witches, and make the Sothsayers go wronge. As for the wise, I turne them bacward, and make their conninge folishnesse.

Rom.11.d
Esa.4.c

But I set vp the purpose of my seruauntes, and fulfil the councel of my messaũgers. I saye to Jerusalẽ: turne agayne: And to the cities of Juda, be ye buylded agayne: and I repayre their decayed places. I saye to the grounde: be drie. And I drie vp thy water floudes. I saye to Cirus: thou art myne hyrd man, so that he shal fulfill all thinges after my will. I saye to Jerusalem: be thou buylded, and to the tẽple: be thou fast grounded.

The xlv. Chapter.

Thus saieth the LORDE vnto Cirus his anoynted, whom he ledeth by ẏ right hõde: that the people maye fall downe before him: I will lowse the gyrdle of kinges, ẏ they shal open the gates before thy face, and not to shut their dores. I wil go before the, and make the croked straight. I shal breake the brasen dores, & burst the yron barres. I shall geue the the hyd treasure, & the thinge which is secretly kepte: that thou mayest knowe, ẏ I the God of Israel haue called the by thy name: and that for Jacob my seruaunt sake, & for Israel my chosen. For I called the by ẏ name, and ordened the, or euer thou knewest me: Euen I the LORDE, before whom there is none other, for wt out me there is no God I haue prepared the, or euer thou knewest me: that it might be knowne from the risynge of the Sonne to the goinge downe of the same, that all is nothinge without me. For I am the LORDE, & there is els none. It is I ẏ created the light and darcknes, I make peace and trouble: Yee euen I the LORDE do all these thinges. The heauens aboue shal droppe downe, and the cloudes shal rayne righteousnes. The earth shal open it self, and bringe forth health, and therby shal righteousnes florish. Euen I the LORDE shal bringe it to passe.

Wo be vnto him that chydeth wt his maker, the potsherde with the potter. Saieth ẏ claye to the potter: What makest thou? or, ẏ worke serueth for nothinge: Wo be vnto him, ẏ saieth to his father: why begettest thou? And to his mother: why beareste thou? Thus saieth the LORDE, euen the holy one & maker of Israel: Axe me of thinges for to come, concernynge my sõnnes: and put me in remembraunce, as touchinge the workes of my hõdes: I haue made the earth, and created mã vpon it. With my hondes haue I spred forth heauen, and geuen a commaundment for all the hooste therof. I shal wake him vp with righteousnesse, and ordre all his wayes. He shal buylde my cite, & let out my prisoners: not that nether for gift nor rewardes, saieth the LORDE of hoostes.

The LORDE hath sayde moreouer: The occupiers of Egipte, the marchauntes of the Moryans and Sabees, shal come vnto the with tribute, they shal be thine, they shal folowe the, and go with cheynes vpon their fete. They shal fall downe before the, and make supplicacion vnto the. For God (wt out whõ there is none other God) shal be with the. O how profounde art thou o God, thou God & Sauioure of Israel: Confounded be ye, and put to dishonoure: go hence together with shame, all ye that be workmasters of errour: (that is worshippers of Idols) But Israel shal be saued in the LORDE, which is the euerlastinge saluaciõ: They shal not come to shame ner confucion, worlde without ende.

For thus saieth the LORDE: euen he that created heauen, the God ẏ made the earth, that fashioned it, and set it forth: I haue not made it for naught, but I made it to be enhabited: Euen I the LORDE, without whom there is none other. I haue not spoken secretly, nether in darcke places of the earth. It is not for naught, that I sayde vnto the sede of Jacob: seke me. I am the LORDE, which whẽ I speake, declare the thinge that is righteous and true. Let thẽ be gathered & come together, let thẽ drawe nye hyther, ẏ are escaped of the people: Haue they eny vnderstondinge, that set vp the stockes of their Idols, and praye vnto a god, that cā not helpe thē? Let men drawe nye, let them come hither, ād aske councel one at another, and shewe forth: What is he, that tolde this before? or, who spake of it, euer sence the begynnynge? Haue not I ye LORDE done it: without whom there is none other God? the true God and sauioure, and there is els none but I? And therfore turne you vnto me (all ye endes of the earth) so shal ye be saued, for I am God, & there is els none. I sweare by myself: out of my mouth cōmeth ye worde of righteousnesse, and that maye no man turne: but all knees shal bowe vnto me, and all tunges shal sweare by me, sayenge: Verely in the LORDE is my righteousnes and strength. To him shal mē come: but all they that thinke scorne of him, shalbe confounded. And the whole sede of Israel shalbe iustified, & praysed in ye LORDE

The xlvj. Chapter.

Neuertheles Bel shal fall, & Nabō shalbe broken: whose ymages are a burthē for the beastes and catell, to ouerlade thē, and to make them weery. They shal syncke downe, and fall together: for they maye not ease them of their burthen, therfore must they go into captiuyte.

Herken vnto me, o house of Jacob, and all ye that remayne yet of the housholde of Israel: whom I haue borne from youre mothers wombe, and brought you vp from yo^r byrth, till ye were growen: I I which shall beare you vnto youre last age: I haue made you, I will also norish you, beare you and sane you. Whom will ye make me like, in fashion or ymage, that I maye be like him? Ye fooles (no doute) wil take out syluer and golde out of youre purses, and weye it, and hyre a goldsmyth to make a god of it, that men maye knele downe and worshipe it. Yet must he be taken on mens shulders and borne, and set in his place, that he maye stonde and not moue. Alas that men shulde crie vnto him, which geueth no answere: and delyuereth not the man that calleth vpon him, from his trouble.

Consider this well, and be ashamed, Go into youre owne selues (O ye runnagates). Remembre the thinges which are past, sence the begynnynge of the worlde: that I am God, and that there is els no God, yee and ye there is nothinge like vnto me. In the begynnynge of a thinge, I shewe the ende therof: and I tel before, thinges that are not yet come to passe. With one worde is my deuyce accomplished, & fulfilleth all my pleasure. I call a byrde out of the east, and all that I take in honde, out of farre countrees. As soone as I commaunde, I bringe it hither: as soone as I thinke to deuyse a thinge, I do it. Exo. 16.c

Heare me, o ye that are of an hie stomack, but farre from righteousnesse. I shal bringe forth my righteousnesse, It is not farre, and my health shal not tarie longe awaye. I wil laye health in Siō, and geue Israel my glory. Psal. 148.a 32.b

The xlvij. Chapter.

BVt as for the (O doughter, thou virgin Babilon) thou shalt syt in the dust. Thou shalt syt vpon the groūde, and not in atr one (o thou mayden of Chaldea). Thou shalt nomore be called tender, and pleasaūt. Thou shalt bringe forth the querne, & grynde meel, put downe thy stomacher, make bare thy knees, and shalt wade thorow the water ryuers. Thy shame shalbe discouered, ād thy preuyties shal be sene. For I wil auenge me of the, and no man shal let me: saieth oure redemer, which is called the LORDE of hoostes, the holy one of Israel. A Ezec.16.d Nau.3.b

Syt still, holde thy tunge, and get the into some darcke corner (O doughter Caldea) for thou shalt nomore be called lady of kyngdomes. I was so wroth with my people, ye I punyshed myne enheritaunce, and gaue them in to thy power. Neuertheles, thou shewedest them no mercy, but euen the very aged men of thē, didest thou oppresse right sore with thy yock, & thou thoughtest thus: I shalbe lady for euer. And beside all that, thou hast not regarded these thinges, nether cast, what shulde come after. Pro.21.b Iere.50.b

Heare now therfore, thou wilful, that sittest so careles, & speakest thus in thine herte: I am alone, and without me is there none: I shal neuer be wydow, ner desolate agayne. And yet both these thīges shal come to the vpō one daye in the twinckelinge of an eye: Namely, wyddowhead, and desolacion. They shal mightely fall vpon the, for ye multitude of thy witches, and for the greate heapes of thy coniurers. For thou hast confortted thy self in thy disceatfulnes, and hast sayde: Nomā seith me. Thyne owne wisdome & connynge haue disceaued the, In that thou hast sayde: I am alone, and without me there is none. Therfore shal trouble come vpō ye, & thou shalt not knowe, from whēce it shal arise. Myschefe shal fall vpō ye, which thou shalt not be able to put of. A sodane misery shal come vpon the, or euer thou be awarre. B Esa.10.b Apo.18.c Dani.5.e Esa.29.c

C Now go to thy coniurers, and to the multitude of thy witches, (whom thou hast bene acquanted withal from thi youth) yf they maye helpe the, or strengthē the. Thou hast hither to had many councels of them, so let the heauengasers & the beholders of starres, come on now and delyuer the: yee and let thē shewe, when these new thinges shall come vpon the. Beholde, they shalbe like strawe, which yf it be kindled with fyre, no man maye rydde it for the vehemence of the flame: And yet it geueth no zynders to warme a mā by, ner cleare fyre to syt by. Euen so shal they be vnto the, whom thou hast vsed & occupide from thy youth. Euery one shal shewe yᵗ his erroneous waye, yet shall none of them defende the.

The xlviij. Chapter.

A HEare this, O thou house of Jacob: ye yᵗ are called by the name of Jsrael, and are come out of one stocke wᵗ Juda: which swea

The thinges that I shewed you euer sence the begynnynge: Haue I not brought thē to passe, immediatly as they came out of my mouth, and declared them: And they are come: Howbeit I knewe that thou art obstinate, and that thy neck hath an yron vane, and that thy brow is of brasse. Neuertheles I haue euer sence the begynnynge shewed the of thinges for to come, and declared thē vnto the, or euer they came to passe: that thou shuldest not saye: myne Jdol hath done it, my carued or cast ymage hath shewed it. Ye are & considre all these thinges, whether it Moreuer there be some wherof thou hast nether herde ner knowne, nether haue they bene opened vnto thine eares afore tyme. For I knew that thou woldest maliciously offende, therfore haue I called the a transgressoure, euen from thy mothers wombe.

Neuertheles for my names sake, I haue withdrawen my wrath, and for myne honours sake I haue ouersene the, so that I haue not rooted the out. Beholde I haue pour-

Herken vnto me o Jacob, & Jsrael whō I haue called. I am euen he that is, I am yᵗ first and the last. My honde is the foundacion of the earth, & my right honde spanneth ouer the heauens. As soone as I called thē they were there. Gather you all together, and herken: Which of yonder goddes hath declared this, that the LORDE wil do by the kinge of Babilon, (whom he loueth & fauoureth) and by the Caldees his arme: I my self alone haue tolde you this before. Yee I shal call him and bringe him forth, & geue him a prosperous iourneye. Come nye & heare this: haue I spokē eny thīge darckly sence the begynnynge: whē a thīge begynneth, I am ther.

Wherfore the LORDE God with his spirite hath sent me, And thus saieth the LORDE thine auenger, the holy one of Jsrael: I am yᵗ LORDE thy God, which teach the profitable thinges, and lede yᵗ the waye, that thou shuldest go. Yf thou wilt now regarde my cōmaundement, thy welthynes shalbe as the water streame: & thy righteousnes as the wawes flowinge in the see. Thy sede shalbe like as the sonde in the see, & the frute of thy body, like the grauel stones therof: Thy name shal not be roted out, nor destroyed before me. Ye shal go awaye from Babilon, and escape the Caldees with a mery voyce. This shalbe spoken of, declared abrode, & go forth vnto the ende of the worlde: so that it shalbe sayde: The LORDE hath defended his seruaunte Jacob, that they suffred no thurste, whē they trauayled in the wilderneſſe. He clauē the rockes a sonder, and the water gusshed out. As for the vngodly, they haue no peace, saieth the LORDE.

MESSIAS
The xlix. Chapter.

HErken vnto me, ye Jles, and take hede ye people from farre: The LORDE hath called me fro my byrth, and made mēcion of my name fro my mothers wōbe: he hath made my mouth like a sharpe swerde, vnder yᵗ shadowe of his honde hath he defended me, and hyd me in his quyuer, as a good arowe, and sayde vnto me: Thou art my seruaunt Jsrael, I wilbe honoured in the. Then answerde I: I shal lese my laboure, I shal spende my strength in vayne. Neuertheles, I wil commytte my cause and my worke vnto the LORDE my God. And now saieth the LORDE (euē he that fashioned me fro my mothers wombe to be his seruaūte, that I maye bringe Ja cob agayne vnto him: howbeit, Israel will not be gathered vnto hi agayne. In whose sight I am greate, which also is my LORDE, my God and my strēgth) Let it be but a smal thinge, that thou art my seruaunt, to set vp the kinredes of Jacob, & to restore the destructiō of Israel: yf I make the not also the light of the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my healthe vnto the ende of the worlde.

Moreuer thus saieth the LORDE the auēger and holy one of Israel, because of the abhorringe and despisinge amonge the Gentiles, concernynge the seruaunt of all them yᵗ beare rule: Kynges and prynces shal se, and arise and worshipe, because of the LORDE that he is faithfull: and because of the holy one of Israel, which hath chosen the.

And thus saieth the LORDE: In the tyme apoynted wil I be present with the. And in the houre of healthe wil I helpe the, & deliuer the. I wil make the a pledge for yᵉ people, so yᵗ thou shalt helpe vp the earth agayne, and chalenge agayne the scatred heretages: That thou mayest saye to yᵗ presōners: go forth, & to them that are in darknesse: come in to the light, that they maye fede in the hie wayes, & get their lyuynge in all places. There shal nether hunger ner thurste, heate nor Sonne hurte them. For he that fauoureth them, shall lede them, and geue them drīke of the springe welles. I will make wayes vpon all my mountaynes, and my fote pathes shalbe exalted. And beholde, they shal come from farre: lo, some from the north and west, some from the south. Reioyse ye heauens, and synge prayses thou earth: Talke of ioye ye hilles, for God wil cōforte his people, & haue mercy vpon his, yᵗ be in trouble.

Then shal Sion saye: God hath forsaken me, and the LORDE hath forgottē me. Doth a wife forget the childe of hir wombe, ād the sonne whō she hath borne? And though she do forget, yet wil not I forget the. Beholde, I haue written the vp vpon my hondes, thy walles are euer in my sight. They that haue broken the downe, shal make haist to buylde the vp agayne: and they that made the waist, shal dwell in the. Lift vp thine eyes, and loke aboute the: all these shal gather them together, and come to the. As truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE) thou shalt putt them all vpō the, as an apparell, and gyrde thē to the, as a bryde doth hir Jewels. As for thy londe that lieth desolate, waisted & destroyed: it shalbe to narow for thē, that shal dwell in it. And they yᵗ wolde deuoure the, shalbe farre away. Then the childe whō yᵗ barē shall bringe forth vnto yᵗ, shal saye in thine eare: this place is to narow, syt nye together, yᵗ I maye haue rowme. Then shalt thou thinke by thy self: Who hath begottē me these? seinge I am barē & alōe, a captyue & an outcast: And who hath nourished thē vp for me? I am desolate & alone, but frō whēce come these?

And therfore thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I will stretch out myne honde to the Gentiles, and set vp my token to the people. They shal bringe the thy sonnes in their lappes, & carie thy doughters vnto yᵗ vpon their shulders. For kinges shalbe thy nourisinge fathers, and Quenes shalbe thy nourisinge mothers. They shal fall before the wᵗ their faces flat vpon the earth, and lick vp the dust of thy fete: that thou mayest knowe, how that I am the LORDE. And who so putteth his trust in me, shal not be confounded. Who spoyleth the giaunte of his pray? or who taketh the presōner from the mighte? And therfore thus saieth the LORDE: The prisōners shalbe taken from the giaunte, and the spoyle deliuered from the violēte: for I wil maynteyne thy cause agaynst thine aduersaries, and saue thy sonnes. And wil fede thine enemies with their owne flesshe, and make thē drinke of their owne blonde, as of swete wyne. And all flesh shal knowe (o Jacob) that I am the LORDE thy Sauioure, and stronge auenger. Ro.9.d

Thus saieth the LORDE: Where is the bill of yᵒ mothers deuorcemēt, that I sent vnto her? or who is the vsurer, to whō I solde you? Beholde, for youre owne offēces are ye solde: & because of youre transgression, is youre mother forsakē. For why wolde no mā receaue me, when I came? & when I called, no man gaue me answere. Was my hōde clene smytē of, that it might not helpe? or, had I not power to delyuer? lo, at a worde I drīke vp the see, & of water floudes I make drie lōde: so yᵗ for want of water, the fisly corrupe and die of thurst. As for heauen, I clooth it with darcknesse, and put a sack vpon it. Exo.14.c Iosu.3.d Exo.10.c

The LORDE God hath geuē me a wellernedtūge, so that I can conforte them which are troubled, yee & yᵗ in due season. He waked myne eare vp by tymes in yᵗ mornynge (as yᵗ scolemasters do) yᵗ I might herkē. The LORDE God hath opened myne eare, therfore cā I not saye naye, ner wᵗ drawe my self, but I offre my backe vnto yᵗ smyters, and my chees to the nyppers. I turne not my face frō shame ād spittinge, for the LORDE God helpeth me, therfore shal I not be cōfounded. I haue hardened my face like a flynt

Wake vp, wake vp, and be stronge: O thou arme of the LORDE: wake vp, lyke as in tymes past, euer and sence the worlde began. Art not thou he, that hast wounded the proude lucifer, and hewen the dragon in peces? That the redemed of the LORDE, which turned agayne, might come with ioye vnto Siō, there to endure for euer? That myrth and gladnesse might be with them: that sorowe and wo might flie from the? Nee I, I am euē he, that in all thinges geue you consolacion. What art thou then, that feareſt a mortall mā, yᵗ childe of man, which goeth awaye as doeth the floure? And forgetteſt the LORDE that made the, that spred out the heauens, and layde the foundacion of the earth. But thou art euer afrayde for the sight of thyne oppressoure, which is redy to do harme: Where is the wrath of the oppressoure? Yt cometh on fast, it maketh haist to apeare: Yt shal not perish, yᵗ it shalde not be able to destroye, nether shal it sayle for faute of norishinge. Awake, Awake, and stonde vp o Ierusalem, thou that from the honde of the LORDE, haſt dronke out the cuppe of his wrath: thou that haſt supped of, and sucked out the slombringe cuppe to the botome. For amonge all the sonnes whom thou haſt begotten, there is not one that maye holde the vp: and not one to lede the by the honde, of all the sonnes that thou haſt norished. Both these thinges are happened vnto the, but who is sory for it? Nee, destruction, wasting, hunger and swerde: but who hath conforted the? Thy sonnes lie comfortles at yᵗ heade of euery strete like a take venyson, and are ful of yᵗ terrible wrath of yᵗ LORDE, and punyshmēt of thy God. Seke the LORDE while he maye be founde, call vpō him while he is nye. Let the vngodly man forsake his wayes, & the vnrighteous his ymaginaciōs, & turne agayne vnto the LORDE, so shal he be merciful vnto him: and to oure God, for he is redy to forgeue.

For thus saieth the LORDE: My thoughtes are not youre thoughtes, & youre wayes are not my wayes: But as farre as the heauens are hyer then the earth, so farre do my waies exceade yours, & my thoughtes yours. And like as the rayne & snowe cōmeth downe from heauē, & returneth not thither agayne, but watereth the earth, maketh it frutefull & grene, that it maye geue come & breade vnto the sower: So the worde also that commeth out of my mouth, shal not turne agayne voyde vnto me, but shal accōplish my wil & prospere in the thinge, wherto I sende it. Yea that taketh hede, ye he vnhalowe not the Sabbath (that is) he that kepeth himself that he do no euel. Then shal not the straunger, which cleaueth to the LORDE, saye: Alas the LORDE hath shut me cleane out from his people. Nether shal the gelded man saye: lo, I am a drie tre. For thus saieth the LORDE

Thus saieth the LORDE God which gathereth together the scatred of Israel: I wil bringe yet another cõgregacion to him. All the beastes of the felde, ỽ all the beastes of ỽ wod, shal come to deuoure hi. For his watchmen are all blinde, they haue altogether no vnderstondinge, they are all domme dogges, not beinge able to barcke, they are slepery: slomish are they, ỽ lie snortinge: they are shameleese dogges, ỽ be neuer satißfied. The sheperdes also in like maner haue no vnderstondinge, but euery man turneth his owne waye, euery one after his owne couetousnes, w all his power. The LVII. Chapter.

BVt in the meane season ỽ righteous perisheth, ỽ no mã regardeth it in his hert. Good godly people are taken awaye ỽ no mã cõsidreth it. Namely: that the righteous is conuayed awaye thorow ỽ wicked: that he himself might be in rest, lie quietly vpon his bed, ỽ lyue after his owne pleasure. Come hither therfore ye charmers children, ye sonnes of the aduoutrer ỽ the whore: Wherin take ye youre pleasure? Vpõ whom gape ye with yo mouth, ỽ bleare out yo tonge? Are ye not childrẽ of aduoutry, ỽ a sede of dissimulaicon? Ye take youre pleasure vnder the okes, ỽ vnder all grene trees, the childe benynge slayne in the valleys, ỽ dennes of stone. Thy parte shalbe with the stony rockes by the ryuer: Yee euen these shal be thy parte. For there thou hast poured meat and drynkoffringes vnto thẽ. Shulde I ouersee that? Thou hast made thy bed vpon hie mountaynes, thou wentest vp thither, and there hast thou slayne sacrifices. Behynde the dores ỽ postes, hast thou set vp thy remembraunce: When thou haddest discouered thyself to another then me, when thou wẽtest downe, ỽ made thy bed wyder (that is) when thou didest carue the certayne of yonder Idols, ỽ louedest their couches, where thou sawest thẽ: Thou wentest straight to kinges with oyle ỽ dyuerse oyntmentes (that is) thou hast sent thy messaungers farre of, and yet art thou fallen in to the pyt therby. Thou hast had trouble for ỽ multitude of thyne owne wayes, yet saydest thou neuer: I wil leaue of. Thou thinkest to haue life (or health) of thyself, and therfore thou beleuest not that thou art sick. For when wilt thou be abaßshed or feare, seinge thou hast broken thy promyse, ỽ remembrest not me, nether hast me in thine hert? Thinkest thou, that I also will holde my peace (as afore tyme) ỽ thou feareste me not? Yee verely I wil declare ỽ goodnes ỽ ỽ workes, but they shal not profit ỽ. whẽ thou criest, let ỽ chosen heape delyuer the. But the wynde shal take them all awaye, ỽ cary thẽ into ỽ ayre. Neuertheles, they ỽ put their trust in me, shal inheret the londe, and haue my holy hill in possession.

And therfore thus he saieth: Make redy, make redy, and clense ỽ strete, take vp what ye can out of the waye, that leadeth to my people. For thus saieth the hie and excellẽt, euen he that dwelleth in euerlastingnesse, whose name is the holyone: I dwel hie aboue and in the sanctuary, ỽ with him also, ỽ is of a cõtrite and hũble spriete: ỽ I maye heale a troubled mynde, and a cõtrite herte. For I chide not euer, ỽ am not wroth w out ende. But ỽ blastinge goeth fro me, though I make the breath. I am wroth w hi for his couetousnes ỽ lust, I smyte him, I hyde me, and am angrie, whẽ he turneth him self, and foloweth ỽ bywaye of his owne hert. But yf I maye se his right waye agayne, I make him whole, I lede him, and restore him vnto them whom he maketh ioyful, ỽ that were sory for him. I make the frutes of thãkesgeuinge. I geue peace vnto them that are farre of, and to them that are nye, saye I the LORDE, that make him whole. But the wicked are like the raginge see, that cã not rest, whose water foameth with the myre ỽ grauel. Ẽnẽso ỽ wicked haue no peace, saieth my God.

The LVIII. Chapter.

AND therfore crie now, as loude as thou canst. Leaue not of, lift vp thy voyce like a tröpet, and shewe my people their offences, and ỽ house of Jacob their symnes. For they seke me dalye, and wil knowe my wayes, euen as it were a people that dyd right, and had not forsaken the statutes of their God. They argue with me concernynge right iudgment, and wil pleate at the lawe with their God. Wherfore fast we (saye they) and thou seist it not? we put oure lines to straitnesse, and thou regardest it not?

B Beholde, when ye fast, youre lust remayneth still: for ye do no lesse violence to youre detters: lo, ye fast to strife and debate, and to smyte him with youre fist, that speaketh vnto you. Ye fast not (as somtyme) that youre voyce might be herde aboue. Thynke ye this fast pleaseth me, that a mā shulde chasten himself for a daye, and to wryth his heade aboute like an hoke in an hairy cloth, & to lye vpon the earth? Shulde that be called fastinge, or a daye ý pleaseth ý LORDE? But this fastinge pleaseth not me, till ý tyme be thou lowse him out of bondage, that is in thy daunger: that thou breake the ooth of wicked bargaynes, that thou let the oppressed go fre, and take from them all maner of burthens. It pleaseth not me, till thou dealest thy bred to the hongrie, & brynge the poore fatherlesse home in to thy house, when thou seist the naked that thou couer him, and hyde not thy face frō thine owne flesh. Then shal thy light breake forth as ý mornynge, and thy health florish right shortly: thy righteousnesse shal go before the, and ý glory of the LORDE shal embrace the.

C Then yf thou callest, the LORDE shal answere the: yf thou criest, he shal saye: here I am. Yee yf thou layest awaye thy burthens, and holdest thy fyngers, and ceasest from blasphemous talkinge, yf thou hast compassion vpon the hongrie, and refressheste ý troubled soule: Then shal thy light springe out in the darknesse, and thy darknesse shalbe as the noone daye. The LORDE shal euer be thy gyde, and satisfie the desyre of thine hert, and fyl ý bones with marry. Thou

D shalt be like a freshwatred garden, and like the founteyne of water, that neuer leaueth runnynge. Then the places that haue euer bene waist, shalbe buylded of the: there shalt thou laye a foundacion for many kynreds. Thou shalt be called the maker vp of hedges, and ý buylder agayne of ý waye of the Sabbath.

Yee yf thou turne thy fete from the Sabbath, so that thou do not the thinge which pleaseth thyself in my holy daye: then shalt thou be called vnto the pleasaunt, holy & glorious Sabbath of the LORDE, where thou shalt be in honō: so ý thou do not after thine owne ymaginacion, nether seke thine owne wil, ner speake thine owne wordes. Thē shalt thou haue ý pleasure in ý LORDE, which shal carie ý hie aboue ý earth, & fede the wt the heretage of Jacob thy father: for the LORDES owne mouth hath so promised.

The LIX. Chap.

BEholde, the LORDES honde is not so shortened ý it can not helpe, nether is his eare so stopped ý it maye not heare. But yō myßedes haue separated you from yō God, & yō synnes hyde his face from you, ý he heareth you not. For yō hondes are defyled with blonde, and yō fyngers wt wrightousnesse: Yō lippes speake lesynges, & yō tonge setteth out wickednes. No man regardeth righteousnes, & no mā iudgeth truly. Euery man hopeth in vayne thinges, and ymagineth disceate, cōceaueth weerynesse, & bringeth forth euell. They brede cockatrice egges, & weeue ý spyders webb. Who so eateth of their egges, dieth. But yf one treade vpon thē, there cōmeth vp a serpent. Their webbe maketh no clothe, & they maye not couer thē wt their labours. Their dedes are ý dedes of wickednes, & ý worke of robbery is in their hōdes. Their fete runne to euell, & they make haist to shed innocēt blonde. Their cōcels are wicked cōcels, harme & destruccō are in their wayes. But ý waye of peace they knowe not. In their goinges is no equyte, their wayes are so croked, ý who so euer goeth therin, knoweth nothinge of peace.

And this is ý cause ý equite is so farre frō vs, & ý rightousnes cōmeth not nye vs. We loke for light, lo, it is darknesse: for ý meanynge shyne, se, we walke in ý darke. We grope like ý blynde vpon ý wall, we grope euen as one ý hath none eyes. We stomble at ý noone daye, as though it were toward nighte in ý fallinge places, like men ý are half dead. We roare all like Beeres, & mourne stil like doues. We loke for equite, but there is none: for health, but it is farre frō vs. For ō offences are many before ý, & ō synnes testifie agaynst vs. Yee we must cōfesse ý we offende, & knowlege, ý we do amysse: Namely, transgresse & dyssemble agaynst ý LORDE, & fall awaye frō ō God: vsinge presumptuous & mutinous ymaginacions, & castinge false matters in ō hertes. And therfore is equyte gone aside, & righteousnes stōdeth farre of: truth is fallen downe in the strete, and the thinge that is playne and open, maye not be shewed. Yee ý treuth is lade in preson, and he that refrayneth himself frō euel, must be spoyled.

When the LORDE sawe this, it displeased him sore, ỳ there was no where eny equite. He sawe also, that there was no man, which had pitie therof, or was greued at it. And he helde him by his owne power, and cleued to his owne rightuousnes. He put rightuousnes vpō him for a brest plate, & set the helmet of healthe vpō his heade. He put on wrathe in steade of clothinge, & toke gelousy aboute him for a cloke: (like as when a man goeth forth wrothfully to recōpence his enemies, & to be avenged of his aduersaries.) Namely, that he might recompence and rewarde the Jlōdes, wherthorow the name of the LORDE might be feared, from the risynge of the Sōne: and his magesty, vnto the goinge downe of the same.

For he shal come as a violent waterstreame, which the wynde of the LORDE hath moued. But vnto Sion there shal come a redemer, and vnto them in Jacob that turne from wickednesse, saieth the LORDE. Jwill make this conuenaunt with them (sayeth ỳ LORDE): My spirite that is come vpon the, & the wordes which Jhaue put in ỳ mouth, shal neuer go out of thy mouth, nor out of ỳ mouth of thy childrē, no ner out of ỳ mouth of thy childers childrē, from this tyme forth for euer more.

The lx. Chapter.

Aryse and ther fore get the vp by tymes, for thy light cometh, & the glory of ỳ LORDE shal ryse vp vpō ỳ. For lo, while ỳ darknesse & cloude couereth the earth & the people, the LORDE shal shewe the light, & his glory shal be sene in the. The Gentiles shal come to thy light, & kynges to the brightnes ỳ springeth forth vpō ỳ. Lift vp thine eyes, & loke rounde aboute the: All these gather thē selues, & come to the. Sonnes shal come vnto ỳ from farre, & doughters shal gather thē selues to the on euery side. When thou seist this, thou shalt maruel exceadingly, and thine hert shalbe opened: when the power of the see shalbe cōuerted vnto the (that is) whē the strength of the Gentiles shal come vnto the. The multitude of Camels shal couer ỳ, the Dromedaries of Madiā and Epha. All they of Saba shal come, bringinge golde & incense, & shewinge the prayse of the LORDE. All the catel of Cedar shalbe gathered vnto ỳ, the rāmes of Nabaioth shal serue the, to be offred vpō myne aulter, which Jhaue chosen, & in the house of my glory which Jhaue garnished. But what are these that fle here like the cloudes, and as the doues flienge to their wyndowes?

The Jles also shal gather thē vnto me, and specially the shippes of ỳ see: that they maye bringe the sonnes from farre, and their syluer and their golde with them, vnto the name of the LORDE thy God, vnto the holy one of Jsrael, that hath glorified the. Esa 54 b me, to preach good tydinges vnto the poore, ỹ I might bynde vp ỹ wounded hertes, ỹ I might preach delyueraunce to ỹ captyue, & open the preson to thē that are bounde: ỹ I might declare ỹ acceptable yeare of ỹ LORDE, & the daye of ỹ avēgeaunce of oure God: that I might comforte all them that are in heuynesse, that I might geue vnto them ỹ mourne in Sion, bewty in the steade of asshes, ioyful oyntmēt for sighinge, pleasaunt raymēt for an heuy mide: That they might be called excellent in righteousnesse, a plātinge of the LORDE for him to reioyce in.

They shal buylde the lōge rough wildernes, & set vp ỹ olde deserte. They shal repayre the waist places, & soch as haue bene voyde thorow out many generacios Straūgers shal stōde & fede yo^r catel, & the Aleauntes shalbe yo^r plowmē & reapers. But ye shalbe named the prestes of the LORDE, & mē shall call you the seruauntes of oure God. Ye shall enioye the goodes of ỹ Gētiles & tryūphe in their substaūce. For yo^r greate reprose & shame, shal they haue ioye, y^t ye maye haue parte w^t thē. For they shal haue dubble possessiō in their lōde, & euerlastinge ioye shalbe w^t them. For I the LORDE, which loue right ād hate robbery (though it were offred me) shal make their workes ful of faithfulnes, & make an euerlastinge couenaunt with them.

Their sede also and their generacion shal be knowne amōge the Gentiles, and amōge the people. All they that se them, shall knowe, that they are the hie blessed sede of ỹ LORDE. And therfore I am ioyful in the LORDE, & my soule reioyseth in my God. For he shall put vpon me the garmēt of health, & couer me with the mātle of righteousnes. He shal decke me like a brydegrome, & as a bryde that hath hir apparell vpō her. For like as ỹ grounde bringeth forth frute, & as the gardē shuteth forth sede: So shal the LORDE God cause righteousnes, and the feare of God to florish forth before all the Heithen.

The lxj. Chapter.

FOr Sions sake therfore wil I not holde my tūge, & for Jerusalēs sake I will not ceasse: vntill their righteousnes breake forth as ỹ shyninge light, & their health as a burnynge lampe. Then shal the Gētiles se thy righteousnesse & all kinges thy glory. Thou shalt be named with a new name, which the mouth of ỹ LORDE shal shewe. Thou shalt be a crowne in the honde of the LORDE, and a glorious garlāde in the hōde of thy God. From this tyme forth thou shalt neuer be called the forsakē, & thy lōde shal nomore be called the wilderneſſe. But thou shalt be called Hephziba (that is, my beloued) & ỹ londe Beula (that is) a maried womā: for ỹ LORDE loueth ỹ, & thy lōde shalbe inhabited. And like as yonge mā taketh a doughter to mariage, so shal God mary himself vnto ỹ sonnes. And as a brydegrome is glad of his bryde, so shal God reioyse ouer the.

I wil set watchmē vpō thy walles (o Jerusalem) which shall nether ceasse daye nor nyght, to preach ỹ LORDE. And ye also shall not kepe him close, nor leaue to speake of hī, vntill Jerusalē be set vp, & made the prayse of the worlde. The LORDE hath sworne by his right honde & by his stronge arme, that frō hence forth he wil not geue thy corne to be meate for thine enemies, ner ỹ wyne (wherī thou hast laboured) to be drynke for ỹ straungers. But they that haue gathered in the corne, shal eate it, & geue thankes to the LORDE: & they that haue borne in the wyne, shall drynke it in the court of my Sanctuary.

Stōde back, & departe a sunder, ye ỹ sitte vnder ỹ gate, make rowme ye people, repayre the strete, & take awaye y^e stones, & set out a tokē for the people. Beholde, y^e LORDE proclameth in the endes of the worlde: tell ỹ doughter Siō: se, thy Saluacio cometh, beholde, he bringeth his treasure w^t him, & his workes go before him. For they whō y^e LORDE delyuereth, shalbe called the holy people: & as for the, thou shalt be named the greatly occupied, and not the forsaken.

The lxij. Chapter.

WHat is he this, that cometh from Edom, with stayned reade clothes of Bosra: (which is so costly cloth) & cometh in so neēbly with all his strēgth: I am he ỹ teacheth righteousnes, & am of power to helpe. Wherfore thē is thy clothinge reade, & thy raymēt like his y^t treadeth in ỹ wyne presse: I haue trodē the presse my self alone, & of all people, there was not one with me. Thus haue I trodē downe myne enemies in my wrath, and set my fete vpō them in my indignacion: And their bloude sprange vpō my clothes, & so haue I stayned all my rayment. For the daye of vengeaūce that I haue takē in honde, & the yeare of my delyueraunce is come. I loked aboute me, and there was no mā to shewe me eny helpe, I fel downe, and no man helde me vp. Thē I helde me by myne owne arme, & my feruētnesse susteyned me. And thus haue I troden downe the people in my wrath, and bathed them in my displeasure: In so moch that I haue shed their bloude vpon the earth.

I will declare the goodnesse of the LORDE, yee and the prayse of the LORDE for all that he hath gyuen vs, for the greate good ye he hath done for Israel: which he hath gyuen them of his owne fauoure, & accordinge to the multitude of his louynge kindnesses. For he sayde: These no doute wilbe my people, and no shrekinge children, and so he was their Sauioure. In their troubles he forsoke them not, but the angel that went forth from his presence, delyuered them: Of very loue & kindnesse that he had vnto them, redemed he them. He hath borne them, and caried them vp euer, sence the worlde began. But after they prouoked him to wrath and vexed his holy minde, he was their enemie, and fought agaynst them him self. Yet remembred he the olde tyme, of Moses & his people: How he brought them from the water of the see, as a shepherde doth with his shepe: how he had geuen his holy spirite amonge them: how he had led Moses by the right honde with his glorious arme: how he had deuyded the water before them (wherby he gat him self an euerlastinge name) how he led them in the depe, as an horse is led in the playne, that they shulde not stomble. The spirite of the LORDE led them, as a tame beast goeth in the felde.

C Thus (o God) hast thou led thy people, to make thy self a glorious name with all. Loke downe then from heauen, and beholde the dwellinge place of thy sanctuary & thy glory. How is it, ye thy gelousy, thy strength, the multitude of thy mercies and thy louynge kyndnesse, wyl not be entreated of vs? Yet art thou ye father: For Abraham knoweth vs not, nether is Israel acquanted with vs. But thou LORDE art oure father and redemer, and thy name is euer lastinge. O LORDE wherfore hast thou led vs out of thy waye? wherfore hast thou hardened oure hertes, that we feare the not? Be at one with vs agayne, for thy seruauntes sake ye are of the generacion of thy herytage. Thy people hath had but litle of thy Sanctuary in possession, for oure enemies haue take it in: And we are become, euen as we were from the beginnynge: but thou art not their LORDE, for they haue not called vpon thy name.

The lxiiij. Chapter.

A O That thou woldest cleue the heauen in sonder, & come downe: that the mountaynes might melt awaye at thy presence, like as at an hote fyre: and that the malicious might boyle, as the water doth vpon the fyre: Wherby thy name might be knowne amonge thine enemies, & ye the Gentiles might tremble before ye. That thou mightest come downe with thy wonderous straunge workes, then shulde the hilles melt at thy presence. For sence the begynnynge of the worlde there was none (excepte thou o God) that herde or perceaued, nether hath eny eye sene what thou dost for the, that put their trust in the. 1.Cor. 2.b

Thou helpest him that doth right with cherefulnesse, and them that thynke vpon thy wayes. But lo, thou art angrie, for we offende, and haue bene euer in synne, and there is not one whole. We are all as an vnclene thinge, & all oure righteousnesses are as the clothes stayned with the floures of a woman: we fall euerychone as the leaf, for oure synnes carie vs awaye like the wynde. There is no man that calleth vpon thy name, that stondeth vp to take holde by the. Therfore hydest thou thy face from vs, and consumest vs, because of oure synnes. Ro.3.b Psal.13.a

B But now o LORDE, thou father of ours: we are the claye, and thou art oure potter, and we all are the worke of thy hondes. Be not to sore displeased (o LORDE) and kepe not oure offences to longe in thy remembraunce, but considre that we all are thy people. The cities of thy Sanctuary lye waist, Sion is a wilderneesse, and Jerusalem a deserte. Oure holy house which is oure bewty, where oure fathers praysed the, is brent vp, yee all oure commodities and pleasures are waysted awaye. Wilt thou not be intreated (LORDE) for all this? Wilt thou holde thy peace, and scourge vs so sore? Matt.6.b Iere.18.b Ro.9.c Eccl.33.b Iere.10.d Psal.78.a Iere.26.d Mich.3.c

The lxv. Chapter.

A They shal seke me, that hitherto haue not axed for me: they shal fynde me, that hither to haue not sought me. Then shal I saye immediatly, to the people that neuer called vpon my name: I am here, I am here. For thus longe haue I euer holden out my hondes to an vnfaithful people, that go not the right waye, but after their owne ymaginacions: To a people, that is euer defyenge me to my face. They make their oblacions in gardens, and their smoke vpon aulters of bricke, they lurck amonge the graues, and lie in the dennes all night. They eate swyne flesh, and vnclene broth is in their vessels. Yf thou comest nye them, they saie: touch me not, for I am holyer then thou. Esa.52.a Ro.10.d Deut.12.a Deut.14.b Leuit.11.a Deut.14.a

C Therfore thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, my seruauntes shal eate, but ye shall haue honger. Beholde, my seruauntes shall drynke, but ye shal suffre thurste. Beholde, my seruauntes shal be mery, but ye shal be cõfounded. Beholde, my seruauntes shal reioyse for very quietnesse of herte. But ye shal

But whẽ the childe cometh to an hũderth yeare olde, it shall dye. And yf he that is an hũderth yeare of age do wronge, he shalbe cursed. They shal buylde houses, and dwel in them: they shal plante vynardes, and eate the frute of them. They shall not buylde, & another possesse: they shall not plante, and another eate: But the life of my people shalbe like a tre, and so shal the workes of their hondes.

My chosen shal lyue longe, they shall not laboure in vayne, ner beget w^t trouble: for they are the hie blessed sede of the LORDE, & their frutes with them. And it shalbe, that or euer they call, I shal answere them. Whyle they are yet but thinkinge how to speake, I shal heare them. The wolff and the lambe shal fede together, and the lyon shal eate hay e like the bullocke. But earth shalbe the serpẽtes meate. There shal no man hurte ne slaye another, in all my holy hill, saieth the LORDE.

The lxvj. Chapter.

Thus saieth the LORDE: Heauẽ is my seate, and the earth is my fote stole. Where shal now the house stonde, y ye will buylde vnto me? And where shal be the place, y I wil dwel in? As for these thinges, my hõde hath made them all, and they are all created, saieth the LORDE. Which of them shal I then regarde? Euẽ him that is of a lowly troubled spriete, and stõdeth in awe of my wordes. For who so slayeth an ox for me, doth me so greate dishonoure, as he y kylleth a mã. He that kylleth a shepe for me, choketh a dogge. He that bringeth me meat offringes, offreth swynes blonde: Who so maketh me a memoriall of Jncense, prayseth the thinge y is vnright. Yet take they soch wayes in honde, and their soule deliteth in these abhominacions.

Therfore wil I also haue pleasure in iaughinge them to scorne, and the thinge that they feare, wil I bringe vpon thẽ. For when I called, no man gaue answere: when I spake, they wolde not heare: But dyd wickednesse before myne eyes, & chose the thinges that displease me. Heare the worde of God all ye, that feare the thinge which he speaketh. Youre brethren that hate you, and cast you out for my names sake, saye: Let the LORDE magnifie himself, that we maye se youre gladnesse: & yet they shalbe cõfounded.

For as touchinge the cite and the temple, I heare the voyce of the LORDE, that will rewarde, and recompẽce his enemies: like as when a wife bringeth forth a man childe, &

euer she suffre the payne of the byrth and anguysh of ẏ trauayle. Who euer herde or sawe soch thinges? doth the grounde beare in one daye? or are the people borne all at once, as Sion beareth his sonnes? For thus sayeth the LORDE: Am I he that maketh other to beare, and beare not my self? Am not I he that beareth, and maketh baren? saieth thy God. Reioyse with Jerusalem, & be glad with her, all ye that loue her. Be ioyful with her, all ye that mourned for her. For ye shal sucke cõforte out of hir bresses, and be satisfied. Ye shal taist, and haue delite in the plentiousnesse of hir power. For thus sayeth the LORDE: beholde, I wil let peace ī to her, like a water floude, & ẏ might of the heithē like a flowinge streame. Then shal ye sucke, ye shal be borne vpon hir sydes, and be ioyful vpō hir knees. For like as a childe is comforted of his mother, so shal I comforte you, and ye shalbe comforted in Jerusalem. And when ye se this, youre herte shal reioyse, and youre bones shal flourish like an herbe.

Thus shal the honde of the LORDE be knowne amonge his seruauntes, and his indignacion amonge his enemies. For beholde, the LORDE shal come wt̄ fyre, and his charet shal be like a whyrlwynde, that he maye recompence his vengeaunce in his wrath, and his indignacion with the flame of fyre. For ẏ LORDE shal iudge all flesh with the fyre and with his swerde, and there shalbe a greate nombre slayne of the LORDE. Soch as haue made them selues holy and cleane in the gardens, and those that haue eaten swyne flesh, myce, and other abhominaciōs, shal be taken awaye together, saieth the LORDE. For I wil come to gather all people and tonges, with their workes and ymaginacions: these shal come, and se my glory. Onto them shal I geue a tokē, and sende certayne of thē (that be delyuered) amonge the Gentiles: into Celicia, Africa and Lidia (where men can handle bowes) into Italie also and Grekelonde.

The Iles farre of, that haue not herde speake of me, & haue not sene my glory: shal preach my prayse amonge the Gentiles, and shal bringe all youre brethrē for an offringe vnto the LORDE, out of al people, vpō horses, charettes and horse lytters, vpō Mooles and cartes to Jerusalem my holy hill (saieth the LORDE) like as the children of Israel bringe the offringe in cleane vessels, to the house of the LORDE. Esa. 61. a 52. a 60 65. a

And I shal take out certayne of them for to be preastes and leuites, saieth ẏ LORDE. For like as the new heauē and the new earth which I wil make, shalbe fast stablished by me: (saieth the LORDE) So shal youre sede and youre name contynue, and there shalbe a new Moone for the other, and a new Sabbath for the other, & all flesh shal come to worshipe before me, (saieth ẏ LORDE.) And they shal go forth, and loke vpō the caryons of them, that haue transgressed agaynst me. For ther wormes shal not dye, nether shal their fyre be quenched, & all flesh shal abhorre them. These are the Sermons of Jeremy the sonne of Helchia the preist, one of them that dwelt at Anathot in the londe of Ben Jamin: when the LORDE had first spoken with him, in the tyme of Josias the sonne of Amon kinge of Juda, in the xiij yeare of his kingdome: and so duringe vnto the tyme of Joachim the sonne of Josias kinge of Juda, and vnto the xj yeares of Sedechias the sonne of Josias kinge of Juda were ended: when Jerusalem was taken, euen in the fyfth Moneth.

The first Chapter.

THe worde of the LORDE spake thus vnto me: Before I fasshioned the in thy mothers wõbe, I dyd knowe the: And or euer thou wast borne, I sanctified the, & ordened the, to be a prophet vnto the people. Thẽ sayde I: Oh LORDE God, I am vnmete, for I am yet but yonge. And the LORDE answered me thus: Saye not so, I am to yonge: For thou shalt go to all that I shall sende the vnto, and what so euer I cõmaunde the, that shalt thou speake. Be not afrayed of their faces, for I wilbe with the, to delyuer the, saieth the LORDE.

And with that, the LORDE stretched out his honde, and touched my mouth, and sayde moreouer vnto me: Beholde I put my wordes in thy mouth, and this daye do I set the ouer the people and kingdomes: that thou mayest rote out, breake of, destroye, and make waist: and that thou mayest buylde vp, and plãte. After this, the LORDE spake vnto me sayenge: Jeremy, what seist thou? And I saye: I se a wakynge rodde. Then sayde ỹ LORDE: thou hast sene right, for I will watch diligently vpon my worde, to performe it.

It happened afterwarde, that the LORDE spake to me agayne, & sayde: What seist thou? And I sayde: I do se a seethinge pot, lokinge from out of the north hitherwarde.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Out of the north shall come a plage vpon all the dwellers of the londe. For lo, I will call all the officers of the kyngdomes of the north, (saieth the LORDE.) And they shall come, and euery one shall set his seate in the gates of Jerusalem, and in all their walles rounde aboute, and thorow all the cities of Juda. And thorow them shall I declare my iudgment, vpon all the wickednesse of these men that haue forsaken me: that haue offred vnto straunge goddes, & worshipped the workes of their owne hondes. Ier. 4 b Abac. 1. b Iere. 25. b C

And therfore gyrde vp thy loynes, arise, and tell them all, that I gene the in cõmaundement. Feare them not, I will not haue the to be afrayed of thẽ. For beholde, this daye do I make the a stroge fensed towne, an yron pyler, and a wall of + stele agaynst ỹ whole londe, agaynst the kinges and mightie men of Juda, agaynst the prestes and people of the londe. They shall fight agaynst the, but they shall not be able to ouercome the: for I am wt the, to delyuer the, saieth the LORDE. Eze. 3. a Iere. 15. d + or brasse Iere. 25. d

The II. Chapter.

MOreouer, the worde of the LORDE cõmaunded me thus: Go thy waye, crie in the eares of Jerusalẽ, & saye: Thus saieth the LORDE: I remembre the for the kyndnesse of thy youth, and because of thy stedfast loue: in that thou folowdest me thorow the wildernesse, in an vntilled londe. Thou Israel wast halowed vnto the LORDE, and so was his first frutes. All they that deuoured Israel, offended: misfortune fell vpon them, saieth the LORDE. Heare therfore the worde of the LORDE, O thou house of Jacob, and all the generacion of the house of Israel. Thus saieth ỹ LORDE vnto you: A Iere. 3. d Iere. 10. d and 10. c Zac. 2. b

What vnfaithfulnesse founde youre fathers in me, that they went so farre awaye fro me, fallinge to lightnesse, and beinge so vayne? They thought not in their hertes: Where haue we left the LORDE, ỹ brought vs out of the lõde of Egipte: ỹ led vs thorow the wildernesse, thorow a deserte and rough londe, thorow a drie and a deedly londe, yee a londe that no man had gone thorow, and wherein no man had dwelt. And when I had brought you into a pleasaunt welbuylded londe, that ye might enioye the frutes and all the cõmodities of the same: ye went forth and defyled my londe, & brought myne heretage to abhominacion. Exo. 14. c Esa. 32. f Deut. 6. b Iere. 32. a offende agaynst me. The prophetes do seruy ce vnto Baal, & folowe soch thinges as shall bringe them no profit.

Wherfore I am constrayned (sayeth the LORDE) to make my complaynte vpon you, and vpon youre children. Go in to the Iles of Cethim, and loke wel: sende vnto Cedar, take diligent hede: and se, whether soch thinges be done there, whether the Gentiles them selues deale so falsly & vntruly with their god-

Yee and that so sore: that though thou wasshest the with Nitrus & makest thiself to sauoure with that swete smellinge herbe of Borith: yet in my sight thou art stayned with thy wickednesse, saieth the LORDE thy God.

D Saye not now: I am not vnclene, and I Iere.3.b haue not folowed the goddes. Loke vpō thy Eze.16.b goeth easely his waye: and thy wantonnes is like a wilde Asse, that vseth the wildernesse, and that snoffeth and bloweth at his will. Who can tame the? All they that seke the, shal not fayle, but fynde the in thyne owne vnclennes. Thou kepest thy fote from nakednes, and thy throte from thurste, and thou kest thus in thy self: tusly, I wil take no sorowe, I wil loue the straunge goddes, & hange vpon them.

Like as a thefe that is taken with the dede, commeth to shame, euē so is the house of Israel come to confucion: the comon people, their kinges and rulers, their prestes and prophetes. For they saye to a stock, thou art my father, and to a stone: thou hast begotten me, yee they haue turned their backe vpon me, & not their face. But in the tyme of their trouble, when they saye: stonde vp, and helpe vs, I shal answere the: Where are now thy goddes, that thou hast made the? bydde them stonde vp, and helpe the in the tyme of nede? For loke how many cities thou hast (o Juda) so many goddes hast thou also.

Wherfore the wil ye go to lawe with me, seinge ye all are synners agaynst me, saieth the LORDE? It is but lost labour, that I smyte youre children, for they receaue not my correction. Youre owne swearde destroyeth youre prophetes, like a deuouringe lyon. If ye be the people of the LORDE, then herke vnto his worde: Am I the become a wildernesse vnto the people of Israel? or a londe that hath no light? Wherfore saieth my people then: we are falle of, and we wil come no more vnto the? Doth a mayden forget hir rayment, or a bryde hir stomacher? And doth my people forget me so lōge? Why boostest thou thy wayes so hylie, (to optayne fauoure therthorow) when thou hast yet stained them with blasphemies?

Vpon thy wynges is founde the blonde of poore and innocent people, and that not in corners and holes only, but opēly in all these places. Yet darrest thou saye: I am gilteles: Tush, his wrath can not come vpō me. Beholde, I wil reason with y, because thou darrest saye: I haue not offended. O how euel wil it be for the, to abyde it: when it shall be knowne, how oft thou hast gone bacwarde? For thou shalt be confounded, as wel of Egipte, as of the Assirians: Yee thou shalt go thy waye from the, & smyte yne hondes together vpon thy heade. Because the LORDE shal bringe that confidence and hope of thine to naught, and thou shalt not prospere with all.

The III. Chapter.

COmonly, when a man putteth awaye his wife, and she goeth from him, and marieth with another, then the question is: shulde he resorte vnto her eny more after that? Is not this felde then defyled and vnclene? But as for the, thou hast played the harlot with many louers, yet turne agayne to me, saieth the LORDE. Lift vp thine eyes on euery syde, and loke, yf thou be not defyled. Thou hast waited for them in the stretes, and as a murtherer in the wildernesse. Thorow thy whordome and shamefull blasphemies, is the londe defyled.

This is the cause, that the rayne and euenynge dew hath ceased. Thou hast gotten the an whores foreheade, and canst not be ashamed. Els woldest thou saye vnto me: O my father, thou art he that hast brought me vp, and led me fro my youth: Wilt thou then put me awaye, and cast me of forever? Or wilt thou withdrawe thy self clene fro me? Nevertheles, thou speakest soch wordes, but thou art euer doinge worse, and worse.

The LORDE sayde also vnto me, in the tyme of Josias the kinge: Hast thou sene what that shrēkinge Israel hath done? how she hath runne vp vpon all hie hilles, and amonge all thick trees, and there played the harlot? hast thou sene also, (when she had done all this) how I sayde vnto her: that she shulde turne agayne vnto me, and yet she is not returned? Juda that vnfaithfull sister of hirs also sawe this: Namely, that affter I had well sene the aduoutrye of the shrenkinge harlot Israel, I put her awaye, and gaue her a byll of deuorcement.

For all this, hir vnfaithfull sister Juda was not ashamed, but wente backe and played the whore also. Yee and the noyse of hir whordome hath defyled the whole lōde. For she hath committed hir aduoutrie with stones and stockes.

Nevertheless, hir vnfaithfull sister Juda is not turned vnto me agayne with hir whole herte, but faynedly, saieth the LORDE. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The backslyder Israel is more righteous, thē the vnfaithfull Juda: and therfore go preach these wordes toward the north, & saye: Thou shrenkinge Israel, turne agayne (saieth the LORDE,) and I will not turne my face from you, for I am merciful, saieth the LORDE, & I will not allwaye beare displeasure agaynst the: but on this condicion, that thou knowe thy greate blasphemy: Namely, that thou hast vnfaithfully forsaken the LORDE thy God, & hast made thy silf partaker of straunge goddes vnder all grene trees, but hast had no wil to heare my voyce, saieth the LORDE. Iere.5.b Esa.57.a

O ye shrenkinge children, turne agayne, saieth the LORDE, and I wilbe maried with you. For I will take one out of the citie and two out of one generacion from amōge you, and bringe you out of Sion: and will gene you hyrdmē after myne owne mynde, which shal fede you with lernynge and wyßdome. Ezc.2.c Osee.14.a Eze.14.a Osee.2.d

D Moreover, when ye be increased and multiplied in the londe, then (saieth the LORDE) there shall nomore boost be made of the arke of the LORDES Testament: No man shall thinke vpon it, nether shall eny man make mencion of it: for from thence forth it shall nether be visited, ner honoured with giftes.

Then shall Jerusalem be called the LORDES seate, and all heithen shalbe gathered vnto it, for the name of the LORDE sake, which shalbe set vp at Jerusalem. And from that tyme forth, they shall folowe nomore the ymaginacion of their owne frawerde herte.

Thē those y be of the house of Juda, shal go vnto the house of Israel: And they shal come together out of the north, in to the same londe that I haue geuen youre fathers. I haue shewed also, how I toke the vp beinge but a childe, and gaue the a pleasaunt londe for thine heretage, yee and a goodly hooste of the heithen: and how I commaunded the, that thou shuldest call me father only, and not to shrencke fro me. Matt.8.b Matt.23.c

But like as a woman fayleth hir louer, so are ye vnfaithfull vnto me (o ye house of Israel) saieth the LORDE. And therfore the voyce of the children of Israel was herde on euery syde, wepinge and waylinge: for they haue defyled their waye, and forgotten God their LORDE. E Iere.31.c

O ye shrenkinge children, turne agayne, (sayinge: lo, we are thine, for thou art the LORDE oure God:) And so shal I heale youre bacturnynges. The hilles fall, and all the hie pryde of the mountaynes, but the healthy of Israel stondeth only vpon God oure LORDE.

Confucion hath deuoured oure fathers laboure from oure youth vp: yee their shepe and bullockes, their sonnes and doughters. So do we also slepe in oure confucion, and shame couereth vs: for we and oure fathers from oure youth vp vnto this daye haue synned agaynst the LORDE oure God. and ha- Tren.5.a Dan.3.b 9.a Baruc.1.b Iere.14.a Psal.105.a Esa.64.a Heft.14.a Iudit.7.c

haue not obeyed the voyce of the LORDE oure God.

The IIII. Chapter.

A O Israel, yf thou wilt turne the, then turne vnto me, saieth the LORDE. And yf thou wilt put awaye thy abhominacios out of my sighte, thou shalt not be moued: And shalt sweare: The LORDE lyueth: in treuth, in equite and rightuousnesse: and all people shall be fortunable and ioyfull in him. For thus saieth the LORDE, to all Juda and Jerusalem: plowe youre londe, and sowe not amonge the thornes.

Be circumcided in the LORDE, and cut awaye the foreskynne of youre hertes, all ye of Juda, and all the indwellers of Jerusalem: that my indignacion breake not out like fyre, & kyndle, so that no man maye quench it, because of the wickednes of youre ymaginacions.

Preach in Juda and Jerusalem, crie out and speake: blowe the trompettes in the londe, crie that every man maye heare, and saye: Gather you together, and we will go into stronge cities. Set vp the token in Sion, spede you, and make no tarienge: for I will bringe a greate plage, and a greate destruction from the north. For the spoyler of the Gentiles is broken vp from his place, as a lyon out of his dēne, that he maye make the londe waist, and destroye the cities, so, that no man maye dwell therin. Wherfore gyrde youre selues aboute w sack cloth, mourne, and wepe, for the fearfull wrath of the LORDE shal not be withdrawen from you.

B At the same tyme (saieth the LORDE) the hert of the kinge and of the prynces shal be gone, the prestes shalbe astonished, and the prophetes shalbe sore afrayed. Then sayde I: O LORDE God, hast thou then disceaued this people and Jerusalem, sayenge: ye shall haue peace, and now the swearde goeth thorow their lyues? Then shal it be saide to the people & to Jerusalem: there commeth a warme wynde from the north thorow the waye of my people, but nether to fanne, ner to clēse.

After that shall there come vnto me a stronge wynde, and then wil I also geue sentence vpon them. For lo, he commeth downe like as a cloude, and his charettes are like a stormy wynde: his horsmen are swifter then the Aegle. Wo vnto vs, for we are destroyed. C O Jerusalem, wasshe thine hert from wickednesse, that thou mayest be helped. How longe shal thy noysome thoughtes remayne with the?

For a voyce from Dan and from y hill of Ephraim speaketh out, and telleth of a destruction. Beholde, the heithen geue Jerusalem warnynge, and preach vnto her, that hir destroyers are cōmynge from farre countrees. They tell the cities of Juda the same also, they shall geue them warnynge in euery place, like as the watch men in the felde. For they haue prouoked me to wrath, saieth the LORDE.

Thy wayes and thy thoughtes, haue brought the vnto this, this is thyne owne wickednesse and disobedience, that hath possessed thyne hert: Ah my bely, ah my bely, (shalt thou crie) how is my hert so sore? my hert paunteth within me, I can not be still, for I haue herde the crienge of the trompettes, and peales of warre.

They crie murthur vpon murthur, the whole londe shal perish. Immediathly my tentes were destroyed, and my hangynges in the twincklinge of an eye. How longe shall I se the tokens of warre, and heare the noyse of the trompettes?

Nevertheles this shall come vpon them, because my people is become foolish, and hath vterly no vnderstondinge. They are the children of foolishnes, and without eny discrecio. To do euell, they haue witt ynough: but to do well, they haue no wisdome. I haue loked vpon the earth, and se, it is wyst and voyde. I loked towarde heauen, and it had no shyne.

I beheelde the mountaynes, and they trembled, and all the hilles were in a feare. I loked aboute me, and there was no body, and all the byrdes of the ayre were awaye. I marked well, and the plowed felde was become waist: yee all their cities were broken downe at the presence of the LORDE, and indignacion of his wrath.

For thus hath the LORDE sayde: The whole londe shalbe desolate, yet will I not then haue done. And therfore let the earth mourne, and let the heauen be sory aboue: for the thinge that I haue purposed and taken vpon me to do, shal not repente me, and I will not go from it. The whole londe shal fle, for the noyse of the horsmen and bowmen: they shall runne in to dennes in to wodes, and clymme vp the stony rockes. All the cities shalbe voyde, and no man dwellinge therin.

What wilt thou now do, thou beinge destroyed? For though thou clothest thy self with scarlet, & deckest y with gold: though thou paynteste thy face w colours, yet shalt thou trymme thy self in vayne.

For those that hither to have bene thy greate fauourers, shal abhorre the, and go about to slaye the. For (me thinke) I heare a noyse, like as it were of a woman trauelinge, or one labouringe of hir first childe: Euen the voyce of the doughter Sion, that casteth out hir armes, and swowneth, sayenge: Alwo is me, how sore vexed and sayntе is my herte, for them that are slayne.

The V. Chapter.

A LOke thorow Jerusalem, beholde and se: Seke thorow hir stretes also within, yf ye can fynde one man, that doth equall and right, or that laboureth to be faithfull: and I shall spare him (saieth the 4.a LORDE). For though they can saye: the LORDE lyueth, yet do they sweare to disceaue: Where as thou (o LORDE) lokest only vpon faith and treuth.

Thou hast scourged them, but they toke no repentaunce: thou hast correcte them for amendemēt, but they refused thy correction. They made their faces harder then a stone, and wolde not amende.

Therfore I thought in my self: peraduenture they are so symple and folish, that they vnderstonde nothinge of the LORDES wa-

B Wherfore a lyon out of the wod shal hur-
5.d te them, and a wolfe in the euenynge shal destroye them. The cat of the mountayne shal lie lurkinge by their cities, to teare in peces all them, that come therout. For their offences are many, and their departinge awaye is greate.

6.a Shulde I then for all this haue mercy vpon the? Thy children haue forsaken me, and swore by them that are no goddes. And albeit they were bounde to me in matiage, yet they fell to aduoutrie, and haunted harlottes houses.

In the desyre of vnclenly lust they are become like the stoned horse, euery man neyeth

9.a Shulde I not be avenged of euery people, that is like vnto this? Clymme vp vpon their walles, beate them downe, but destroye them not vtterly: cut of their braunches, because they are not the LORDES.

For vnfaithfully hath the house of Israel and Juda forsaken me, saieth the LORDE. 2.Pet.2.a mighty people, an olde people, a people who se speach thou knowest not, nether vnderstōdest what they saye.

Their arowes are sodane death, yee they them selues be very giauntes. This people shal eate vp thy frute & thy meate, yee they shal deuoure thy sonnes and thy doughters, thy shepe and thy bullockes.

They shall eate vp thy grapes & fyges. As for thy stronge and well fensed cities, wherin thou diddest trust, they shal destroye them with the swearde.

But this people hath a false and an obsti nate herte, they are departed and gone awaye fro me. They thinke not in their hartes: O let vs feare the LORDE oure God, that geueth vs rayne early and late, when nede is: which kepeth euer still the harueste for vs yearly.

bed you herof. For amonge my people are founde wicked personnes, that priuely laye snares and waite for men, to take them, and destroye them.

And like as a net is full of byrdes, so are their houses full of that, which they haue gotten with falsede and disceate. Herof cōmeth their greate substaunce and riches, herof are they fat and welthy, and are runne awaye fro me with shamefull blasphemies. They ministre not the lawe, they make no ende of the fatherlesses cause, they iudge not the poore acordinge to equite.

Shulde I not punysh these thinges, saieth the LORDE? Shulde I not be avenged of all soch people, as these be? Horrible and greuous thinges are done in the londe.

The prophetes teach falsely, and the prestes folowe them, and my people hath pleasure therin. What will come therof at the last?

The VI. Chapter.

COme out of Jerusalem, ye stronge children of Ben Jamin: blowe vp the trompettes ye Tecuites, set vp a token vnto Bethacarem, for a plage and a greate misery pepeth out from the North.

I will licken the doughter Sion to a fayre and tendre woman, and to her shall come the shepherdes with their flockes. Their tentes shal they pitch rounde aboute her, and euery one shal fede with his honde. Make batell agaynst her (shal they saye:) Arise, let vs go vp, while it is yet daye.

Alas, the daye goeth awaye, & the night shadowes fall downe: Arise, let vs go vp by night, and destroye hir stronge holdes, for thus hath the LORDE of hoostes commaunded.

Hew downe hir trees, and set vp bulwortes agaynst Jerusalē. This is the cite that must be punished, for in her is all maliciousnes. Like as a cōdyte aboundeth in water, euē so this citie aboūdeth in wickednes. Robbery and vnrighteousnesse is herde in her, sorow & woundes are euer there in my sight. Amēde the (o Jerusalem) lest I withdrawe my herte from the, and make the desolate: & thy londe also, yt no man dwel in it. For thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: The residue of Israel shalbe gathered, as the remnaunt of grapes.

And therfore turne thine honde agayne into the basket, like the grape gatherer. But vnto whom shal I speake: whom shal I warne, that he maye take hede? Their eares are so vncircumcised, that they maye not heare.

Beholde, they take the worde of God but for a scorne, and haue no lust therto. And therfore I am so full of thy indignacion (o LORDE) that I maye suffre no longer. Shed out thy wrath vpon the children that are without, and vpon all yonge men. Yee the man must be taken presoner with the wife, and the aged with the crepel. Their houses with their londes and wiues shal be turned vnto straungers, whē I stretch out myne hōde vpon the inhabitours of this londe, saieth the LORDE. For from the leest vnto the most, they hange all vpon covetousnes: and from the prophet vnto the prest, they go all aboute with falsede and lyes.

And besyde that, they heale the hurte of my people with swete wordes, sayenge: peace, peace, when there is no peace at all. Therfore they must be ashamed, for they haue cōmitted abhominacion. But how shulde they be ashamed, when they knowe nothinge, neither of shame ner good nurture? And therfore they shal fall amonge the slayne, and in the houre when I shall viset them, they shal be brought downe, saieth the LORDE.

Thus saieth the LORDE: go in to the stretes, considre and make inquisicion for the olde waye: and yf it be the good and righte waye, then go therin, that ye maye fynde rest for youre soules. (But they saye: we will not walke therin) and I will set watchmen ouer you, and therfore take hede vnto the voyce of the trompet. But they saye: we will not take hede. Heare therfore ye Gentiles, and thou congregacion shalt knowe, what I haue deuysed for them. Heare thou earth also: beholde, I will cause a plage come vpon this people, euen the frute of their owne ymaginacions.

For they haue not bene obedient vnto my wordes and to my lawe, but abhorred them. Wherfore bringe ye me incense from Saba, & swete smellinge Calamus from farre cōtrees? Youre burnt offeringes displease me, and I reioyse not in youre sacrifices.

And therfore thus saieth the LORDE: beholde, I will make this people fall, and there shal fall from amonge them the father with the children, one neighboure shal perish with another.

Moreouer thus saieth yt LORDE: Beholde, there shal come a people from the North, & a greate people shal arise from yt endes of yt earth, wt bowes & wt dartes shal they be weapened: It is a rough & fearce people, an vnmerciful people: their voyce roareth like the see, they ride vpō horses wel apointed to yt ba tell agaynst the, o doughter Sion. Then shal this crie be herde: Oure armes are feble, heuynes and sorow is come vpon vs, as vpon a woman trauelinge with childe. No man go forth in to the felde, no man come vpon the hie strete: for the sweard and feare of the enemie shalbe on euery side.

Wherfore, gyrde a sack cloth aboute the (o thou doughter of my people) sprynkle thy self with asshes, mourne and wepe bitterly, as vpon thy only beloued sonne: For the destroyer shal sodenly fall vpon vs. The haue I set for a prouer of my harde people, to seke out and to trye their wayes. For they are all vnfaithful and fallen awaye, they hange vpon shameful lucre, they are clene brasse and yron, for they hurte and destroye euery man. The bellous are brent in the fyre, the leade is consumed, the melter melteth in vayne, for the euel is not taken awaye from them. Therfore shal they be called naughty syluer, because the LORDE hath cast them out.

The VII. Chapter.

THese are the wordes, that God spake vnto Jeremy: Stonde vnder the gates of the LORDES house, and crie out these wordes there, with a loude voyce, and saye: Heare the worde of the LORDE, all ye of Juda, that go in at this dore, to honoure the LORDE. Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel. Amende youre wayes and youre councels, and I wil let you dwell in this place. Trust not in false lyenge wordes, sayenge: here is the temple of the LORDE, here is the temple of the LORDE, here is the temple of the LORDE.

For yf ye will amende youre waies and councels, yf ye wil iudge right betwirte a man and his neghboure: yf ye wil not oppresse the straunger, the fatherles & the wyd dowe: yf ye will not shed innocent bloude in this place: yf ye wil not cleue to straūge goddes to youre owne destruction: then wil I let you dwell in this place, yee in the londe that I gaue afore tyme vnto youre fathers for euer. But take hede, yee trust in councels, that begyle you and do you no good. For when ye haue stollē, murthured, committed aduoutrie, and periury: Whē ye haue offred vnto Baal, folowinge straunge & vnknowne goddes: Then come ye, and stonde before me in this house (which hath my name geuen vnto it) and saye: Tush, we are absolued quyte, though we haue done all these abhominacions.

What? thinke you this house that beareth my name, is a denne of theues? And these thinges are not done priuely, but before myne eyes, saieth the LORDE. Go to my place in Silo, where vnto I gaue my name afore tyme, and loke well what I dyd to the same place, for the wickednes of my people of Israel. And now, though ye haue done all these dedes (saieth the LORDE) and I my self rose vp euer by tymes to warne you and to comon with you: yet wolde ye not heare me: I called, ye wolde not answere. And therfore euen as I haue done vnto Silo, so wil I do to this house, that my name is geuen vnto, (and that ye put youre trust in) yee vnto the place that I haue geuen to you and youre fathers. And I shal thrust you out of my sight, as I haue cast out all youre brethren the whole sede of Ephraim.

Therfore thou shalt not praye for this people, thou shalt nether geue thākes, nor byd prayer for them: thou shalt make no intercession to me for them, for in no wise will I heare the. Seist thou not what they do in the cities of Juda, and without Jerusalem? The children gather stickes, the fathers kyndle the fyre, the mothers kneade the dowe, to bake cakes for the quene of heauen.

They poure out drinkoffringes vnto straūge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath: howbeit they hurte not me (saieth the LORDE) but rather confounde, and shame them selues.

And therfore, thus saieth the LORDE God: beholde, my wrath and my indignacion shalbe poured out vpon this place, vpon men and catell, vpō the trees in the felde and all frute of the londe, & it shal burne so, that no man maye quench it.

Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes, the God of Israel: Ye heape vp youre burntoffringes with youre sacrifices, & eate the flesh. But when I brought youre fathers out of Egipte, I spake no worde vnto them of burntoffringes and sacrifices: but this I commaunded them, sayenge: herken and obeye my voyce, and I shalbe youre God and ye shal be my people: so that ye walke in all the wayes, which I haue cōmaunded you, that ye maye prospere.

But they were not obedient, they inclyned not their eares there vnto, but went after their owne ymagynacions and after the mocions of their owne wicked herte, and so turned them selues awaye, and conuerted not vnto me. And this haue they done, from the tyme that youre fathers came out of Egipte, vnto this daye.

Ierc.25.a Neuertheles, I sent vnto them my seruauntes all the prophetes: I rose vp early and sent them worde, yet wolde they not herke, ner offre me their eares, but were obstinate, and worse then their fathers.

And thou shalt now speake all these wordes vnto them, but they shal not heare the: thou shalt crie vpon them, but they shal not answere the. Therfore shalt thou saye vnto them: this is the people, that nether heareth the voyce of the LORDE their God, ner receaueth his correction. Faithfulnes & treuth is clene rooted out of their mouth.

Ezec.5.a Wherfore cut of thine hayre, and cast it awaye, take vp a complaynte in the whole londe: for the LORDE shal cast awaye, and scatre the people, yͤ he is displeased with all.

Ierc.32.d For the children of Juda haue done euell in my sight, saieth the LORDE. They haue set vp their abhominacions, in the house yͤ hath my name, and haue defyled it. They haue also buylded an aulter at Tophet, which is in the valley of yͤ childrē of Ennō: yͤ they might burne their sonnes and doughters, which I neuer cōmaunded them, nether came it euer in my thought. And therfore beholde, the dayes shal come (saieth the LORDE) that it shal no more be called Tophet, or the valley of the children of Ennon, but the valley of the slayne: for in Tophet they shal be buried, because they shal els haue no rowme. Yee yͤ deed bodies of this people shal be eaten vp of the foules of the ayre & wilde beastes of the earth, & no man shal fraye them awaie. And as for the voyce of myrth & gladnesse of the cities of Juda, & Jerusalem, the voyce of the brydegrome and of the bryde: I will make them ceasse, for the londe shal be desolate.

AT the same tyme, saieth the LORDE, the bones of the kinges of Juda, the bones of his princes, the bones of the prestes and prophetes, yee and the bones of the citisens of Jerusalē, shalbe brought out of their graues and layed agaynst the Sonne, the Moone and all the heauenly hooste: whom they loued, whom they serued, whom they ranne after, whom they sought & worshipped. They shal nether be gathered togeather ner buried, but shal lye vpō the earth, to their shame and despisinge.

Luc.23.e And all they that remayne of this wicked generacion, shal desyre rather to dye thē to lyue: where so euer they remayne, & where as I scatre them, saieth the LORDE of hooستes. This shalt thou saye vnto them also: Thus saieth the LORDE: Do men fall so, that they arise not vp agayne: And turne they so farre awaye, yͤ they neuer conuerte? Wherfore then is this people and Jerusalem gone so farre backe, that they turne not againe? They are euer the longer the more obstinate, and will not be conuerted.

For I haue loked, and considered: but there is no mā, that speaketh a good worde: there is no man, that taketh repētaunce for his synne, that will so moch as saye: wherfore haue I done this? But euery man (as soone as he is turned backe) runneth forth still, like a wilde horse in a battayl. The Storke knoweth his apoynted tyme, the Turtledoue, Swalow and the Crane, cōsidre the tyme of their trauayle: but my people will not knowe the tyme of the punyshment of the LORDE. How darre ye saye then: we are wise, we haue the lawe of the LORDE amonge vs?

Beholde, the disceatfull penne of the scribes, setteth forth lies: therfore shal the wise be confounded, they shalbe afrayed and taken: for lo, they haue cast out the worde of the LORDE: what wysdome can then be amonge them? Wherfore, I will gene their wyues vnto aleauntes, and their feldes vnto destroyers.

For from the lowest vnto the hyest, they folowe all shamefull lucre: and from the prophet vnto the preist, they deale all with lies. Neuertheles, they heale the hurte of my people with swete wordes, sayenge: peace, peace, where there is no peace at all.

Iye for shame, how abhominable thinges do they? And yet they be not ashamed, ye they knowe of no shame.

Wherfore in the tyme of their visitacion, they shal fall amonge the deed bodies, saieth the LORDE.

Moreouer I will gather them in (saieth the LORDE) so that there shal not be one grape vpon the vyne, nether one fyge vpon the fygetre, and the leaues shalbe plucte of.

Then will I cause them to departe, and saye: why prolonge we the tyme? Let vs gather oure selues together, and go in to the stronge cite, there shall we be in rest: For the LORDE oure God hath put vs to sylence, and geuen vs water myrte with gall, to drynke, because we haue synned agaynst him.

We loked for peace, and we fayre nothe better, we wayted for the tyme of health, and lo, here is nothinge but trouble.

Then shall the noyse of his horses be herde from Dan, the whole londe shall be afrayed at the neyēge of his stronge horses: for they shal go in, and deuoure the londe, with all that is in it: the cities, and those that dwell therin. Moreouer, I will sende Cockatrices & serpētes amonge you (which will not be charmed) and they shal byte you, sayeth the LORDE.

Sorowe is come vpon me, and heuynes vexeth my herte: for lo, the voyce of the criege of my people is herde from a farre countre: Is not the LORDE in Sion? Is not he kinge in her? Wherfore then haue they greued me (shall the LORDE saye) with their ymages and foolish straunge fashions? The harueste is gone, the Sōmer hath an ende, and we are not helped. I am sore vexed, because of the hurte of my people: I am heuy and abashed, for there is no more Triacle at Galaad, and there is no phisician, that cā heale the hurte of my people.

The IX. Chapter.

O, Who will geue my heade water ynough, & a well of teares for myne eyes: that I maye wepe night ād daye, for the slaughter of my people? Wolde God that I had a cotage some where farre from folke, that I might leaue my people, and go from thē: for they be all aduoutrers and a shrenckinge sorte. They bēde their tūges like bowes, to shute out lies: As for the treuth, they maye nothinge awaye with all in the worlde. For they go from one wickednes to another, and holde nothinge of me, saieth the LORDE.

Yee one must kepe himself from another, no man maye safely trust his owne brother: for one brother vndermyneth another, & one neyghboure begyleth another. Yee one dissembleth with another, and they deale with no treuth. They haue practised their tunges to lye, and taken greate paynes to do mischefe. They haue set their stole in the myddest of diseeate, and (for very dissemblinge falsede) they wil not knowe me, saieth the LORDE.

Therfore thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes, beholde, I wil melte them and trie thē, for what shulde I els do to my people? Their tunges are like sharpe arowes, to speake diseeate. With their mouth they speake peaceably to their neyghboure, but preuely they laye waite for him. Shulde I not punysh them for these thinges, saieth the LORDE? Or, shulde I not be auenged of eny soch people, as this? Vpon the mountaynes will I take vp a lamentacion and sorowfull crie, and a mournynge vpon the fayre playnes of the wildernes: Namely, how they are so brente vp, that no man goeth there eny more: Yee a man shal not heare one beast crie there.

Byrdes and catell are all gone from thēce. I will make Jerusalem also an heape of stones, and a denne of venymous wormes. And I wil make the cities of Juda so waist, that no man shal dwell therin. What man is so wise, as to vnderstonde this? Or to whom hath the LORDE spoken by mouth, that he maye shewe this, and saye: O thou londe, why perisheste thou so? Wherfore art thou so brent vp, and like a wildernesse, that no mā goeth thorow? Yee the LORDE himself tolde the same vnto them, that forsoke his lawe, and kepte not the thynge that he gaue them in commaundement, nether lyued therafter: but folowed the wickednes of their owne hertes, and serued straunge goddes, as their fathers taught them.

Therfore, thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes, the God of Israel: Beholde, I will fede this people with wormwod, and geue thē gall to drynke. I will scatte them also amonge the Heithen, whom nether they ner their fathers haue knowne: and I will sende a swearde amonge them, to persecute them, vntill I bringe them to naught. Moreouer, thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: Loke that ye call for mournynge wyues, and sende for wise women: that they come shortly, and singe a mournynge songe of you: that the teares maye fall out of oure eyes, and that oure eye lyddes maye gusshe out of water.

For there is a lamentable noyse herde of Sion: O how are we so sore destroyed? O how are we so piteously confounded? We must forsake oure owne naturall countre, and we are shot out of oure owne lodgīges. Yet heare the worde of the LORDE (o ye women) and let youre eares regarde the wordes of his mouth: that ye maye lerne youre doughters to mourne, and that euery one maye teach hir neyghboureesse, to make lamentacion. Namely thus: Deeth is clymmē vp in at oure wyndowes, he is come in to oure houses, to destroye the childe before the doore, & ȳ yonge man in the strete.

But tell thou planely, thus saieth ȳ LORDE: The deed bodies of men shal lye apon ȳ grounde, as the donge vpon the felde, and as the hay after the mower, and there shal be no man to take them vp. Moreouer, thus saieth the LORDE: Let not the wise man reioyse in his wisdome, ner the stronge man in his strength, nether the rich man in his riches: But who so wil reioyse, let him reioyse in this, that he vnderstōdeth, and knoweth me: for I am the LORDE, which do mercie, equite and righteousnes vpon earth. Therfore haue I pleasure in soch thinges, saieth ye LORDE. Beholde, the tyme cōmeth (saieth the LORDE) that I wil vyset all them, whose foreskynne is vncircumcised: The Egipcians, the Iewes, the Edomites, the Ammonites, the Moabites, and the shauen Madianites, that dwel in the wildernes. For all the Gentiles are vncircumcised in the flesh, but all the house of Israel, are vncircumcised in the herte.

The x. Chapter.

A HEare the worde of the LORDE, ye he speaketh vnto the, o thou house of Israel: Thus saieth the LORDE: Ye shal not lerne after the maner of the Heithē, and ye shal not be afrayed for the tokens of heauen: for the Heithen are afrayed of soch: Nee all the customes and lawes of the Gētiles are nothinge, but vanite. They hewe downe a tre in the wod with the hondes of the worke man, and fashion it with the axe: they couer it ouer with golde or syluer, they fasten it wt nales and hammers, that it moue not. It stōdeth as stiff as the palme tre, it can nether speake ner go, but must be borne. Be not ye afrayed of soch, for they cā do nether good ner euel. But there is none like vnto ye (o LORDE) thou art greate, and greate is the name of ye power. Who wolde not feare the? for what kinge of the Gentiles wolde not obeye the?

B For amonge all the wysemen of the Gentiles, and in all their kingdomes, there is none, that maye be lickened vnto the. They are altogether vnlerned and vnwise, All their connynge is but vanite: namely, wod, syluer, which is brought out of Tharsis, and beatē to plates: and golde from Ophir, a worke ye is made with the honde of the craftesman & the caster, clothed with yalow sylck and scarlet: euen so is the worke of their wysemen all together. But the LORDE is a true God, a lyuinge God, and an euerlastinge kinge. Yf he be wroth, the earth shaketh: all the Gētiles maye not abyde his indignacion.

As for their goddes, it maye well be sayde of thē: they are goddes, that made nether heauē ner earth: therfore shal they perish frō the earth, and from all thinges vnder heauen. But (as for oure God) he made the earth with his power, and with his wisdome hath he fynished the whole compasse of the worlde, with his discrecion hath he spred out the heauens. At his voyce the waters gather together in the ayre, he draweth vp ye cloudes from the vttemost partes of ye earth: he turneth lightninge to rayne, and bringeth forth the wyndes out of their treasuries: His wisdome maketh all men fooles. And confunded be all casters of ymages, for that they cast, is but a vayne thinge, and hath no life. The vayne crastes men with their workes, that they in their vanite haue made, shall perish one with another in the tyme of visitacion. Neuertheles, Jacobs portciō is not soch: but it is he, that hath made all thinges, and Israel is the rodd of his inheritaūce: The LORDE of hoostes is his name. Put awaye thy vnclennesse out of the londe, thou that art in the stronge cities. For thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, I wil now thrust out the inhabitours of this londe a greate waye off, and trouble them of soch a fashiō, that they shal no more be founde.

D Alas, how am I hurte? Alas, how paynfull are my scourges vnto me? For I cōsider this sorowe by my self, & I must suffre it. My tabernacle is destroyed, and all my coardes are broken. My children are gone fro me, and can no where be founde. Now haue I none to spreade out my tente, or to set vp my hangynges. For the hyrdmen haue done folishly, that they haue not sought the LORDE. Therfore haue they dealt vnwisely with their catell, & all are scatred abrode. Beholde, the noyse is harde at honde, and greate sedicīō out of the north: to make the cities of Iuda a wylderneesse, and a dwellinge place for Dragons. Now I knowe (o LORDE) that is not in mās power to ordre his owne waies, or to rule his owne steppes & goinges. Therfore chastē thou vs (o LORDE) but with fauoure, and not in thy wrath, bringe vs not vterly to naught. Poure out thy indignacion rather vpon the Gētiles, that knowe ye not, and vpon the people that call not on thy name: And that be cause they haue consumed, deuoured and destroyed Jacob, and haue rooted out his glory.

The XI. Chapter.

THis is another Sermon, which the LORDE commaunded Jeremy for to preach, sayenge:

Heare the wordes of the couenaut, and speake vnto all Juda, and to all them that dwel at Jerusalem, And saye thou vnto the: Thus saieth the LORDE God of Israel: Cursed be euery one, that is not obedient vnto ye wordes of this couenaūt: which I commaunded vnto youre fathers, what tyme as I brought them out of Egipte, from the yron fornace, sayenge: Be obedient vnto my voyce, and do accordinge to all that I comma unde you: so shal ye be my people, and I wil be youre God, and will kepe my promyse, y I haue sworne vnto youre fathers: Namely, that I wolde geue them a londe which floweth with mylke and hony, as ye se, it is come to passe vnto this daye.

Then answered I, and sayde: Amen. It is euen so LORDE, as thou sayest. Then the LORDE sayde vnto me agayne: Preach this in y cities off Juda and rounde aboute Jerusalem, and saye: Heare the wordes off this cōuenaunt, that ye maye kepe them. For I haue diligently exorted youre fathers, euer sence the tyme that I brought them out off the Londe off Egipte, vnto this daye. I gaue them warnynge by tymes, sayenge: herken vnto my voyce: Neuertheles, they wolde not obeye me, nor enclyne their eares vnto me, but folowed the wicked ymaginacions of their owne hertes. And therfore haue I accused them as transgressours of all the wordes off this conuenaunt, that I gaue them to kepe, which they (notwithstōdinge) haue not kepte.

And the LORDE sayde vnto me: It is foūde out, that whole Jsrael and all the citisens off Jerusalem are gone backe. They haue turned them selues to the blasphemies off their fore fathers, which had no lust to heare my worde. Euen likewise haue these also folowed straunge goddes, and worshipped them. The house off Jsrael and Juda haue broken my couenaunt, which I made w' their fathers.

Therfore thus saieth the LORDE: Behold, I will sende a plage amonge you, which ye shal not be able to escape: and though ye crie vnto me, I will not heare you. Thē shal the townes off Juda and the citisens of Jerusalem go, and call vpon their goddes, vnto whom they made their oblacions: but they are not able to helpe them in tyme off their trouble. For as many cities as thou hast (o Juda) so many goddes hast thou also: And loke how many stretes there be in the (o Jerusalem) so many shameful aulters haue ye set vp, to offre vpon them vnto Baal. But praye not thou for this people, byd nether prayse ner prayer for them: for though they crie vnto me in their trouble, yet will I not heare them.

O thou beloued, why doest thou so shamefull greate blasphemies in my house: euen as though that holy flesh might absolue the, specially when thou hast made thy booste off thy wickednes. The LORDE called the a grene olyue tre, a fayre one, a frutefull one, a goodly one: but now that there is a contrary reporte off the abrode, he will burne the vp, ād destroye thy braunches. For the LORDE off hooستes that plāted the, hath deuysed a plage for the (o thou house of Jsrael & Juda) for y euel that ye haue done, to prouoke him to wrath, in that ye dyd seruyce vnto Baal.

This (o LORDE) haue I lerned of the, and vnderstonde it, for thou hast shewed me their ymaginacions. But I (as a meke lambe) was caried awaye to beslayne: not knowinge, that they had deuysed soch a councel agaynst me, sayenge: We will destroye his meate with wod, and dryue him out of the londe of the lyuynge, that his name shal neuer be thought vpon. Therfore I will beseke the now (o LORDE of hooستes) thou righteous iudge, thou that tryest the reynes and the hertes: let me se the auenged of them, for vnto the haue I committed my cause. The LORDE therfore spake thus of the citesens of Anothot, that sought to slaye me, sayēge: Preach not vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, or els thou shalt dye of oure hondes. Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE of hooستes: Beholde, I will viset you. Youre yonge mē shal perish with the swearde, yo' sonnes and youre doughters shal vtterly dye of honger, so that none shal remayne. For vpon the citesyns off Anathot wil I bringe a plage, and the yeare of their visitacion.

The XII. Chapter.

O LORDE, thou art more righteous, then that I shulde dispute with the: Neuertheles, let me talke with the in thinges reasonable. How happeneth it, that the waye off the vngodly is so prosperous: and that it goeth so wel with them, which (with out eny shame) offēde and lyue in wickednesse? Thou planteſt them, they take rote, they growe, and bringe forth frute. They boost moch off the, yet doest thou not punysh them. But thou LORDE (to whom I am well knowne) thou that hast sene, & proued my herte, take them awaye, like as a flock is caried to the slaughter house, and apoynte them for the daye off slaughtinge.

How longe shall the londe mourne, and all the herbes off the felde perish, for the wickednes off them that dwell therin? The catell and the byrdes are gone, yet saye they: tush, God will not destroye vs vterly.

Seinge thou art weery in runnynge with the fote men, how wilt thou then runne wᵗ horses? In a peaceable sure londe thou mayest be safe, but how wilt thou do in the furious pryde of Jordane? For thy brethren ād thy kynred haue altogether despised the, and cried out vpon the in thine absence. Beleue them not, though they speake fayre wordes to the. As for me (saye I) I haue forsaken myne owne dwellinge place, and left myne heretage. My life also that I loue so wel, haue I geuen in to the hōdes of myne enemies. Myne heretage is become vnto me, as a Lyon in the wod. It cried out vpon me, therfore haue I forsaken it. Myne heretage is vnto me, as a speckled byrde, a byrde of dyuerse colores is vpon it. Go hence, and gather all the beastes of the felde together, that they maye eate it vp.

Dyuerse hyrdmē haue broken downe my vynyarde, and troden vpon my porcion. Of my pleasaunt porcion, they haue made a wildernes & deserte. They haue layed it waist: and now that it is waist, it sigheth vnto me. Yee the whole londe lieth waist, and no man regardeth it. The distroyers come ouer the heeth euery waye, for the swearde off the LORDE shal consume from the one ende of ỹ lōde to the other, and no flesh shal haue rest. They shal sowe wheat, and reepe thornes. They shal take heretage in possession, but it shal do them no good. And ye shalbe confounded of youre owne wynnynges, because of the greate wrath of the LORDE.

Thus saieth the LORDE vpon all myne euel neighbours, that laye honde on myne heretage, which I haue geuen my people of Israel: Beholde, I wil plucke them (namely Israel) out of their londe, and put out the house of Juda from amonge them. And whē I haue rooted thē out, I wilbe at one with thē agayne, and wil haue mercy vpon them: and bringe them agayne, euery man to his owne heretage, and in to his lōde. And yf they (namely that trouble my people) wil lerne ỹ wayes of them, to sweare by my name: The LORDE lyueth (like as they lerned my people to sweare by Baal) thē shal they be reken ed amōge my people. But yf they wil not obeye, thē will I rote out the same folke, and destroye them, saieth the LORDE,

The XIII. Chapter.

THus saied the LORDE vnto me: go thy waye & get the a lynnen breche, and gyrde it aboute thy loynes, and let it not be wet. Then I got me a breche, acordinge to the commaundemēt of the LORDE, and put it aboute my loynes. After this, the LORDE spake vnto me agayne: Take the breche that thou hast prepared & put aboute the, and get the vp, and go vnto Euphrates, and hyde it in a hole off the rock. So wēt I, and hydde it, as the LORDE commaunded me. And it happened longe after this, that the LORDE spake vnto me: Vp, and get the to Euphrates, and fet the breche from thence, which I commaunded the to hyde there. Then went I to Euphrates, and digged vp, and toke the breche from the place where I had hyd it: and beholde, the breche was corupte, so that it was profitable for nothinge.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thus saieth the LORDE: Euen so will I corruppe the pryde off Juda, and the hie mynde off Jerusalē. This people is a wicked people, they will not heare my worde, they folowe ỹ wicked ymaginacions off their owne hert, & hange vpon straūge goddes, thē haue they serued & worshipped: and therfore they shalbe as this breche, that serueth for nothinge. For as strately as a breche lieth vpon a mās loynes, so strately dyd I bynde ỹ whole house of Israel, and the whole house of Juda vnto me, saieth the LORDE: that they might be my people: that they might haue a glorious name: ỹ they might be in honoure: but they wolde not obeye me. Therfore laye this ryddle before them, and saye: Thus saieth the LORDE God of Israel: euery pot shal be fylled with wyne. And they shal saye: thinkest thou we knowe not, ỹ euery pot shalbe fylled with wyne? Then shalt thou saye vnto them: Thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, I shal fyll all the inhabitours of this lōde with dronckēnes, the kynges that syt vpō Dauids stole, the prestes and prophetes, with all ỹ dwell at Jerusalem. And I will smyte them one agaynst another, yee ỹ fathers agaynst the sonnes, saieth the LORDE.

I wil not pardon them, I wil not spare them, ner haue pitie vpon them: but destroye them. Be obedient, geue eare, take no disdayne at it, for it is the LORDE himself that speaketh. Honoure ỹ LORDE youre God herem, or he take his light from you, and or euer you re fete stomble in darknesse at ỹ hill: lest whē ye loke for the light, he turne it in to ỹ shadowe and darknesse of death. But yf ye wil not heare me, that geue you secrete warnynge, I will mourne from my whole herte for youre stubburnesse. Piteously will I wepe, and the teares shall gusshe out of myne eyes. For the LORDES flocke shal be caried awaye captiue.

Tell the kinge & the rulers: Humble yo^r selues, set you downe lowe, for ye crowne of yo^r glory shal fall from youre heade. The cities towarde the south shalbe shut vp, & no man shal open thē. All Juda shal be caried awaye captyne, so that none shall remayne.

Lift vp youre eyes, and beholde thē, that come from the North: Like a fat flocke shal they fall vpon the. To whom wilt thou make thy mone, when they come vpon the? for thou hast taught thē thy self, and made thē masters ouer the. Shal not sorowe come vpō the, as on a woman trauelinge with childe? And yf thou woldest saye thē in thine hert: Wherfore come these thinges vpō me? Euē for the multitude of thy blasphemies, shall thy hynder partes & thy fete be discouered.

For like as the man of Inde maye chaunge his skynne, & the cat of the mountayne hir spottes: so maye ye that be exercised in euell, do good. Therfore will I scatre you, lyke as ye stobble that is takē awaye with ye south wynde. This shal be youre porcion, and the porcion of youre measure, wher with ye shal be rewarded of me, saieth the LORDE: because ye haue forgotten me, and put youre trust in disceatful thinges. Therfore shall I turne thy clothes ouer thy heade, and discouer thy thees, that thy preuyties maye be sene: yt aduoutrie, thy deedly malice, thy beastilynes and thy shamefull whordome. For vpon the feldes and hilles I haue sene thy abhominations. Wo be vnto the (o Jerusalē) whē wilt thou euer be clensed enymore?

The XIIII. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE shewed vnto Jeremy, cōcernynge ye derth off the frutes.

Juda shal mourne, men shall not go moch more thorow his gates: the londe shal be nomore had in reputacion, & the crie of Jerusalē shal breake out. The lordes shall sende their seruauntes to fetch water, & when they come to the welles, they shal fynde no water, but shal carie their vessels home emptie. They shal be ashamed ād confounded, & shal couer their heades. For the groūde shalbe dried vp, because there cōmeth no rayne vpon it. The plowmen also shalbe ashamed, ād shal couer their heades. The hynde shal forsake the yonge fawne, that se būgeth forth in ye felde, because there shalbe no grasse. The wilde Asses shall stonde in the Mosse, and drawe in their wynde like the Dragōs, their eyes shal fayle for wāt of grasse.

Doutles oure owne wickednesse rewarde vs: But LORDE do thou accordinge to yt name, though oure transgressions and synnes be many. For thou art the comforte & helpe of Israel in the tyme of trouble. Why wilt thou be as a straunger in the Londe, and as one that goeth ouer the felde, ād cōmeth in only to remayne for a night? Why wilt thou make thy self a cowarde, and as it were a giaūte that yet maye not helpe? For thou arrt ours (o LORDE) and we beare thy name, therfore forsake vs not. Isa. 49.b Iere. 16.c 17.c

Then spake the LORDE, concernynge this people yt haue pleasure to go so nembly w^t their fete, and leaue not of, and therfore displeaseth the LORDE: in so moch, that he will now bringe agayne to remembraunce all their myssedes, ād punysh all their synnes. Nee euen thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou shalt not praye to do this people good. For though they fast, I will not heare their prayers. And though they offre burnt offriges & sacrifices, yet wil not I accepte them. For I will destroye them with the swearde, honger and pestilence. Then answerde I: O LORDE God, the prophetes saye vnto them: Tush, ye shal se no swearde, and no honger shall come vpon you, but the LORDE shal geue you continuall rest in this place. Iere. 5.b Soph. 1. c Iere. 14.b 23.c

And the LORDE sayde vnto me: The prophetes preach lies vnto them in my name. I haue not spoken with them, nether gaue I them eny charge, nether dyd I sende thē: yet they preach vnto you false visions, charmynge, vanite, and disceatfulnesse of their owne herte. Therfore thus saieth the LORDE: As for those prophetes that preach in my name (whom I neuertheles haue not sent) and yt saye: Tush, there shal nether batel ner honger be in this londe: With swearde ād with honger shal those prophetes perish, and the people to whom they haue preached, shal be cast out of Jerusalem, dye of honger, ād be slayne with the swearde, (and there shal be no man to burie them) both they ād their wyues, their sonnes and their doughters. For thus wil I poure their wickednes vpon thē. This shalt thou saye also vnto them: Myne eyes shal wepe without ceassynge daye & night. For my people shalbe destroyed with greate harme, and shall perish with a greate plage. For yff I go in to the felde, lo, it lieth all full off slayne men: Aff I come in to the cite, lo, they be all famesshed of honger. Iere. 23.d Zach. 13.a Iere. 16.a Thren. 2.f Tren. 1.d

O mother, alas that euer thou dydest beare me, an enmie and hated of the whole londe: Though I neuer lente ner receaued vpon vsury, yet euery man speake euell vpon me. And ye LORDE answered me: Lede not I the then vnto good? Come not I to the, when thou art in trouble: and helpe the, when thine enemie oppresseth the? Doth one yron hurte another, or one metall that cōmeth from the north, another? As for youre riches and treasure, I will geue them out in to a pray, not for eny money, but because of all youre synnes, that ye haue done i all youre coastes. And I will bringe you with youre enemies in to a londe, that ye knowe not: for the fyre that is kyndled in my indignācion, shal burne you vp.

O LORDE (sayde I) then thou knowest all thinges, therfore remembre me, ād viset me, delyuer me fro my persecuters: Receaue not my cause in the lōge wrath, yet thou knowest, that for thy sake I suffre rebuke. When I had founde thy wordes, I ate them vp greedely: they haue made my hert ioyfull & glad. For I call vpon thy name, o LORDE God of hoostes. I dwell not amonge the scorners, nether is my delyte therin: but I dwell only in the feare of thy honde, for thou hast fylled me with bytternes. Shall my heuynes endure for euer? Are my plages then so greate, that they maye neuer be healed? Wilt thou be as a water, that falleth, and can not contynue? Vpon these wordes, thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Yf thou wilt turne agayne, I shal set the in my seruyce: and yf thou wilt take out the thinge that is precious from the vyle, thou shalt be euen as myne owne mouth. They shal conuerte vnto the, but turne not thou vnto thē: and so shal I make the a stronge wall of stele agaynst this people. They shal fight agaynst the, but they shal not preuayle. For I my self will be with the, to helpe the, and delyuer the, saieth the LORDE. And I will ryd the out of the hondes of the wicked, and delyuer the out of the honde of Tirauntes.

The XVI. Chapter.

MOreouer, thus sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou shalt take ye no wife, ner beget children in this place. For of the children that are borne in this place, of their mothers that haue borne them, and of their fathers that haue begotten them in this londe, thus saieth the LORDE: They shal dye an horrible deeth, no mā shal mourne for them, ner burie them, but they shal lye as dō ge vpon the earth. They shal perish thorow the swearde and honger, and their bodies shal be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the earth. Agayne, thus saieth the LORDE: Go not vnto them, that come together, for to mourne and wepe: for I haue taken my peace frō this people (saieth the LORDE) yee my fauoure and my mercy. And in this londe shal they dye, olde and yonge, and shall not be buried: no man shall bewepe them, no man shall clippe or shaue himself for them.

There shal not one viset another, to mourne with them for their deed, or to comforte them. One shall not offre another the cuppe off consolacion, to forget their heuynes for father and mother. Thou shalt not go in to their feast house, to syt downe, moch lesse to eate or drynke with them. For thus saieth the LORDE off hoostes the God off Israel: Beholde, I shall take awaye out of this place, the voyce off myrth ād gladnesse, the voyce off the brydegrome and off the bryde: yee and that in youre dayes, that ye maye se it.

Now when thou shewest this people all these wordes, and they saye vnto the: Wherfore hath the LORDE deuysed all this greate plage for vs? Or what is the offence and synne, that we haue done agaynst the LORDE oure God? Then make thou them this answere: Because youre fathers haue forsaken me (saieth the LORDE) and haue cleued vnto straunge goddes, whom they haue honoured and worshipped: but me haue they forsaken, and haue not kepte my lawe. And ye wᵗ youre shamefull blasphemies, haue exceaded the wickednes off youre fathers. For euery one off you foloweth the frawerde euel ymaginacion off his owne hert, and is not obedient vnto me.

Therfore wil I cast you out off this londe, in to a londe that ye and youre fathers knowe not: and there shall ye serue straunge goddes daye and night, there will I shewe you no fauoure. Beholde therfore (saieth the LORDE) the daies are come, that it shall no more be sayed: The LORDE lyueth, which brought the children of Israel out of the lōde of Egipte: but (it shall be sayde) the LORDE lyueth, that brought the children of Israel from the North, & from all londes where I had scatred them. For I wil bringe thē agayne in to the lōde, that I gaue vnto their fathers.

Beholde, (saieth the LORDE) I will sende out many fisshers to take them, and after ỹ wil I sende out many hunters to hunte thē out, from all mountaynes and hilles ād out of the caues of stones. For myne eyes behold de all their wayes, and they can not be hyd fro my face, nether can their wicked dedes be kepte close out of my sight. But first will I sufficiently reward their shamefull blasphemies and synnes, wherwith they haue defyled my londe: Namely, with their stinckinge Idols and abhominacions, wherw̄ they haue fylled myne heretage. O LORDE, my strength, my power, and refuge in tyme off trouble. The Gentiles shall come vnto the from the endes off the worlde, and saye: Verely oure fathers haue cleued vnto lies, their Idols are but vayne and vnprofitable. How can a man make, those his goddes, which are not able to be goddes? And therfore, I will once teach them (saieth ỹ LORDE) I wil shewe them my honde and my power, that they maye knowe, ỹ my name is ỹ LORDE. Iere. 14 17.c

The XVII. Chapter.

HOure synne (o ye off the trybe of Iuda) is writtē in the table of yͤ hertes, & grauē so vpon the edges of yͤ aulters wᵗ a penne of yron & with an Adamāt clawe: ỹ youre children also maye thynke vpon youre aulters, woddes, thicke trees, hie hilles, mountaynes & feldes. Wherfore, I will make all youre substaunce & treasure be spoyled, for the greate synne that ye haue done vpon youre hie places, thorow out all ỹ coostes off youre lōde. Ye shal be cast out also from the heretage, that I gaue you. And I wil subdue you vnder the heuy bōdage of youre enemies, in a londe that ye knowe not. For ye haue ministred fyre to my indignacion, which shal burne euermore. Thus saieth the LORDE: Cursed be the man that putteth his trust in man, ād that taketh flesh for his arme: and he, whose herte departeth from ỹ LORDE. He shall be like the heeth, that groweth in the wildernes. As for the good thinge that is for to come, he shall not se it: but dwell in a drie place off the wildernes, in a salt and vnoccupied londe. O Blissed is the man, that putteth his trust in the LORDE, and whose hope the LORDE is himself. For he shalbe as a tre, that is planted by the water syde: which spredeth out the rote vnto moystnesse, whom the heate can not harme, when it commeth, but his leaues are grene. And though there growe but litle frute because off drouth, yet is he not carefull, but he neuer leaueth of to bringe forth frute. ze.36.d haue forsaken the LORDE, the very condite of the waters of life.

Heale me (o LORDE) and I shall be whole: saue thou me, and I shalbe saued, for thou art my prayse. Beholde, these men saye vnto me: Where is the worde of the LORDE? Let it come. Where as I neuertheles ledinge the flock in thy wayes, haue compelled none by violence. For I never desyred eny mās deeth, this knowest thou well. My wordes also were right before the. Be not now terrible vnto
Iere.14.a me (o LORDE) for thou art he, in whom I hope, when I am in parell. Let my persecuters 16.c be confounded, but not me: let them be afrayed, and not me. Thou shalt bringe vpon thē the tyme off their plage, and shalt destroye them right sore.

D Agayne, thus hath the LORDE sayde vn-Iere.7.a to me: Go and stonde vnder the gate, where 26.a thorow the people and the kinges of Juda go out and in, yee vnder all the gates of Jerusalem, and saye vnto them: Heare the worde of the LORDE, ye kinges of Juda, and all thou people of Juda, and all ye citesyns of Jerusalem, that go thorow this gate: Thus Deu.4.b the LORDE commaundeth: Take hede for
Deu.5.b youre lyues, that ye carie no burthen vpon
Exo.20.b you in the Sabbath, to bringe it thorow the gates of Jerusalem: ye shall beare no burthen also out of youre houses in the Sabbath: Ye shall do no laboure therein, but halowe the Sabbath, as I commaunded your fathers. How be it they obeyed me not, ne-Eze.20.b ther herkened they vnto me: but were obstinate and stubburne, ād nether obeyed me, ner receaued my correccion.

E Neuertheles, yf ye will heare me (saieth the LORDE) and beare no burthen in to ȳ cite thorow this gate vpon the Sabbath: Yf ye will halowe the Sabbath, so that ye Exo.20.b do no worke therein: then shal there go thorow the gates of this cite, kinges and princes, that shall sytt vpon the stole of Dauid: They shall be caried vpon charettes, and ryde vpon horses, both they and their princes: Yee whole Juda and all the citesyns of Jerusalem shall go here thorow, and this cite shall euer be the more and more inhabited. There shall come men also from the cities of Juda, from aboute Jerusalem, ād from ȳ londe of Ben Jamin, from the playne feldes, from the mountaynes and from the wildernesse: which shall bringe burntoffringes, sacrifices, oblacions, and incense, and offre vp thankes geuynge in the house of the LORDE. But yff ye will not be obedient vnto me, to halowe the Sabbath, so that ye will beare youre burthens thorow the gates off Jerusalem vpon the Sabbath: Then shall I sett fyre vpon the gates off Jerusalem, ād it shal burne vp the houses off Jerusalem, and no man shal be able to quench it.

The XVIII. Chapter.
This is another communicacion, that God had with Jeremy, sayenge:

ARise, and go downe in to the Potters house, and there shall I tell the mine off my mynde. Now when I came to the Potters house, I founde him makinge his worke vpon a whele. The vessel that the Potter made off claye, brake amonge his hōdes: So he beganne a new, and made another vessell, acordinge to his mynde. Then sayde the LORDE thus vnto me: Maye not I do w^t^ you, as this Potter doth, O ye house off Israel? saieth the LORDE? Beholde, ye house off Israel: ye are in my honde, euen as the claye in the Potters honde.

When I take in honde to rote out, to destroye, or to waist awaye eny people or kigdome: yff that people (āgaynst whom I haue thus deuysed) cōuerte from their wickednes: Immediatly, I repente off the plage, that I deuysed to bringe vpon thē. Agayne: Whē I take in honde, to buylde, or to plante a people or a kingdome: yff the same people do euell before me, and heare not my voyce: Immediatly, I repente of the good, that I deuysed to do for them.

Speake now therfore vnto whole Juda, and to them that dwell at Jerusalem: Thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, I am deuysinge a plage for you, and am takinge a thinge in honde agaynst you.

Therfore, let euery man turne from his evell waye, take vpon you the thinge that is good, and do right. But they saye: No more of this, we will folowe oure owne ymaginacions, and do every man acordinge to the wil fulnesse of his owne mynde.

B Therfore thus saieth the LORDE: Axe amonge the Heithen, yf eny man hath herde soch horrible thinges, as the doughter of Sion hath done. Shal not ỹ snowe (ỹ melteth vpon the stony rockes of Libanus) moysture the feldes? Or maye the springes off waters be so grauen awaye, that they runne no more, geue moystnesse, ner make frutefull?
But my people hath so forgotten me, ỹ they haue made sacrifice vnto vayne goddes.
And whyle they folowed their owne wayes
they are come out of the hie strete, and gone into a fore waye not vsed to be troden. Where thorow they haue brought their londe in to an euerlastinge wildernesse and scorne:
So ỹ who so euer trauayleth ther by, shal be abashed, and wagge their heades. With an East wynde will I scatre thẽ, before their enemies. And when their destruction cõmeth, I will turne my backe vpõ them, but not my face.

Then sayde they: come, let vs ymagin sõmthinge agaynst this Jeremy. Yee this dyd euen the prestes, to whom ỹ lawe was commytted: the Senatours, ỹ were the wyseste: and the prophetes, which wanted not ỹ worde off God. Come (sayde they) let vs cut out his tũge, and let vs not regarde his wordes. Considre me (o LORDE) and heare the voyce of myne enemies. Do they not recompence evell for good, when they dygg a pyt for my soule? Remembre, how that I stode before the, to speake for thẽ, ād to turne awaye thy wrath from them.

Therfore let their childrẽ dye of hunger,
and let them be oppressed with the swearde.
Let their wyues be robbed of their childrẽ,
and become wyddowes: let their hußbõdes be slayne, let their yonge men be kylled with the swearde in the felde. Let the noyse be herde out of their houses, when the murtherer cõmeth sodenly vpon them: For they haue digged a pit to take me, and layed snares for my fete. Yet LORDE, thou knowest all their cõcell, that they haue deuysed, to slaye me.
And therfore forgeue them not their wickednes, and let not their synne be put out of thy sight: but let them be iudged before the as the giltie: This shalt thou do vnto thẽ in ỹ tyme of thy indignacion.

The XIX. Chapter.

A MOreouer, thus saide the LORDE vnto Jeremy: Go thy waye, and bye
the an erthen pytcher, and bringe forth the Senatours and chefe prestes in to the valley of the childrẽ off Ennon, which lieth before the porte that is made of brick, ỹ shewe them there the wordes, that I shall tell the, and saye thus vnto them: Heare the worde of the LORDE, ye kinges of Juda, ād ye citesyns of Jerusalem: Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Behold, I will bringe soch a plage vpon this place, that ỹ eares of all that heare it, shal glowe. And that because they haue forsake me, 4. Re. 21. c and vnhalowed this place, and haue offred Iere. 6. c in it vnto straunge goddes: whõ nether they,
their fathers, ner the kinges off Juda haue knowne. They haue filled this place also wt Deu. 12. d the bloude of innocentes, for they haue set 28. b vp an aulter vnto Baal, to burne their chil- Eze. 20. d
drẽ for a burntoffringe vnto Baal, which I Psal. 105. e nether commaunded, ner charged them, ne- Eze. 16. b ther thought once there vpon.

B Beholde therfore, ỹ tyme cõmeth (saieth Iere. 7. d the LORDE) ỹ this place shal no more be called Tophet, ner ỹ valley of ỹ childrẽ of Ennõ, but ỹ valley of slaughter. For in this place wil I slaye the Senatours of Juda ỹ Jerusalẽ, ỹ kill thẽ downe wt the swearde in ỹ sight of their enemies, ād of them that seke their lyues. And their deed carcases wil I geue to be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the felde. And I wil make this cite so desolate, ād despysed: that who so goeth 3. Re. 9. b
there by, shal be abaßhed ỹ geast vpon her, Iere. 18. b
because of all hir plages. 49. c. 50. b

I will fede them also wt the flesh of their Tre. 4. b sonnes ỹ their doughters. Yee euery one shal eate vp another in the besegynge ỹ straytnesse, wher wt their enemies (ỹ seke their lyues) shal kepe thẽ in. And the pitcher shalt thou Deu. 28. b breake in the sight of the mẽ, ỹ shalbe wt the,
and saye vnto thẽ: Thus saieth the LORDE off hoostes: Euẽ so wil I destroye this peo- C ple ỹ cite: as a Potter breaketh a vessel, that Iere. 18. a can not be made whole agayne.

Jn Tophet shal they be buried, for they Iere. 7. b shal haue none other place. Thus wil I do vnto this place also, saieth the LORDE, and to thẽ ỹ dwell there in: yee I wil do to this cite, as vnto Tophet (For the houses of Jerusalẽ ỹ the houses of the kinges of Juda are defyled, like as Tophet,) because off all the houses, in whose parlers they dyd sacrifice
vnto all the hooste of heauẽ, and poured out drynke offringes vnto straunge goddes.
And so Jeremy came from Tophet, where the LORDE had sent him to prophecie, and stode in the courte off the house off the LORDE, and spake to all the people: Thus saieth the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will bringe vpon this cite and vpon euery towne aboute it, all the plages that I haue deuysed agaynst them: for they haue bene obstinate, ād wolde not obeye my warnynges. Iere.7.c 13.b

The XX. Chapter.

A When Pashur the preast, the sonne off Emmer, chefe in the house of ỹ LORDE, herde Jeremy preach soo stedfastly: he smote Jeremy, and put him in the stockes, that are by the hie gate of Ben Jamin, in the house of ỹ LORDE. The nexte daye folowinge, Pashur brought Jeremy out of the stockes agayne. Then sayde Jeremy vnto him: The LORDE shall call the nomore Pashur (that is excellent and increasinge) but Magor (that is fearfull ād afrayed) euery where. For thus saieth the LORDE: beholde, I will make the afrayed, the thy self, and all that fauoure ỹ: which shal perish with the swearde off their enemies, euen before ỹ face. Act.23.a Ioh.18.c

And I wil geue whole Juda vnder the power of the kinge of Babilon, which shall carie some vnto Babilon presoners, and slaye some with the swearde. Moreouer, all ỹ substaunce of this londe, all their precious and gorgeous workes, all costlynesse, and all the treasure of the kinges of Juda: wil I geue into the hōdes of their enemies, which shal spoyle them, and carie them vnto Babilon. B 4.Re.20.c Iere.15.c 17.a

But as for the (o Pashur) thou shalt be caried vnto Babilon with all thine housholde, ⁊ to Babilō shalt thou come, where thou shalt die, and be buried: thou and all thy fauourers, to whom thou hast preached lies. O LORDE, thou makest me weake, but thou refreshest me, ⁊ makest me stronge agayne. All the daye longe am I despysed, and laughed to scorne of euery man: because I haue now preached longe agaynst malicious Tyranny, and shewed them off destruccion. For ỹ which cause they cast the worde off the LORDE in my teth, and take me euer to the worst. Tre.3.b Iere.6.b

C Wherfore, I thought from hence forth, not to speake of him, ner to preach eny more in his name. But the worde off the LORDE was a very burnynge fyre in my hert and in my bones, which when I wolde haue stopped, I might not. For why, I herde so many derisiōs and blasphemies, yee euen of myne owne companyons, and off soch as were Psal.30.b conuersaunte with me: which wente aboute, to make me afrayed sayenge: vpon him, let vs go vpon him, to feare him, and make him holde his tonge: ỹ we maye ouercome him, and be auenged off him.

But the LORDE stode by me, like a mighty giaunte: therfore my persecuters fell, and coude do nothinge. They shal be sore confounded, for they haue done vnwisely, they shall haue an euerlastinge shame. And now, o LORDE of hoostes, thou righteous sercher (which knowest the reynes and the very hertes:) let me se them punyshed, for vnto the I committe my cause.

Synge vnto the LORDE, and prayse him, for he hath delyuered the soule off the oppressed, from the honde off the violent. Cursed be the daye, wherein I was borne: vnhappie be ỹ daye, where in my mother brought me forth. Curſed be the man, that brought my father the tidinges, to make him glad, sayenge: thou hast gotten a sonne. Let it happen vnto that man, as to the cities which ỹ LORDE turned vpside downe (when he had longe herde the wicked rumoure of them) because he slewe me not, as soone as I came out off my mothers wombe, and because my mother was not my graue hirself, that the byrth might not haue come out, but remayned still in her. Wherfore came I forth off my mothers wombe? To haue experience of laboure and sorowe? and to lede my life with shame?

The XXI. Chapter.

THese are the wordes that the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy, what tyme as kinge Sedechias sent vnto him Pashur the sonne off Melchia, and Sephonias the sonne off Maasia preist, sayenge: Axe counsell at the LORDE (we praye the) of oure behalfe, for Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon besegeth vs, yff the LORDE (peraduenture) will deale with vs, acordinge to his marueloꝰ power, and take him from vs.

Then spake Jeremy: Geue Sedechias this answere, Thus saieth the LORDE God off Israel: beholde, I will turne backe the weapens, that ye haue in youre hondes, wherwith ye fight agaynst the kinge of Babilō ⁊ the Caldees, which besege youre rounde aboute ỹ walles: ⁊ I wil brige thē together into the myddest of this cite, and I my self will fight agaynst you, with an outstretched honde, ād with a mightie arme, in greate displeasure and terrible wrath: and will smyte them, that dwell in this cite: yee both mē āð catell shal dye of the pestilence.

And after this (saieth the LORDE) I shall delyuer Sedechias the kinge of Juda, ȝ his seruauntes, his people (and soch as are escaped in the cite, from the pestilence, swearde, and honger) into the power of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon: yee in to the hōdes of their enemies, in to the hōdes of those ỹ folowe vpon their lyues, which shall smyte them with ỹ swerde: they shal not pite thē, they shal not spare them, they shall haue no mercy vpon them.

And vnto this people thou shalt saye: Thus saieth the LORDE: beholde, I laye before you the waye of life and deeth. Who so abydeth in this cite, shal perish: ether wᵗ the swearde, with honger, or with pestilēce. But who so goeth out to holde on ỹ Caldees parte, ỹ besege it, he shal saue his life, and shall wynne his soule for a pray. For I haue set my face agaynst this cite (saieth the LORDE) to plage it, and to do it no good. It must be geuē in to the honde of the kinge of Babilon, ȝ be brent with fyre.

And vnto the housē of the kinge off Juda, saye thus: Heare the worde of ỹ LORDE (o thou house off Dauid) for thus saieth the LORDE: Ministre rightuousnes, and that soone, delyuer the oppressed frō violent power: or euer my terrible wrath breake out like a fyre, and burne so, that no man maye quēch it, because of the wickednes of youre ymaginacions. Beholde (saieth the LORDE) I wil come vpō you, that dwel in the valleis, rockes and feldes and saye: Tush, who will make vs afrayed: or who will come in to oure houses: For I will vyset you (saieth the LORDE) because off the wickednes off youre invencions, and will kyndle soch a fyre in youre wod, as shall cōsume all, that is aboute you.

The XXII. Chapter.

Thus sayde the LORDE also: Go downe in to the house of the kinge off Juda, and speake there these wordes, ȝ saye: Heare the worde off the LORDE, thou kinge off Juda that sytteste in the kyngly seate off Dauid: thou and thy seruauntes āð ỹ people, that go in ȝ out at this gate. Thus the LORDE commaundeth: kepe equite and rightuousnesse, delyuer the oppressed frō the power off the violent: do not greue ner oppresse the straunger, the fatherlesse ner the wyddowe, āð shed no innocēt bloude in this place.

And yff ye kepe these thinges faithfully, then shall there come in at the doze off this house kynges, to syt vpō Dauids seate: they shal be caried in Charettes and ryde vpon horses, both they ȝ their seruauntes, āð their people. But yf ye wil not be obedient vnto these commaundementes, I sweare by myne owne self (saieth ỹ LORDE) this house shal be waist. For thus hath the LORDE spoken vpon the kinges house of Juda: Thou art the heade, as Galaad is in Libanus: What wilt thou laye of it, yf I make the not so waist (ȝ thy cities also) that no man shal dwell there in? I will prepare a destroyer with his weapēs for the, to hew downe thy special Cedre trees, and to cast them in the fyre.

And all the people that go by this cite, shall speake one to another: Wherfore hath the LORDE done thus vnto this noble cite? Then shall it be answered: because they haue broken the couenaunt off the LORDE their God, and haue worshipped and serued straūge goddes. Mourne not ouer the deed, and be not wo for them, but be sory for him that departeth awaye: for he commeth not agayne, āð seeth his natyue countre no more. For thus saieth the LORDE, as touchinge Sellum the sonne of Josias kinge of Juda, which reygned after his father, and is caried out off this place:

He shal never come hither agayne, for he shal dye in the place, where vnto he is led captyue, and shall se this londe nomore. Wo worth him, that buyldeth his house with vnrightuousnes, āð his perlers with the good, that he hath gotten by violence: which neuer recompenseth his neghburs laboure, ner payeth him his hyre. He thinketh in himself: I wil buylde me a wyde house, āð gorgeous perlers: He causeth wyndowes to be hewen there in, and the sylinges and geastes maketh he off Cedre, and paynteth them with Zenober. Thinkest thou to reigne, nowe that thou prouokest me to wrath with ỹ Cedre trees?

Dyd not thy father eate and drynke, and prospere well, as lōge as he dealt with equite āð rightuousnesse? Yee when he helped ỹ oppressed and poore to their right, then prospered he well.

From whence came this, but only because he had me before his eyes? saieth the LORDE. Neuertheles, as for thine eyes and thine herte, they loke vpon covetousnesse, to shed innocent bloude, to do wronge and violence. And therfore, thus saieth the LORDE agaynst Joachim, ỹ sonne of Josias kynge of Juda: They shall not mourne for him (as they vse to do) alas brother, alas syster:

Nether shall they saye vnto him: Alas syr, alas for that noble prynce. But as an Asse shall he be buried, corrupte and be cast with out the gates of Jerusalem.

D Clymme vp the hill off Libanus (o thou doughter Sion) lift vp thy voyce vpon Basan, crie from all partes: for all thy louers are destroyed. I gaue the warninge, whyle thou wast yet in prosperite, But thou saydest: I wil not heare. And this maner hast thou vsed from thy youth, that thou woldest neuer heare my voyce. All thy hyrdmen shalbe dryuen with the wynde, and thy derlinges shalbe caried awaye in to captiuyte: Then shalt thou be brought to shame and confucion, because of all thy wickednes: thou that dwellest vpon Libanus, and makest thy nest in the Cedre trees. O how greate shal y mournynge be, when thy sorowes come vpon the, as a woman trauelinge with childe.

Esa. 13. b 21. a Iere. 13. d 30. a

As truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE.) Though Jechonias the sonne off Joachim 4. Reg. 24. b kinge off Juda were the signet off my right honde, yet will I plucke him of: And I wil geue the in to y power off thē that seke to slaye the, and in to the power off them that thou feareste: in to the power off Nabuchodonosor the kinge off Babilon, and in to the E power of the Caldees. Moreouer, I will sende the, and thy mother that bare the, in to a straunge londe, where ye were not borne, and there shall ye dye. But as for the londe that ye will desyre to returne vnto, ye shall neuer come at it agayne. This mā Jechonias shal be like an ymage robbed and torne in peces, which pleaseth no man, for all his apparell. Wherfore both he and his sede shalbe sent awaye, and cast out in to a lōde, that they knowe not.

O thou earth, earth, earth: heare the worde off the LORDE: Write this man amonge the outlawes, for no prosperite shall this man haue all his life longe. Nether shall eny of his sede be so happie, as to syt vpon the seate of Dauid, and to beare rule in Juda.

The XXIII. Chapter.

A Ezec. 34. a WO be vnto the shepherdes, that destroye, and scatre my flocke, saieth the LORDE. Wherfore, this is the cōmaundemēt of the LORDE God of Israel, vnto the shepherdes that fede my people: Ye scatre and thrust out my flocke, and loke not vpon them. Therfore, now will I vyset the wickednes of youre ymaginacions, saieth y LORDE: And will gather together the remnant of my flocke, from all londes that I had dryuen them vnto, and will bringe them agayne to their pastures, that they maye grow and increace. I will set shepherdes also ouer them, which shall fede them. They shall no more feare and drede, for there shall none off them be lost, saieth the LORDE. Beholde, the tyme commeth (saieth the LORDE) that I wil rayse vp the righteous braunch off Dauid, which shall beare rule, and discusse matters with wysdome, and shall set vp equyte and righteousnes agayne in the earth.

In his tyme shall Juda be saued, and Israel shal dwell without feare. And this is the name that they shall call him: euen the LORDE oure righteous maker. And therfore beholde, the tyme commeth (saieth the LORDE) that it shall no more be sayde: the LORDE lyueth, which brought the children off Israel out of the londe of Egipte: But the LORDE lyueth, which brought forth, and led the sede of the house off Israel, out off the north londe, and from all countrees where I had scatred them, and they shal dwell in their owne londe agayne.

My herte breaketh in my body because of the false prophetes, all my bones shake: I am become like a dronken man (that by the reason of wyne can take no rest) for very feare of the LORDE, and of his holy wordes. Because the londe is full of aduouterers, when thorow it is destroyed and mourneth, and y pleasaunt pastures of the deserte are dryed vp. Nee the waye that men take, is wicked, and their gouernaunce is nothinge like the holy worde of the LORDE. For the prophetes and the prestes them selues are polluted Yoorytes, and their wickednes haue I founde in my house, saieth the LORDE. Wherfore, their waye shall be slippery in the darcknesse, wherin they maye stacker and fall. For I will bringe a plage vpon them, euen the yeare of their visitacion, saieth the LORDE. I haue sene folly amonge the prophetes of Samaria, y they preched for Baal, and disceaued my people off Israel. I haue sene also amonge the prophetes off Jerusalem foule aduoutery, and presumptuous lies. They take the most shamefull men by the hōde, flatringe them, so that they cā not returne from their wickednes. All these with their citesyns are vntome, as Sodom, and as the inhabitours off Gomorre.

Therfore thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes concernynge the prophetes: Beholde, I wil fede them with wormwod, and make them dryncke the water of gall. For frō the prophetes of Jerusalem is the sickenes of Hypocrisie come in to all the londe.

And therfore the LORDE of hooستes geueth you this warnynge: Heare not the wordes of the prophetes, that preach vnto you, and disceaue you: for they speake the meanynge of their owne herte, and not out of the mouth of the LORDE. They saye vnto them, that despyse me: The LORDE hath spoken it: Tush, ye shal prospere right well. And vnto all them, that walke after the lust of their owne herte, they saye: Tush, there shall no myss fortune happen you. For who hath sytten in the councell of the LORDE, that he hath herde and vnderstonde, what he is aboute to do? Who hath marcked his dewyce, and herde it? Beholde, the stormy wether of the LORDE (that is, his indignacion) shal go forth, and shal fall downe vpon the heade of the vngodly. And the wrath of the LORDE shal not turne agayne, vntill he perfourme, and fulfull the thoughte of his herte. And in the latter dayes ye shall knowe his meanynge.

I haue not sent these prophetes, (saieth the LORDE) and yet they ranne. I haue not spoken to them, and yet they preached. But yf they had continued in my councell and herde my wordes: they had turned my people from their euell wayes and wicked ymaginacions. Am I thē God that seeth but the thinge, which is nye at honde, and not that is farre of? saieth the LORDE. Maye eny man hyde him self so, that I shal not se him? saieth the LORDE. Do not I fulfill heauen and earth? saieth the LORDE. I haue herde well ynough, what the prophetes saye, that preach lyes in my name, sayēge: I haue dreamed, I haue dreamed. How longe wil this cōtynue in the prophetes hertes, to tel lyes, and to preach the craftie sotylte of their owne herte: Whose purpose is, (with the dreames that euery one tell) to make my people forget my name, as their fore fathers dyd, whē Baal came vp. The prophet that hath a dreame, let him tell it: and he that vnderstondeth my worde, let him shewe it faithfully.

For what hath chaffe and wheat to do together? saieth the LORDE. Is not my worde like a fyre, saieth the LORDE) and like an hammer, that breaketh the harde stone? Therfore thus saieth the LORDE: beholde, I wil vpō the prophetes, that steale my worde priuely from euery man. Beholde, here am I (saieth the LORDE) agaynst the prophetes, that take vpon their tunges to speake: The LORDE hath sayde it. Beholde, here am I (saieth ỹ LORDE) agaynst those prophetes, that darre prophecy lies, and disceaue my people with their vanities and myracles, whom I neuer sent, ner commaunded them. They shal do this people greate harme, saieth the LORDE.

Yf this people, ether eny prophete or preist are the, and saye: what is the burthen of the LORDE? Thou shalt saye vnto them: What? burthen? Therfore will I cast you fro me (saieth the LORDE) because ye youre selues are a burthen. And the prophet, preist or people that vseth this terme (the burthen of the LORDE) him will I viset, and his house also.

But thus shall ye saye, euery one to another: What answere hath the LORDE geuen? or, what is the LORDES commaundement? And as for the burthen of the LORDE, ye shal speake nomore of it: for euery mans owne worde is his burthen, because ye haue altered the wordes of the lyuynge God the LORDE of hooستes oure God.

Thus shall euery man saye to the prophetes: what answere hath the LORDE geuen the? Or, what saieth the LORDE? And not once to name the burthen of the LORDE. Therfore thus saieth the LORDE: For so moch as ye haue vsed this terme (the burthen of the LORDE) where as I notwithstondinge sent vnto you, and forbade you to speake of the LORDES burthen:

Beholde therfore, I will repute you as a burthen, and will cast you out of my presence: yee and the cite also, that I gaue you and youre fathers: and will bringe you to an euerlastinge confucion, and in to soch a shame, as shal neuer be forgotten.

The XXIIII. Chapter.

The LORDE shewed me a visiō: Beholde, there stode two maundes of figes before ỹ Tēple of the LORDE, after ỹ Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilō had led awaye captyue Jechonias the sonne of Joachim kinge of Juda, the mightie men also of Juda, with the workemasters and cōnynge men of Jerusalem, vnto Babilon. In the one maunde were very good fyges, euen like as those that be first ripe. In the other maunde were very naughtie figes, which might not be eaten, they were so euell.

Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: what seist thou Jeremy? I sayde: fyges, where of some be very good, and some so euel, that no man may eate them.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, after this maner: Thus saieth ỹ LORDE the God of Israel: like as thou knowest the good fyges, so shal I knowe the men led awaye, whom I haue sent out of this place into the londe of the Caldees, for their profite: and I will set myne eyes vpon them for the best, for I will bringe them agayne into this londe: I will buylde them vp, and not breake them downe: I will plante them, and not rote them out. And I will geue them an herte, to knowe, how that I am the LORDE. They shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God, for they shal returne vnto me with their whole herte.

And like as thou knowest the naughtie fyges, which maye not be eatē, they are so euel: Euen so wil I (saieth the LORDE) let Sedechias the kinge of Juda, (ye and all his princes, & the residue of Jerusalem that remayne ouer in this londe, & them also that dwell in Egipte) to be vexed & plaged in all kingdomes & londes. And will make them to be a reprose, a comon byworde, a laughinge stocke & shame, in all the places, where I shal scatre them. I will sende the swearde, honger & pestilence amonge them, vntill I haue clene consumed them out of the londe, that I gaue vnto them & their fathers.

The XXV. Chapter.

A Sermone that was geuen vnto Jeremy, vpon all the people of Juda: In the fourth yeare of Joachim the sonne of Josias kinge of Juda, that was, in the first yeare of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon. Which sermone, Jeremy the prophet made vnto all the people of Juda, & to all ỹ Inhabitours of Jerusalē, on this maner:

From the xiij yeare of Josias the sonne of Amon kinge of Juda, vnto this present daye, (that is euen xxiij yeare) the worde of the LORDE hath bene committed vnto me.

34. a. 35.c

And so I haue spokē to you, I haue rysen vp early, I haue geuē you warnynge in season, but ye wolde not heare me. Though the LORDE hath sent his seruauntes, all the prophetes vnto you in season: Yet wolde ye not obeye, ye wolde not encline yo' eares to heare,

2.Par. 36.c

The sayde: turne agayne euery man from his euell waye, & from youre wicked ymaginacions, & so shal ye dwell for euer in the londe, that the LORDE promised you & youre fore fathers: And go not after straunge goddes, serue them not, worshipe them not, & angre me not with the workes of youre hōdes: then will not I punysh you. Nevertheles, ye wolde not heare me (saieth the LORDE) but haue defied me with the workes of youre hōdes, to youre owne greate harme.

Wherfore, thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: Because ye haue not herkened vnto my worde, lo, I will sende out, & call for all the people, ỹ dwell in the north (saieth the LORDE) & wil prepayre Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon my seruaunt, and wil bringe them vpon this londe, and vpon all ỹ dwell therein, & vpon all the people that are about them, and will vterly rote them out. I will make of them a wildernesse, a mockage, and a continuall deserte.

Moreouer, I will take from them the voyce of gladnesse and solace, the voyce of the brydegrome & the bryde, the voyce of the anoynted, with the cressheres: & this whole londe shal become a wildernes, & they shall serue the sayde people and the kinge of Babilon, three score yeares and ten. When the lxx yeares are expyred, I wil viset also the wickednesse of the kinge of Babylon & his people, saieth the LORDE: yee & the londe of the Caldees, & wil make it a perpetuall wildernes, & wil fulfil all my wordes vpon that londe, which I haue deuysed agaynst it: yee all that is written in this boke, which Jeremy hath prophecied of all people: so that they also shal be subdued vnto dyuerse nacions & greate kynges, for I wil recompense them, acordinge to their dedes & workes of their owne hondes.

For thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken vnto me: Take this wyne cuppe of indignacion fro my honde, that thou mayest cause all the people (to whom I sende the) for to drinke of it: that when they haue dronke thereof, they maye be madd, & out of their wyttes, when the swearde commeth, that I wil sende amōge them. Then toke I the cuppe from the LORDES honde, & made all the people drynke there of, vnto whom the LORDE had sent me.

But first the cite of Jerusalem, & all the cities of Juda, their kinges & princes: to make thē desolate, waist, despysed & cursed, accordinge as it is come to passe this daye. Yee & Pharao ỹ kinge of Egipte, his seruauntes, his princes & his people altogether one with another and all kinges of the londe of Hus, all kinges of the Philistynes londe, Ascalon, Gaza, Accaron & the remnaunt of Asdod, the Edomites, the Moabites & the Ammonites: all the kinges of Tirus & Sidon: the kinges of the Iles, that are beyonde the see: Dedan, Thema, Buz & the shauen Ismaelites: all the kinges of Araby, & (generally) all the kinges that dwell in the deserte: all the kinges of Simri, all the kinges of Elam, all ỹ kinges of the Meedes, all kinges towarde the north (whether they be farre or nye) euery one with his neighbours: Yee and all the kingdomes that are vpon the whole earth. The kinge of Sesach (sayde he) shal drinke with them also.

And saye thou vnto them: this is the commaundement of the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: drinke and be droncken, spewe, and fall, that ye neuer ryse: and that thorow the swearde, which I wil sende amonge you. But yf they will not receaue the cuppe of thy honde, and drinke it, then tell them: Thus doth the LORDE of hoostes threaten you: drynke it ye shal, and that shortly. For lo, I begynne to plage the cite, that my name is geuen vnto: thynke ye then, that I will leaue you vnpunyshed? Ye shall not go quyte. For why, I call for a swearde vpō all the inhabitours of the earth, saieth the LORDE of hoostes.

Therfore tell them all these wordes, and saye vnto them: The LORDE shal crie from aboue, and let his voyce be herde from his holy habitacion. With a greate noyse shall he crie from his courte regall. He shal geue a greate voyce (like the grape gatherers) and the sounde thereof shalbe herde vnto the endes of the worlde. For the LORDE hath a iudgment to geue vpon all people, and will holde his courte of iustice with all flesh and punyshe the vngodly, saieth the LORDE.

For thus sayeth ỹ LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, a miserable plage shall go from one people to another, and a greate stormy water shal arise from all the endes of the earth. And the same daye shall the LORDE himself slaye them, from one ende of the earth to another. There shall no mone be made for eny of them, none gathered vp, none buried: but shall lie as dunge vpon the grounde.

Mourne (o ye shepherdes) & crie: sprincle youre selues with asshes, o ye rammes of the flocke: for the tyme of youre slaughter is fulfilled, and ye shal fall like vessels connyngly made for pleasure.

The shepherdes shall haue no waye to flie, and the rammes of the flocke shall not escape. Then shal the shepherdes crie horribly, and the rammes of the flocke shal mourne: for the LORDE shal consume their pasture, and their best feldes shal lie deed because of the horrible wrath of the LORDE. They shall forsake their foldes like as a lyon: For their londes shalbe waist, because of the wrath of the destroyer, and because of his fearfull indignacion.

The XXVI. Chapter.

A In the begynnynge of the reigne of Joachim the sonne of Josias kynge of Juda, came this worde from the LORDE, sayenge: Thus saieth the LORDE: Stonde in the courte of the LORDES Iere.7.a 17.d house, and speake vnto all them which (out of the cities of Juda) come to do worshippe in the LORDES house, all the wordes ỹ I commaunde the to saye. Loke that thou kepe not one worde backe, yf (peraventure) they Det.4.a 13.b will herke, and turne euery man from his wicked waye: that I maye also repente of the plage, which I haue determed to brynge vpon them, because of their wicked inuencions.

And after this maner shalt thou speake vnto them: Thus saieth the LORDE: yf ye will not obeye me, to walke in my lawes, which I haue geuen you, and to heare the wordes of my seruauntes the prophetes, whom I sent vnto you, rysynge vp tymely, and still sendinge: Yf ye will not folowe the (I saye) then will I do to this house, as I dyd vnto Silo, and will make this cite to be abhorred of all the people of the earth. And Iere.7.a the prestes, the prophetes and all the people herde Jeremy preach these wordes, in the house of the LORDE.

B Now when he had spoken out all the wordes, that the LORDE commaunded him to preach vnto all the people, then the prestes, the prophetes and all the people toke holde vpon him, and sayde: thou shalt dye. How darrest thou be so bolde, as to saye in the name of the LORDE: it shal happen to this house as it dyd vnto Silo? and this cite shalbe so waist, that no man shal dwell there in?

And when all the people were gathered aboute Jeremy in the house of the LORDE, the prynces of Juda herde of this rumoure, & they came soone out of the kinges palace in to the house of the LORDE, and sat them downe before the new dore of the LOR 4.Re.15.g DE. Then spake the prestes and the prophetes vnto the rulers & to all the people, these Iere.36.b wordes: This man is worthy to dye, for he Ioh.19.a hath preached agaynst this cite, as ye youre selues haue herde with youre eares.

C Then sayde Jeremy vnto the rulers and to all the people: The LORDE hath sente me to preach agaynst this house & agaynst this cite all the wordes that ye haue herde. Ther Iere.7.a fore amende youre wayes, and youre aduysementes, and be obedient vnto the voyce of the LORDE youre God: so shal the LORDE repēt of the plage, yͭ he had deuysed agaynst you. Now as for me: I am in youre hondes, do with me, as ye thinke expedient and good. But this shall ye knowe: yf ye put me to death, ye shal make youre selues, this cite & all Mat. 23. e the inhabitours there of, giltie of innocent bloude. For this is of a treuth: that the LORDE hath sente me vnto you, to speake all these wordes in youre eares.

Then sayde the rulers and the people vnto the prestes and prophetes: This man maye not be condemned to death, for he hath preached vnto vs in the name of the LORDE oure
D God. The Elders also of the londe stode vp, & sayde thus vnto all the people:
Mich. 1. a Micheas the Morascite, which was a prophet vnder Ezechias kinge of Juda, spake to all the people of Juda: Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: Sion shalbe plowed like a felde, Jerusalē shalbe an heape of stones, & the hill of the Mich. 3. c LORDES house shalbe turned to an hie wod. Dyd Ezechias yͭ kinge of Juda & the people of Juda put him to deeth for this? No verely, but rather feared yͭ LORDE, & made their praier vnto him. For the which cause also yͭ LORDE repented of the plage, yͭ he had deuysed agaynst them. Shulde we then do soch a shamefull dede agaynst oure soules? There was a prophet also, that preached stiffly in E the name of the LORDE, called Urias the sonne of Semeia of Cariathiarim: this mā preached also agaynst this cite & agaynst this lōde, acordinge to all as Jeremy saieth. Now
2. Re. 22. d when Joachim the kinge with all the estates & prynces had herde his wordes, the kinge went aboute to slaye him. When Urias
2. Re. 19. a perceaued that, he was afrayed, & fled, & de-Matt. 2. c parted in to Egipte.

Then Joachim the kinge sent seruauntes in to the lōde of Egipte, Namely: Elnathā the sonne of Achbor, & certayne men wͭ him in to Egipte, which fetched Urias out of Egipte, & brought him vnto kinge Joachim that slewe him with the swearde, & cast his dead body in to yͭ comō peoples graue. But Ahicam the sonne of Saphan helped Jeremy, that he came not in to the hondes of the people to be slayne.

The XXVII. Chapter.

A IN the begynnynge of the reigne of Joachim the sonne of Josias kynge of Juda, came this worde vnto Jeremy from the LORDE, which spake thus vnto me: Make the bondes & chaynes, and put them aboute thy neck, & sende thē to the kinge of Edom, the kinge of Moab, the kinge of Amon, the kinge of Tirus, & to the kinge of Sidon: & that by the messaungers, which shal come to Jerusalem vnto Sedechias the kinge of Juda, and byd them saye vnto their masters: Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel, speake thus vnto yͦ masters: I am he that made the earth, the men & yͭ catell that are vpon the grounde, with my greate power & out stretched arme, & haue geuen it vnto whom it pleased me. And now will I delyuer all these londes in to the power of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon my seruaunt. The beestes also of the felde shal I geue him to do him seruyce. And all people shal serue him, & his sonne, and his childes children, vntil the tyme of the same lande be come also: Yee many people & great kinges shal serue him.

Moreover, that people & kingdome which wil not serue Nabuchodonosor, and that will not put their neckes vnder yͭ yock of the kinge of Babilon: the same people will I visite with swearde, with honger, with pestilence, vntill I haue consumed them in his hondes, saieth the LORDE. And therfore, folowe not youre prophetes, soothsayers, expounders of dreames, charmers & witches, which saye vnto you: ye shal not serue the kinge of Babilon. For they preach you lies, to bringe you farre from youre londe, & that I might cast you out, & destroye you. But the people that put their neckes vnder the yock of the kinge of Babilon, & serue him, those I will let remayne still in their owne lōde (saieth the LORDE) & they shal occupie it, & dwell there in.

All these thinges tolde I Sedechias the kinge of Juda, and sayde: Put youre neckes vnder the yock of the kinge of Babilon, and serue him & his people, that ye maye lyue. Why wilt thou and thy people perish with the swearde, with honger, with pestilence, like as the LORDE hath deuysed for all people, that wil not serue the kinge of Babilon? Therfore geue no eare vnto those propheres (that tell you: Ye shall not serue the kinge of Babilon) for they preach you lies, neither haue I sent them, saieth the LORDE: how bolde they are bolde, falsely for to prophecie in my name: that I might yͭ sooner dryue you out, & that ye might perish with yͦ preachers.

I spake to the prestes also and to all the people: Thus saieth the LORDE: Heare not the wordes of those prophetes, that preach vnto you, & saye: Beholde, the vessels of the LORDES house shall shortly be brought hither agayne from Babilon: For they prophecie lies vnto you. Heare them not, but serue

the kinge of Babilon, ȳ ye maye lyue. Wher fore will ye make this cite to be destroyed? But yf they be true prophetes in very dede, and yf the worde of the LORDE be commyt ted vnto them, then let them praye the LOR DE of hooſtes, that the remnaunt of the or namentes (which are in the houſe of the LOR DE, and remayne yet in the houſe of the kin ge of Juda and at Jeruſalem) be not caried to Babilon alſo. For thus hath the LORDE of hooſtes ſpoken concernynge the pylers, the lauer, the ſeate and the reſidue of the orna mentes that yet remayne in this citie, which Nabuchodonoſor the kinge of Babilon to ke not, when he caried awaye Jechonias the ſonne of Joachim kinge of Juda, with all the power of Juda and Jeruſalem, from Je ruſalem vnto Babilon, captyue.

Yee thus hath the LORDE of hooſtes the God of Iſrael ſpoken, as touchinge the reſi due of the ornamentes of the LORDES hou ſe, of the kinge of Judaes houſe, and of Je ruſalem: They ſhalbe caried vnto Babilon, and there they ſhall remayne, vntil I viſet them, ſaieth the LORDE. Then wil I bringe them hither agayne. And this was done in the ſame yeare: euē in the begynnynge of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Juda.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

BVt in the fourth yeare of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Juda, in the fifth Moneth, It happened, that Ha nanias ȳ ſonne of Aſſur the prophet of Ga baon, ſpake to me in the houſe of the LORDE, in the preſence of the prieſtes ⁊ of all the peo ple, ⁊ ſayde: Thus ſaieth the LORDE of hooſ tes the God of Iſrael: I haue brokē the yock of the kinge of Babilon, and after two yeare will I bringe agayne in to this place, all the ornamentes of the LORDES houſe, ȳ Na buchodonoſor kinge of Babilon caried awa ye from this place vnto Babilon. Yee I will bringe agayne Jechonias the ſonne of Joa chim the kinge of Juda himſelf, with all the preſoners of Juda, (ȳ are caried vnto Babi lon) euē in to this place, ſaieth ȳ LORDE, for I wil breake ȳ yock of the kinge of Babilō.

Then the prophet Jeremy gaue anſwere vnto that prophet Hananias, before the prieſ tes ⁊ before all the people that were preſent in the houſe of the LORDE. And the prophet Jeremy ſayde: Amen, the LORDE do that, ⁊ graunte the thinge, which thou haſt prophe cied: that he maye bringe agayne all the or namentes of the LORDES houſe, ⁊ reſtore all the preſoners from Babilon in to this place. Neuertheles, herken thou alſo, what I will ſaye, that thou ⁊ all the people maye heare: The prophetes that were before vs in tymes paſt, which prophecied of warre, or trouble, or peſtilence, ether of peace, vpon many na cions ⁊ greate kingdomes, were proued by this (yf God had ſende them in very dede) when the thinge came to paſſe, which that prophet tolde before.

And Hananias the prophet toke the chay ne from the prophet Jeremias neck, ⁊ brake it: ⁊ with that ſayde Hananias, that all the people might heare: Thus hath the LORDE ſpoken: Euen ſo will I breake the yock of Nabuchodonoſor kinge of Babilō, from the neck of all nacions, yee ⁊ that within this two yeare. And ſo the prophet Jeremy went he his waye. After now that Hananias the prophet had taken the chayne from the pro phet Jeremies neck, and broken it: The wor de of the LORDE came vnto the prophet Je remy ſayenge: Go, and tell Hananias theſe wordes: Thus ſaieth the LORDE: Thou haſt broken the chayne of wodd, but in ſteade of wodd, thou ſhalt make chaynes of yron. For thus ſaieth the LORDE of hooſtes the God of Iſrael: I wil put a yock of yron vpon the neck of all this people, that they maye ſerue Nabuchodonoſor the kinge of Babilon, yee ⁊ ſo ſhall they do. And I wil geue him ȳ beeſ tes in the felde. Then ſayde the prophet Je remy vnto ȳ prophet Hananias: Heare me (I praye the) Hananias: The LORDE hath not ſent the, but thou bringeſt this people in to a falſe beleue. And therfore thus ſaieth ȳ LORDE: beholde, I wil ſende the out of the lō de, ⁊ within a yeare thou ſhalt die, becauſe thou haſt falſely ſpokē agaynſt the LORDE. So Hananias the prophet died the ſame yea re in the ſeuenth Moneth.

The XXIX. Chapter.

THis is the Copie of the lettre, ȳ Jere my the prophet ſent from Jeruſalem vnto the preſoners: the Senatours, prieſtes, prophetes, ⁊ all the people, whom Nabucho donoſor had led vnto Babilō: after ȳ tyme ȳ kinge Jechonias ⁊ his Quene, his cham brelaynes, the princes of Juda ⁊ Jeruſalē ⁊ the workmaſters of Jeruſalē were departed thither. Which lettre, Elaſa ȳ ſonne of Sa phā ⁊ Gamaria ȳ ſonne of Helchia dyd bea re, whō Sedechias the kinge of Juda ſent vnto Babilō to Nabuchodonoſor ȳ kinge of Babilō: theſe were ȳ wordes of Jeremias let tre: Thus hath ȳ LORDE of hooſtes ȳ God of Iſrael ſpokē, vnto all the preſoners, ȳ we re led frō Jeruſalē vnto Babilō: Bylde you houſes to dwell therein: plāte you gardēs, ȳ Laboure not to be fewe, but seke after peace & prosperite of the cite, where in Baru.1.e 1.Tim.2.a ye be presoners, & praye vnto God for it. For in the peace there of, shal yo peace be.

For thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the Iere.23.c 27.b God of Israel: Let not those prophetes and soythsaiers y be amonge you, disceaue you: Iere. 14.c & beleue not youre owne dreames. For why, they preach you lies in my name, & I haue not sent them, saieth the LORDE. But thus saieth the LORDE: When ye haue fulfilled 2. Pa.36.d Iere.25.b 1.Esd.1.a lxx yeares at Babilon, I wil bringe you home, and of myne owne goodnes I will carie you hither agayne vnto this place. For I knowe, what I haue deuyséd for you, saieth the LORDE. My thoughtes are to geue you peace, & not trouble (which I geue you all redie) & that ye might haue hope agayne. Ye Deu.4.e 30.a shall crie vnto me, ye shal go & call vpō me, Ioan. 7.d & I shal heare you. But where as ye saye, that God hath rayséd you vp prophetes at Babilon: Thus hath the LORDE spoken (concernynge the kinge that sytteth in the stole of Dauid, and all y people that dwell in this cite, youre bre- 4.Reg. 24.d thren that are not gone with you in to captiuyte.) Thus (I saye) speaketh the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil sende a swearde, Iere. 24.b honger & pestilence vpon them, & wil make them like vntymely fyges, that maye not be eatē for bytternes. And I wil persecute them with the swearde, with honger & death.

I will delyuer them vp to be vexed of all kingdomes, to be cursed, abhorred, laughed to scorne, & put to confucion of all the people, amonge whom I haue scatred them: & that because they haue not bene obedient vnto my commaundementes, (saieth the LORDE) which I sent vnto them by my seruauntes the prophetes. I stode vp early, and sent D Iere.25.a 44.a vnto them, but they wolde not heare, saieth the LORDE. Heare therfore the worde of the LORDE, all ye presóners, whom I sent from Jerusalē vnto Babilon: Thus hath the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel spoken, of Achab y sonne of Colaias, & of Sedechias the sonne of Maasia, which prophecie lies vnto you in my name: Beholde, I wil delyuer them in to the honde of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, that he maye slaye them before youre eyes. And all y presoners of Juda that are in Babilon, shal take vp them this terme of cursinge, and saye: The God do vnto the, as he dyd vnto Sedechias & Achab, whom the kinge of Babilon rosted in the fyre, because they synned shamefully in Israel.

For they haue not onely defiled their neighbours wyues, but also preached lyenge wordes in my name, which I haue not commaunded them. This I testifie, & assure, saieth the LORDE. But as for Semeia the Nehelamite, thou shalt speake vnto him: Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Because thou hast sealed lettres vnder thy name, vnto all the people that is at Jerusalem, & to Sophonias the sonne of Maasias the priest, yee and sent them to all the priestes where in thou wryteste thus vnto him: The LORDE hath ordened the to be priest in stede of Joiada the priest, that thou shuldest be the chefe in the house of the LORDE above all prophetes, & preachers, & that thou mightest put them in presón, or in y stockes. How happeneth it then, that thou hast not reproued Jeremy of Anathot, which neuer leaueth of his prophetienge. And beside all this, he hath sent vs worde vnto Babilon, and tolde vs planely, that oure captiuyte shal longe endure: that we shulde buylde vs houses to dwell therin, & to plante vs gardens, that we might enioye the frutes therof. Which lettre Sophonias the priest dyd rede, and let Jeremy the prophet heare it.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Sende worde to all them that be in captiuyte, on this maner: Thus hath the LORDE spoken concernynge Semeia y Nehelamite: Because that Semeia hath prophecied vnto you without my commyssion, & brought you in to a false hope, therfore thus the LORDE doth certifie you: Beholde, I wil vyset Semeia the Nehelamite, & his sede: so that none of his shall remayne amonge this people, & none of them shall se the good, y I will do for this people, saieth the LORDE. For he hath preached falsely of the LORDE.

The XXX. Capter.

These are the wordes, that the LORDE shewed vnto Jeremy, saienge: Thus saieth the LORDE God of Israel: Wryte vp diligently all the wordes, that I haue spoken vnto the, in a boke. For lo, the tyme commeth (saieth the LORDE) that I will bringe agayne the presoners of my people of Israel and Juda, saieth the LORDE: For I will restore them vnto the londe, that I gaue to their fathers, and they shall haue it in possession.

Agayne, these wordes spake the LORDE, cõcernynge Israel and Juda: Thus saieth the LORDE: We heare a terrible crie, feare and disquietnesse. For what els doth this signifie, that I se? Namely, that all stronge men smyte, euery man his honde vpon his loynes, as a woman in the payne of hir trauayle. Who euer sawe a man trauayle with childe? Enquere therafter, & se. Yee all their faces are maruelous pale.

Alas for this daye, which is so drede full, that none maye be lickened vnto it: and alas for the tyme of Jacobs trouble, from the which he shall yet be delyuered. For in that daye, saieth the LORDE, I will take his yocke from of thy neck, & breake thy bondes. They shall nomore serue straunge goddes vnder him, but they shall do seruyce vnto God their LORDE, and to Dauid their kinge, whom I will rayse vp vnto them. And as for the, o my seruaunt Jacob, feare not (saieth ỹ LORDE) and be not afrayed, o Israel. For lo, I will helpe the also from farre, & thy sede from the londe of their captiuyte.

And Jacob shall turne agayne, he shalbe in rest, and haue a prosperous life, and no man shall make him afrayed. For I am with the, to helpe the, saieth the LORDE. And though I shal destroye all the people, amonge whom I haue scatred the, yet will I not destroye the, but correcke the, and that with discrecion. For I knowe, that thou art in no wise without faute. Therfore thus saieth ỹ LORDE: I am sory for thy hurte and woundes. There is no man to medle with thy cause, or to bynde vp thy woundes: there maye no man helpe the.

All thy louers haue forgotten the, and care nothinge for the. For I haue geuen the a cruell stroke, and chastened the roughly: and that for the multitude of thy myßdedes, for thy synnes haue had the ouer hande. Why makest thou mone for thy harme? I my self haue pite of thy sorowe, but for the multitude of thy myßdedes and synnes, I haue done this vnto the.

And therfore all they that deuoure the, shalbe deuoured, and all thine enemies shal be led in to captiuyte. All they that make the waist, shalbe waisted them selues: and all those that robbe the, will I make also to be robbed. For I will geue the thy health agayne, and make thy woundes whole, saieth the LORDE: because they reuyled the, as one cast awaye vnd despised, o Sion.

For thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, I will set vp Jacobs tentes agayne, and defende his dwellinge place. The cite shalbe buylded in hir olde estate, and the houses shal haue their right foundacion. And out of them shall go thankesgeuynge, and the voyce of ioye. Nu.24.c

I will multiplie them, and they shall not mynisshe: I shall endue them with honoure, and no man shall subdue them. Their children shalbe as afore tyme, and their congregacion shal cõtinue in my sight. And all those that vexe them, will I visit. D

A captayne also shall come of them, and a prynce shall springe out from the myddest of them: him will I chalenge to my self, and he shall come vnto me. For what is he, that geueth ouer his herte, to come vnto me? saieth the LORDE. Ye shalbe my people also, and I wilbe youre God. Beholde, on the other syde shall the wrath of the LORDE breake out as a stormy water, as a mightie whyrle wynde: and shal fall vpõ the heades of the vngodly. Mich.5.c Ioan.6.c Iere.13.b 24.b.3.f Iere.23.c 25.d

The terrible displeasure of the LORDE shall not leaue of, vntill he haue done, & performed the intent of his herte, which in the latter dayes ye shal vnderstonde. At the same tyme (saieth the LORDE) shal I be the God of all the generacions of Israel, & they shalbe my people. Iere.23.c

The XXXI. Chapter.

THus saieth the LORDE: The people of Israel which escaped in ỹ wildernes from the swearde, founde grace to come in to their rest. Euen so shal the LORDE now also apeare vnto me from farre, and saye: I loue the with an euerlastinge loue, therfore do I spredе my mercy before the. I will repayre the agayne (o thou doughter of Israel) that thou mayest be fast and sure. Thou shalt take thy tabrettes agayne, & go forth with them, that lede the daunce. A Nu.14.c Ezec.16.

Thou shalt plante vynes agayne vpon ỹ hilles of Samaria, and the grape gatherers shall plante, and synge.

And when it is tyme, the watchmen vpon the mount of Ephraim shall crie: Arise, let vs go vp vnto Sion to oure LORDE God, Esa.2.a

for thus saieth the LORDE: Reioyce with gladnes because of Jacob, crie vnto the heade of the Gentiles: speake out, synge, and saye: The LORDE shall delyuer his people, the remnaunt of Israelz, make them whole
B Beholde, I will bringe them agayne from out of the northlõde, and gather them from the endes of the worlde, with the blynde and lame that are amonge them, with the women that be greate with childe, and soch as be also delyuered: and the company of them that come agayne, shal be greate.

They departed from hence in heuynes, but with ioye will I bringe them hither agayne. I will lede them by the ryuers of water in a straight waye, where they shall not ut.32.a stomble: For I will be Israels father, and n.48.d Ephraim shalbe my firstborne.

Heare the worde of the LORDE (o ye Gentiles) preach in the Iles, that lie farre of, and saye: he that hath scatred Israel, shall gather him together agayne, and shall kepe him as a shepherde doth his flocke. For the LORDE shall redeme Jacob, and ryd him from the honde of the violent. And they shal come, & reioyce vpon the hill of Sion, & shall haue plenteousnes of goodes, which the LORDE shall geue them: Namely, wheate, wyne, oyle, yonge shepe and calues. And their conscience shalbe as a well watred garden, for they shall nomore be hongrie.

C Then shal the mayde reioyce in the daunce, yee both yonge and olde folkes. For I will turne their sorow in to gladnesse, and will comforte them, and make them ioyfull, euen from their hertes. I will poure plenteousnes vpon the hertes of the prestes, and my people shalbe satisfied with good thinges, saieth the LORDE.

re.3.e Thus saieth the LORDE: The voyce
att.2.c of heuynes, wepynge and lamentacion came vp in to heauen: euen of Rachel mournynge for hir children, and wolde not be comforted, because they were awaye.

But now saieth the LORDE: leaue of from wepynge and crienge, withholde thyne eyes from teares, for thy laboure shalbe rewarded, saieth the LORDE. And they shall come agayne out of the londe of their enemies: Yee euen thy posterite shall haue consolacion in this (saieth the LORDE) that thy children shall come agayne in to their owne londe.

Moreouer I herde Ephraim, (that was led awaye captyue) complayne on this maner: O LORDE, thou hast correcte me, and ze.20.f thy chastenynge haue I receaued, as an vntamed calfe. Conuerte thou me, and I shalbe conuerted, for thou art my LORDE God. Yee as soone as thou turneste me, I shall reforme my self: and when I vnderstonde, I shall smyte vpon my thee. For verely I haue cõmitted shamefull thinges: O let my youth beare this reprofe and confucion.

Vpon this complaynte, I thought thus by my self: is not Ephraim my deare sonne? Is he not the childe, with whom I haue had all myrth and pastyme? For sence the tyme that I first cõmoned with him, I haue him euer in remembraunce: therfore my very herte dryueth me vnto him: gladly and louyngly will I haue mercy vpon him, saieth the LORDE. Get the watchmen, prouyde teachers for the: set thine herte vpon the right waie, that thou shuldest walke, and turne agayne: (o thou doughter of Israel,) turne agayne to these cities of thyne. How longe wilt thou go astraie, o thou shrekinge doughter? For the LORDE will worke a new thynge vpon earth: A woman shall compasse a man.

For thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: It will come therto, that when I haue brought Juda out of captiuyte, these wordes shalbe herde in ỹ londe and in his cities: The LORDE, which is the fayre brydegrome of righteousnesse, make the frutefull, o thou holy hill: And there shall dwell Juda and all hir cities, the shepherdes and hußbondemen: For I shall sede the hongrie soule, and refresh all faynte hertes. When I herde this, I came agayne to my self, and mused, like as I had bene waked out of a swete slepe.

Beholde (saieth the LORDE) the dayes co me, that I will sowe the house of Israel and the house of Juda, with men and with cattell. Yee it shall come therto, that like as I haue gone aboute in tymes past to rote them out, to scatre them, to breake them downe, to destroye them and chastē them: Euen so will I also go diligently aboute, to buylde them vp agayne, and to plante them, saieth the LORDE.

Then shall it no more be sayde: ỹ fathers haue eaten a sower grape, and the childrens teth are set on edge: for euery one shal dye for his owne myßdede, so that who so eateth a sower grape, his teth shalbe set on edge.

Beholde, the dayes come (saieth the LORDE) ỹ I will make a new couenaunt with ỹ house of Israel & with ỹ house of Judame
a after the couenaunt that I made with their fathers, when I toke them by the honde, &

led them out of the londe of Egipte: which couenaunt they brake, wherfore I punyshed them sore, saieth the LORDE: But this shal be the couenaunt that I will make with the house of Israel after those dayes, saieth the LORDE: I will plante my lawe in the inwarde parres of them, and write it in their hertes, and wil be their God, and they shalbe my people.

And from thēce forth shall no man teach his neyghboure or his brother, and saye: knowe the LORDE: But they shall all knowe me, from the lowest vnto the hyest, saieth the LORDE. For I will forgeue their myßdedes, and wil neuer remembre their synnes eny more. Thus saieth the LORDE which gaue the sonne to be a light for the daye, and the Moone and starres to shyne in the night: which moueth the see, so that the floudes therof ware fearce: his name is the LORDE of hooستes. Like as this ordinaunce shal neuer be taken out of my sight, saieth the LORDE: So shal the sede of Israel neuer ceasse, but all waye be a people before me.

Moreuer, thus saieth the LORDE: like as the heauen aboue can not be measured, and as the foundacions of the earth beneth maye not be sought out: So will I also not cast out the whole sede of Israel, for that they haue committed, saieth the LORDE. Beholde, the daies come saieth the LORDE, that the cite of the LORDE shalbe enlarged from the towre of Hananeel, vnto the gate of the corner wall. From thence shal the right measure be taken before her vnto the hill toppe of Gareb, and shal come aboute Gaatha, and the whole valley of the deed carcases, and of the ashes, and all Seremoth, vnto the broke of Cedron: and from thence vnto the corner of the horsgate towarde the east, where as the Sanctuary of the LORDE also shal be set. And when it is now buylded, and set vp of this fashion it shall neuer be broken, ner cast downe eny more.

The XXXII. Chapter.

THese wordes spake the LORDE vnto Jeremy, in the tenth yeare of Sedechias kinge of Juda, which was the xviij yeare of Nabuchodonosor, what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste layed sege vnto Jerusalem. But Jeremy the prophet laye bounde in the courte of the preson, which was in the kinge of Judaes house: where Sedechias the kinge of Juda caused him to be layed, because he had prophecied of this maner: Thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, I will delyuer this cite in to the hondes of the kinge of Babilon, which shal take it. As for Sedechias the kinge of Juda, he shal not be able to escape the Caldees, but surely he shall come in to the hondes of the kinge of Babilon: which shall speake with him mouth to mouth, and one of them shall loke another in the face. And Sedechias shalbe caried vnto Babilon, and there shall he be, vntill the tyme that I vyset him, saieth the LORDE. But yf thou takest in hōde to fight agaynst the Caldees, thou shalt not prospere. Ier. 34. a 27. a. 38. a 39. a

And Jeremy sayde: Thus hath the LORDE spoken vnto me: Beholde, Hananeel the sonne of Sellum thine Vncles sonne shall come vnto the, and requyre the to redeme the londe, that lieth in Anathot vnto thy self: for by reason of kynred it is thy parte to redeme it, and to bye it out. Leui. 25. d Nu. 27. a 36. a Ruth. 4. a

And so Hananeel myne Vncles sonne came to me in the courte of the preson, (according to the worde of the LORDE,) and sayde vnto me: Bye my londe (I praye the) that lieth in Anothot in the countre of Ben Jamyn: for by heretage thou hast right to lowse it out for thy self, therfore redeme it. Then I preceaued, that this was the commaundement of the LORDE, and so I lowsed the londe from Hananeel of Anathot, myne Vncles sonne, and weyed him there the money: euen seuen sycles, and ten syluer pens.

I caused him also to make me a writinge, and to seale it, and called recorde there by, and weyed him there the money vpon the waightes. So I toke the euydence with the copie (when it was orderly sealed and red ouer) and I gaue the euydence vnto Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia in the sight of Hananeel my cosen, and in the presence of the witnesses, that be named in the euydence, and before all the Jewes that were therby in the courte of the preson.

I charged Baruch also before them, saienge: The LORDE of hooستes the God of Israel commaundeth the, to take this sealed euydence with the copie, and to laye it in an erthen vessell, that it maye longe continue.

For the LORDE of hooستes the God of Israel hath determed, that houses, feldes and vynyardes shalbe possessed agayne in this londe.

Now when I had delyuered the euydence vnto Baruch the sonne of Nerias, I besought the LORDE, sayenge: O LORDE God, It is thou that hast made heauen and earth Gene. 1. a Ier. 10. b with thy greate power and hie arme, and there is nothinge to harde for ỹ. Thou shewest Exo. 34.a mercy vpon thousandes, thou recompēcest the wickednes of the fathers, into the besome of the children that come after them.

Thou art the greate and mightie God, whose name is the LORDE of hooستes: greate in councell, and infinite in thought: Thine eyes loke vpon all the wayes of mens children,
Ro.2.a to reward euery one after his waye, and acordinge to the frutes of his inuencions: Thou hast done greate tokens and wonders in the londe of Egipte (as we se this daye) vpon the people of Israel and vpon those men: to make thy name greate, as it is come to passe this daye: Thou hast
Exo.7. vnto the 15. chapter. brought thy people of Israel out of the londe of Egipte, with tokens, with wondres, with a mightie honde, with a stretched out arme and with greate terriblenes: and hast geuen them this londe, like as thou haddest promysed vnto their fathers: Namely, that thou woldest geue them a lōde, that floweth with mylke and honye.

Iudi.2.3. 4.6.8 Now when they came therin, and possessed it, they folowed not thy voyce, and walked not in thy lawe: but all that thou commaundedest them to do, that haue they not done, and therfore come all these plages vpon them.

Beholde, there are bulworckes made now agaynst the cite, to take it: and it shalbe wonne of the Caldees that besege it, with swearde, with honger and death, and loke what thou hast spoken, that same shal come vpon them.

• For lo, all thinges are present vnto the: Yet sayest thou vnto me (o LORDE God) and commaundest me, that I shall loose a pece of londe vnto my self, and take witnesses therto: and yet in the meane season the cite is delyuered in to the power of the Caldees.

D Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, I am the LORDE God of all flesh, Is there eny thinge then to harde for me? Therfore thus sayde the LORDE: beholde, I shal delyuer this cite in to the power of the Caldees, and in to Iere.25.b 39.b the power of Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, they shall take it in: For the Caldees shall come, and wynne this cite, and set fyre vpon it, and burne it: with the gorgeous houses, in whose parlers they haue made sacrifice vnto Baal, and poured drynke offeringes vnto straunge goddes, to prouoke me vnto wrath.

For seinge the children of Israel and the children of Juda haue wrought wickednes before me euer from their youth vp, what haue they els done, but prouoked me with the workes of their owne hondes? saieth the LORDE.

Or, what hath this cite bene els, but a prouokinge of my wrath, euer sence the daye that I buylded it, vnto this houre? Wherin I cast it out of my sight, be cause of the greate blasphemies of the children of Israel and Juda, which they haue done to prouoke me: yee they, their kinges, their prynces, their prestes, their prophetes, whole Juda, and all the citesyns of Jerusalem.

When I stode vp early, and taught them and instructe them, they turned their backes to me, and not their faces. They wolde not heare, to be resourmed and correct. They haue set their goddes in ỹ house, that is halowed vnto my name, to defyle it. They haue buylded hie places for Baal in the valley of the children of Ennon, to vowe their sonnes and doughters vnto Moloch: which I neuer commaūded them, nether came it euer in my thought, to make Juda synne with soch abhominacion.

Moreuer thus hath the LORDE God of Israel spoken, concernynge this cite, which (as ye youre selues confesse) shalbe delyuered in to the honde of the kinge of Babilon, when it is wonne with the swerde, with honger and with pestilence. Beholde, I will gether them together from all londes, wherin I haue scatred them in my wrath, in my sear full and greate displeasure: and will bringe them agayne vnto this place, where they shal dwell safely. And they shalbe my people, and I wilbe their God.

And I will geue them one herte and one waye, that they maye feare me all the daies of their life, that they and their children after them maye prospere. And I will set vp an euerlastinge couenaunt with them, Namely: that I will neuer ceasse to do them good, and that I will put my feare in their hertes, so that they shall not runne awaye fro me.

Yee I will haue a lust and pleasure to do them good, and faithfully to plante them in this londe, with my whole herte, and with all my soule.

For thus saieth the LORDE: like as I haue brought all this greate plage vpon this people: so will I also bringe vpon them all the good, that I haue promysed them. And men shall haue their possessions in this londe, wherof ye saye now, that it shal nether be inhabited of people ner of catell, but be deliuered into the hōdes of the Caldees: Yee londe shalbe bought for money, & euydēces made ther vpon & sealed before witnesses in the countre of Ben Jamin, & rounde about Jerusalem: in the cities of Juda, in the cities that are vpō the mountaynes, & in them that lie beneth, yee & in the cities that are in the deserte. For I wil bringe their presoners hither agayne, saieth the LORDE.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

A 30.a MOroner the worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremy on this maner, whē he was yet bounde in the courte of the preson: Thus saieth the LORDE, which fulfilleth the thinge that he speaketh the LORDE which performeth the thinge that he taketh in honde: euen he, whose name is the LORDE: Thou hast cried vnto me, and I haue herde the: I haue shewed greate and hie thinges, which were vnknowne vnto you.

Thus (I saye) spake the LORDE God of Israel, concernynge the houses of this cite, and the houses of the kinges of Juda: that they shalbe broken thorow the ordinaunce and weapens, when the Caldees come to besege them: and they shalbe fylled with the deed carcases of men, whom I will slaye in my wrath and displeasure: whē I turne my face from this cite, because of all hir wickednes. Beholde, (saieth the LORDE) I will heale their woundes, and make them whole: I will open them the treasure of peace and treuth.

B 43.d And I will returne the captiuyte of Juda and Israel: and will set them vp agayne, as they were afore. From all myssedes (wherin they haue offended agaynst me) I will clēse them: And all their blasphemies which they haue done agaynst me, when they regarded me not, I will forgeue them.

And this shal get me a name, a prayse and honoure, amonge all people of the earth, which shall heare all the good, that I will shewe vnto them: Yee they shall be afrayed and astonnied at all the good dedes and benefites, that I will do for them. Moroner, 7.d thus saieth the LORDE: In this place, whe rof ye saye that it shalbe a wilderneſſe, wherin nether people ner catell shal dwell: In like maner in the cities of Juda and without Jerusalem (which also shalbe so voyde, that nether people ner catell shall dwell there) Shal the voyce of gladnesse be herde agayne, the voyce of the brydegrome and of the bryde, the voyce of them that shall synge: (Prayse the LORDE of hoostes, for he is louynge, and his mercy endureth for euer) and the voyce of them that shall offre vp giftes in the house of the LORDE. For I will restore the captiuyte of this londe, as it was afore, saieth the LORDE. Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes. It shall come yet therto, that in this londe, which is voyde from men and C catell, and in all the cities of the londe, there shal be set vp shepherdes cotages: in the cities vpon the mountaynes, and in the cities that lie vpon the playne, and in the deserte.

1.Ma. 4. Psal. 117.

In the londe of Ben Jamin, in the feldes of Jerusalem, and in the cities of Juda shal the shepe be nombred agayne, vnder the honde of him, that telleth them, saieth the LORDE. Beholde, the tyme commeth (saieth the LORDE) that I wil performe that good thinge, which I haue promised vnto the house of Israel and to the house of Juda. In those daies and at the same tyme, I will bringe forth vnto Dauid, the braunch of righteousnes, and he shall do equite and righteousnesse in the londe. In those daies shall Juda be helped, and Jerusalem shall dwell safe, and he that shall call her is euen God oure righteous maker. For thus the LORDE promyseth: Dauid shal neuer want one, to syt vpon the stole of the house of Israel: nether shall the prestes and Leuites want one to offre all waye before me, burnt offeringes, to kyndle the meatofferinges, & to prepare the sacrifices.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremy after this maner: Thus saieth the LORDE: May the couenaunt which I haue made with daye and night, be broken, that there shulde not be daye and night in due seaſon: Then maye my couenaunt also be broken, which I made with Dauid my seruaunt, and so he not to haue a sonne to reigne in his Trone. So shall also the prestes and Leuites neuer fayle, but serue me. For like as the starres of heauen maye not be nombred, nether the sonde of the see measured: so will I multiplie the sede of Dauid my seruaunt, and of the Leuites my ministers.

Moroner, the worde of the LORDE came to Jeremy, saienge: Cōsidrest thou not what this people speaketh? Two kynreddes (saye they) had the LORDE chosen, & those same two hath he cast awaye. For so farre is my people come, ỹ they haue no hope to come to gether eny more, and to be one people agayne. Therfore thus saieth the LORDE: Yf I haue made no couenaunt with daye & nyght, and geuē no statute vnto heauen and earth: then will I also cast awaye the sede of Dauid my seruaunt: so that I wil take no prynce out of his sede, to rule the posterite of Abrahā, Isaac and Jacob. But yet I will turne agayne their captiuyte, and be mercifull vnto them.

The XXXIIII. Chapter.

A re.39.a

THese are the wordes which the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy, what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon, & all his hoostes (out of all the kingdomes yᵗ were vnder his power) and all his people, fought agaynst Jerusalem and all the cities therof. Thus saieth the LORDE God of Israel: Go, & speake to Sedechias the kinge of Juda, & tell him: The LORDE sendeth the this worde: Beholde, I will delyuer this cite in to the hōde of the kinge of Babilon, he shal burne it, and thou shalt not escape his hondes, but shalt be led awaye presoner, and delyuered into his power. Thou shalt loke the kinge of Babilon in the face, and he shal speake with the mouth to mouth, and then shalt thou go to Babilon. Yet heare the worde of the LORDE, o Sedechias thou kinge of Juda: Thus saieth the LORDE vnto the: Thou shalt not be slayne with the swearde, but shalt die in peace. Like as yᵗ fore fathers, the kinges, thy progenitours were brente: so shalt thou be brente also, & in the mournynge they shal saye: oh lorde. For thus haue I determed, saieth the LORDE.

. Then spake Jeremy the prophet all these wordes vnto Sedechias kinge of Juda in Jerusalem: what tyme as the kinge of Babilons hooste besieged Jerusalem, and the remnaunt of the cities: Namely, Lachis & Azecha, which yet remayned of the stronge defensed cities of Juda.

.Par. 11.a

These are the wordes that the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy the prophet, when Sedechias was agreed with all the people at Jerusalem, that there shulde be proclamed a liberte: so that euery man shulde let fre go his seruaunt and handemayde, Hebrue & Hebruesse, & no Jewe to holde his brother as a bonde man. Now as they had consented, euen so they were obedient, & let them go fre. But afterwarde they repented, & toke agayne the seruauntes and handemaydens, whom they had letten go fre, and so made them bonde agayne.

For the which cause the worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremy from the LORDE him selfe, sayenge: Thus saieth the LORDE God of Israel: I made a couenaunt with youre fathers, when I brought them out of Egypte, (that they shulde no more be bondmen,) sayenge: When seuen yeares are out, euery man shal let go fre his bought seruaunte an Hebrue, yf he haue serued him sixe yeares. But yo' fathers obeied me not & herkened not vnto me. As for you, ye were now turned, & dyd right before me, in yᵗ ye proclamed, euery mā to let his neghboure go fre, & in yᵗ ye made a couenaunt before me, in the temple that beareth my name: But yet ye haue turned youre selues agayne, and blasphemed my name: In this, yᵗ euery man hath requyred his seruaunt and handemayden agayne, whom ye had letten go quyte and fre, and compelled them to serue you agayne, and to be youre bonde men. And therfore thus saieth the LORDE: Ye haue not obeyed me, euery man to proclame fredome vnto his brother and neghbo': wherfore, I will call you vnto a fredome, saieth the LORDE: euen vnto the swearde, to the pestilence, and to honger, and will make you to be plaged in all the kyngdomes of the earth. Yee those men that haue brokē my couenaunt, and not kepte the wordes of the apoyntmēt, which they made before me: when they hewed the calfe in two, & when there wente thorow the two halfes therof. The prynces of Juda, the prynces of Jerusalem, the gelded men, the prestes and all the people of the londe (which wēte thorow the two sydes of the calfe.) Those men wil I geue in to the power of their enemies, and in to the hondes of them that folowe vpon their lyues.

And their deed bodies shall be meate for the foules of the ayre, and beestes of the felde. As for Sedechias the kinge of Juda & his prynces, I will delyuer them in to the power of their enemies, and of them that be fyre to slaye them, and in to the honde of the kynge of Babilons hooste, which now is departed from you: But thorow my commaundement, (saieth the LORDE) they shal come agayne before this cite, they shall fight agaynst it, wynne it, and burne it. Moreouer I will laye the cities of Juda so waist, that no man shall dwell therin.

The XXXV. Chapter.

THe wordes which the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy, (in the reigne of Joachim the sonne of Josias kinge of Juda) are these: Go vnto yᵗ house of the Rechabites, & call them out, & bringe thē to yᵗ house of the

LORDE in to some commodious place, and geue them wyne to drynke. Then toke I Jasanias the sonne of Jeremy, the sonne of Habazania, and his brethrē and all his sonnes, and the whole housholde off the Rechabites: and brought them to the house off the LORDE, in to the closet of the children off Hanan the sonne off Igdalia the man off God: which was by the closet off the prynces, that is aboue the closet of Maasia the sonne of Sellum, which is the chefe off the tresury. And before the sonnes of the kynred of the Rechabites, I set pottes full of wyne, and cuppes, and sayde vnto them: drynke wyne. But they sayde: we drynke no wyne, For Jonadab the sonne of Rechab oure father commaunded vs, sayenge: Ye and youre sonnes shall neuer drynke wyne, buylde no houses, sowe no sede, plante no vynes, yee ye shall haue no vynyardes: but for all youre tyme ye shall dwell in tētes, yͤ ye maye lyue lōge in the lōde, wherin ye be straūgers. 29.b

B Thus haue we obeyed the cōmaundemēt of Jonadab yͤ sonne of Rechab oure father, in all yͤ he hath charged vs, and so we drynke no wyne all oure lyue longe: we, oure wyues, & sonnes & oure doughters. Nether buylde we eny house to dwell therin, we haue also amonge vs nether vynyardes, ner corne lōde to sowe: but we dwell in tentes, we obeye, & do acordinge vnto all, that Jonadab oure father commaunded vs.

But now yͤ Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilō came vp in to the lōde, we sayde: come, let vs go to Jerusalē, yͤ we maye escape the hooste of the Caldees ād the Assirias: & so we dwell now at Jerusalē. Then came yͤ worde of the LORDE vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Go & tell whole Juda & all the inhabitours of Jerusalē: Wyll ye not be refourmed, to obeye my wordes? saieth the LORDE. The wordes which Jonadab the sonne off Rechab cōmaunded his sonnes, yͤ they shulde drynke no wyne, are fast & surely kepte: for vnto this daye they drynke no wyne: but obeye their fathers cōmaundement. But as for me, I haue stōde vp early, I haue spokē vnto you, & geuen you earnest warnynge: & yet haue ye not bene obediēt vnto me. Yee I haue sent my seruaūtes, all the prophetes vnto you, I rose vp early, & sent you worde, sayenge: O turne you, euery man from his wicked waye: amēde yor lyues, & go not after straūge goddes, to worshippe thē: yͤ ye maye cōtinue in the lōde, which I haue geuen vnto you and youre fathers, but ye wolde nether heare me, ner folowe me.

The childrē of Jonadab Rachabs sonne haue stedfastly kepte their fathers cōmaūdement, yͤ he gaue them, but this people is not obedient vnto me. And therfore thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes yͤ God of Israel: Beholde, I wil bringe vpō Juda & vpō euery one yͤ dwelleth in Jerusalē, all the trouble yͤ I haue deuysed agaynst thē. For I haue spokē vnto thē, but they wolde not folowe: I haue called vnto them, neuertheles they wolde geue me no answere. Jeremy also spake vnto the housholde off the Rechabites: Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: For so moch as ye haue obeyed yͤ cōmaundemēt of Jonadab yor father, & kepte all his preceptes, & done acordinge vnto all yͭ he hath bydden you: Therfore thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Jonadab the sonne of Rechab shal not fayle, but haue one out of his stocke, to stōde allwaye before me. The XXXVI. Chap.

IN the fourth yeare of Joachim the sonne of Josias kynge of Juda, came yͤ worde of the LORDE vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Take a boke, & write therin all yͭ wordes, yͭ I haue spokē to the, to Israel, to Juda & to all the people, frō the tyme yͭ I begāne for to speake vnto the (in yͭ reigne of Josias) vnto this daye. That when the house of Juda heareth of the plage, which I haue deuysed for thē, they maye peraduēture turne, euery man frō his wicked waye, that I maye forgeue their offences and synnes. A Iere.30.a Iere.18.a

Then dyd Jeremy call Baruch the sonne of Nerias, & Baruch wrote in the boke at yͭ mouth of Jeremy, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had spoken vnto him. And Jeremy commaunded Baruch sayenge: I am in preson, so that I maye not come in to the house of yͤ LORDE: therfore go thou thither, & rede the boke, that thou hast writtē at my mouth: Namely, the wordes off the LORDE, & rede thē in the LORDES house vpon the fastinge daye: that the people, whole Juda, & all they that come out of the cities, maye heare. Peraduenture they will praye mekely before the face of the LORDE, and turne, euery one from his wicked waye. For greate is the wrath and displeasure, that the LORDE hath taken agaynst this people. Iere.45.a B

So Baruch the sonne of Nerias dyd, acordinge vnto all that Jeremy the prophet cōmaūded him, readinge the wordes off the LORDE out off the boke in the LORDES house. And this was done in the fyfth yeare off Joachim yͭ sonne of Josias kinge of Juda, in Ione.3.a

Ione.3.a the ix. moneth when it was commaunded, that all the people of Jerusalem shulde fast before the LORDE, and they also that were come from the cities of Juda vnto Jerusalem.

Then red Baruch the wordes of Jeremy out of the boke within the house of the LORDE, out of ỹ treasury of Gamarias the sonne Iere. 26.d off Saphan the scrybe, which is beside the hyer loffte off the new dore of the LORDES house: that all ỹ people might heare. Now whē Micheas the sonne off Gamarias the sonne of Saphan had herde all the wordes of the LORDE out of ỹ boke, he wēte downe to the kinges palace in to ỹ scrybes chābre for there all ỹ princes were set: Elisama the scrybe, Dalias the sonne of Semei, Elnathā the sonne off Achbor, Gamaria the sonne of Saphan, Sedechias the sonne of Hananias, with all the princes. And Micheas tolde them all the wordes, ỹ he herde Baruch rede out of the boke before the people.

Then all the princes sent Jehudi ỹ sonne of Nathanias the sonne of Salamia the sonne of Chusi, vnto Baruch, sayenge: Take in thine honde the boke, wherout thou hast red before all the people, and come. So Ba-
C ruch the sonne of Nerias toke ỹ boke in his honde, and came vnto them. And they sayde vnto him: Syt downe, and rede the boke, ỹ we maye heare also. So Baruch red, ỹ they might heare. Now when they had herde all the wordes, they were abaßhed one vpon another, and sayde vnto Baruch: We wil certifie the kinge of all these wordes. And they examined Baruch, sayenge: Tell vs, how didest thou wryte all these wordes out off his mouth? Then Baruch answered them: He spake all these wordes vnto me with his mouth, and I alone was with him, and wrote them in the boke.

Then sayde the princes vnto Baruch: Go thy waye, and hyde the with Jeremy, so that no man knowe where ye be. And they went in to the kinge to the courte. But they kepte the boke in the chambre off Elisama the scrybe, and tolde the kynge all the wordes, that he might heare. So the kynge sent Jehudi to fetch him ỹ boke, which he brought out of Elisama ỹ scrybes chambre. And Jehudi red it, that the kynge and all the princes, which were aboute him, might heare. Now the kynge sat in the wynter house, for it was in the ix. Moneth, and there was a good fyre before him. And whē Jehudi had Acto.19.b red thre or foure leaues therof, he cut the boke in peces with a penne knyfe, and cast it in to the fyre vpō the herth, vntil the boke was all brente in the fyre vpon the herth.

Yet no man was abashed therof, or rente his clothes: nether the kynge himselffe, ner his seruauntes, though they herde all these wordes. Neuertheles Elnathan, Dalias and Gamarias, besoughte the kinge, that he wolde not burne the boke: notwithstondinge ỹ kynge wolde not heare them, but commaunded Jeramyhel the sonne off Amalech, Serias the sonne of Esriel and Selamia ỹ sonne of Abdiel, to laye hondes vpon Baruch the scrybe, and vpon Jeremy the prophet: but the LORDE kepte them out of sighte. After now that the kynge had brente the boke, and ỹ sermōs which Baruch wrote at ỹ mouth off Jeremy: The worde of the LORDE came vnto Jeremy sayenge: Take another boke, and write in it all the forsayde sermons, that were written in the first boke, which Joachim the kynge off Juda hath brente.

And tell Joachim the kynge off Juda, Thus saieth the LORDE: thou hast brente ỹ boke, and thoughtest within thy selff: Why hast thou written therin, that the kynge off Babilon shal come, and make this lōde waist so that he shall make both people and catel to be out of it? Therfore thus the LORDE saieth, of Joachim the kynge of Juda: There shal none of his generacion syt vpon the trone of David. His deed corse shalbe cast out, that the heat off the daye, and the frost of the night maye come vpon him: And I will vyset the wickednes of him, of his sede, and of his seruauntes. Moreover all the euell that I haue promised thē (though they herde me not) will I bringe vpon them, vpon ỹ inhabitours of Jerusalem, and vpon all Juda. Then toke Jeremy another boke, and gaue it Baruch the scrybe the sonne of Nerias, which wrote therin out of the mouth off Jeremy: all the sermons that were in the first boke, which Joachim the kynge off Juda dyd burne. And there were added vnto them many mo sermons, then before.

The XXXVII. Chapter.

SEdechias ỹ sonne of Josias (which was made kynge thorow Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon) reigned in the londe of Juda, in the steade off Jechonias the sonne of Joachim. But nether he, ner his seruauntes, ner the people in the lōde wolde obeye the wordes of ỹ LORDE, which he spake by the prophet Jeremy. Neuertheles Sedechias the kynge sent Juchal the sonne of Selamia and Sophonias the sonne of Maasia the preest to the prophet Jeremy, sayenge: O praye thou vnto the LORDE oure God for vs. Now Jeremy walked fre amonge the people at that tyme, and was not put in preson as yet. Pharaos hooste also was come out of Egipte: which when the Caldees that beseged Jerusalem, perceaued, they departed from thence.

Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto Jeremy the prophet, sayēge: Thus saieth ỹ LORDE God of Jsrael, This answere shal ye geue to the kynge of Juda, that sent you vnto me for councell: Beholde, pharaos hooste which is come forth to helpe you, shall returne to Egipte in to his owne londe: But the Caldees shall come agayne, & fight agaynst this cite, wynne it, and set fyre vpon it. For thus saieth the LORDE: disceaue not yo owne myndes, thinkynge on this maner: Tush, the Caldees go now their waye from vs: No, they shall not go their waye. For though ye had slayne the whole hooste off the Caldees, that besege you, and euery one of the slayne laye in his tent, yet shulde they stonde vp, and set fyre vpon this cite. Now whē the hooste of the Caldees was brokē vp from Jerusalē for feare of the Egipcians armye, Jeremy went out of Jerusalē towarde the lōde of Ben Jamin, to do certayne busynesse there amōge ỹ people. And whē he came vnder Ben Jamyns porte, there was a porter called Jerias the sonne of Selamia ỹ zōne of Hananias, which fell vpō him & toke him, sayēge: ỹ mynde is to runne to the Caldees. Then sayde Jeremy: It is not so, I go not to the Caldees. Neuertheles Jerias wolde not beleue him, but brought Jeremy boū de before the princes. Wherfore the princes were angrie with Jeremy, causinge him to be beaten, & to be layed in preson in the house of Jonathas the scrybe. For he was the ruler of the preson. Thus was Jeremy put in to the dongeon & preson, and so laye there a longe tyme. Then Sedechias the kynge sent for him, & called him, & axed him quietly in his owne house, sayenge: thinkest thou this busynes (that now is in honde) cōmeth of the LORDE: Jeremy answerde: yee ỹ it doth: & thou (sayde he) shalt be delyuered in to the kynge of Babilons power.

Moreouer, Jeremy sayde vnto kynge Sedechias: What haue J offended agaynst ỹ, agaynst thy seruaūtes, or agaynst this people, that ye haue caused me be put in preson? Where are youre prophetes, which haue prophecied vnto you and sayde, that ỹ kynge of Babilō shulde not come agaynst you & this lōde? And therfore heare now, o my lorde the kynge: let my prayer be accepte before the, & sende me nomore in to ỹ house of Jonathas the scrybe, that J dye not there. Then Sedechias the kynge commaunded to put Jeremy in the fore entrie off the preson, and dayly to the geuen him a cake of bred, and els no dighte meate, vntill all the bred in the cite was eaten vp. Thus Jeremy remayned in ỹ fore entre off the preson.

The XXXVIII. Chapter.

Saphatias the sonne off Mathā, Gedolias the sonne of Pashur, Juchal the sonne of Selamia, & Pashur the sonne of Malchias perceaued the wordes, ỹ Jeremy had spokē vnto all the people, namely on this maner: Thus saieth the LORDE: Who so remayneth in this cite, shall perish, ether with the swearde, with honger or with pestilence: But who so falleth vnto the Caldees, shal escape, wynnynge his soule for a pray, & shal lyue. For thus saieth the LORDE This cite (no doute) must be delyuered in to ỹ power of the kīge of Babilō, & he also shal wynne it. Thē sayde the princes vnto yͤ kynge: Syr, we besech you let this man be put to death, For thus he discorageth the hōdes of the soudyers yͤ be in this cite, & the hōdes of all the people, whē he speaketh soch wordes vnto thē. This mā verely laboureth not for peace of ỹ people, but mischefe. Sedechias the kinge answered and sayde: lo, he is in yo hōdes, for ỹ kīge maye denye you nothinge. Then toke they Jeremy, and cast him in to the dongeon off Malchias the sonne off Amalech, that dwelt in the fore entre off the preson. And they let downe Jeremy wͭ cōrdes in to a dongeon, where there was no water, but myre. So Jeremy stack fast in the myre. Now when Abdemelech the Morian beynge a chamberlayne in the kynges courte, vnderstode, that they had cast Jeremy in to the dongeon: he went out off the kynges house, and spake to the kynge (which thē sat vnder the porte off Ben Jamin) these wordes: My lorde the kynge, where as these men medle with Jeremy the prophet, they do him wronge: Namely, in that they haue put him in preson, there to dye of honger, for there is no more bred in the cite. Thē the kynge commaūded Abdemelech the Morian, and sayde: Take from hēce xxx. men whom thou wilt, & drawe vp Jeremy the prophet out of the dongeon, before he dye. So Abdemelech toke the men wͭ him, & went to ỹ house of Amalech, & there vnder an almery he gat olde ragges & worne cloutes, & let thē downeby a corde, in to the dongeon to Jeremy.

And Abdemelech the Morian sayde vnto the prophet Jeremy: O put these ragges and cloutes vnder thine arme holes, betwixte thē and the coardes: ād Jeremy dyd so. So they drewe vp Jeremy with coardes and toke him out of the dongeon, and he remayned in the fore entrie of the preson. Thē Sedechias the kynge sent and caused Jeremy the prophet be called vnto him, in to the thirde entrie, that was by the house off the
Iere. 37. c LORDE. And the kynge sayde vnto Jeremy: I wil axe the somwhat, but hyde nothinge fro me. Thē Jeremy answerde Sedechias: Yf I be playne vnto the, thou wilt cause me suffre death: yf I geue the coūcell, thou wilt not folowe me. So the kynge swore an ooth secretly vnto Jeremy, sayenge: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, that made vs these soules, I will not slaye the, ner geue the in to the hōdes of them, that seke after thy life.

Then sayde Jeremy vnto Sedechias: Thus saieth ỹ LORDE off hoostes the God of Jsrael: Yf case be, that thou wilt go forth vnto the kynge off Babilons prynces, thou Iere. 27. b shalt saue thy life, and this cite shall not be brēt, yee both thou and thy housholde shall escape with youre lyues. But yff thou wilt not go forth to the kynge off Babilons prynces, then shal this cite be delyuered in to the hondes of the Caldees which shal set fyre vpon it, and thou shalt not be able to escape them. And Sedechias sayde vnto Jeremy: I am afrayde for the Jewes, that are fled vnto the Caldees, lest I come in their hōdes, and so they to haue me in derision.

But Jeremy answerde: No, they shal not
D betraye the: O herken vnto the voyce off the LORDE (I beseke ỹ) which I speake vnto the, so shalt thou be well, and saue thy life. But yf thou wilt not go forth, the LORDE hath tolde me this planely: Beholde, all the women that are left in the kynge of Judaes house, shal go out to the kynge of Babilons prynces. For they thynke, ỹ thou art disceaued: and that ỹ men in whom thou dideste put thy trust, haue gotten the vnder, and set thy fete fast in the myre, and gone their waye from the. Therfore all thy wyues with their children shall fle vnto the Caldees, and thou shalt not escape their hondes, but shalt be ỹ kynge of Babilons presoner, ⁊ this cite shall be brent. Then sayde Sedechias vnto Jeremy: loke ỹ no body knowe off these wordes, and thou shalt not dye. But yf the prynces perceaue, that I haue talked with the, and come vnto the, sayenge: O speake, what sayde the kynge to the: hyde it not from vs, and we wil not put the to death. Tell vs (we praye the) what sayde ỹ kynge to the: Se then geue them this answere: I haue humbly besought the kynge, that he will let me lyen more in Jonathas house, that I dye not there: Then came all the prynces vnto Jeremy, and axed him, And he tolde them, after the maner as the kynge bad him. Then they held their peace, for they perceaued nothinge. So Jeremy abode still in the fore entrie off the preson, vntill the daye that Jerusalem was wonne.

The XXXIX. Chapter.

NOw when the cite off Jerusalē was taken (for in the ix. yeare of Sedechias kynge of Juda in the tenth Moneth, came Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon and all his hooste, and beseged Jerusalem. And in the xi. yeare of Sedechias in the fourth Moneth ỹ ix. daye of ỹ Moneth, he brake in to the cite). Then all the kynge of Babilons prynces came in, ⁊ sat thē downe vnder the porte: Nergall, Sarezer, Samgarnebo, Sarsechim, Rabsaris, Nergal, Sarezer, Rabmag, with all the other prynces of the kynge of Babilon. And when Sedechias the kynge of Juda with his soudyers saw them, they fled, and departed out of ỹ cite by night thorow the kynges gardē, and thorow the porte that is betwene the two walles, and so they wente towarde the wilderneſſe.

But the Caldees hooste folowed fast after them, and toke Sedechias in the felde of Jericho, and brought him presoner to Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilō vnto Reblatha, that lieth in the londe off Hemath where he gaue iugdment vpon him. So the kynge of Babilon caused the children of Sedechias and all the nobles off Juda be slayne, before his face at Reblatha. And made Sedechias eyes be put out, and boūde him with chaynes, and sent him to Babilon.

Moreouer, the Caldees brēt vp the kynges palace, with ỹ other houses of the people, and brake downe the walles off Jerusalem. As for the remnaunt of the people that were in the cite, and soch as were come to helpe them (what so euer was left of the comē sorte) Nabuzaradan the chefe captayne caried them to Babilon. But Nabuzaradā the chefe captayne let the rascall people (and those that had nothinge) dwell still in the lōde off Juda, and gaue them vynyardes and corne feldes at the same tyme. Nabuchodonosor al so the kynge of Babilon gaue Nabuzaradā the chefe captayne a charge, cōcernynge Jeremy, sayenge: take and cherish him, and make moch off him: se thou do him no harme, but intreate him after his owne desyre.

So Nabuzaradā the chefe captayne, Nabusasbā the chefe chamberlayne, Nergalsarezer the treasurer and all the kynge of Babilons lordes, sent for Jeremy, & caused him be set out off the fore entrie off the preson, and committed him vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicam the sonne of Saphan: that he shulde carie him home, and so he dwelt amonge the people. Now whyle Jeremy laye yet bounde in the fore entrie of the preson, ꝙ worde off the LORDE came vnto him sayenge: Go, and tell Abdemelech the Morian: Thus saieth the LORDE off hooستes ꝙ God off Israel: Beholde, the cruell and sharpe plage that I haue deuysed for this cite, will I brynge vpon them, that thou shalt se it: but I wil delyuer the (sayeth the LORDE) and thou shalt not come in the hondes off those men, whom thou feareſt. For doutles I will saue the, so that thou shalt not perish with the swearde: but thy life shalbe saued, and that because thou hast put thy trust in me, saieth the LORDE.

The XL. Chap.

This is the maner, how the LORDE intreated Jeremy, when Nebuzaradan the chefe captayne had let him go fre from Rama, whither as he had led him bounde, amonge all the presoners, that were caried from Jerusalem and Juda vnto Babilon. The chefe captayne called for Jeremy, and sayde vnto him: The LORDE thy God spake mightely before off the mysery vpon this place: Now the LORDE hath sent it, and performed it, as he had promised: For ye haue synned agaynst the LORDE, and haue not bene obedient vnto his voyce, therfore commeth this plage vpon you. Beholde, I lowse the bondes from thy hōdes this daye: yf thou wilt now go with me vnto Babilon, vp thē: For I will se to the, and prouyde for the: But yf thou wilt not go with me to Babilon, then remayne here. Beholde, all the londe is at thy will: loke where thou thinkest conuenīt ꝛ good for the to abyde, there dwell. Yf thou canst not be content to dwell alone, then remayne wᵗ Godolias the sonne off Ahicā the sonne of Saphā, whom the kynge of Babilō hath made gouernoure ouer ꝙ cities of Juda, ꝛ dwell wᵗ him amonge the people, or remayne, where so euer it pleaseth ꝙ. So the chefe captayne gaue him his expēses wᵗ a reward, ꝛ let him go. Then wēte Jeremy vnto Godolias ꝙ sonne of Ahicā to Masphat, ꝛ dwelt there wᵗ him amonge the people that were left in the londe.

Now when ꝙ captaynes of the hooste of Juda (which wᵗ their felowes were scatred abrode on euery syde in ꝙ lōde) vnderstode, ꝙ the kynge of Babilō had made Godolias ꝙ sonne of Ahicā gouernoure in the lōde, ꝛ ꝙ man, wife ꝛ childe, yee ꝛ the poore men in the londe (ꝙ were not led captyue to Babilon) shulde be vnder his Jurisdictiō: They came to Godolias vnto Masphat: Namely, Jsmael the sonne of Nathanias, Johāna ꝛ Jonathas the sonnes of Carea, Sareas the sonne of Tanhometh, the sonnes of Opheus ꝙ Netophetite, Jesanias ꝙ sonne of Machati, wᵗ their cōpanyons. And Godolias the sonne of Ahicam the sonne off Saphā, swore vnto thē ꝛ their felowes on this maner: Be not afrayed to serue the Caldees, dwell in the lōde, ꝛ do the kynge of Babilon seruyce, so shal ye prospere. Beholde, I dwell at Masphat to be an officer in the Caldees behalfe, ꝛ to sātisfie soch as come to vs. Therfore gather you wyne, come and oyle, and kepe them in youre ware houses, and dwell in youre cities, that ye haue in kepinge. C 4.Re.25.c

Yee all the Jewes also ꝙ dwelt in Moab vnder ꝙ Ammonites, in Jdumea ꝛ in all ꝙ coūtrees, whē they herde, ꝙ the kinge of Babilō had made Godolias the sonne of Ahicā the sonne of Saphā, gouernoure vpō thē ꝙ were left in Juda: All the Jewes (I saye) returned out off all places where they were fled vnto: ꝛ came in to the lōde of Juda to Godolias vnto Masphat, ꝛ gathered wyne and other frutes, and that very moch.

Moreouer Johanna the sonne of Carea ꝛ all ꝙ captaynes of ꝙ hooste, ꝙ were scatred on euery syde in the londe, came to Godolias in Masphat, ꝛ sayde vnto him: knowest thou not ꝙ Baalis kinge of ye Ammonites hath sent Jsmael ꝙ sonne of Nathanias, to slaye the: But Godolias ye sonne of Ahicā beleued thē not. Thē sayde Johāna the sonne of Carea vnto Godolias in Masphat these wordes secretly: Let me go (I praye the) ꝛ I will slaye Jsmael the sonne of Nathanias, so ye no body shal knowe it. Wherfore will he kyll the, ye all the Jewes which resorte vnto the, might be scatred, ꝛ the remnaunt in Juda perishe: Thē sayde Godolias the sonne of Ahicam to Johanna the sonne of Carea: Thou shalt not do it, for they are but lies, that men saye of Jsmael. D aboute the kynge, & ten men that were sworne with him: vnto Godolias the sonne off Ahicam to Maspha, and eate there together. And Jsmael ỹ sonne of Nathanias wt those ten men that were sworne to him, starte vp, and smote Godolias the sonne of Ahicam the sonne of Saphan wt the swearde, & slewe hym, whom the kynge off Babilō had made gouernoure off the londe. Jsmael also slewe all the Jewes that were with Godolias at Maspha, and all the Caldees that he founde there waityng vpon him.

The nexte daye after that he had slayne Godolias (the matter was yet vnknowne) there came certayne men from Sichem, frō Silo and Samaria, to the nombre off lxxx. which had shaven their beerdes, rent their clothes, & were all heuye, bringinge meatoffringes and incense in their hondes, to offre it in the house off the LORDE. B And Jsmael the sonne of Nathanias went forth of Maspha wepinge, to mete them. Now whē he met them, he sayde: Go youre waye to Godolias the sonne of Ahicam. And when they came in the myddest off the cite, Jsmael the sonne off Nathanias (with them that were sworne vnto him) slewe them, euē at the myddest off the pyt. Amonge these lxxx. mē there were ten, ỹ sayde vnto Jsmael: Oh slaye vs not, for we haue yet a greate treasure in the felde, off wheate, barley, oyle and hony. So he spared thē, and slewe them not with their brethren. Now the pyt wherin Jsmael dyd caste the deed bodies off the mē (whom he slewe because off Godolias) had kynge

Now when all the people, whom Jsmael led captyne, sawe Johāna ỹ sonne off Carea and all the other captaynes off the hooste, they were glad. So all the people that Jsmael had caried awaye frō Maspha, were brought agayne.

And whē they returned, they came to Johanna the sonne off Carea. But Jsmael the sonne off Nathanias fled from Johāna wt eight of his sworne companyons, & went to the Ammonites. Then Johanna the sonne of Carea and all the captaynes of the hooste that were wt him, toke the remnaūt of the people, whom Jsmael the sonne of Nathanias had led awaye (When he had slayne Godolias the sonne of Ahicā) whom they also had rescued from him: fightinge men, women & children, and gelded men, whom they brought agayne from Gabaon: and went from thence, and sat them downe at Gerath Chimham, which lieth beside Bethlē, that they might go into Egipte for feare of the Caldees: of whom they were afrayed, because that Jsmael the sonne off Nathanias had slayne Godolias Ahicams sonne, whom the kynge off Babilon had made gouernoure in the londe.

The XLII. Chapter.

SO all the rulers, and Johāna the sonne off Carea, Jesanias the sonne off Osias came with all the people frō the leest vnto the most, & sayde vnto Jeremy the prophet: O heare oure peticiō, that thy mayest praye for vs vnto the LORDE ỹ God, and for the remnaunt, wherof there be very few left off many, as thou seist vs: that the LORDE thy God maye shewe vs a waye to go in, & tell vs, what we shulde do. Then Jeremy the prophete sayde vnto them: I haue herde you. Beholde, I will praye vnto God youre LORDE, as ye haue requyred me: and like what answere the LORDE geueth you, I shall certifie you therof, and kepe nothinge back frō you. And they sayde vnto Jeremy: The LORDE off treuth & faithfulnes be our recorde, that we wil do all, that the LORDE thy God commaundeth vs, whether it be good or euell. We will herken vnto the voyce off oure LORDE God, to whom we sende the that we maye prospere, when we haue folowed the voyce off the LORDE oure God.

And after ten dayes came the worde off the LORDE vnto Jeremy. Then called he Johanna the sonne of Carea, and all the captaynes of the people that were with him: & all the people from the leest to the most, & sayde vnto them: Thus saieth the LORDE God of Jsrael vnto whom ye sent me, to laye forth youre prayers before him: Yf ye wil dwell in this londe, I shall buylde you vp, & not breake you downe: I shall plante you, & not rote you out: for I am pacified, as cō-nynge the trouble that I haue done to you. Feare not the kynge off Babilon, off whom ye stonde in awe: O be not afrayed off him, saieth the LORDE: for I will be with you, to helpe you, and delyuer you from his honde. I will pardon you, I will haue mercy vpon you, and bringe you agayne in to youre owne londe.

Neuertheles, yf ye purpose not to dwell in this londe, ner to folowe the voyce off the LORDE youre God: but will saye thus: we will not dwell here, but go in to Egipte: where we shall nether se warre, heare the noyse off batell, ner suffre honger, there will we dwell. Wherfore heare now the worde of C the LORDE, o ye remnaunt of Juda. Thus
ca.42.a saieth the LORDE of hooستes the God of Israel: Yf ye be whole purposed to go in to Egipte, & to be there as straūgers: the swearde that ye feare, shall ouertake you in Egipte: and the honger wherof ye be here afrayed, shall hange vpon you in to Egipte, and there ye shall dye. For all they, that off set purpose vndertake to go in to Egipte, there to ease them selues off their mysery, shall perish with the swearde, with honger and pestilence: not one off them shall remayne, there shal none escape the plage, that I wil bringe vpon them.

For thus saieth the LORDE off hooستes the God off Israel: like as my wrath and indignacion is come vpon the inhabitours
D of Jerusalē, so shall my displeasure go forth vpon you also, yf ye go in to Egipte: For there ye shalbe reuyled, abhorred, brought to shame and confucion: and as for this place, ye shall neuer se it more. The LORDE forbyddeth you (o ye remnaūt of Juda) that ye shall not go in to Egipte. And forget not that I haue warned you earnestly this daye
42.a els shal ye begyle youre selues. For ye sent me vnto the LORDE youre God, and sayde: O praye thou the LORDE oure God for vs: and loke what answere the LORDE oure God geueth the, that bringe vs agayne, & we shall do thereafter. Now haue I shewed, and declared vnto you the voyce off the LORDE youre God, for the which cause he hath sent 42.c me to you. Yf ye will not folowe it, be sure, y ye shall perishe with the swearde, with honger & pestilence: euen in the same place, where youre lust was to go, and dwell.

The XLIII. Chapter.

A NOw when Jeremy had ended all y wordes of y LORDE God vnto y people, (for their sakes to whom God had sent him) Asarias the sonne of Osias, & Johāna y sonne of Carea, with all the proude personnes, sayde vnto Jeremy: Thou lyest, the LORDE oure God hath not sent y Iere.42 to speake vnto vs, that we shulde not go in to Egipte, and dwell there: But Baruch the sonne of Nerias prouoketh the agaynst vs, that he might bringe vs in to the captyuyte off the Caldees: that they might slaye vs, and carie vs awaye presoners vnto Babilon.

So Johanna the sonne of Carea, and all the captaynes of the hooste, and all the people folowed not the commaundement of the LORDE: Namely, to dwell in the londe off Juda: But Johanna the sonne of Carea & all the captaynes of the hooste, caried awaye all the remnaunt in Juda, that were come together agayne from the heithen (amōge whom they had bene scatred) to dwell Iere 41.c in the londe of Juda: Men, women, childrē, the kynges doughters: all those that Nabusaradan the chefe captayne had left with Godolias the sonne of Ahicam. They caried awaye also the prophet Jeremy, Baruch the sonne of Nerias, and so came in to Egipte: for they were not obedient vnto the commaundement of God. Thus came they to Taphnis.

And in Taphnis the worde off the LORDE happened vnto Jeremy, sayenge: Take
B greate stones in thine hōde, and hyde them in the brick wall, vnder the dore off Pharaos house in Taphnis, that all the men of Juda maye se, and saye vnto them: Thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will sende and call for Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon my seruaunt, Iere.43. and will set his seate vpon these stones that I haue hyd, and he shall spriede his tente ouer them.

And when he commeth, he shal smyte the lōde of Egipte with slaughter, with presonment and with the swearde. He shall set fyre vpon the temples of the Egipciās goddes, and burne them vp, & take them selues presoners. Moreouer he shall araye himselff vf the lōde of Egipte, like as a shepherde putteth on his cote, and shall departe his waye from thence in peace. The pilers also of the temple of the Sonne that is in Egipte, shal he breake in peces, and burne the tempels of the Egipcians goddes.

The LXIIII. Chapter.

THis is the worde y was shewed to Je A remy cōcerninge all y Jewes, which dwelt in Egipte: at Magdal, at Ta-phnis, at Memphis, & in the londe of Patu

res. Thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes the God of Israel: Ye haue sene all ỹ mysery, ỹ
I haue brought vpon Jerusalem, and vpon all the cities of Juda: so that this daye they are desolate, and no man dwellinge therin: & ỹ because of the greate blasphemies, which they committed, to prouoke me vnto anger:
In that they wente backe to do sacrifice ād worshipe vnto straunge goddes: whom nether they, ner ye, ner yo' fathers haue knowne. Howbeit, I sent vnto them my seruaūtes Jere.25.a 29.c all the prophetes: I rose vp early, I sent vnto them, and gaue them warninge: O do no soch abhominable thinges, & thinges that I hate. But they wolde not folowe ner herkē, to turne from their wickednes, and to do no more sacrifice vnto straunge goddes.

Wherfore my indignacion & wrath was a.1. kyndled, and it brente vp the cities of Juda, the feldes with the stretes off Jerusalem: so that they were made waist and desolate, as it is come to passe this daye. Now therfore thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes the God of Israel: Howhappeneth it, that ye do so greate euell vnto youre owne soules, thus to destroye the men and wemen, childrē and ba bes of Juda: so that none of you is left, because ye prouoke me vnto wrath with the workes of youre owne hondes: whē ye offre
vnto straunge goddes in the londe off Egip
B te, where as ye be gone to dwell: That ye might vtterly perishe, and that ye might be reuyled and shamfully intreated of all na-cions. Or, haue ye now forgotten the wickednes off yo' forefathers, the wickednes off ỹ kynges of Juda and their wyues, ỹ wicked nes that ye youre selues ād youre wyues haue done in the londe of Juda, in the cites and in the londe off Jerusalem?

Yet are ye not sory this daye, ye feare not,
ner walke ye in my lawe and in my commaundementes, that I haue genē vnto you and youre forefathers.

Therfore thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God off Israel: I am sted fastly ad Amo.9.b vysed and determed, to punysh you, and to rote out all Juda. As for the remnaunt off Jere.42.c 43.a Juda that purposly wente into Egipte, the re to ease them off their mysery: I will take them, and they shall all be destroyed. In ỹ londe of Egipte shall they perishe, beynge consumed with the swearde and with honger.
For from ỹ leest vnto ỹ most, they shal
perishe with the swearde and with honger.
Moreouer they shalbe reuyled, abhorred, sha med, and confounded. For I will viset them that dwell in Egipte, as I haue visited Jerusalem: with the swearde, with honger and with pestilence: So that none off the remnaunt off Juda, which are gone to dwell in Egipte, shall be left to come agayne in to ỹ londe off Juda: all though they thynke to come thither agayne, and to dwell there. For none shal come agayne, but soch as are fled awaye.

Then all the men which knewe that their C
wyues had offred vnto straunge goddes, &
a greate sorte off wyues that stode there, yea
and all the people that dwelt there in Egip te in the cite of Patures, answerde Jeremy, & sayde: As for the wordes that thou hast spo ken vnto vs in the name of the LORDE, we will in no wyse heare them: but what soeuer goeth out of oure owne mouth, that will we do: We will do sacrifice, and offre oblacions vnto the Quene off heauen: like as we and o' forefathers, oure kynges and oure heades haue done in the cities off Juda, and in the stretes and feldes of Jerusalem. For then had we plenteousnesse off vytales, then were we in prosperite, and no myßfortune came vpon vs.

But sens we left of, to offre, and to do sacrifice vnto the Quene of heauen, we haue had scarcenes of all thinges, and perish w' the swearde and honger. Last of all, when we wemē did sacrifice and offred vnto the Quene of heauē, did we make her cakes ād poure vnto her drinkofferinges, to do her se rvyce, without oure hußbondes wylles?

Then sayde Jeremy vnto all the people, D
to the men, to the women and to all the fol-ke, which had geuen him that answere: Dyd not the LORDE remembre the sacrifices that ye, yo' forefathers, youre kīges & rulers (w' all the people) haue offred in the cities of Ju da, in the stretes and londe off Jerusalem?
and hath he not considered this in his mynde? In so moch, that the LORDE might no longer suffre the wickednes off youre inuencions, and the abhominable thynges which ye dyd? Is not youre londe desolate?
voyde, yee and abhorred, so that no mā dwel leth therin eny more, as it is come to passe
this daye?

Dyd not all this happen vnto you, becau se ye made soch sacrifice, and synned agaynst
the LORDE? Ye haue not folowed his voy ce, to walke in his lawe, in his ordinaunces and statutes.

Yee this is the cause, that all myssonne happened vnto you, as it is come to passe
this daye.

Moreouer, Jeremy spake vnto all the people and to all the women: Heare the worde off the LORDE all Juda, ye that be in the londe off Egipte: Thus saieth the LORDE off hoostes the God of Israel: Ye and youre wyues haue spoken with youre owne mouth, the thinge that ye haue fulfilled in dede.

Yee thus haue ye sayde: We will not fayle, but do the thynge that pleaseth vs: we wil do sacrifice and poure out drynkoffringes to the Quene of heauen. Purposly haue ye set vp youre owne good meanynges, & hastely haue ye fulfilled youre owne intente. And therfore, heare the worde of the LORDE all Juda, ye that dwell in the londe off Egipte.

Beholde, I haue sworne by my greate name (saieth the LORDE) that my name shal not be rehearsed thorowe eny mans mouth of Juda, in all the londe of Egipte: to saye: The LORDE God lyueth, for I wil watch, to plage them, and not for their wealth. And all the men of Juda that be in the lõde of Egipte, shal perish with the swearde and with hõger, vntill they be vtterly destroyed.

Neuertheles, those that fled awaye for ye swearde, shal come agayne into the lõde of Juda (but there shal be very fewe of them) And all the remnaunt off Juda, that are gone into Egipte, there to dwell, shall knowe, whose wordes shalbe founde true; theirs or myne. Take this for a token, that I wil visit you in this place (saieth the LORDE) and that ye maye knowe, how that I (without doute) wil perfourne my purpose vpon you,) to punysh you. Beholde (saieth the LORDE I wil delyuer Pharao Ophram kynge of Egipte in to the hondes of his enemies, & seke after his life: euen as I gaue Sedechias the kynge of Juda into the hondes of Nabuchodonosor kige of Babilõ, which sought after his life.

The XLV. Chapter.

These are the wordes & Jeremy the prophet spake vnto Baruch the sonne of Nerias, after that he had writ ten these Sermõs into a boke at the mouth of Jeremy, In the fourth yeare of Joachim the sonne of Josias kynge of Juda.

Thus saieth the LORDE God of Israel vnto the, O Baruch: In so moch as thou thoughtest thus (when thou wast writinge) Wo is me, the LORDE hath geuen me payne for my trauayle: I haue weeried my self w sighinge, and shall I fynde no rest: Therfore tell him (O Jeremy) & the LORDE saieth thus: Beholde, The thige that I haue buylded, wil I breake downe agayne, and rote out the thinge, that I haue planted, yee this whole londe. And sekest thou yet promociõ? Loke not for it, and desyre it not. For I will bringe a miserable plage vpõ all flesh, saieth the LORDE. But thy life will I geue the for a pray, where so euer thou goest.

The XLVI. Chapter.

Here folowe the wordes off the LORDE to the prophet Jeremy, which he spake vnto the Gentiles. These wordes folowinge preached he to the Egipcias concernynge the hoost off Pharao Necho kynge off Egipte, when he was in Charcamis besyde the water off Euphrates: what tyme as Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon slewe him, In the fourth yeare off Joachim the sonne off Josias kynge off Juda.

Ye make redy buckler and shylde, ye go forth to fight: Yee harnesse youre horses, & set youre selues vpon them: Ye set youre sallettes fast on, ye bringe forth speares, ye scoure youre sweardes, & put on youre brest plates.

But alas, how happeneth it, that I se you so afrayed: why shrecke ye backe: where fore are youre worthies slayne: Yee they runne so fast awaye, that none off them loketh behynde him. Fearfulnesse is fallen vpon euerychone off them, saieth the LORDE. The lightest off fote shall not fle awaye, and the worthies shall not escape.

Towarde the north by the water of Euphrates they shall stomble and fall. But what is he this, that swelleth vp, as it were a floude, roaringe & ragynge like the streames off water: It is Egipte that ryseth vp like the floude, and casteth out the waters with so greate noyse.

For they saye: We will go vp, and will couer the earth: we wil destroye & cities, with them that dwell therin. Get you to horse backe, roll forth & Charettes, come forth ye worthies: ye Morians, ye Libeans with youre buclers, ye Lideans with youre bowes: So shall this daye be vnto the LORDE God of hoostes, a daye of vẽgeaunce, that he maye avẽge him of his enemies. The swearde shal deuoure, it shal be satisfied and bated in their blonde: For the LORDE God off hoostes shall haue a slayne offringe towarde the North, by the water of Euphrates. Go vp (o Galaad) & bringe triacle vnto the doughter off Egipte:

But in vayne shalt thou go to surgery, for thy wounde shall not be stopped. The heithen shall heare off thy shame, and the londe shalbe full of thy confucion: for one stronge man shall stomble vpon another,
how then shulde they not fall both together?

C These are the wordes that the LORDE
re.45.b spake to the prophet Jeremy, concernyge hoost of Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Ba-bilon, which was to destroye the londe off Egipte: Preach out thorow the londe of Egipte, and cause it be proclamed at Migdal, Memphis and Taphnis, and saye: Stonde still, make the redie, for the swearde shal con sume the rounde aboute.

How happeneth it that thy mightie wor
thies are fallen? why stode they not fast?
Euen because the LORDE thrust them dow-
ne. The slaughter was greate, for one fell e-uer still vpon another. One cried vpon another: Vp, let vs go agayne to oure owne peo ple, and to oure owne naturall countre, from the swearde of oure enemie.

Crie euen there: O Pharao kynge of Egipte, the tyme will bringe sedicion. As tru-Ia.48.a ly as I lyue (saieth the kynge, whose name 11.c is the LORDE of hooستes) it shall come as D mount of Thabor, and as Libanus yf it sto de in the see. O thou doughter of Egipte, make redy thy geer to flyt. For Memphis shalbe voyde and desolate, so that nemā shal dwell therin. The londe of Egipte is like a goodly fayre calfe, but one shall come out of the north to dryue her forwarde. Hir wagied souldyers that be with her, are like fat cal
ues.

They also shall fle awaye together, and not abyde: for the daye off their slaughter and the tyme of their visitacion shall come vpon them.

The crie off their enemies shall make a noyse, as the blast of a trompet. For they shall entre in with their hooste, and come w axes, as it were hewers downe of wod.
And they shall cut downe hir wod (saieth the LORDE) with out eny discrecion. For they shal be mo in nōbre then the greshoppers, so that no man shalbe able to tell thē.
The dowghter of Egipte shalbe confoūded.
whē she shalbe delyuered in to the hondes
off the people off the north.

E Moreouer thus saieth the LORDE of hoos tes the God of Israel: Beholde I will vy-set that restlesse people off Alexandria, pha rao and Egipte, yee both their goddes and their kynges: euen Pharao, and all them yf litten vnto him. Nee I will delyuer them into the hondes off those, that seke after their lyues: Namely, into the power off Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon, and in to the power off his seruaūtes. And after all these thinges, it shalbe inhabited as afore tyme, saieth the LORDE

But be not thou afrayed (o my seruaunt Jacob) feare not thou, o Israel. For lo, I wil helpe the from farre, and thy sede from the londe of thy captiuyte. Jacob also shall come agayne, and be in rest: he shall be rich, and no man shall do him harme. Feare thou not (o Jacob my seruaunt) saieth the LOR-DE, for I am with the: and will destroye all nacions, amonge whom I haue scatred the.
Neuertheles I will not consume the, but chasten the and correcte the: yee and that with discrecion: nether wil I spare the, as o ne that were fautlesse.

The XLVII. Chapter.

THese are the wordes, that the LOR-DE spake vnto Jeremy the prophet agaynst the Philistines, before that Pharao smote the cite off Gaza. Thus sa-ieth the LORDE: Beholde, there shall waters arise out off the north: and shall growe to a greate floude, runnynge ouer and couerynge the londe, the cities and them that dwell therin

And the men shall crie, and all they that dwell in the londe, shall mourne at the noy-se and stampynge off their stronge barded horses, at the shakynge off their charettes, and at the remblinge off the wheles. The fathers shall not loke to their children, so feable and weery shall their hondes be: at the same tyme, when he shal be there, to des troye the whole londe off the Philistymes.
He shall make waist both Tirus, Sidon ad
all other that are sworne vnto them.

For the LORDE will destroye all Palestina, and the other Iles, that be deuyded frō
the countre. Baldnesse is come vpon Ga za, Ascalon with hir other valleys shall kē-pe hir peace.

How longe wilt thou slaye, O thou swear de off the LORDE? Turne agayne in to y sheeth, reste, and leave off. But how can it ceasse, when the LORDE himselff hath gi-uen it a charge agaynst Ascalon, and ray-sed it vp agaynst the cities off the see coast?

The XLVIII. Chapter.

THus saieth y LORDE off hooستes y
God of Israel against Moab: Wobe
to y cite of Nebo, for it shal be layed waist, brought to confucion and taken. Yee ye stroge cite of Cariatharim shalbe brought to shame, and afrayed: Moab shall nomo-re be had in honoure: Wicked councell shal-be taken vpon Hesebon. Come (shall they sa-ye) let vs rote them out, that they maye be nomore amonge the nombre of the Gentiles, yee that they maye nomore be thought vp-

on: Thus the swearde shall persecute ye.
A voyce shall crie from Horonaim: With greate waistinge and destruction, is Moab made desolate.
And this crie shalbe herde in all hir cities.
At the goinge vp vnto Laheth there shall arise a lamentacion: and downe towarde Ho-ronaim, there shall be herde a cruell and a deedly crie: Get you awaye, saue yourelv-es & be like vnto the heeth in ye wildernes.
For, because thou hast trusted in thy stron-ge holdes and treasure, thou shalt be taken.
Chamos with his prestes and prynces shall go awaye into captiuyte.

The destroyer shal come vpon all cities, none shall escape. The valleys shalbe destroyed, and the feldes shall be layed waist: like as the LORDE hath determed.

Make a token vnto Moab, that she get hir awaye spedely: for hir cities shalbe made so desolate, that no man shall dwell therin.
Cursed be he that doth the worke of the LOR DE necligently, and cursed be he that te-peth backe his swearde from sheddynge off bloude.

Moab hath euer bene rich and carlesse from hir youth vp, she hath sytten and take hir ease with hir treasure. She was neuer yet put out off one vessell in to another (ye is) she neuer wente awaye in to captyuyte, therfore hir taist remayneth, and hir sauoure
is not yet chaunged.

But lo, the tyme commeth (saieth the LORDE) that I shall sende hir trussers to trusse her vp, to prepare and season hir vessels: yee hir tankerdes rattell, and shake together. And Moab shalbe ashamed off Cha-mos, like as Israel was ashamed off Bethel, wherin she put hir trust.

Wherfore do ye thinke thus: we are migh tie, and stronge men off warre: Moab shal be destroyed, and hir cities brente vp: hir cho sen yonge men shall be slayne, saieth the kin
ge, whose name is the LORDE off hoostes.
The destruction off Moab commeth on a pace, and hir fall is at honde.

All hir neghbours shall mourne for her,
and all they that knowe hir name, shal saye:
O how happeneth it, that the stronge staff and the goodly rod is thus broken? And thou doughter Dibo, come downe from thy glory, and sye in powerte. For he that de-stroyeth Moab, shall come vp to the also, and breake downe thy stronge holdes.

And thou that dwellest in Aroer, gee the
to ye strete, & loke aboute the: aske them that are fled and escaped, and saye: what thynge is happened? O, Moab is confounded and ouercome.

Mourne and crie, tell it out at Arnon, that Moab is destroyed. And myserye shall come vpon the playne londe: Namely, vpo
holon, and Jazar vpon Mephat and Dibo, vpon Nebo and the house of Diplathaim,
vpon Cariatharim and Bethgamul, vpon Bethmaon and Carioth, vpon Bosta and all the cities in the lode off Moab, whether they lye farre or neare.

The horne of Moab shal be smytte dow ne, & hir arme broken, saieth the LORDE. Ma ke hir dronken (for she magnified hir self abo ue the LORDE) that men maye clappe their hondes at hir vomyte, and that she also maye be laughed to scorne. O Israeli, shalt thou not laugh him to scorne, when he is ta ken amonge theues? Yee because off thy wor des that thou hast spoken agaynst him, thou shalt be driuen awaye. Ye Moabites shall leaue the cities, and dwell in rockes off stone, and become like doues, that make their nestes in holes.

As for Moabs pryde, we haue herde off
it, she is very hie mynded. I knowe hir stout nesse, hir boostinge, hir arogācy and the pry-de off hir stomack, saieth the LORDE. For hir furiousnes maye nether vpholde her w strength, ner deve. Therfore shal there mour nynge be made for Moab, and euery mā shal
crie for Moabs sake: a lamentacion shalbe made, to the men that stonde vpon the wall.
So will I mourne for the also (o Jazer) and for the, O thou vynyarde off Sybma.

Thy wyne braūches shal come ouer ye see,
and the braunches off Jazer but vnto the
see: the destroyer shall breake in to thy haruest and grape gatheringe. Myrth and chea re shalbe taken awaye from the cymbre felde, and from the whole londe off Moab.

There shall be no swete wyne in the presse, the treader shall haue no stomacke to crie, yee there shall be none to crie vnto him:
which afore tyme were herde from hesebon to Eleale and Joaz, which lifted vp their voyce from Zoar vnto Horonaim, that bullock off thre yeare olde. The waters also off Nemrim shalbe dried vp.

Moreouer I will make Moab ceasse (saieth the LORDE) from the offringes and censinge that she hath made vnto hir goddes in hie places. Wherfore my herte mourneth for Moab, like a crowde playenge an heuy songe: and for the mens sake off the bricke Esa.15.a wall my herte mourneth also, euen as a pype, that pipeth a dolefull songe: for they shalbe very fewe, and destroyed.

All heades shall be shauen, and all beerdes clipped off: all hondes bounde, and all loynes gyrded aboute with sack cloth. Vpō all the house toppes and stretes off Moab, there shalbe mournynge: For I will breake
F Moab like an vnprofitable vessell saieth the LORDE. O how fearfull is she? O how mourneth she? O how doth Moab hange downe hir heade, and is ashamed? Thus shall Moab be a laughinge stocke, and had in derision off all them, that be rounde aboute her.

Deu.28.c
Ier.49.d For thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, the enemie shal come flyenge as an Aegle, and sprede his wynges vpon Moab. They shall clymme ouer the walles, and wynne the stronge holdes. Then the mighty mens hertes in Moab, shalbe like the herte off a woman trauelinge with childe.

Ier.49.d And Moab shalbe made so desolate, that she shal no more be a people, because she hath set vp her selfe agaynst the LORDE. Feare, pyt, and snare shall come vpō the (o Moab) saieth the LORDE. Who so escapeth the feare, shal fall in the pyt: and who so getteth Esa.24.e out off the pyt, shall be taken in the snare.

For I will bringe a yeare off visitacion vpon Moab, saieth the LORDE. They that are able to flie, shall stonde vnder the shadowe off Hesebon. For there shall go a fyre out off Hesebon, and a flame from Sion, & shall burne vp that proude people off Moab, both before and behynde.

Wo be vnto the (o Moab) for thou people off Chamos shalt perish: Yee thy sonnes and doughters shall be led awaye captyue. Yet at the last will I bringe Moab out off captiuyte agayne, saieth the LORDE. Thus farre off the plage off Moab.

The XLIX. Chapter.

Eze.21.d
25.a
Amos.1.a
AS concerninge the Ammonites, thus the LORDE saieth: Hath Israel no children, or is he without an heyre? Why hath youre kynge then taken Gad in? wherfore doth his people dwell in his cities? Beholde therfore, the tyme commeth (saieth y LORDE) that I will brynge a noyse off warre into Rabath off the Ammonites. Lahel shalbe desolate, and hir cities burne vp: and the Israelites shall be lordes ouer those, that had the in possession afore, saieth the LORDE. Hesebon shall mourne, for it shal be roted out off the grounde, saieth the LORDE. The cities off Rabath shall crie out, and gyrde them selues with sack cloth: they shall mourne, and runne aboute the walles: for their kynge shall be led awaye prisoner yee his preestes and princes with him.

Wherfore trustest thou in the waterstremes, that flowre to and fro, o thou fearefull doughter: and thynkest thou art so sure (by reason off thy treasure) that no man shal come to the?

Beholde, I will brynge a feare vpon the, saieth the LORDE God off hoostes, from all those that be aboute the: so that ye shall be scatred euery man from another, and no man shall gather them together agayne, that be fled. But after that, I will bringe the Ammonites also out off captyuyte agayne.

Vpon the Edomites hath the LORDE off hoostes spoken on this maner: Is there no more wysdome in Theman? Is there no more good councell amonge his people? Is their wysdome then turned clene to naught? Get you hence, turne youre backes, creepe downe into the depe, O ye citesyns off Dedan.

For I will bringe destructiō vpon Esau, yee and the daye off his visitacion. Yff the grape gatherers came vpon the, shulde they not leaue some grapes? Yff the nighte robbers came vpon the, shulde they not take so moch, as they thought were ynough?

But I will make Esau bare, and discouer his secretes, so that he shall not be able to hyde them. His sede shalbe waisted awaye, yee his brethren and his neghbours, and he himselff shall not be left behinde.

Thou shalt leaue thy fatherlesse children behinde the, and I will kepe them and thy wydowes shall take their comforth in me. For thus hath the LORDE spoken: Beholde, they that men thought were vnmete to drinke of the cuppe, haue dronken with the first: and thynkest thou then to be free?

No, no: thou shalt nether be quyte no free, but thou must drynke also: For why, I haue sworne by my selff (saieth the LORDE) that Bosra shall become a wyldernesse, an open shame, a laughinge stocke and cursynge: and hir cities shalbe a continuall deserte.

For I am perfectly informed of the LORDE, that he hath sent a message all ready vnto the Heithen. Gather you together, and go forth agaynst them: make you ready to the battayle, for lo: I will make the but small amonge the Heithen, and litle regarded amonge men.

Thy hie stomack & thy pryde of thy hert haue deceaued the, because thou wilt dwell in the holes of stony rockes, and haue the hie mountaynes in possession. Nevertheles though thy nest were as hie as the Aegles, yet wil I cast the downe, saieth the LORDE. Moreover Idumea shall be a wilderneese: who so goeth by it, shalbe abashed, and wonder at all hir miserable plages. Like as Sodom, Gomor and the cities that laye there aboute, were turned vpsyde downe (saieth the LORDE) so shal no body dwell in Idumea, and no man shal haue his habitacion there. Beholde, like as the Lyon cometh vp from the pleasaunt medowes of Jordane vnto the grene pastures of Etha, so wil I dryue him, & make him runne agaynst her. But who is the yonge man that I will ordene therto? Who is like vnto me? What is he that will stryue with me? What shepherde maye stonde in my hondes?

Therfore heare the councell of the LORDE, that he hath taken vpon Idumea: & his purpose, that he hath deuysed vpon the citesyns of Theman: The leest of the flocke shal teare them in peces, & loke what fayre thynge they haue, they shal make it waist, & them selues also. At the noyse of their fall the earth shal quake, the crie of their voyce shalbe herde vnto the reed see. Beholde, the enemie shall come and fle vp hither, like as it were an Aegle, & sprede his wynges vpon Bosra. Then shal the hertes of the worthies in Edom be as the herte of a woman trauelinge of childe. Vpon Damascus, Hemath and Arphad shall come confucion, for they shall heare euell tydinges: they shal be tossed to and fro like the see that can not stonde still. Damascus shalbe sore a frayde, & shal fle, tremblinge shal come vpon her. Sorowe and payne shal ouer take her as a woman trauelinge of childe. But how shulde so worshipfull and glorious a cite be forsaken & heare therfore: hir yonge men shal fall in the stretes, and all hir men of warre shal be take awaye in that tyme, saieth the LORDE of hoostes. I will kyndle a fyre in the walles of Damascus, which shal consume the palace of Benadad.

As for Cedar and the kyngdome of Hasor, whom Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon smote downe, the LORDE hath spoken thus vpon them: Arise, and get you vp vnto Cedar, and destroye the people towarde the easte. Their tentes and their flockes shal they take awaye, yee their hanginges and their vessell. Their Camels also shall they carie awaye with them. They shall come aboute them on euery syde with a fearfull crie.

Fle, get you soone awaye, crepe in to caues, that ye maye dwell there: O ye inhabitours of Hasor, saieth the LORDE: for Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon hath holden a councel concernynge you, & concluded his deuyce agaynst you. Arise, & get you vp agaynst yonder rich & careleese people (saieth the LORDE) which haue nether gates ner dore barres, & that dwell not together. Their Camels shalbe stollen, & the droues of their catell dryuen awaye.

Moreover, these that be shauen wil I scatre towarde all the wyndes, & bringe them to destruction: yee & that thorow their owne familiers, saieth the LORDE. Hasor also shall be a dwellinge for Dragons, and an euerlastinge wilderneese: so that no body shal dwell there, and no man shal haue there his habitacion.

These are the wordes, that the LORDE spake to the prophet Jeremy concernynge Elam, in the begynnynge of the reigne of Sedechias kinge of Juda. Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: Beholde, I wil breake the bowe of Elam, and take awaye their strength: and vpon Elam I wil bringe the foure wyndes from the foure quarters of heauen, & wil scatre them agaynst the same foure wyndes. And there shal be no people, but some of Elam shal fle vnto them.

For I wil cause Elam be afrayed of their enemies, & of them that seke their lyues: & wil bringe vpō them the indignacion of my wrath, saieth the LORDE. And I wil persecute them with the swearde so longe til I haue brought them to naught. I wil set my stole in Elam, I wil destroye both the kinge & the princes from thence, saieth the LORDE. But in processe of tyme, I wil bringe Elam out of captiuyte agayne, saieth the LORDE.

The L. Chapter.

The wordes that the LORDE spake vnto the prophet Jeremy, concernynge Babilon, & the londe of the Caldees: Preach amonge the Gentiles, let youre voyce be herde, make a token: crie out, kepe no sylence, but saye: Babilon shal be wonne, Bel shalbe confounded, and Merodach shalbe ouercome.

Yee their goddes shal be brought to shame, and their ymages shall stonde in feare. For out of the north there shal come a people agaynst her, which shal make hir londe so waist, that no body shal dwell therin: nether man ner beast, for they shall flie and departe from thence. In those dayes & at that tyme (saieth the LORDE) the childre of Israel shall come, they & the children of Juda, wepinge & makinge haist, & shal seke the LORDE their God. They shall aske the waye to Sion, thyther shall they turne their faces, & come, and hange vpon the, in a couenaunt that neuer shal be broken.

My people hath bene a lost flocke, my shepherdes haue disceaued them, & haue made them go astraye vpon the hilles. They haue gone from the mountayne to the little hill, & forgotten their folde. All they y came vpon them, haue deuoured the: & their enemies sayde: We haue made no faute agaynst them, for they haue displeased the LORDE, yee euen the LORDE which is the bewtie of their righteousnes, & y defended their fathers. Yet shal ye flie from Babilon, & departe out of y londe of the Caldees, and ye shall be as the rammes that go before the flocke. For lo, I will wake vp an hoost of people from y northren londe, & bringe them vpon Babilon: these shal laye sege to it, & wynne it: Their arowes shal not mysse, like as a connynge archer shuteth not wronge. And the Caldees shalbe spoyled, & all they that spoyle them, shalbe satisfied, saieth the LORDE: because ye were so chearfull & glad, to treade downe myne heretage, & fulfilled youre pleasures, as the calues in the grasse: and triumphed ouer them like the bulles, when ye had gotten the victory. Youre mothers shalbe sore confounded, and they that bare you, shal come to shame. She shall be the leest set by amonge the nacions, vyode, waist, & dried vp. No man shal be able to dwell there, for the feare of y LORDE, but she shal be whole desolate. All they that go by Babilon, shall stonde still, & be abashed, & shal wondre at all hir plages.

Go forth in yo' araye agaynst Babilon rounde aboute, all ye that can hãdle bowes: shute as her, spare no arowes, for she hath synned agaynst the LORDE. Crie out: vpon her, vpon her, agaynst her roũde aboute: she shal yelde her selfe, her foundaciõs shal fall, & hir walles shall come downe, for it shalbe the vengeaunce of the LORDE. Yee vẽgeaunce shalbe taken of her, & as she hath done, so shal she be dealt withall. They shal rote out the sower from Babilon, & him y handleth the sickle in haruest. For feare of the sweardе of the enemie, euery man shall get hym to his owne people, & euery man shal flie to his owne londe. Israel is a scatred flocke, the Lyons haue dispersed them. First the kinge of the Assirians deuoured them, last of all this Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon hath brussed all their bones.

xo. 21.b
eu. 24.d
hel. 3.b

Therfore thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes the God of Israel: Beholde, I will visit the kinge of Babilon & his kingdome, as I haue visited the kinge of the Assirians: and will bringe Israel agayne to his pleasaunt pasture, that he maye fede vpon Charmel & Basan, and be satisfied vpon the mount of Ephraim & Galaad. In those dayes and at the same tyme (saieth the LORDE) yf the offence of Israel be sought for, there shal none be founde: Yf men enquere for the synne of Juda, there shal be none: for I will be mercifull vnto them, whom I suffre to remayne ouer.

Go downe (o thou auenger) into the enemies londe, & visit them that dwell therin: downe with them, and smyte them vpon the backes, saieth the LORDE: do accordinge to all, that I haue commaunded the. There is gone aboute the londe a crie of a slaughter & greate murthur, namely on this maner: How happeneth it, that the hammer of the whole worlde is thus broken & brussed in sonder? How chanceth it, that Babilon is become a wildernes amonge the Heithen on this maner? I my self haue layed wayte for the, & thou art taken: vnawarres art thou trapped & snared: for why, thou hast prouoked y LORDE vnto anger: The LORDE hath opened his house of ordinaunce, & brought forth the weapens of his wrath. For the thinge that is done in the londe of the Caldees, it is the LORDE of hoostes worke.

These thinges shal come vpon her at the last, they shal breake into hir prieuy chãbes, they shall leaue her as bare as stones, that be layed together vpon heapes. They shall so destroye her, y nothinge shal be left. They shal slaye all hir mightie souldyers, and put them to death. Wo be vnto the, for the daye & tyme of their visitacion is at honde. Me thinke I heare already a crie, of them that be fled & escaped out of the londe of Babilon, which shewe in Sion the vengeaunce of the LORDE oure God, the vengeaunce of his temple: Yee a voyce of them, that crie agaynst Babilon: Call vp all the archers agaynst Babilon, pytch youre tentes rounde aboute her, that none escape. Recompence her, as she hath deserued: and accordinge as she hath done, so deale with her agayne: for she hath set vp her self agaynst the LORDE, agaynst ỹ holy one of Israel. Therfore shal hir yonge men fall downe in the stretes, & all hir men of warre shal be roted out in ỹ daye, saieth the LORDE. Beholde, I speake vnto the (o thou proude) saieth the LORDE God of hooستes: for thy daye shal come, euẽ the tyme of ỹ visitaciõ. And the proude shal stomble & fall, & no man shal helpe him vp. I wil burne vp his cities with fyre, & it shal consume all that is rounde aboute him.

Thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes: The children of Israel & Juda suffre violence together. All they that haue them in captiuyte, kepe them fast, & wil not let them go: but their auẽger & redemer is mightie, whose name is the LORDE of hooستes: he shal manteyne their cause, he shal make the londe shake, & iudge them that dwell therin, one with another. The swearde shall come vpon the Caldees (saieth the LORDE) vpon them that dwell in Babilon, vpon their prynces, & vpõ their wyse mẽ: The swearde vpon their soyth sayers, (as for thosẽ, they shall become fooles.) The swearde vpõ their worthies, so that they shal stonde in feare: The swearde vpon their horsmen and charettes, & vpon all the comon people that dwell vnder thẽ: so that they all shal become like women: The swearde vpon their treasure, so that it shal be stollen awaye: The swearde vpon their waters, so that they shalbe dried vp: For the londe worshippeth ymages, & delyteth in straunge wondrefull thinges. Therfore shal wilde beestes, Apes & Estriches dwell therin: for there shal neuer man dwell there, nether shal eny man haue his habitacion there for euermore. Like as God destroyed Sodom & Gomorre, with the cities that laye there aboute, saieth the LORDE: So shal noman dwell there also, nether shal eny mã haue there his habitacion. Beholde, there shal come a people from the north, with a greate bonde of men, & many kinges shal stonde vp from the endes of the earth: They beare bowes & buclers, cruell are they & vnmercifull.

Their voyce roareth like the raginge see, they ryde vpon horses, & come weapened to fight agaynst the: O Babilon. As soone as the kinge of Babilon heareth tell of them, his hondes shal waxe feable: Sorowe and heuynes shall come vpon him, as a woman trauelinge with childe. Beholde, like as the Lyon commeth vp from the pleasaunt medowes of Jordane vnto the grene pastures of Ethan, so wil I driue thẽ forth, and make them runne agaynst her. But whom shal I chose out, & ordene to soch thinge? For who is like me, or who wil stryue with me? or what shepherde maye stonde agaynst me? Therfore heare the councel that the LORDE hath geuen vpon Babilon, and the deuyce that he hath taken vpon the londe of the Caldees. The leest amõge the people shal teare them in peces, & loke what pleasaunt thinge they haue: they shal laye it waist. The noyse at ỹ wynnynge of Babilon shal moue the earth, & the crie shalbe herde amonge the Gẽtiles.

The LI. Chapter.

Thus hath the LORDE sayde: Beholde, I will rayse vp a perlous wynde agaynst Babilon & hir citesens, ỹ beare euell will agaynst me. I wil sende also in to Babilõ fanners, to fanne her out, & to destroye hir londe: for in the daye of hir trouble they shal be aboute her on euery syde. Moreouer, the LORDE hath sayde vnto the bowe men, & to them ỹ clymme ouer the walles in brest plates: Ye shal not spare hir yongemẽ, kyll downe all hir hooست. Thus the slayne shal fall downe in the londe of the Caldees, and the wounded in the stretes. As for Israel & Juda, they shall not be forsakẽ of their God, of the LORDE of hooستes, of the holy one of Israel: no, though they haue fylled all their londe full of synne. Flee awaye from Babilon, euery man saue his life. Let no man holde his tunge to hir wickednes, for the tyme of the LORDES vengeaunce is come, yee he shal reward her agayne. Babilon hath bene in the LORDES honde a golden cuppe, ỹ maketh all londes droncken. Of hir wyne haue all people droncken, therfore are they out of their wittes. But sodenly is Babilon fallen, and destroyed. Mourne for her, bringe plasters for hir woundes, yf she maye peraduenture be healed agayne. We wolde haue made Babilon whole (saye they) but she is not recouered. Therfore wil we let her alone, & go euery mãn to his owne countre. For hir mdgmẽt is come in to heauen, & is gone vp to the clowdes. And therfore come on, we will shewe Sion the worke of the LORDE oure God.

Make sharpe the arowes, and fyll the quyuers: for the LORDE shall rayse vp the sprete of the kynge of the Meedes, which hath allready a desyre to destroye Babilon. This shalbe the vengeaunce of the LORDES, and the vengeaunce of his temple.

Set vp tokens vpon the walles of Babilon, make youre watch stronge, set yo' watchmen in araye, yee holde prouye watches: & yet for all that shall the LORDE go forth with the deuyce, which he hath taken vpon them that dwell in Babilon.

all the casters of ymages: for ẏ thinge that they make, is but discreate, & hath no breath. Vayne is it, & worthy to be laughed at: & in the tyme of visitacion it shal perish.

D Neuertheles, the porcion of Jacob is no ne soch: but he that made all thinges, whose name is the LORDE of hooستes, he is the rode of his enheritaunce. Thou breakest my weapens of warre, & yet thorow the I haue scatred the nacions & kyngdomes: Thorow the haue I scatred horse & horseman, yee the charettes, & soch as sat vpon them: Thorow the I haue scatred man & woman, olde and yonge, bacheler & mayden. Thorow the I haue scatred the shepherde & his flocke, the husbond man & his catell, the prynces & the rulers. Therfore wil I rewarde the cite of Babilon & all hir citesyns the Caldees, with all the euell which they haue done vnto Sion: Yee that ye youre selues shall se it, saieth the LORDE. Beholde, I come vpon the (thou noysome hill) saieth the LORDE, thou that destroyest all londes. I wil stretch out my honde ouer the, & cast the downe from the stony rockes: & wil make the a brente hill, so that neither corner stones, ner pinnacles, ner foundacion stones shalbe taken eny more out of the but waist & desolate shalt thou lie forevermore, saieth the LORDE.

E Set vp a toke in the londe: blowe the trompettes amonge the heithen, prouoke the nacions agaynst her, call the kyngdomes, of Ararat, Menni & Ascanes agaynst her: nombre out Taphsar agaynst her, bringe as greate a sorte of horses agaynst her, as yf they were greshoppers. Prepare agaynst them ẏ people of the Meedes wt their kynges, prynces & all their chefe rulers, yee and the whole londe that is vnder them.

The londe also shal shake & be afrayed, when the deuyce of the LORDE shall come forth agaynst Babilon: to make the londe of Babilon so waist, that no mã shal dwell any more therin. The Worthies of Babilon shal leaue the batell, & kepe them selues in stronge holdes, their strength hath fayled them, they shalbe like women. Their dwellinge places shal be brent vp, their barres shalbe broken. One purseuaunt shal mete another, yee one poste shal come by another, to bringe the kinge of Babilon tydinges: that his cite is taken in on euery syde, the foordes occupyed, the fennes brent vp, and the souldyers sore afrayed.

For thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes the God of Israel: The doughter of Babilon hath bene in hir tyme like as a threßshinge floore, but shortly shal hir haruest come. Nabuchodonosor the kinge of Babilon hath deuoured and distroyed me, he hath made me an emptie vessell. He swalowed me vp like a Dragon, and fylled his bely with my delicates: he hath cast me out, he hath takẽ myne staunce awaye, & the thinge that was done me hath he caried vnto Babilon, saieth the doughter, that dwelleth in Sion: Yee & my bloude also, vnto the Caldees, saieth Jerusalem. Therfore thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, I wil defende thy cause, & avenge the: I will drynke vp hir see, & drye vp hir watersprynges.

Babilon shal become an heape of stones, a dwellinge place for dragons, a fearfulnes & wondringe, because no man dwelleth there. They shall roare together like lyons, yea the yonge lyons when they be angrie, so shal they bẽde them selues. In their heate I shal set drynke before thẽ, & they shalbe dronken for ioye: Then shal they slepe an euerlastinge slepe, & neuer wake, saieth the LORDE. I shal carie them downe to be slayne like shepe, like wethers & gootes. O, how was Sesah wonne! O, how was the glory of ẏ whole londe taken! how happeneth it, that Babilon is so wondred at amonge the heithẽ! The see is rysen ouer Babilon, & hath couered her with his greate wawes. Hir cities are layed waist, the londe lieth vnbuylded and voyde: it is a londe, where no man dwelleth, & where no mã traueleth thorow. Moreouer, I wil vyset Bel at Babilõ: & the thinge that he hath swalowed vp, that same shal I plucke out of his mouth. The Gentiles also shall runne nomore vnto him, yee and the walles of Babilon shal fall.

O my people, come out of Babilon, that euery man maye saue his life, from the fearfull wrath of the LORDE. Be not fayntehertед, & feare not at euery rumoure that shalbe herde in the londe: for euery yeare bringeth new tydinges, yee straunge wickednes and lordshipe. And lo, the tyme commeth that I wil vyset the ymages of Babilō, and the whole londe shalbe confounded, yee and hir slayne shall lie in the myddest of her. Heauen and earth with all that is therin, shall reioyce ouer Babilon, when the destroyers shal come vpon her from the north, saieth ỹ LORDE.

Like as Babilō hath beaten downe and slayne many out of Israel, so shal there fall many, and be slayne in all hir kyngdome. Ye that haue escaped the swearde, haist you, stō de not still, remembre the LORDE afarre of: and thinke vpon Jerusalem, for we were ashamed to heare the blasphemies: oure faces were couered with shame, because the straunge aleauntes came in to the Sanctuary of the LORDE. Wherfore beholde (saieth the LORDE) the tyme commeth, that I wil vyset the ymages of Babilon, and thorow the whole lōde they shal mourne and fall. Though Babilon clymmed vp in to heauē, and kepte her power an hie: yet shal I sende her destroyers saieth the LORDE.

A piteous crie shall be herde from Babilon, and a greate mysery from the londe of the Caldees: when the LORDE destroyeth them, and when he driueth out the hie stomack & proude boostinge, where with they haue bene as furious, as the wawes of greate water floudes, and made greate crakes with their wordes. For the destroyers shall come vpon her (euen vpon Babilon) which shal take hir worthies, and brake their bowes: for God is disposed to avenge him self vpon them, & sufficiently to recompence thē. Yee (saieth the LORDE) I will make their prynces, their wyse men, their chefe rulers & all their worthies, dronckē: so that they shal slepe an euerlastinge slepe, and neuer wake: Thus saieth the kinge, whose name is ỹ LORDE of hoostes.

Moreouer, thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: The thicke wall of Babilon shal be broken, and hir proude gates shalbe brente vp. And the thinge that the Gētiles and the people haue wrought with greate trauayle and labour, shal come to naught, and be consumed in the fyre.

This is the charge that Jeremy gaue vnto Sarias the sonne of Nerias, the sonne of Maasia, when he wente towarde Babilon with Sedechias the kinge of Juda, in the fourth yeare of his reigne. Now this Sarias was a peaceable prynce. Jeremy wrote in a boke, all the misery that shulde come vpon Babilon, yee and all these sermons that be written agaynst Babilon, and gaue Sarias this charge: When thou commest vnto Babilon, se that thou rede all these wordes, and saye: O LORDE, thou art determed to rote out this place, so that neither people ner catell shal dwell there eny more, but to lie waist for euer: and when thou hast redde out the boke, bynde a stone to it, and cast it in the myddest of Euphrates, and saye: Euē thus shal Babilon syncke, & be thrust downe with the burthen of trouble, that I will bringe vpon her: so that she shal neuer come vp agayne. Thus farre are ỹ preachinges of Jeremy. Apoc. 18. c

The LII. Chap.

A Sedechias was xxj. yeare olde, when he was made kynge, & he raigned xj. yeare in Jerusalem. His mothers name was Hamithal, Jeremies doughter of Lobna. He lyued wickedly before the LORDE euen as Joachim dyd. Wherfore the LORDE was angrie at Jerusalem & Juda, so longe till he had cast thē out of his presence. And Sedechias fel from the kynge of Babilon. 4. Re. 24. & 2. Par. 36. b.

But in ỹ ix. yeare of his raigne, In the tēth Moneth, the tenth daye of the Moneth it happened, that Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon with all his hooste came before Jerusalem, & besieged it, & made them bulworkes roundeabout it. And this besieginge of the cite endured vnto the xj yeare of kynge Sedechias. Iere. 39. a 4. Re. 25. a.

And in the fourth Moneth, the ix daye of the Moneth, there was so greate honger in the cite: that there were no more vitayles for the people of the londe. So all the souldyers brake awaye, and fled out of the cite by night, thorow the waye of the porte betwene the two walles by the kynges garden. Now ỹ Caldees had cōpassed the cite rounde aboute, yet wente these men their waye towarde the wildernesse. Iere. 38. b 39. a B

And so the Caldees folowed vpon them, and toke Sedechias the kinge in the felde of Jericho, when his hooste was runne from him. So they caried the kynge awaye presoner to Reblatha, vnto the kinge of Babilon in the londe of Hemath, where he gaue iudgment vpon him. Iere. 49. b

sonnes be slayne before his face, yee & put all the princes of Juda to death at Reblatha. Moreouer he put out the eyes of Sedechias, caused him be bounde with cheynes, to be caried vnto Babilon: & let him lie in preson, till he dyed.

Now ỹ tenth daye of the fyfth Moneth in the xix yeare of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon, Nabusaradan the chefe captayne and the kinge of Babilons seruauntes came vnto Jerusalem, & brent vp the house of the LORDE. He brent vp also the kinges palace, all the houses & all the gorgeous buyldinges in Jerusalē. And the whole hoost of the Caldees ỹ were with the chefe captayne, brake downe all the walles of Jerusalem rounde aboute.

C As for the poore people & soch folke as yet was left in the cite, which also were fallen to the kinge of Babilon, yee & what people as yet remayned: Nabusaradan the chefe captayne caried them awaye presoners. But ỹ poore people of the countre, dyd Nabusaradan the chefe captayne leaue in the londe, to occupie the vynyardes & feldes. The Caldees also brake the brasen pilers, that were in the house of the LORDE, yee the seate and the brasen lauer that was in the house of ỹ LORDE: & caried all the metall of them vnto Babilon. They toke awaye also the Cauldrons, shouels, flesh hokes, sprinklers, spones & all the brasen vessell that was occupide in the seruyce: with the basens, colepannes, sprinklers, pottes, candilstickes, spones, and cuppes: wherof some were of golde, and some of syluer.

The chefe captayne toke also the two pilers, the lauer, the xij brasen bullockes ỹ stode vnder ỹ seate, which kinge Salomon made in the house of the LORDE: & all the vessell conteyned so moch metall, that it might not be weyed. For euery piler was xviij cubites hie, & the rope that went aboute it, was xij cubites, & foure fingers thick and rounde: Now vpon the rope were brasen knoppes, & euery knoppe was fyue cubites hie: & vpon the knoppes were whopes, & pomgranates rounde aboute of clene brasse. 2.Re.7.

After this maner were both the pilers fashioned with the pomgranates, wherof there were an hundreth and xvj, which hanged vpon the whoopes rounde aboute. The chefe captayne also toke Sarias ỹ hie preest & Sophonias that was chefe next him, and the thre kepers of the treasury. He toke out of the cite a chamberlayne which was a captayne of the souldyers, & seuen men that were the kinges seruauntes, which were founde in the cite: & Sepher a captayne that vsed to muster the men of warre: with lx men of the countre that were taken in the cite. These Nabusaradan the chefe captayne toke, & caried them to the kinge of Babilon vnto Reblatha: and the kinge of Babilon caused them to be put to death at Reblatha in the londe of Hemath. And thus Juda was lede awaye captyue, out of his owne londe.

This is the summe of the people, whom Nabuchodonosor lede awaye captyue.

In the seuenth yeare of his reigne, he caried awaye of ỹ Jewes, thre thousande and twenty. In the xviij yeare Nabuchodonosor caried awaye from Jerusalem eight hunderth & xxxij personnes. In the xxiij yere of Nabuchodonosor Nabusaradan the chefe captayne, toke awaye seuen hundreth xlv Jewes presoners. The whole summe of all the presoners, is foure thousande and vi hundreth.

In the xxxvij yeare after that Joachin the kinge of Juda was caried awaye, the xxv daye of the xij Moneth, Euilmerodach kinge of Babilon (the same yeare ỹ he regned) gaue Joachim the kinge of Juda his pardon, and let him out of preson, and spake louyngly to him: And set his trone aboue the trones of the other kinges that were with him in Babilon. He chaunged also the clothes of his preson, yee and he att with him all his life longe. And he had a cōmaundlyuynge geuen him of the kinge of Babilon, euery daye a certayne thinge alowed him, all the dayes of his life, vntill he dyed.

The ende of the prophet Jeremy.

The Lamentacions of Jeremy.

And it came to passe after Israel was brought in to captiuyte, and Jerusalem destroyed: that Jeremy the prophet sat wepinge, mournynge and makinge his mone in Jerusalem: so that w an heuy herte he sighed, & sobbed, sayenge:

The first Chapter.

ALas, how sitteth the cite so desolate, y some tyme was full of people: how is she become like a wedowe, which was the lady of all nacions? How is she brought vnder tribute, that ruled all londes?

She weepeth sore in the nighe, so that y teares runne downe hir chekes: for amonge all hir louers, there is none, that geueth her eny comforte: yee hir nerre frendes abhorre her, & are become hir enemies.

Juda is taken presoner, because she was defyled: & for seruynge so many straunge goddes, she dwelleth now amonge the Heithen. She fyndeth no rest, all they that persecuted her, toke her, and so she dwelleth amonge hir enemies.

The stretes of Sion mourne, because no man commeth more to the solempne feastes: All hir gates are desolate, hir prestes make lamentacion, hir maydens are carefull, and she herself is in greate heuynesse.

Hir enemies are fallen vpon hir heade, & haue put her to shame: because the LORDE hath chastened her for hir greate wickednes: hir children are ledde awaye captiue before their enemie.

All the bewtie of the doughter of Sion is awaye, hir princes are become like wethers, that fynde no pasture. They are dryuē awaye before their enemie, so that they haue no more power.

Now doth Jerusalem remembre the tyme of hir misery & disobedience, yee the ioye & pleasure y she hath had in tymes past: seynge hir people is brought downe thorow the power of their enemie, & there is no man for to helpe her: hir enemies stode lo tinge at her and laugh hir Sabbath dayes to scorne.

Jerusalem synned euer more & more, therfore is she come in decaye. All they that had her in honoure, despise her: for they haue sene hir fylthinesse. Yee she sigheth, and is a shamed of herselfe.

Hir slytes are defyled, she remēbred not what wolde folowe: therfore is hir fall so greate, and there is no mā to comforte her. O LORDE, cōsidre my trouble, for myne enemie hath the vpper honde.

The enemie hath put his honde to all the precious thinges that she had, yee euen before hir eyes came the Heithen in and out of the Sanctuary: whom thou (neuertheles) hast forbydden to come within thy congregacion. Deu.23.a

All hir people seke their bred with heynes, & loke what precious thinge euery man hath, that geueth he for meate, to saue his life. Consydre (O LORDE) and se, how vyle I am become. 4.Re.6.f Tren.2.c

O ye all that go fore by, beholde and se, yf there be eny sorowe like vnto myne, wherwith the LORDE hath troubled me, in the daye of his fearefull wrath.

From aboue hath he sent downe a fyre, in to my bones and chastened me: he hath layed a net for my fete, and throwne me wyde open: he hath made me desolate, so that I must euer be mournynge.

The yocke of my transgression is come at the last, with his honde hath he taken it vp, and put it aboute my neck. My strenge is gone: the LORDE hath delyuered me into those hondes, wherout I can not quyte myself.

The LORDE hath destroyed all the mighty men, that were in me. He hath proclamed a feast, to slaughter all my best mē. The LORDE hath troden downe the doughter of Juda, like as it were in a wyne presse.

Therfore do I wepe, and myne eyes gusshe out of water: for the cōforter that shulde quycken me, is farre from me. My children are dryuen awaye, for why? the enemie hath gotten the ouer honde. Iere.14.c Tren.1.e

Sion casteth out hir hōdes, and there is no man to comforte her. The LORDE hath layed the enemies rounde aboute Jacob, and Jerusalem is as it were a menstruous womā, in the myddest of them.

The LORDE is righteous, for I haue prouoked his countenaunce vnto anger. O take hede all ye people, and consydre my heuynes: My maydens and my yonge men are led awaye in to captiuyte. Dan.9.a

I called for my louers (but they begyled me:) for my prestes and counceilers, but they perished: euen while they sought for meate, to saue their lyues.

Consydre (O LORDE) how I am troubled, my wombe is disquieted, my herte turneth aboute in me, and I am full of heuynes. The swearde hurteth me without, and within I am like vnto death.

ו They heare my mournynge, but there is none that wil comforte me. All myne enemies haue herde of my trouble, and are glad therof, because thou hast done it. But thou shalt brynge forth the tyme, when they also shal be like vnto me.

ח From the shall come all their aduersite: thou shalt plucke them awaye, euē as thou hast plucked me, because of all my wickednesse. For my sorowe is very greate, and my herte is heuy.

The II. Chapter.

א ALas, how hath ỹ LORDE darckened the doughter of Sion so sore in his wrath? As for the honoure of Israel, Iren. 4. b Par. 19. a sal 98. a he hath casten it downe from heauen: How happeneth it, that he remembred not his owne fote stole, when he was angrie?

ב The LORDE hath cast downe all the glory of Jacob without eny fauoure: All the stronge places of the doughter Juda hath he broken in his wrath, & throwne them downe to the greunde: hir kyngdome & hir princes hath he suspended.

ג In the wrath of his indignacion he hath broken all the horne of Israel: he hath withdrawē his right honde frem the enemie: yee a flame of fyre is kyndled in Jacob, & hath consumed vp all rounde aboute.

ד He hath bent his bowe like an enemie, he hath fastened his right honde as an aduersary: and euery thinge that was pleasaūt to se, he hath smyten it downe. He hath poured out his wrath like a fyre, in to the tabernacle of the doughter Sion.

ה The LORDE is become, like as it were an enemie, he hath cast downe Israel & all his places: yee all his stronge holdes hath he destroyed, and fylled the doughter of Juda wmoch sorowe and heuynesse.

ו Hir tabernacle (which was like a garden B of pleasure) hath he destroyed: hir hie solēpne feastes hath he put downe. The LORDE Iere. 7. b hath brought it so to passe, that the hie solempne feastes and Sabbathes in Sion, are clene forgottē. In his heuy displeasure hath he made the kynge & prestes to be despised.

ז The LORDE hath forsaken his owne aultar, & is wroth with his owne Sanctuary, & hath geuen the walles of their towres in to the hondes of the enemie. Their enemies made a noyse in the house of the LORDE, as it had bene in a solempne feast daye.

ח The LORDE thought to breake downe the walles of the doughter Sion, he spred out his lyne, & drewe not in his honde, till he had destroyed them. Therfore mourne the turrettes and the broken walles together.

ט Hir portes are casten downe to the grounde, hir barres are broken & smytten in sonder: hir kynge & princes are caried awaye to the Gētiles. They haue nether lawe ner prophetes, ner yet eny vision from the LORDE.

י The Senatours of the doughter Sion sit vpon the grounde in sylence, they haue strowed aßhes vpon their heades, and gyrded them selues with sackcloth. The maydens of Jerusalem hange downe their heades to the grounde.

כ Myne eyes begynne to fayle me thorow wepinge, my body is disquieted, my leuer is poured vpon the earth, for the greate hurte of my people, seynge the childrē and babes dyd swowne in the stretes of the cite.

ל Euen when they spake to their mothers: where is meate and drynke? for whyle they so sayde, they fell downe in the stretes of the cite, like as they had bene wounded, and some dyed in their mothers bosome.

מ What shal I saye of the (O thou doughter Jerusalem) to whom shall I lickē the? To whom shal I cōpare the (o thou doughter Sion) to comforte the withall? Thy hurte is like a mayne see, who maye heale the?

נ Thy prophetes haue loked out vayne & folish thinges for the, they haue not shewed the of thy wickednesse, to kepe the frem captiuyte: but haue ouerladen the, and throwne falsede scatred the abrode.

ס All they that go by the, clappe their hondes at the: hissinge and waggynge their heades vpon the doughter Jerusalem, and saye: is this the cite that men call so fayre, whereof the whole londe reioyseth?

פ All thine enemies gape vpon the, whisperinge and bytinge their teth, sayenge: let vs deuoure, for the tyme that we loked for, is come: we haue founde and sene it.

צ The LORDE hath fulfilled the thinge that he was purposed to do: and performed that he had deuysed longe agoo: he hath destroyed, and not spared. He hath caused thine aduersary to tryumphe ouer the, and set vp the horne of thine enemie.

ק Let thine hert crie vnto the LORDE, O thou cite of the doughter Sion: let thy teares rūne downe like a ryuer daye & nyght: rest not, & let not the aple of thine eye leaue of.

ר Stonde vp, and make thy prayer in the fyrst watch of the nyght, poure out thine hert like water before the LORDE: lift vp thine hondes, for the lyues of thy yonge childrē, that dye of honger in the stretes.

ר Beholde (O LORDE) & considre, why hast thou gathered me vp so clene? Shal the women then eate their owne frute, euen childrien of a spanne longe? Shal the prestes and prophetes be slayne thus in the Sanctuary of the LORDE?

ש Yonge & olde lye behinde the stretes vpon
the grounde, my maydens & yonge men are slayne with the sweard: whom thou in the daye of thy wrothfull indignacion hast put to death: Yee euen thou hast put them to death, & not spared them.

ת My neighbours that are rounde about me, hast thou called, as it were to a feast
daye: so that in the daye of the LORDES wrath none escaped, nether was eny left be-hinde. Those that I had brought vp & norifshed, hath myne enemy destroyed.

The III. Chapter.

א I Am the mā, that (thorow the rodd of his wrath) haue experiēce of misery.

ב He droue me forth, and led me: yee into darckenesse, but not in to light.

ג Agaynst me only he turneth his honde, &
layeth it euer vpon me.

ד My flesh & my strynne hath he made old,
and my bones hath he brussed.

ה He hath buylded rounde about me, & closed me in with gall and trauayle.

ו He hath set me in darckenesse, as they that be deed forever.

ז He hath so hedged me in, that I can not get out, & hath layed heuy lynckes vpon me.

ח Though I crie & call piteously, yet heareth he not my prayer.

ט He hath stopped vp my wayes with fouresquared stones, & made my pathes croked.

י He layeth waite for me like a Bere, and as a lyon in a hole.

כ He hath marred my wayes, and brokē me
in peces, he hath layed me waist altogether.

ל He hath bent his bowe, and made me as it were a marck to shute at.

מ The arowes of his quyuer hath he shot,
euen in to my reynes.

נ I am laughed to scorne of all my people,
they make songes vpon me all y daye lōge.

ס He hath fylled me with bytternesse, & geuen me wormwod to drynke.

ע He hath smytten my teth in peces, & rolled me in the dust.

פ He hath put my soule out of rest, I forget all good thinges.

צ I thought in my self: I am vndone, there is no hope for me in the LORDE.

ק O remembre yet my mysery and my trouble, the wormwod and the gall.

ר Yee thou shalt remēbre them, for my soule melteth awaye in me.

ש Whyle I cōsidre these thinges in my hert,
I get a hope agayne.

ת Namely, that the mercies of the LORDE are not clene gone, & that his louynge kyndnesse ceasseth not.

His faithfulnes is greate, and renueth it self as the mornynge.

The LORDE is my porcion (saieth my soule) ther fore wil I hope in him.

O how good is the LORDE vnto thē, that put their trust in him, and to the soule that seketh after him?

O how good is it with stilnesse to wate
and tarie, for the healthe of the LORDE?

O how good is it for a man, to take the yock vpon him from his youth vp?

He sitteth alone, he holdeth him still and dwelleth quietly by him self.

He layeth his face vpon the earth, yf (per case) there happen to be eny hope.

He offreth his cheke to the smyter, he will be content with repiroues.

For the LORDE wil not forsake for ever.

But though he do cast of, yet (accordinge to y multitude of his mercies) he receaueth to grace agayne.

For he doth not plage, & cast out the childrien of men from his herte.

To treade all the presoners of the earth
vnder his fete.

To moue the indgment of man before the most higheste.

To condemne a man in his cause: The LORDE hath no pleasure in soch thinges.

What is he then that saieth: there shulde somthinge be done without the LORDES cō-maundement?

Out of the mouth of the most higheste go eth not euell and good.

Wherfore them murmureth the lyuinge
man? let him murmoure at his owne synne.

Let vs loke well vpon oure owne waies, &
remembre oure selues, and turne agayne to y LORDE.

Let vs lift vp oure hertes with oure hon-des vnto the LORDE, that is in heauen.

We haue bene dyssemblers & haue offended, wilt thou therfore not be intreated?

Thou hast couered vs in thy wrath, & persecuted vs, thou hast slayne vs without eny fauoure.

Thou hast hyd thy self in a clonde, that oure prayer shulde not go thorow.

Thou hast made vs outcastes, and to be despysed amonge the Heithen.

y All oure enemies gape vpon vs.
y Feare and snare is come vpon vs, yee despite and destruccion.
y Whole ryuers of water guß she out of myne eyes, for the greate hurte of my people.
d Myne eyes runne, and can not ceasse, for there is no rest.
d O LORDE, when wilt thou loke downe frō heauen, and consider?
d Myne eye breaketh my herte, because of all the doughters of my cite.
x Myne enemies hunted me out sharpely like a byrde, yee and that with out a cause.
x They haue put downe my life in to a pitte, and layed a stone vpon me.
x They poured water vpon my heade, then thought I: now am I vndone.
p I called vpon thy name (O LORDE) out of the depe pitte.
p Thou hast herde my voyce, & hast not turned awaye thine eares fro my sighinge and crienge.
p Thou hast enclyned y self vnto me, whē I called vpon the, & haist sayde: feare not.
ר Thou (O LORDE) hast mayntened the cause of my soule, and hast redemed my life.
ר O LORDE, thou hast sene my blasphemers, take thou my cause vpon the.
ר Thou hast well considred how they go aboute to do me harme, & that all their councels are agaynst me.
ש Thou hast herde their despytefull wordes (O LORDE) yee and all their ymaginacions agaynst me.
ש The lippes of myne enemies, & their deuyces that they take agaynst me, all the daye longe.
ש Thou seist also their sittinge downe and their ryssinge vp, they make their songes of nothinge but of me.
ת Reward them (O LORDE) accordinge to the workes of their hondes.
ת Geue them y thinge, that their owne herte is afrayed of: euen thy curse.
ת Persecute them, (O LORDE) with thy indignacion, & rote them out from vnder the heauen.

The IIII. Chapter.

א How is the golde become so dymme? how is the goodly coloure of it so sore chaunged? and the stones of y Sanctuary thus scatred in the comer of euery strete?
ב The children of Sion that were all waye in honoure, & clothed with y most precious golde: how are they now becomme like the erthen vessels which be made with the potters honde?
ג The Lamyes geue their yonge ones sucke w bare brestes: but the doughter of my people is cruel, and dwelleth in the wyldernesse like the Estriches.
ד The tonges of the suckinge children, cleue to y rose of their mouthes for very thurst. The yonge children axe bred, but there is no man, that geueth it them.
ה They that were wonte to fayre delicately, perishe in the stretes: they that afore were brought vp in purple, make now moch of donge.
ו The synne of the doughter of my people is become greater, then y wickednesse of Sodome, that sodēly was destroyed, and not taken with hondes.
ז Hir abstayners (or Nazarees) were whyter then y snowe or mylke: their coloure was fresh read as the Corall, their beutie like the Saphyre.
ח But now their faces are very black: Insomoch, that thou shuldest not knowe them in the stretes. Their skynne cleueth to their bones, It is wythered, and become like a dry stock.
ט They that be slayne with the swearde, are happier, then soch as dye of honger, and perishe awaye famishinge for the frutes of the felde.
י The wome (which of nature are piteful) haue sodden their owne children with their hondes: that they might be their meate, in y miserable destruccion of the doughter of my people.
כ The LORDE hath performed his heauy wrath: he hath poured out the furiousnes of his displeasure. He hath kindled a fyre in Sion, which hath consumed the foundacions therof.
ל Nether the kinges of the earth, ner all y inhabitours of the worlde, wolde haue beleued, that the enemie & aduersary shulde haue come in at the gates of the cite of Jerusalē.
מ Which nevertheles is come to passe for y synnes of hir prophetes, and for the wickednes of hir prestes, that haue shed innocentes blonde within her.
נ So that these blynde men wēre stomblinge in the stretes, and stayned them selues w blonde, which els wolde touche no bloudy cloth.
ס But they cried vnto euery mā: Flee the staynynge, awaye, get you hēce, touch it not. Yee (sayde they) ye must be brent, ye must dwell amonge the Gentiles, & byde no longer here.
ע The countenaunce of the LORDE hath banyshed them, & shal neuer loke more vpon them: For they them selues nether regarded the prestes, nor pitied their elders.

Wherfore yet oure eyes fayle vs, whyle we loke for vayne helpe: seynge we be euer waitynge vpon a people, that can do vs no good.

They laye so sharpe waite for vs, that we can not go safe vpon the stretes: for oure ende is come, oure dayes are fulfilled, oure ende is here.

Oure persecuters are swifter then the Aegles of the ayre: they folowed vpon vs ouer the mountaynes, and layed wait for vs in ỹ wilderneſſe.

The very breth of oure mouth: euen the anoynted LORDE himself shalbe take in oure synnes, of whom we saye: Vnder his shadowe we shal be preserued amonge the Heithen.

And thou (O doughter Edom) that dwellest in the londe of Hus, be glad and reioyce: for the cuppe shal come vnto the also, which whē thou suppest of, thou shalt be dronckē.

Thy synne is wel punished (O thou doughter Sion) he shall not suffre the to be caried awaye eny more. But thy wickednesse (O doughter Edom) shall be vyset, and for thy synnes sake, he shal lede the into captiuyte.

The V. Chapter.

CAll to remēbraunce (O LORDE) what we haue suffred, cōsidre and se oure cōfucion. Oure enheritaunce is turned to the straungers, & oure houses to the aleauntes. We are become carefull and fatherlesse, and oure mothers are as the wydowes. We are fayne to drynke oure owne water for moneye, and oure owne wod must we bye with moneye. Oure neckes are vnder persecucion, we are weery, and haue no rest.

Afore tyme we yelded oure selues to the Egipcians, and now to the Assirians, only that we might haue bred ynough. Oure fathers (which now are gone) haue synned, & we must beare their wickednesse. Seruauntes haue the rule of vs, and no man delyuereth vs out of their hōdes. We must get oure lyuynge with the parell of oure lyues, because of the drouth of the wilderneſſe.

Oure skynne is as it had bene brent in an oven, for very sore honger. The wyues are rauesshed in Sion, & the maydens in the cities of Juda. The princes are hanged vp with the honde of the enemies, they haue not spared the olde sage men, they haue taken yonge mens lyues from them, and the boyes are hanged vp vpon trees. The elders syt no more vnder the gates, and the yonge men vse no more playenge of Musick. The ioye of oure herte is gone, oure mery quere is turned into mourninge. The garlande of oure heade is fallen: alas, that euer we synned so sore.

Therfore oure hert is full of heuyneſſe, & oure eyes dymme: because of ỹ hill of Sion that is destroyed, In so moch, that the foxes runne vpon it. But thou (O LORDE) that remayneſt for euermore, and thy seate worlde with out ende: Wherfore wilt thou still forget vs, and forsake vs so longe? O LORDE: Turne thou vs vnto the, & so shal we be turned. Renue & daies as in olde tyme, for thou hast now banished vs longe ynough, and be ne sore displeased at vs. Iere. 31. e

The ende of the Lamentacions of Jeremy.

The Prophet Baruch.

What Baruch conteyneth.

Chap. I. Baruch readeth the boke before the kynge and all the people, which sende money to Jerusalem.

Chap. II. They knowlege, that they haue deserued punyshyment: God promyseth them forgeueneſſe.

Chap. III. They praye hartely beinge in preson, and he exorteth them to amende.

Chap. IIII. A sermon to the people, with an exortacion to pacience.

Chap. V. He conforteth them, and sheweth the vocacion of the Heithen

Chap. VI. A copie of the epistole, that Jeremy sent to the Jewes, which were led awaye presoners vnto Babilon.

These are the wordes of the boke, that Baruch the sonne of Nerias the sonne of Maasia, the sonne of Sedechias, the sonne of Sedei, the sonne of Helchia, wrote at Babilon in the fifth yeare the seuēth daye of the moneth: what tyme as the Caldees wanne Jerusalem and brent it. 4. Re. 2

The first Chapter.

ND Baruch dyd rede the wordes of this boke, that Jechonias the sonne of Joachim kynge of Juda might heare: and in the presence of all the people, that were come to heare the boke: yee and before all the noble kinges sonnes, before ỹ lordes of the councell and elders: and before the whole people, from ỹ lowest vnto the hyest: before all them that dwelt at Babilon, by ỹ water of Sodi. Which when they herde it, wepte, fasted, and prayed before the LORDE.

B They made a collection also of money, accordinge to euery mans power, and sent it to Jerusalem vnto Joachim the sonne of Helchia the sonne of Salon preist, with ỹ other prestes: and to all the people which were w̄ him at Jerusalē, what tyme as they had gotten the ornamentes of the temple of ỹ LORDE (that were taken awaye out of the temple) that they might bringe them agayne into the londe of Juda, the x. daye of the moneth Siban: namely, syluer vessel, (which Sedechias the sonne of Josias kinge of Juda had made.) After that Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon had take Jechonias, with all his princes, lordes, and all the people, and led them captyue from Jerusalem vnto Babilon.

C And they sayde: Beholde, we haue sent you money, to bye you burntofferynges and incense withall: make you vnleuended bred, & offre for synne vpon the aulter of the LORDE oure God. And praye for the prosperite of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and of Balthasar his sonne: ỹ their dayes maye be vpon earth, as the dayes of heauen: that God also maye geue vs strength, and lighten oure eyes: that we maye lyue vnder the defence of Nabuchodonosor kinge of Babilon, and vnder the proteccion of Balthasar his sonne: that we maye longe do them seruyce, and fynde fauoure in their sight. Praye for vs also vnto the LORDE oure God, for we haue synned agaynst the LORDE oure God, and vnto this daye is not his wrath turned yet awaye from vs. And se that ye rede this boke (which we haue sent vnto you to be rehearced in the temple of the LORDE) vpon the hye dayes, and at tyme conuenient.

D Thus shal ye saye: The LORDE ỹ God is righteous, but we are worthy of cōfucion & shame: like as it is come to passe this daye, vnto all Juda, & to euery one ỹ dwelleth at Jerusalem: to ỹ kinges, princes, prestes, prophetes & to oure fathers. We haue synned before the LORDE oure God, we haue not put oure trust in him, ner geuen him credence: we haue not obeyed him, we haue not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE oure God, to walke in the commaundementes that he gaue vs. Sens the daye that he brought oure forefathers out of the londe of Egipte vnto this present daye, we haue bene euer a mysbeleuynge and an vnfaithful people vnto ỹ LORDE oure God: destroyenge oure selues vtterly, and shrenckinge backe, that we shulde not heare his voyce.

Wherfore there are come vpon vs greate plages & dyuerse curses, like as the LORDE hath vysed by Moses his seruaūt: which brought oure forefathers out of the lōde of Egipte, to geue vs a lōde, that floweth with mylcke and hony, like as it is to se this daye. Nerthelesse, we haue not herkened vnto the voyce of the LORDE oure God, accordinge to all the wordes of the prophetes, whom he sent vnto vs and to oure rulers: but euery man folowed his owne mynde and wicked ymaginacion: to offre vnto straūge goddes, and to do euel in the sight of the LORDE oure God.

The II. Chapter.

WHerfore the LORDE oure God hath performed his deuyce, wherof he certified vs, and oure heades that ruled in Jerusalē: yee and oure kynges, oure princes, with all Israel and Juda. And soch plages hath ỹ lorde brought vpō vs, as neuer came to passe vnder the heauē: like as it is fulfilled in Hierusalem, accordinge as it is written in the lawe of Moses: that a man shulde eate ỹ flesh of his owne sonne, & the flesh of his owne doughter. Moreouer, he hath deliuered them in to the hondes of all the kinges, ỹ are rounde aboute vs (to be confounded and desolate) & scatred thē abrode in all londes & naciōs. Thus are we brought benethe & not above, for we haue synned agaīst the LORDE ỹ God, & not bene obedient vnto his voyce. Therfore ỹ LORDE ỹ God is righteous, & we with ỹ fathers (as reason is) are brought to opē shame, as it is to se this daye. And as for these plages ỹ are come vpon vs allready, ỹ LORDE had deuyced thē for vs: yet wolde we not praye vnto ỹ LORDE oure God, ỹ we might euery mā turne frō his vngodly wayes. So ỹ LORDE hath caused soch plages to come vpon vs, for he is righteous in all his workes, which he hath cōmaunded vs: which we also haue not done, ner harkened vnto his voyce, for to walke in ỹ cōmaundemētes of ỹ LORDE, ỹ he had geuē vnto vs.

And now o LORDE God of Israel, thou that hast brought thy people out of the londe of Egipte with a mightie honde, with tokens and wõdres, with thy greate power ād outstretched arme: and hast gotten thy selff a name, as it is come to passe this daye: O LORDE oure God, we haue synned, we haue done wickedly, we haue behaued oure selues vngodly in all thy righteousnesses. Turne thy wrath frō vs (we beseke the) for we are but a few left amonge the heithen, where thou hast scatred vs. Heare o² prayers (o LORDE) ꝛ oure peticiōs, brynge vs out of captiuyte, for thine owne sake: get vs fauoure in the sighe of thē, which haue led vs awaye: ꝙ all lōdes maye knowe, that thou art the LORDE oure God, and that Israel and his generacion calleth vpon thy name.

O LORDE, loke downe frō thy holy house vpon vs: enclyne thine eare, ꝛ heare vs. For the deed, ꝙ be gone downe to their graues, ꝛ whose soules are out of their bodies, ascribe vnto the LORDE nether prayse ner rigteousmakynge: but the soule that is vexed for the multitude of hir synnes, which goeth on heuely and weakely, whose eyes begynne to fayle: yee soch a soule ascrybeth prayse and righteousnesse vnto the LORDE. O LORDE, we poure out oure prayers before the, and requyre mercy in thy sight, O LORDE oure God: not for eny godlynesse off oure forefathers, but because thou hast sent out thy wrath ꝛ indignacion vpon vs: acordinge as thou dydest threaten vs, by thy seruaūtes the prophetes, sayenge:

Thus sayeth the LORDE: Bowe downe youre shulders and neckes, and serue the kynge of Babilon, so shal ye remayne still in the londe, that I gaue vnto youre fathers. Yff ye will not do this, ner heare the voyce of ꝙ LORDE youre God, to serue the kynge of Babilon: I shall destroye you in the cities of Juda, within Jerusalem and without. I will also take from you the voyce off myrth and the voyce of ioye, the voyce of the brydegrome and the voyce of the bryde, ād there shal no man dwell more in the londe. But they wolde not herken vnto thy voyce, to do the kynge of Babilon seruyce: and therfore hast thou performed the wordes, that thou spakest by thy seruauntes the prophetes: namely, that the bones of oure kynges and the bones of oure fathers shulde be trāslated out of their place.

And lo, now are they layde out in the heate of ꝙ Sonne, ꝛ in the colde of ꝙ night, ād deed in greate mysery: w² hunger, w² swearde, w² pestilence ꝛ are clene cast forth. As for the tēple wherin thy name was called vpon thou hast layde it waist, as it is to se this daye: ꝛ ꝙ for the wickednes of the house of Israel ꝛ the house of Juda. O LORDE o² God, thou hast intreated vs after all thy goodnes ꝛ acordinge to all ꝙ greate louinge mercy of thyne, like as thou spakest by thy seruaunte Moses, in the daye when thou didest cōmaūde him, to wryte thy lawe before the childre of Israel, sayenge: Yf ye will not herkē vnto my voyce, thē shal this greate multitude be turned in to a very smal people, for I wil scatre thē abrode. Not withstōdinge I am sure, that this folke will not heare me: for it is an hardnecked people. But in ꝙ lōde of their captiuyte, they shall remembre them selues, ꝛ lerne to knowe, ꝙ I am the LORDE their God: when I geue thē an herte to vnderstōde, ꝛ eares to heare. Then shal they prayse me in the lōde of their captiuyte, ꝛ thynke vpon my name. Then shall they turne them frō their harde backes, ꝛ from their vngodlynes: Then shal they remembre the thynges, ꝙ happened vnto their forefathers, which synned agaynst me. So will I bringe them agayne in to the londe, which I promised w² an ooth vnto their fathers: Abrahā, Isaac ꝛ Jacob: ꝛ they shal be lordes of it, yee I wil increace thē, and not minysh thē. And I wil make another couenaūt with them: soch one as shal endure for euer: namely, ꝙ I will be their God, and they shalbe my people: and I wil nomore dryue my people the children off Israel, out of the londe ꝙ I haue genē thē.

C Where are yͤ princes of the Heithen become, and soch as ruled the beestes vpon the earth? They that had their pastyme with the foules of the ayre, they that hoorded vp syluer and golde (wherin men trust so moch) and made no ende of their gatheringe? What is worth of them, that coyned siluer, and were so carefull, and coude not bringe their workes to passe? They be roted out, and gone downe to hell, and other men are come vp in their steade? Yonge men haue sene light, and dwelt vpon earth: but the waye of reformacion haue they not knowne, ner vnderstonde the pathes therof: nether haue their children receaued it, yee right farre is it frō thē. It hath not bene herde of in the lōde of Canaan, nether hath it bene sene at Theman.

The IIII. Chapter.

THis is the boke off the commaundemētes of God, and the lawe yͤ endureth for ever. All they yͤ kepe it, shall come to life: but soch as forsake it, shall come to death. Turne the o Jacob, and take holde of it: walke by this waye, thorow his brightnesse and shyne. Geue not thyne honoure vnto another, and thy worshipe to a straunge people. O Israel, how happie are we, seīge that God hath shewed vs soch thynges as are pleasaūt vnto him? Be of good cheare, thou people of God, o thou awnciēt Jsrael. Now are ye solde amonge the Heithen, howbeit not for youre vtter destruccion: but because ye prouoked God the LORDE to wrath and displeasure, therfore were ye delyuered vnto youre enemies: For ye displeased the euerlastinge God that made you, offeringe vnto deuels and not God. Ye haue forgotten him that brought you vp, ād youre nurshynge ye greued, o Jerusalem.

When she sawe that the wrath off God was commynge vpon you: she sayde: Harke o ye that dwell aboute Sion, for God hath brought me in to greate heynesse: ād why? Jse the captyuyte of my people, of my sonnes and doughters, which the euerlastinge God will bringe vpon them. With ioye dyd Jnourish them, but now must Jleaue them with wepynge and sorow.

Let no man reioyce ouer me wyddowe ād forsaken: which for the synnes off my children, am desolate of euery man. For why, they departed from the lawe of God: they wolde not knowe his righteousnes, ner wal ke in the waye off his cōmaundementes: and as for the pathes off the treuth and godly-nesse, they had no lust to go in them.

O ye dwellers aboute Sion: come, and let vs call to remembraunce the captiuyte, that the euerlastinge God hath brought vpon my sonnes and my doughters. He hath brought a people vpon them from farre, an vnmerceous people, and of a straunge lāgua ge: which nether regarde the olde, ner pyte
the yonge,

These haue caried awaye the deare beloued of my wyddowes, leauynge me alone, both desolate and childlesse. But alas, what can I helpe you? Now he y hath brought these plages vpon you, delyuer you also frō
the hondes of youre enemies.

Go youre waye (O my children) go youre waye: for I am desolate and forsaken. I haue put of the clothinge of peace, and put vpon me the sackcloth off prayer, and for my tyme I will call vpon the most hyest. Be off good cheare, o my children: crie vnto the LOR DE, and he shal delyuer you from the power of the princes, youre enemies.

For verely, I haue euer a good hope off
youre prosperous health: yee a very gladnes is come vpon me from the holy one, because of the mercy that ye shall haue off oure euerlastinge Sauioure.

With mournynge and wepinge dyd I let you go fro me, but with ioye and perpetuall gladnesse, shall the LORDE brynge you agay ne vnto me. Like as the neghbours of Sion sawe youre captyuite from God, Euē so shal
they also se shortly youre health in God, which shal come on you with greate honou-
re and euerlastinge worshipe.

O my children, suffre paciētly the wrath that shal come vpon you, For the enemie hath persecuted the, but shortly thou shalt se his destruccion, and shalt treade vpon his necke. My derlinges haue gone rough har-de wayes, for they are led awaye as a flocke
that is scatred abrode with the enemies.
But be of good cōforte (o my children) & crie
vnto the LORDE: For he that led you awaye, hath you yet in remembraūce: and like as ye haue bene mynded to swarue from yo' God,
so shal ye now endeuoure youre selues x. ty-

For he that hath brought these plages vpō
you, shal brynge you euerlastinge ioye agay

name, exorteth the so to do.

The wicked doers that now put the to Iere. 50. a sed at thy fall, shalbe punyshed. The cities whom thy children serue, and that haue ca-

like as they be now glad of y decaye, so shal they mourne in their owne destruccion. The ioye off their multitude shalbe taken awaye ād their cheare shalbe turned to sorowe. For a fyre shal fall vpon them from the euerlastinge God, longe to endure: and it shalbe inhabited of deuels for a greate season.

The V. Chapter.

O Jerusalem, loke aboute the towarde A the east, and beholde the ioye, that commeth vnto the from God. For lo, thy sonnes, (whom thou hast forsake, and that were scatred abrode) come gathered together from the east and west, reioysinge in the worde of the holy one, vnto the honoure off God.

Put of thy mournynge clothes (o Jerusa lem) and thy sorow, and decke the with the worshipe and honoure, that commeth vnto
the from God, with euerlastinge glory. God shal put the cloake off righteousnesse vpon
the, and set a crowne off euerlastinge wors hi pe vpon thine heade: for vpon the will God declare his brightnes, that is vnder the heauen: Yee an euerlastinge name shalbe geuen
the of God, with peace of righteousnesse, & y
honoure of Gods feare.

Arise o Jerusalem, stōde vpon hye: loke a- B
boute the towarde the east, and beholde thy children gathered from the east vnto the west: which reioyce in the holy worde, hauyn ge God in remembraunce. They departed from the on fote, and were led awaye of their enemies: but now shal the LORDE bringe them caried with honoure, as children off y kyngdome. For God is purposed to brynge downe all stoute mountaynes, yee and all hye rockes, to fyll the valleys, & so to make them eauen with the grounde: y Jsrael maye be diligēt to lyue vnto y honoure of God. The woddes & all pleasaūt trees shal ouershado
we Jsrael, at the cōmaundement of God.
For hyther shal God brynge Jsrael with ioy full myrth, and in the light of his magesty:
with the mercy and righteousnesse, that cōmeth of himselff.

A copie off the epistle, that Jeremy the prophet did sende vnto the Jewes, which were led awaye presoners by the kynge of Babilō. Wherin he certifieth them of the thinge, that was cōmaunded him of God.

The VI. Chapter.

A Ier. 25. a. b

BEcause of the symnes that ye haue done agaynst God, ye shal be led awaye captyue vnto Babilon, euen off Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon. So when ye be come in to Babilon, ye shall remayne there many yeares, and for a longe season: namely, vij. generacions: & after that wil I bringe you awaye peaceably from thēce. Now shal ye se in Babilō, goddes of golde, of syluer, of wodd and of stone: borne vpon mens shulders, to cast out a fearfulnes before the heithen. But loke that ye do not as the other: be not ye afrayed, and let not the feare of them ouercome you.

Therfore, when ye se the multitude of people worshippinge them behinde & before, saye ye in youre hertes: O LORDE, it is thou, that oughtest only to be worshipped: Myne angel also shal be with you, and I myself wil care for youre soules. As for the tymbre of those goddes, y carpēter hath polisshed them: yee gylted be they, & layed ouer with syluer, yet are they but vayne thinges, & can not speake. Like as a wench y loueth peramours is trymly deckte, euen so are these made & hanged w golde. Crownes of golde verely haue their goddes vpon their heades: so the prestes them selues take the golde and syluer from them, & put it to their owne vses: yee they geue of the same vnto harlottes, ād trymme their whores withall: Agayne, they take it from the whores, and decke their goddes therwith. Yet can not these goddes delyuer them selues from rust and mothes. Whē they haue couered them with clothynge off purple, they wype their faces for the dust of the temple, wherof their is moch amōge thē. One hath a sceptre in his honde, as though he were iudge of the countre: yet can he not slaye soch as offende him. Another hath a swearde or an axe in his honde, for all that, is he nether able to defende him selfe from batayll, ner fro murtherers.

B Deu. 6. c

Ier. 10. a

C By this ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddes: therfore se y ye nether worshipe them, ner feare them. For like as a vessel y a man vseth, is nothinge worth when it is broken, euen so is it with their goddes. When they be set vp in the temple, their eyes be full of dust, throw the fete of those that come in. And like as y dores are shut inwarde aboute vpō him, y hath offended the kinge: Or as it were a deed body kepte beyonde the graue: Euen so the prestes kepte the dores with barres and lockes, lest their goddes be spoyled with robbers. They set vp candels before thē (yee verely and y many) wher of they can not se one, but euen as blockes, so stonde they in the temple. It is sayde, y the serpentes and wormes, which come off the earth, gnawe out their hertes, eatinge them & their clothes also, and yet they fele it not. Their faces are blacke, throwthe smoke y is in the temple. The oules, swalowes & bydes fle vpon them, yee and the cattes renne ouer their heades.

By this ye maye be sure, that they are no goddes, therfore feare them not. The golde that they haue, is to make them beutifull for all that, excepte some body dight off their rust, they wil geue no shyne: and when they were cast into a fourme, they felt it not. They are bought for money, and haue no breth off life within them. They must be borne vpon mens shulders, as those that haue no fete: wherby they declare vnto men, that they be nothynge worth. Confounded be they then, that worshipe them. For y they falleth to grounde, they can not ryse vp agayne of thē selues: Yee though one helpe them vp and set them right, yet are they not able to stonde alone: but must haue proppes set vnder them, like deed men. As for the thinge that is offred vnto them, their prestes sell it, ād abuse it: yee the prestes wyues take therof, but vnto the sicke and poore they geue nothinge of it, the women with childe & the menstruous laye hondes of their offerynges. By this ye maye be sure, that they are not goddes, therfore be not ye afrayde of them. From whence cōmeth it thē, that they be called goddes? The women syt before the goddes of syluer, golde and wodde, and the prestes syt within their temples, hauynge open clothes, whose heades and beerdes are shaven, and haue nothinge vpon their heades: roaringe and crienge vpon their goddes, as men do at the feast, when one is deed.

The prestes also take awaye the garmentes of the ymages, and decke their wyues & children withall. Whether it be good or euel y eny man do vnto them, they are not able to recompence it: they can nether set vp a kynge, ner put him downe. In like maner they maye nether geue riches, ner rewarde euell. Though a man make a vowe vnto them, & kepe it not, they wil not requyre it. They can not restore a blynde mā to his sight, ner helpe eny mā at his nede. They cā shewe no mercy to the wyddowe, ner do good to ỹ fatherles. Their goddes of wodd, stone, golde ⁊ sylver, are but euen as other stones, ỹ be hewē of ỹ mountayne. They ỹ worshipe thē, shal be cōfounded. How shulde they then be taken for goddes? yee how darre men call thē goddes? And though the caldees worshiped thē not, hearinge ỹ they were but domme ⁊ coude not speake: Yet they them selues offre vnto Bel, and wolde fayne haue him to speake: as who saye, they coude fele, ỹ maye not moue. But when these mē come to vnderstōdinge, they shall forsake them, for their goddes haue no felinge. A greate sorte off women gyrded with coardes, syt in the stretes, ⁊ burne olyue beries. Now ỹ one off them be conveyed awaye, ⁊ lye w' eny soch as come by: she casteth hir neghburesse in the teth, because she was not so worthely reputed, ner hir coorde broken. What so euer is done for them, it is but in vayne ād lost: How maye it thē be thought or sayde, ỹ they are goddes? Carpenters ⁊ goldsmythes make thē, nether be they eny other thinge, but euen what the worke men wil make of them. Yee the goldsmithes them selues that make thē, are of no longe cōtynuaunce: How shulde then the thinges that are made of them, be goddes? Vayne therfore are the thinges (yee very shame is it) that they leaue behinde thē for their posterite. For as soone as there cōmeth eny warre or plage vpon thē, then the prestes ymagyn, where they maye hyde thē selues with thē. How can men thynke then, that they be goddes, which nether maye defende them selues from warre, ner delyuer thē fro myssfortune? For seynge they be but of wodd, of stone, of sylver and of golde: all people ⁊ kynges shal knowe hereafter, that they be but vayne thinges: yee it shalbe openly declared, that they be no goddes: but euen the very workes off mēs hōdes, ⁊ that God hath nothinge to do with thē. They can set no kynge in the londe ner geue rayne vnto men. They can geue no sentence of a matter, nether defende the londe fro wronge: For they are not able to do so moch as a crowe, that flyeth betwixte heuen and earth

G Whē there happeneth a fyre into the house of those goddes of wodde, of sylver and of golde, the prestes wil escape ⁊ saue thē selues, but the goddes burne as the balkes therin They can not withstōde eny kynge or batell: how maye it then be thought or graunted, that they be goddes? Moreouer, these goddes of wodde, of stone, of golde ⁊ sylver maye nether defende thē selues from theues ner robbers: yee ỹ very wicked are stronger thē they. These stripe them out off their apparell, that they be clothed withall, these take their golde ⁊ sylver fro thē, and so get thē awaye: yet cā they not helpe thē selues. Therfore it is moch better for a man, to be a kinge ⁊ so to shewe his power: or els a profitable vessel in a house, wherin he ỹ oweth it, might haue pleasure: yee or to be a dore in a house, to kepe soch thinges safe as be therin: thē to be soch a vayne god. The Sōne, the Mone ⁊ all the starres when they geue their shyne ⁊ light, are obedient, ⁊ do men good: When the lightenynge glistreth, all is cleare: The wynde bloweth in euery countre, ⁊ whē God cōmaundeth the cloudes to go rounde about the whole worlde, they do as they are bydden: when the fyre is sent downe fro aboue ⁊ cōmaunded, it burneth vp hilles ād woddes: But as for those goddes, they are not like one off these thynges, nether in beuty ner strēgth. Wherfore mē shulde not thynke, ner saye that they be goddes, seynge they cā ner ther geue sentence in iudgment, ner do men good. For so moch now as ye are sure, that they be no goddes, then feare them not: For they can nether speake euell ner good of kynges. They cā shewe no tokens in heauē for ỹ heithen, nether shyne as the Sōne, ner geue light as the Mone: yee ỹ vnreasonable beastes are better then they: for they can get thē vnder the rose, and do them selues good: So can ye be certified by no maner off meanes, that they be goddes: therfore feare thē not. For like as a frayboggarde in a garden off Cucumbers kepeth nothinge, euen so are their goddes of wod, of sylver ⁊ golde: and like as a whyte thorne in an orcharde, that euery bryde sytteth vpon: yee like as a deed body that is cast in the darcke, Euen so is it with those goddes of wodde, sylver and golde. By the purple and scarlet which they haue vpon thē, ād soone faydeth awaye, ye maye vnderstonde, that they be no goddes: yee they them selues shal be cōsumed at the last, which shal be a greate cōfucion of the londe. Blessed is the godly man, ỹ hath no ymages ⁊ worshippeth none, for he shalbe farre from reprose.

The first Chapter.

IT chaūsed, in the xxx. yeare the fifth daye off the fourth Moneth, that I was amonge the presoners by the ryuer off Cobar: where the heauens opened, & I sawe a vision of God. Now the fifth daye off the Moneth made out the fyfth yeare off kynge Joachims captiuyte. At the same tyme came ye worde off the LORDE vnto Ezechiel the sonne off Buzi preist, in the londe off the Caldees by the water of Cobar, where the honde off the LORDE came vpō him. And I loked: & beholde, a stormy wynde came out off the north with a greate cloude full of fyre, which w^t his glistre lightened allrounde aboute.

And in ye myddest off the fyre it was all cleare, and as it were the lickneſſe of foure beastes, which were fashioned like a man: sauynge, that euery one had foure faces and foure wynges.

Their legges were straight, but their fete were like bullockes fete, and they glistred, as it had bene fayre scoured metall. Vnder their wynges vpon all the foure corners, they had mens hondes. Their faces and their wynges were towarde the foure corners: yet were the wynges so, that one euer touched another. When they wente, they turned them not aboute: but ech one wente straight forwarde.

Vpon the right side off these foure, their faces were like the face off a man and the face off a Lyon: But vpon the left side, they had the face off an oxe and the face off an Aegle.

Their faces also and their wynges were spred out aboue: so that two wynges off one touched euer two wynges off another, and with the other two they couered their bodie. Euery one when it wente, it wente straight forwarde.

Where as the spirite led them, thither they wente, and turned not aboute in their goynge.

The fashion and countenaūce of the beestes was like hote coales off fyre, euen as though burnynge cresshettes had bene amonge the beestes: and the fyre gaue a glistre, and out off the fyre there wente lightninge. Whē ye beestes wēte forwarde & backwarde, one wolde haue thought it had lightened. Now whē I had well considered the beestes, I sawe a worke off wheles vpon the earth with foure faces also like the beestes.

The fashion & worke of the wheles was like the see. The foure wheles were ioyned D and made (to loke vpon) as it had bene one whele in another. When one wente forwarde, they wente all foure, and turned thē not aboute i their goinge. They were large, greate and horrible to loke vpon.

Their bodies were full off eyes rounde aboute them all foure. Whē the beestes wēte, the wheles wente also with them: And when the beestes lift them selues vp from ye earth, the wheles were lift vp also. Whyther so euer the spirite wente, thither wente they also, & ye wheles were lift vp & folowed thē. for ye spirite of life was in the wheles. When ye beestes wēte forth, stode still, or lift them selues vp from the earth: then the wheles also wente, stode still, & were lift vp, for ye breth off life was in the wheles.

Aboue ouer ye heades of the beestes there E was a firmament, which was fashioned as it had bene off the most pure Christall, & that was spred out aboue vpon their heades: vnder the same firmament were their wynges layed abrode, one towarde another, and two wynges couered the body of euery beest. And when thy wente forth, I herde the noyse off their wynges, like the noyse of greate waters, as it had bene the voyce off the greate God, and a russhinge together as it were off an hoost off men. And when they stode still, they let downe their wynges. Now when they stode still, and had letten downe their wynges, it thondred in the firmament, that was aboue their heades.

Aboue the firmament that was ouer their heades, there was the fashion off a seate, as it had bene made off Saphir. Apon the seate there sat one like a mā. I behelde him, and he was like a cleare light, as it had bene all of fyre with in from his loynes vpwarde.

And beneth when I loked vpon him vnder ye loynes, me thought he was like a shynynge fyre, that geueth light on euery syde. Yee the shyne and glistre ye lightened roun de aboute, was like a raynbowe, which in a raynie daye apeareth in the cloudes. Euē so was the similitude, wherin the glory off the LORDE apeared. Whē I sawe it, I fell vpon my face, and herkened vnto the voyce off him, that spake.

The II. Chapter.

A Then sayde he vnto me: Stonde vp vpon thy fete (O thou sonne of mā) and I will talke with the. And as he was commonynge with me, the spriete came in to me, and set me vp vpon my fete: so that I marcked the thinge, that he sayde vnto me. And he sayde: Beholde, thou sonne off man: I will sende the to the children off Israel, to those runnagates and obstinate people: for they haue takē parte agaynst me, and are runne awaye fro me: both they, and their forefathers, vnto this daye.

Exe. 3. d

Exo. 32. a

Yee I will sende ỹ vnto a people ỹ haue rough vysages and stiff stomackes: vnto whom thou shalt saye on this maner: This the LORDE God himselff hath spoken, ỹ whether they be obedient or no (for it is a frauwarde housholde) they maye knowe yet that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

B Therfore (thou sonne off man) feare thē not, nether be afrayed off their wordes: for they shall rebell agaynst the, and despise ỹ. Yee thou shalt dwell amonge scorpions: but feare not their wordes, be not abashed at their lokes, for it is a frauwerde housholde.

Iere. 1. c

Se that thou speake my wordes vnto them, whether they be obediēt or not, for they are obstinate. Therfore (thou sonne of man) obeye thou all thinges, that I saye vnto ỹ, and be not thou stiffnecked, like as they are a stiffnecked housholde. Open thy mouth, and eate that I gene the.

So as I was lokynge vp, beholde, there was sent vnto me an hande, wherin was a closed boke: and the hande opened it before me, and it was written within and without, full off carefull mourninges: alas, and wo.

Apo. 5. a

The III. Chapter.

A Then sayde he vnto me: thou sonne of mā, eate that, what so euer it be: Yee eate that closed boke, and go thy waye, and speake vnto the children off Israel. So I opened my mouth, and he gaue me the boke for to eate, and sayde vnto me:

Iere. 15. c
4. Esr. 14. c
Apo. 10. b

Thou sonne of man, thy bely shal eate, and thy bowels shalbe fylled with ỹ boke, that I gene the. Then dyd I eate the boke, and it was in my mouth sweter then hony.

And he sayde vnto me: thou sonne of mā, get the soone vnto the house off Israel, and shewe thē ỹ wordes, that I cōmaunde the: for I sende the not to a people that hath a straūge, vnknowne or harde speache, but vnto the house off Israel: Not to many nacions, which haue diuerse speaches and harde languages, whose wordes thou vnderstōdest not: Neuertheles, yf I sent the to those people, they wolde folowe the: But the house off Israel wil not folowe ỹ, for they wil not folowe me: Yee all the house off Israel haue stiff foreheades and harde hertes. Beholde therfore, I will make thy face preuayle agaynst their faces, and harden thy foreheade agaynst their foreheades: so that thy forehead shall be harder then an Adamāt or flynt stone: that thou mayest feare them ỹ lesse, and be lesse afrayed off them, for they are a frauwerde housholde.

He sayde moreuer vnto me: thou sonne off man, take diligent hede with thine eares, to ỹ wordes that I speake vnto the, fasten them in thine herte: and go to the presoners off thy people, speake vnto them, and saye on this maner:

Thus the LORDE God hath spoke: Whether ye heare, or heare not. With that, the spriete toke me vp. And I herde the noyse of a greate russhinge and remouynge off the most blissed glory off the LORDE out off his place.

I herde also the noyse off the wynges off the beestes, that russhed one agaynst another, yee and the ratlynge off the wheles, that were by them, which russhinge & noyse was very greate.

Now when the spriete toke me vp, and caried me awaye, I wente with an hevy and a sorouefull mynde, but the honde off the LORDE comforted me right soone.

And so in the begynnynge off the Meneth Abib, I came to the presoners, that dwelt by the water off Cobar, and remayned in that place, where they were: and so continued I amonge them seuen dayes, beinge very sory.

And when the seuen dayes were expyred, the LORDE sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, I haue made the a watch man vnto the house of Israel: therfore take good hede to the wordes, and gene them warnynge at my commaundement.

Yff I saye vnto the, concernynge the vngodly mā, that (without doute) he must dye, and thou geuest him not warnynge, ner speakest vnto him, that he maye turne from his euell waye, and so to lyue: Then shall the same vngodly man dye in his owne vnrighteousnes: but his blonde will I requyre off thyne honde. Neuertheles, yff thou geue warnynge vnto the wicked, and he yet forsake not his vngodlynesse: then shall he dye in his owne wickednesse, but thou hast discharged thy soule.

Now yf a righteous mā go frō his righteousnesse, and do the thinge that is euell: I will laye a stomblinge blocke before him, and he shall dye, because thou hast not geuen him warninge: Nee dye shall he in his owne synne, so that the vertue, which he did before, shall not be thought vpon: but his blonde will I requyre of thine honde.

Neuertheles, yf thou exhortest the righteous, that he synne not, and so ỹ righteous do not synne: Then shall he lyue, because he hath receaued thy warnynge, and thou hast discharged thy soule. And there came the hōde off the LORDE vpon me, and he sayde vnto me: Stonde vp, and go in to the felde, ỹ I maye there talke with the.

So when I had rysen vp, and gone forth into the felde: Beholde, the glory off the LORDE stode there, like as I sawe it afore, by the water off Cobar.

Then fell I downe vpon my face, and ỹ spreta came in to me, which set me vp vpon my fete, and sayde thus vnto me: Go thy waye, and sparre thy selff in thyne house. Beholde (O thou sonne off man) there shall chaynes be brought for the, to bynde the wt all, so that thou shalt not escape out off thē. And I will make thy tunge cleue so the rofe off thy mouth, that thou shalt be domme, and not be as a chider with them: for it is an obstinate housholde.

But when I speake vnto the, then open thy mouth, and saye: Thus saieth the LORDE God: who so heareth, let him heare: who so will not, let him leaue: for it is a frauwarde housholde.

The IIII. Chapter.

Thou sonne off man: take a tyle stone, and laye it before the, and describe vpon it the cite off Jerusalem: how it is besieged, how bulwerkes and strōge diches are grauen on euery syde off it: describe also tentes, and an hoost off men rounde aboute it.

Moreouer, take an yron panne, and set it betwirte the & ỹ cite in steade off an yron wall, Then set thy face towarde it, besege it, and laye ordinaunce agaynst it, to wynne it. This shal be a token vnto the house off Israel. But thou shalt slepe vpon thy left syde, and laye the synne of the house off Israel vpon the.

Certayne dayes apoynted, thou shalt slepe vpon that syde, and beare their synnes. Dan.9.d
Neuertheles I will apoynte the a tyme (to put off their synnes) and the nombre off the daies: Three hundreth & xc. dayes must thou beare the wickednesse off the house of Israel. When thou hast fulfilled these dayes, lye downe agayne, and slepe vpon thy right syde xl. dayes, and beare the synnes off the house of Juda.

A daye for a yeare, a daye (I saye) for a yeare, will I euer laye vpon the. Therfore set now thy face agaynst that beseged Jerusalem, and discouer thine arme, that thou mayest prophecie agaynst it. Nu.14.e B

Beholde, I will laye chaynes vpon the, that thou shalt not turne the from one syde to another, till thou hast ended the dayes of thy sege.

Wherfore, take vnto the wheate, barly beanes, growell sode, milium and fitches: and put these together in a vessell, and make the loaues of bred therof, accordinge to the nombre of the dayes that thou must lye vpon ỹ syde: that thou mayest haue bred to eate, for three hundreth and xc. dayes.

And the meate that thou eatest, shall haue a certayne waighe apoynted: Namely, twentie sycles euery daye. This apoynted meate shalt thou eate daylie, from the begynnynge to the ende.

Thou shalt drynke also a certayne measure off water: Namely, the sixte parte of an hin shalt thou drynke daylie from the begynnynge to the ende. Barly cakes shalt thou eate, yet shalt thou first strake thē ouer with mās donge, ỹ they maye se it. And C with that, sayde the LORDE: Euen thus Osee.9.a
shal the children of Israel eate their defyled bred in the myddest off the Gentiles, amonge whom I will scatre them.

Then sayde I: Oh LORDE God, Beholde, my soule was yet neuer stayned: for frō my youth vp vnto this houre, I dyd neuer eate of a deed carcase, or of that which was slayne of wilde beestes, nether came there euer eny vnclene flesh in my mouth.

Where vnto he answered me, and sayde

Well than, I will graunte the to take cowes donge, for the donge off a man, and to strake the bred ouer with all, before thē.

And he sayde vnto me: Beholde thou sonne off man, I will myniſhe all the prouyſion of bred in Jerusalem, ſo that they ſhall weye their bred, and eate it with ſcarceneſſe. But as for water, they ſhall haue a very litle measure therоff, to drynke. And when they haue nomore bred ner water, one ſhal be deſtroyed with another, and famiſh awaye for their wickednesſe.

The V. Chapter.

TAke the then a ſharpe knyfe (O thou sonne of man) namely, a raſoure. Take that, and ſhaue the hayre off thy heade and beerd: Then take the ſcoales and the waight, and deuyde the hayre a ſunder. And burne the thirde parte therof in the fyre in the myddeſt off the cite, and cut the other thirde parte in peces with a knyfe. As for the thirde parte that remayneth, caſt it in the wynde, and then ſhewe the bare knyfe.

Ezec. 2. d

Yet afterwarde take a litle off the ſame, & bynde it in they cote lappe. Then take a curteſy of it, and caſt it in the myddeſt of ỹ fyre, and burne it in the fyre. Out of the ſame fyre ſhall there go a flame, vpon the whole house of Jſrael.

Moreouer, thus ſayde the LORDE God: This ſame is Jerusalem. I ſet her in the middeſt of the Heithen and nacions, that are rounde aboute her, but ſhe hath deſpiſed my iudgmētes more then ỹ Gentiles thē ſelues, and broken my cōmaundementes more then the nacions, that lye rounde aboute her: For they haue caſt out myne ordinaunces, and not walked in my lawes. Therfore, thus ſaieth the LORDE God: For ſo moch as ye w^t youre wickednesſe farre exceade the Heithē, that dwell rounde aboute you: (For ye haue not walked in my lawes, nether haue ye kepte myne ordinaūces) Therfore thus ſaieth ỹ LORDE God:

Leui. 18. d

I will alſo come vpon the, for in the myddeſt of the will I ſyt in iugdmēt, in the ſight of the Heithen, and will handle the of ſoch a faſhion, as I never dyd before, and as I ner wil do from that tyme forth, and that because of all thy abhominacions. For in the the fathers ſhal be fayne to eate their owne ſonnes, and the ſonnes their owne fathers. Soch a courte will I kepe in the, and the wholeremnaunt will I ſcatre in to all the wyndes.

Wherfore, as truly as I lyue (ſaieth the LORDE God) ſeynge thou haſt defyled my Sanctuary, with all maner off abhominacions and with all thy ſhameful offences, For this cauſe will I alſo deſtroye the. Myne eye ſhall not ouerſee the, nether will I ſpare the.

One thirde parte within the, ſhall die of the peſtilence and of honger: Another thirde parte ſhall be ſlayne downe rounde aboute the, with the ſwearde: The other thirde parte that remayneth, will I ſcatre abrode towarde all the wyndes, and drawe out the ſwearde after them. Thus will I perfourme my indignacion and ſet my wrath agayne them, and eaſe my ſelf. So that when I haue fulfilled myne anger agaynſt them, they ſhall knowe, that I am the LORDE, which in a feruent gelouſy haue ſpoken it.

Moreouer I will make the waiſte and abhorred, before all the Heithen that dwell aboute the, and in the ſight off all them, that go by the: ſo that when I punyſh the in my wrath, in myne anger, and with the plages off my whote diſpleaſure: thou ſhalt be a very abhominacion, ſhame, a gaſinge and wondringe ſtocke, amonge the Heithen that lye aboute the.

(Euen I the LORDE haue ſpoken it, and it ſhall come to paſſe, when I ſhute amonge them the perlous dartes of honger, which ſhalbe but death: Yee therfore ſhall I ſhute them, becauſe I will deſtroye you. I will encreaſe hunger, and myniſh all the prouyſion off bred amonge you.

Plages and myſery will I ſende you, yee and wilde beeſtes alſo to deſtroye you. Peſtilence and bloudſheddinge ſhall come vpon you, and the ſwearde wil I bringe ouer you. (Euen I the LORDE, haue ſayde it.

The VI. Chapter.

THe worde of the LORDE came vnto me, ſayenge: Thou ſonne off man, turne thy face to the mountaynes of Jſrael, that thou mayeſt prophecie vnto them, and ſaye: Heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes off Jſrael: Thus hath the LORDE God ſpoken to the mountaynes, hilles, valleys and dales:

Beholde, I will bringe a ſwearde ouer you, and deſtroye youre hie places: I will caſt downe youre aulters, and breake downe youre temples. Youre ſlayne men will I laye before youre goddes, and the dead carcaſes off the children off Jſrael will I caſt before their ymages, youre bones will

I strowe rounde aboute youre aulters, and dwellinge places.

The cities shalbe desolate, ỹ hill chapels leyed waist: youre aulters destroyed, & broten: youre goddes cast downe, and taken awaye, yͤ tẽpels layde eauẽ with the grouñde, youre owne workes clene roted out. Youre slayne men shall lie amonge you, that ye maye lerne to knowe, how ỹ I am the LORDE. Those ỹ amõge you haue escaped the sweard, will I leaue amonge the Gentiles, for I will scatre you amonge the nacions. And they that escape from you, shall thinke vpon me amonge the heithen, where they shalbe in captiuyte.

As for that whorish and vnfaithfull hert of theirs, wherwith they runne awaye fro me, I will breake it: yee & put out those eyes off theirs, that committe fornicacion with their Idols.

Then shall they be ashamed, and displeased with their selues, for the wickednesses ād abhominacions, which they haue done: and shall lerne to knowe, how that it is not in vayne, that I the LORDE spake, to bringe soch misery vpon them.

The LORDE sayde moreover vnto me: C Smyte thine hondes together, and stampe with thy fete, and saye: Wo worth all the abhominacions and wickednesses of the house of Israel, for because of thẽ, they shal perish with the sweard, with hõger and with pestilence. Who so is farre of, shall dye off the pestilence: he that is nye at hande, shall perish with the sweard: and ỹ other that are beseged, shall dye of honger.

Thus wil I satisfie my wrothfull displeasure vpon them. And so shall ye lerne to knowe, that I am the LORDE, whẽ youre slayne men lye amõge youre goddes, and aboute youre aulters: vpon all hie hilles and toppes off mountaynes, amõge all grene trees, amonge all thicke okes: euen in the places, where they dyd sacrifice to all their Idols. I will stretch myne hõnde out vpon them, & will make the londe waist: So that it shall lye desolate and voyde, from the wildernesse off Deblat forth, thorow all their habitacions: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The VII. Chapter.

A THe worde off the LORDE came vnto me, on this maner: The I call, O thou sonne off man. Thus saieth the LORDE God vnto the londe off Israel: The ende commeth, yee verely the ende commeth vpon all the foure corners off the earth.

But now shall the ende come vpon the: for I will sende my wrath vpõ the, and wil punysh the: accordinge to thy wayes, and reward the after all thy abhominacions. Myne eye shall not oversee the, nether will I spare the: but reward the, accordinge to thy waies, and declare thy abhominacions. Then shall ye knowe, that I am the LORDE. Eze.7.b 9.c

Thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, one mysery and plage shall come after another: the ende is here. The ende (I saye) that waiteth for the, is come already, yͤ houre is come agaynst the, that dwellest in the londe.

The tyme is at honde, the daye of sedicion is hard by, & no glad tidinges vpõ the mõtaynes. Therfore, I will shortly poure out my sore displeasure ouer the, and fulfill my wrath vpon the. I will iudge the after thy waies, and recompence the all thy abhominacions. B

Myne eye shal not oversee the, nether wil I spare the: but reward the after thy waies, and shewe thy abhominacions: to lerne you for to knowe, how ỹ I am the LORDE, yͤ smyteth. Beholde, the daye is here, the daye is come, the houre is runne out, the rodde florisheth, wylfulnesse wareth grene, malicious violẽce is growne vp, and the vngodly waxen to a staff. Yet shall there no complaynte be made for them, ner for the trouble that shall come of these thinges. Eze.7.b 9.c

The tyme cõmeth, the daye draweth nye: Who so byeth, let him not reioyce: he that selleth, let him not be sory: for why, Trouble shall come in the myddest off all rest: so that the seller shall not come agayne to the byer, for nether off them both shall lyue. For the vision shal come so greatly ouer all, ỹ it shal not be hyndered: No mã also wͤ his wickednesse shall be able to saue his owne life. 1.Cor.7. 2.Tess.5. Iere.15.b C

The trompettes shall ye blowe, and make you all ready, but no man shall go to the batell, for I am wroth with all the whole multitude.

The sweard shalbe without, pestilence and honger within: so that who so is in the felde, shalbe slayne with the sweard: and he that is in the cite, shall perish with honger and pestilence. Deu.32.d

And soch as escape and flie from amonge them, shal be vpon the hilles, like as the dones in the felde: euery one shalbe afrayed, because off his owne wickednesse.

Esa 15.e All hondes shalbe letten downe, and all knees shalbe weake as the water: they shall gyrde them selues with sack cloth, feare shal fall vpon them. Their faces shall be confoũded, and their heades balde: their syluer shall lye in the stretes, and their golde shalbe despised: Yee their syluer and golde maye not delyuer them, in the daye of the fearfull wrath of the LORDE.

Soph.1.c
Ecc.5.b

D They shall not satisfie their hongrie soules, nether fyll their emptie belies therwith: For it is become their owne decaye thorow their wickednesse: because they made therof, not only costly Jeweles for their pompe and pryde, but also abhominable ymages and dols. For this cause will I make them to be abhorred. Moreouer, I will geue it into ỹ hondes off the straungers to be spoyled: and to ỹ wicked, for to be robbed, and they shall destroye it.

Osee.8.a

My face wil I turne from thẽ, my Treasury shall be defyled: for the theues shall go into it, and suspende it. I wil make clene rydaunse, for the londe is whole defyled with vnrighteous iudgment of innocent bloude, & the cite is full off abhominacions.

E Wherfore, I will bringe the most cruell tyrauntes from amonge the Heithen, to take their houses in possession. I will make the pompe off the proude to ceasse, ād they shal take in their Sanctuary. When this trouble cõmeth, they shal seke peace, but they shal haue none. One myschefe and sorowe shal folowe another, and one rumoure shal come after another: Then shall they seke visions in vayne at their prophetes. The lawe shal be gone from the prestes, and wyßdome from the elders. The kynge shall mourne, the princes shalbe clothed with heuynesse, and ỹ hõdes off the people in the londe shall tremble for feare. I will do vnto them after their owne waies, & accordinge to their owne iudgmentes will I iudge them: to lerne them for to knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The VIII. Chapter.

A IT happened, that in the sixte yeare, the fifth daye of the sixte Moneth I sat in my house, and the LORDES off the councell off Juda with me: and the honde off the LORDE God fell euen there vpõ me.

And as I loked vp, I sawe as it were a lickenesse off fyre from his loynes downwarde, and from his loynes vpwarde it shyned marueloꝰ cleare.

This symilitude stretched out an honde, and toke me by the hayre lockes off my heade, and the spirite lift me vp betwixte heauen and earth: and God brought me in a vision to Jerusalem, in to the courte off the inwarde porte that lieth towarde the north: there stode an ymage, with whom he that hath all thinges in his power, was very wroth.

And beholde, the glory off the God off Israel was in the same place: euẽ as I had sene it afore in the felde. And he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne off man, O lift vp thine eyes, and loke towarde the north. Then lift I vp myne eyes towarde the north, and beholde: Beside the porte northwarde, there was an aulter made vnto the ymage off prouocacion in the very entringe in.

And he sayde furthermore vnto me: Thou sonne off man, Seist thou what these do? Seist thou the greate abhominacions that the house off Israel commytte in this place? which ought not to be done in my sanctuary?

But turne the aboute, and thou shalt se yet greater abhominacions. And with that brought he me to the courte gate: and whẽ I loked, beholde, there was an hole in the wall.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, dygge thorow the wall. And when I dygged thorow the wall, beholde, there was a dore. And he sayde vnto me: go thy way in, & loke what wicked abhominacions they do there.

So I wente in, and sawe: and beholde, there were all maner ymages off wormes & beastes, all Idols and abhominacions of ỹ house off Israel paynted euerychone rounde aboute the wall.

There stode also before the ymages lxx. lordes of the councell off the house off Israel: and in the myddest off them stode Jaasanias the sonne off Saphan: And euery one off them had a censoure in his honde, & out off the incense, there wente a smoke, as it had bene a cloude.

Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne off man, hast thou sene what the Senatours off the house off Israel do secretly, euery one in his chambre? For they saye: Tush, the LORDE seth vs not, the LORDE regardeth not the worlde. And he sayde vnto me: Turne the yet agayne, and thou shalt se the greate abhominacions that they do.

And with that, he brought me to the dore off the porte off the LORDES house, eastwarde the north. And beholde, there sat women mournynge for Thamus. Then sayde he vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne of man? Turne ye aboute, and thou shalt se yet greater abhominacions. And so he brought me in to the inwarde courte of the LORDES house: and beholde, at the porte of the LORDES house, betwixte the fore entrie and the aulter, there were fyue and twenty men, that turned their backes vpon the Temple of the LORDE, and their faces towarde the easte, and these worshipped the Sonne.

And he sayde vnto me: hast thou sene this, thou sonne of man? Thinketh the house of Israel, that it is but a trifle, to do these abhominacions here? Shulde they fyll the londe full of wickednesse, and vndertake to prouoke me vnto anger? Nee and purposly to cast vp their noses vpon me? Therfore wil I also do some thinge in my wrothfull displeasure, so that myne eye shall not ouersee them, neither wil I spare them. Nee and though they crie in myne eares with loude voyce, yet wil I not heare them.

The IX. Chapter.

HE cried also with a loude voyce in myne eares, sayenge: Come here ye rulers of the cite, euery man with his weapened honde to the slaughter. Then came there sixe men out of the strete of the vpper porte towarde the north, and euery man a weapen in his honde to the slaughter. There was one amongst them, that had on him a lynninge rayment, and a wryters yncke horne by his syde.

These went in, and stode beside the brasen aulter: for the glory of the LORDE was gone awaye from the Cherub, and was come downe to the threshold of the house, and he called the man, that had the lynnynge rayment vpon him, and the writers yncke horne by his syde, and the LORDE sayde vnto him: Go thy waye thorow the cite of Jerusalem, and set this marck ת Thau vpō the foreheades of them, that mourne, and are sory for all the abhominacions, that be done therin. And to the other, he sayde that I might heare: Go ye after him thorow the cite, slaye, ouersee none, spare none: Kyll, and destroye both olde men and yonge, maydens, children, and wyues.

But as for those, that haue this marck ת Thau vpō them: se that ye touch them not, and begynne at my Sanctuary. Then they begāne at the elders, which were in the Temple, for he had sayde vnto them: When ye haue defyled the Temple, and fylled the courte with the slayne, then go youre waye forth. So they wēte out and slewe downe thorow the cite. Now when they had done slaughter, and I yet escaped: I fell downe vpon my face, and cried, sayenge: O LORDE, wilt thou then destroye all the residue of Israel, in thy sore displeasure, that thou hast poured vpō Jerusalem?

Then sayde he vnto me: The wickednesse of the house of Israel and Juda is very greate: so that the lōde is full of bloude, and the cite full of vnfaithfulnesse: For they saye: Tush, the LORDE regardeth not the earth, he seyth vs not. Therfore will I vpon them, myne eye shall not ouersee them, nether will I spare them, but will recompence their wickednesse vpon their heades. Iob 22.b Esa. 29.c Ecci. 23.c Ezec. 7.c

And beholde, the mā that had the lynnynge rayment vpon him, and the writers, yncke horne by his syde: tolde all the matter how it happened, and sayde: LORDE, as thou hast commaunded me, so haue I done.

The X. Chapter.

AND as I loked, beholde, In the firmament that was aboue the Cherubins there apeared the similitude of a stole of Saphir vpō them: Then sayde he that sat therin, to him that had the lynnynge rayment vpon him: Crepe in betwene the wheles that are vnder the Cherubins, and take thine honde full of hote coales out from betwene the Cherubins, and cast them ouer the cite. And he crepte in, that I might se. Eze. 9 a

Now the Cherubins stode vpō the right syde of the house, when the man wēte in, and the cloude fylled the ynnermer courte. But the glory of the LORDE remoued from the Cherubins, and came vpon the threshold of the house: so that the Temple was full of cloudes, and the courte was full of the shyne of the LORDES glory. Nee and the sounde of the Cherubins wynges was herde in to the forecourte, like as it had bene the voyce of the almightie God, when he speaketh. Now when he had bydden the man that was clothed in lynnynge, to go and take the hote coales from the myddest of the wheles, which were vnder the Cherubins: he wente and stode beside the wheles. Then the one Cherub reached forth this honde from vnder the Cherubins, vnto the fyre that was betwene the Cherubins, and toke therof, and gaue it vnto him (that had on the lynnynge rayment) in his honde: which toke it, and wente out. And vnder the wynges of the Cherubins, there apeared the licknes of a mās hōde: I sawe also foure wheles beside the Che 2. Par. 7 a rubins, so that by every Cherub there stode a whele. And the wheles were (to loke vpon) after ỹ fashion of ỹ precious stone of Tharsis: Yet (vnto the sight) were they fashioned alike, as yf one whele had bene in another.

When they wente forth, they wēte all iiij together, not turnynge aboute in their goinge: But where the first wente, thither wente they after also, so that they turned not aboute in their goinge. Their whole bodies, their backes, their hōdes & wynges, yee & the wheles also, were all full of eyes rounde aboute them all foure. And I herde him call ỹ wheles, Galgal (that is) a rounde boull. Euery one of them had foure faces: so that the one face was the face of a Cherub, the seconde of a man, the thirde of a lyon, the fourth of an Aegle, & they were lifted vp aboue. This is the beest, that I sawe at the water of Cobar. Now when the Cherubins wente, the wheles wente with them: & when the Cherubins shoke their wynges to lift them selues vpwarde, the wheles remayned not behynde, but were with them also. Shortly, when they stode, these stode also: And when they were lift vp, ỹ wheles were lift vp also with thē, for the sprete of life was in the wheles.

Then the glory of the LORDE was lift vp from the thresholde of the temple, and remayned vpon the Cherubins: And the Cherubins flackred with their wynges, and lift thē selues vp from the earth: so that I sawe when they went, and the wheles with them. And they stode at the east syde of the porte that is in the house of the LORDE. So the glory of the LORDE was vpon them. This is the beest that I sawe vnder the God of Israel, by the water of Cobar. And I perceaued, that it was the Cherubins. Euery one had foure faces, & euery one foure wynges, & vnder their wynges, as it were mēs hondes. Now the figure of their faces was, euen as I had sene them, by the water of Cobar, & so was the countenaunce of thē: Euery one in his goinge wente straight forwarde.

The XI. Chapter.

MOreouer, the sprete of the LORDE lift me vp, & brought me vnto ỹ east porte of the LORDES house. And beholde, there were xxv men vnder the dore: amōge whom I sawe Jaasanias the sonne of Asur, & Pheltias the sonne of Banias, the rulers of the people. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: Thou sonne of man: These men ymagin myschefe, and a wicked councel take they in this cite, sayenge: Tush, there is no destruccion at honde, let vs buylde houses: This Jerusalem is the cauldron, & we be the flesh. Therfore shalt thou prophecie vnto them, yee prophecie shalt thou vnto them, O sonne of man. And with that, fell the sprete of the LORDE vpon me, and sayde vnto me: Speake, thus saieth the LORDE: On this maner haue yee spokē (O ye house of Israel) and I knowe the ymaginacions of youre hertes. Many one haue ye murthured in this cite, & filled the stretes full of the slayne.

Therfore, thus saieth the LORDE God: The slayne men that ye haue layed on the grounde in this cite, are the flesh, & this cite is the cauldron: But I wil bringe you out of it: ye haue drawē out ỹ swearde, euē so wil I also bringe a swearde ouer you, saieth ỹ LORDE God. I will dryue you out of this cite and delyuer you in to youre enemies honde, & wil condemne you. Ye shal be slayne in all the coastes of Israel, I wil be avenged of you: to lerne you for to knowe, that I am the LORDE. This cite shal not be youre cauldron, nether shal ye be the flesh therin: but in the coastes of Israel wil I punysh you, that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: in whose commaundementes ye haue not walked, ner kepte his lawes: but haue done after the customes of the heithen, that lie rounde aboute you.

Now when I preached, Pheltias the sonne of Banias dyed. Then fell I downe vpō my face, & cried with a loude voyce: O LORDE God, wilt thou then vterly destroye all the remnaunt in Israel: And so the worde of the LORDE came to me on this maner: Thou sonne of man: Thy brethren, thy kynsfolke, & ỹ whole house of Juda, which dwell at Jerusalem, saye: They be gone farre from the LORDE, but the londe is geuen vs in possession. Therfore tell them, thus saieth the LORDE God: I wil sende you farre of amōge the Gentiles, & scatre you amonge the nacions, & I wil halowe you but a litle, in the londes where ye shall come. Tell them also, thus saieth the LORDE God: I wil gather you agayne out of the nacions, & bringe you from the countrees where ye be scatred, & will geue you the londe of Israel agayne: & thither shal ye come. And as for all impedimentes, & all youre abhominacions: I will take them awaye.

And I wil geue you one herte, & wil plante a new sprete within yo bowels. That stony herte wil I take out of youre body, & geue you a fleshy herte: that ye maye walke in my commaundementes, and kepe myne ordinaunces, & do them: that ye maye be my people, and I youre God. But loke whose herres are disposed to folowe their abhominacions and wicked lyuynges: Those mens dedes will I bringe vpon their owne heades, saieth the LORDE God. After this dyd the Cherubins lift vp their winges, and the wheles wente with them, and the glory of the c LORDE was vpon them. So the glory of the LORDE wente vp from the myddest of b the cite, & stode vpon the mount of the cite toward the east. But the wynde toke me vp, & in a vision (which came by the sprete of God) it brought me agayne in to Caldea amonge the presoners. Then the vision that I had sene, vanyshed awaye fro me. So I spake vnto the presoners, all the wordes of the LORDE, which he had shewed me.

The XII. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of mā, thou dwellest in the myddest of a frauwerde housholde: which haue eyes to se, & yet se not: eares haue they to heare, and yet heare they not, for they are an obstinate housholde. Therfore (O thou sonne of man) make thy gere redy to flit, and go forth by fayre daye light, y they maye se. Yee euē in their sight shalt thou go from thy place to another place: yf peraduenture they wil considre, y they be an vnobedient housholde. Thy gere that thou hast made redy to flit withall, shalt thou beare out by fayre daye light, that they maie se: & thou y selfe shalt go forth also at euē in their sight, as a mā doth whē he flitteth.

Dygge thorow the wall, that they maye se, and beare thorow it the same thinge, that thou tokest vp in their sight. As for thy selfe, thou shalt go forth in the darcke. Hyde thy face that thou se not y earth, for I haue made the a shewtokē vnto the house of Israel.
B Now as y LORDE cōmaunded me, so I dyd: y gere that I had made redy, brought I out by daye. At euen I brake downe an hole thorow the wall with my honde: & when it was darcke, I toke the gere vpō my shulders, and bare them out in their sight.

And in the mornynge, came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, yf Israel, y frauwerde housholde axe the, and saye: what dost thou there? Then tell them: Thus saieth the LORDE God: This punyshment toucheth the chefe rulers at Jerusalem, and all the house of Israel, that dwell amonge them: Tell them: I am youre shewtoken: like as I haue done, so shall it happen vnto you: Flyt shal ye also, and go a.b into captiuyte. The chefest that is amonge you, shall lade his shulders in the darcke, and get him awaye. He shal breake downe the wall, to carie stuff there thorow: he shal couer his face, that he se not the grounde, with his eyes.

not se, & yet shal he dye there. As for all his helpers, and all his hoostes that be aboute him: I will scatre them towarde all the wyndes, and drawe out a swearde after them.

heithen, and strowed them in the londes: b.22
they shal knowe, that I am y LORDE. But, I will leaue a litle nombre of them, from the swearde, hunger & pestilence: to tell all their abhominacions amonge the heithen, where they come: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Moreouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man: with a fearfull trēblinge shalt thou eate thy bred, with carefulnesse & sorowe shalt thou drynke thy water. And vnto the people of the londe, speake thou on this maner: Thus saieth the LORDE God, to them that dwell in Jerusalem, and to the londe of Israel: Ye shall eate youre bred with sorowe, and drynke youre water with heynesse: yee the londe with the fulnesse therof shalbe layde waist, for y wickednesse of them that dwell therin. And the cities that now be well occupied, shal be voyde, and the londe desolate: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Yet came the worde of the LORDE vnto D me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, what maner of byworde is that, which ye vse Ro.1.a in the londe of Israel, sayenge: Tush, seynge that the daies are so slacke in commynge, 2.Pet.3.b all the visiōs are of none effecte: Tell them therfore, thus saieth the LORDE God: I wil make that byworde to ceasse, so that it shall nemore be comonly vsed in Israel.

But saye this vnto them: The daies are at honde, that euery thinge which hath bene prophecied, shalbe fulfilled. There shall no vision be in vayne, nether eny prophecie fayle amonge the children of Israel: For it
D is I the LORDE, that speake it: and what so euer I y LORDE speake, it shal be performed, and not be slacke in commynge.

Yee euen in youre dayes (O ye frauwarde housholde) will I deuyse some thinge, & bringe it to passe, saieth the LORDE God. And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Beholde, thou sonne of man: The house of Israel saye in this maner: Tush, as for the vision that he hath sene, it will be many a daye or it come to passe: Is it farre off yet, the thinge that he prophecieth. Therfore saye vnto them: Thus saieth the LORDE God: All my wordes shal nomore be slacke: Loke what I speake, that same shal come to passe, saieth the LORDE.

The XIII. Chapter.

A The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayinge: Thou sonne of man, Speake prophecie agaynst those prophetes, that preach in Israel: and saye thou vnto them that prophecie out of their owne hertes: Heare the worde of the LORDE, thus saieth the LORDE God: Wo be vnto those folish prophetes, that folowe their owne spirite, and speake, where they se nothinge. O Israel, thy prophetes are like the foxes vpon the drie felde: For they stonde not in the gappes, nether make they an hedge for the house of Israel, that men might abyde the parell in the daye of the LORDE. Vayne thinges they se, and tell lies, to mayntene their preachinges withall. The LORDE (saye they) hath spoken it, when in very dede the LORDE hath not sent them. Vayne visions haue ye sene, and spoken false prophecies, when ye saye: the LORDE hath spoken it, where as I neuer sayde it.

B Therfore, thus saieth the LORDE God: Because youre wordes be vayne, and ye seke out lies: Beholde, I wil vpon you, saieth the LORDE. Myne hondes shal come vpon the prophetes, that loke out vayne thinges, and preach lies: they shal not be in the councell of my people, ner written in the boke of the house of Israel, nether shal they come in the londe of Israel: that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE God. And that for this cause: they haue disceaued my people, and tolde them of peace, where no peace was. One setteth vp a wall, and they dawbe it with lowse claye. Therfore tell them which dawbe it with vntempered morter, that it shall fall. For there shal come a greate shuwer of rayne, greate stones shall fall vpon it, and a sore storme of wynde shal breake it, so shal the wall come downe. Shal it not then be sayde vnto you: where is now the morter, that ye dawbed it withall?

C Therfore thus saieth the LORDE God: I will breake out in my wroth full displeasure with a stormy wynde, so that in myne anger there shal come a mightie shuwer of rayne, and hale stones in my wrath, to destroye withall.

As for the wall, that ye haue dawbed with vntempered morter, I wil breake it downe, and make it euen with the grounde: so that the foundacion therof shal remoue, and it shal fall yee and ye youre selues shall perish in the middest therof: to lerue you for to knowe, that I am the LORDE. Thus wil I perfourme my wrath vpon this wall, and vpon them that haue dawbed it with vntempered morter, and then will I saye vnto you: The wall is gone, and the dawbers are awaye. These are the prophetes of Israel, which prophecie vnto the cite of Jerusalem, and loke out visions of peace for them, where as no peace is, saieth the LORDE God. Wherfore (o thou sonne of man) set thy face agaynst the doughters of thy people, which prophecie out of their owne hertes: and speake thou prophecie agaynst them, and saye: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Wo vnto you, that sowe pilowes vnder all armholes, and bolsters vnder the heades both of yonge and olde, to catch soules withall. For when ye haue gotten the soules of my people in youre captiuyte, ye promyse them life, and dishonoure me to my people, for an hand full of barly, and for a pece of bred: when ye kyll the soules of them that dye not, and promyse life to them, that lyue not: Thus ye dissemble with my people, which beleueth your lies.

Wherfore thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil also vpo the pillowes, wherwith ye catch the soules in flyenge: them will I take from youre armes, and let the soules go, that ye catch in flyenge. Youre bolsters also wil I teare in peces, and delyuer my people out of youre honde: so that they shal come no more in youre hodes to be spoyled, and ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE. Seinge that with youre lyes ye discomforte the herte of the righteous, whom I haue not discomforted agayne: For so moch as ye corage the honde of the wicked, so that he maye not turne from his wicked waye, and lyue: therfore shal ye spie out nomore vanyte, ner prophecie youre owne gessinges: for I wil delyuer my people out of youre honde, that ye maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The XIIII. Chapter.

There resorted vnto me certayne of the elders of Israel, and sat downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, these men beare their Idols in their hertes, and go purposly vpon the stomblinge block of their owne wickednesse: how darre they then aske councell at me? Therfore speake vnto them, and saye: thus saieth the LORDE God: Euery man of the house of Israel that beareth his Idols in his herte, purposynge to stomble in his owne wickednesse, and commeth to a prophet, to enquere eny thinge at me by him: vnto that man wil I the LORDE myself geue answere, accordinge to the multitude of his Idols: that the house of Israel maye be snarred in their owne hertes, because they be clene gone from me, for their Idols sakes.

Wherfore, tell the house of Israel: thus saieth the LORDE God: Be conuerted, forsake youre Idols, and turne youre faces from all yͤ abhominacions. For euery man (whether he be of the house of Israel, or a straunger, that sogeourneth in Israel) which departeth from me, and carieth Idols in his herte, purposinge to go still stomblinge in his owne wickednesse, and commeth to a prophet, for to aske councell at me thorow him: vnto ỹ man wil I the LORDE geue answere, by myne owne self.

I wil set my face agaynst that man, and wil make him to be an example for other, yee and a comon byworde: and wil rote him out of my people, that he maye knowe, how ỹ I am the LORDE. And yf that prophet be disceaued, when he telleth him a worde: then I the LORDE myself haue disceaued that prophet, and wil stretch forth myne honde vpon him, to rote him out of my people of Israel: and they both shall be punyshed for their wickednesse.

Accordinge to ỹ synne of him that axeth, shal the synne of the prophet be: that ỹ house of Israel be led nomore fro me thorow erroure, and be nomore defyled in their wickednesse: but that they maye be my people, and I their God, saieth the LORDE God. And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, when the londe synneth agaynst me, and goeth forth in wickednesse: I will stretch out myne hõde vpon it, and destroye all the prouysion of their bred, and sende derth vpon them, to destroye man ⁊ beest in the londe. And though Noe, Daniel and Job these three men were amonge them, yet shal they in their righteousnesse delyuer but their owne soules, saieth the LORDE God.

Yf I bringe noysome beestes in to the londe, to waist it vp, and it be so desolate, that no man maye go therin for beestes: yf these three men also were in the londe, as truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE God) they shal saue nether sonnes ner doughters, but be only delyuered them selues: and as for the londe, it shal be waist.

Or, yf I bringe a swearde in to the londe, and charge it to go thorow the londe: so that I slaye downe man and beest in it, and yf these three men were therin: As truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE God) they shal delyuer nether sonnes ner doughters, but only be saued them selues.

Yf I sende a pestilence in to the londe, and poure out my sore indignacion vpon it in blonde, so that I rote out of it both man and beest, and yf Noe, Daniel and Job were therin: As truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE God) they shal delyuer nether sonnes ner doughters, but saue their owne soules in their righteousnesse.

Moreouer, thus saieth the LORDE God: Though I sende my foure trublous plages vpon Jerusalem: the swearde, honger, perlous beestes and pestilence, to destroye man and beest out of it: yet shal there a remnaunt be saued therin, which shal bringe forth their sonnes and doughters. Beholde, they shal come forth vnto you, and ye shall se their waye, and what they take in honde, ⁊ ye shal be cõforted, as touchinge all the plages that I haue brought vpon Jerusalem.

They shall comforte you, when ye se their waye and workes: and ye shal knowe, how ỹ it is not without a cause, that I haue done so agaynst Jerusalem, as I dyd, saieth the LORDE God.

The XV. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: What commeth of the vyne amonge all other trees: and of the wyne stocke, amõge all other tymbre of the groaue: Do mẽ take wodd of it, to make eny worke withall: Or maye there a nale be made of it, to hange eny thinge vpon: Beholde, it is cast in the fyre to be brent, the fyre consumeth both the endes of it, the myddest is brent to asshes. Is it mete then for eny worke: No.

Seinge then, that it was mete for no worke, beinge whole: moch lesse maye there eny thinge be made of it, when the fyre hath consumed and brent it. And therfore thus saieth the LORDE God: Like as I cast the vyne in to the fyre for to be brent, as other trees of the wod: Euen so wil I do with them that dwell in Jerusalem, and set my face agaynst them: they shall go out from the fyre, and yet the fyre shall consume them. Then shal ye knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I set my face agaynst them, and make the londe waist: because they haue so sore offended, saieth the LORDE God.

The XVI. Chapter.

A AGayne, the worde of LORDE spake vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, shewe the cite of Jerusalem their abhominacions, and saye: thus saieth the LORDE God vnto Jerusalem: Thy progeny and kynred came out of the londe of Canaan, thy father was an Amorite, thy mother a Cethite. In ý daye of thy byrth when thou wast borne, ý stringe of thy nauel was not cut of: thou wast not bathed in water to make the clene: Thou wast nether rubbed w̄ salt, ner swedled in cloutes: No man regarded the so moch, as to do eny of these thinges for ý, or to shewe the soch fauoure, but thou wast vterly cast out vpon ý felde, yee despised wast thou in the daye of thy byrth.

Then came I by the, and sawe the troden downe in thine owne bloude, & sayde vnto the: thou shalt be pourged from thine owne bloude, frō thine owne bloude (I saye) shalt thou be clensed. So I planted the, as the blossome of thy felde: thou art growen vp, & wax̄ greate: thou hast gotten a maruelous pleasaunt beutie, thy brestes are come vp, thy hayre is goodly growen, where as thou wast naked and bare afore. Esa.3.a Iere.11.c

B Now when I wente by ý, & loked vpon the: beholde, thy tyme was come, yee eue̅ the tyme to wowe the. Then spred I my clothes ouer the, to couer thy dishonestie: Yee I made an ooth vnto the, & maried my self with the (saieth the LORDE God) & so thou becamest myne owne. Then waßhed I the with water, & pourged thy bloude from the. I anoynted the with oyle, I gaue the chaunge of raymentes, I made the shues of Taxus lether: I gyrthed ý aboute w̄ white sylcke, I clothed the with kerchues, I decked the w̄ costly apparell, I put rynges vpon thy fyngers: a chayne aboute thy necke, spāges vpō thy foreheade, eare rynges vpon thyne eares, & set a beutifull crowne vpon thine heade. Thus wast thou deckte with syluer & golde, & thy rayment was of fyne white sylke, of nedle worke & of dyuerse colours. Iere.3.a Ose.2.c

Thou dideste eate nothinge but symnels, honny & oyle: maruelous goodly wast thou & beutifull, yee euen a very Quene wast thou: In so moch, that thy beuty was spoken of amonge the Heithen, for thou wast excellēt in my beuty, which I put vpō the, saieth the LORDE God. But thou hast put confidēce in thine owne beuty, & played the harlot, when thou haddest gotten the a name. Thou hast committed whordome, with all that wente by the, & hast fulfilled their desyres: Yet thou hast taken thy garmētes of dyuerse colours, & decke thine aulters therwith, where vpon thou mighteste fulfill thine whordome, of soch a fashion, as neuer was done, ner shalbe. The goodly ornamētes & Jewels which I gaue the of myne owne golde and syluer, hast thou take, & made the mēs ymages of, and committed whordome withall.

Thy garmentes of dyuerse colours hast thou taken, and decke them therwith: myne oyle & incense hast thou set before them. My meate which I gaue the, as symnels, oyle & hony: (to fede the withall) that hast thou set before them, for a swete sauoure. And it came also to passe, saieth the LORDE God. Thou hast take thine owne sonnes & doughters, whom thou haddest begotten vnto me, and these hast thou offred vp vnto them, to be their meate. Is this but a small whordome of thine (thinkest thou) that thou slewest my children, and geuest them ouer, to be offred vnto them? And yet in all thy abhominacions and whordome, thou hast not remembred the dayes of thy youth, how naked and bare thou wast at that tyme, & troden downe in thine owne bloude. After all these thy wickednesses (wo wo vnto the, saieth ý LORDE) thou hast buylded thy stewes and bordel houses in euery place: yee at the heade of euery strete hast thou buylded the an aulter. Thou hast made thy beuty to be abhorred, thou hast layed out thy legges to euery one that came by, and multiplied thine whordome. Thou hast committed fornication with the Egipcians thy neghbours, which haue moch flesh: & thus hast thou vsed thine whordome, to anger me.

Beholde, I will stretch out myne honde ouer the, and wil mynish thy stoare of foode, and delyuer the ouer in to the willes of the Philistynes thine enemies, which are ashamed of thy abhominable waye. Thou hast played the whore also with the Assirians, which might not satisfie the: Yee thou hast played the harlot, & not had ynough. Thou hast thou still cōmitted thy fornicacion from the londe of Canaan vnto the Caldees, and yet thy lust not satisfied. How shulde I circumcide thine herte (saieth the LORDE God) seinge thou doest all these thinges, thou impudent whore: buyldinge thy stewes at the heade of euery strete, and thy brodel houses in all places? Thou hast not bene as an other whore, ý maketh booste of hir wynnynge: but as a wife ý breaketh wedlocke, & taketh other in steade of hir hußbōde. Giftes are geuen to all other whores, but thou geuest rewardes vnto all thy louers: & offrest them gyftes, to come vnto the out of all places, & to committe fornicacio with the. It is come to passe with the in thy whordomes, contrary to the vse of other women: yee there hath no soch fornicacion bene committed after the, seinge that thou profrest gyftes vnto other, & no rewarde is geuen the: this is a contrary thinge. Therfore heare the worde of the LORDE, o thou harlot: Thus saieth the LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast spēt thy moneye, & discouered thy shame, thorow thy whordome with all thy louers, and with all the Idols of thy abhominacions in the blonde of thy children, whom thou hast geuen them: Beholde therfore, I wil gather together all thy louers, vnto whom thou hast made thy self comon: yee & all them whom thou fauourest, and euery one that thou hatest: and will discouer thy shame before thē, that they all maye se thy fylthines.

Moreouer, I wil iudge the as a breaker of wedlocke and a murthurer, and recompence the thine owne blonde in wrath and gelousy. I wil geue the ouer into their power, that shal breake downe thy stewes, and destroye thy brodel houses: they shal stripe the out of thy clothes, all thy fayre & beutifull Jewels shal they take from the, and so let the syt naked & bare: Yee they shal bringe the comon people vpon the, which shal stone the, & slaye the downe with their swerdes. They shall burne vp thy houses, and punysh the in the sight of many womē. Thus wil I make thy whordome to ceasse, so that thou shalt geue out no mo rewardes.

Shulde I make my wrath to be still, take my gelousy from the, be content, and no more to be displeased: seinge thou remembrest not the dayes of thy youth, but hast prouoked me to wrath in all these thinges: Beholde therfore, I wil bringe thine owne wayes vpon thine heade, saieth the LORDE God: how be it, I neuer dyd vnto the, accordinge to thy wickednesse and all thy abhominacions. Beholde, all they y vse comon prouerbes, shall vse this prouerbe also agaynst the: Soch a mother, soch a doughter.

Thou art euen thy mothers owne doughter, that hath cast of hir houßbonde and hir children: Yee thou art the sister of thy sisters, which forsoke their huß bōdes and their children. Youre mother is a Cethite, and youre father an Amorite. Thine eldest sister is Samaria, she and hir doughters that dwel vpō thy left honde.

But thy yongest sister that dwelleth on y right hōde, is Sodoma and hir doughters. Yet hast thou not walked after their wayes, ner done after their abhominacions: But in all thy wayes thou hast bene more corrupte then they.

As truly as I lyue, saieth the LORDE God: Sodoma thy sister with hir doughters, hath not done so euel, as thou and thy doughters. Beholde, the synnes of thy sister Sodoma were these: Pryde, fulnesse of meate, abundaunce and Idilnesse: these thinges had she and hir doughters. Besydes that, they reached not their honde to the poore and nedy, but were proude, and dyd abhominable thinges before me: therfore I toke them awaye, when I had sene it. Neither hath Samaria done half of thy synnes, yee thou hast exceaded them in wickednesse: In so moch that in comparison of all the abhominacions which thou hast done, thou hast made thy sisters good women. Therfore beare thine owne shame, thou that in synne hast ouercome thy sisters: seinge thou hast done so abhominably, that they were better then thou. Be ashamed therfore (I saye) and beare thine owne confucion, thou that makest thy sisters good women. Gene. 18. Gene. 19. Iere. 3. c

As for their captiuyte, namely the captiuyte of Sodoma and hir dougters: the captiuyte of Samaria and hir doughters: I wil bringe them agayne, so will I also bringe agayne thy captiuyte amōge them: that thou mayest take thine owne confucion vpon the, and be ashamed of all that thou hast done, and to comforte them. §

Thus thy sisters (namely) Sodoma and hir doughters: Samaria and hir doughters with y selfe & thy doughters, shalbe brought agayne to youre olde estate. Whē thou wast in thy pryde, and before thy wickednesse came to light: thou woldest not heare speake of thy sister Sodoma, vntill the tyme that the Sirians with all their townes, and the Philistynes with all that lye rounde abōte them, brought the to shame and confucion: that thou mightest beare thine owne fylthynes and abhominacion, saieth the LORDE.

For thus saieth the LORDE God: I shulde (by right) deale with the, as thou hast done. Thou hast despysed the ooth, and broken the couenaunte. Neuertheles, I wil remembre the couenaunt, that I made with the in thy youth, in so moch that it shall be an euerlastinge couenaunt: So that thou also remembre thy wayes, and be ashamed of thē: then shalt thou receaue of me thy elder and yonger sisters, whom I wil make thy dough

c.31.e b.8.b ters, and that beside thy couenaunt. And so I wil renue my couenaunt with the, ye thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE: that thou mayest thincke vpō it, be ashamed, and excuse thine owne confucion nomore: when I haue forgeuen the, all that thou hast done, saieth the LORDE God.

The XVII. Chapter.

A THe worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: put forth a darcke speakynge and a parable, vnto the house of Israel, and saye: Thus saieth the LORDE God: There came a greate Aegle with greate wynges, yee wt mightie longe wynges, and full of fethers of dyuerse colours, vpon the mount of Libanus, and toke a braunch from a Cedre tre, and brake of the toppe of his twygge, and caried it into the londe of Canaan, and set it in a cite of marchauntes. He toke also a braunch of the londe, and planted it in a frutefull grounde, he brought it vnto greate waters, & set it as a willye tre therby. Then dyd it growe, and was a greate wyne stocke, but lowe by the grounde: thus there came of it a vyne, and it brought forth blossomes, & spred out braunches.

But there was another Aegle, a greate one, which had greate wynges and many fethers: and beholde, ye rotes of this vyne had an hūger after him, and spred out his braunches towarde him, to water his frutes: Nevertheles it was plāted vpon a good grounde beside greate waters: so that (by reason) it shulde haue brought out braunches and B frute, and haue bene a goodly vyne. Speake thou therfore, thus saieth the LORDE God: Shal this vyne prospere? shal not his rotes be pluckte out, his frute broken of, his grene braunches wythered and fade awaye? yee without ether stronge arme or many people, shal it be plucked vp by the rotes. Beholde, it was planted: shall it prospere therfore? Shall it not be dryed vp and withered, yee euen in the shutinge out of his blossomes, as soone as ye east wynde bloweth?

Moreouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Speake to that frauwarde housholde: knowe ye not, what these thinges do signifie? Tell them: Beholde, the kinge of Babilon came to Jerusalem, and toke the kinge & his prynces, and ledde them to Babilon.

He toke of the kinges sede, and made a couenaunt with him, and toke an ooth of him: The prynces of the londe toke he with him also, that the londe might be holden in subiection, and not to rebelle, but kepe the couenaunt, and fulfill it. But he fell from him, & sent his Embassitours into Egipte, that he might haue horses & moch people. Shulde that prospere? Shulde he be kepte safe, that doth soch thinges? Or shulde he escape, that breaketh his couenaunt?

As truly as I lyue, saieth the LORDE God: He shal dye at Babilon, in ye place where the kinge dwelleth, that made him kinge whose ooth he hath despised, and whose couenaunt he hat broken. Nether shall pharao with his greate hoost and multitude of people, maynteyne him in the warre: when they cast vp diches, and set vp bulwerkes to destroye moch people. Forseinge he hath despysed the ooth, and broken the couenaunt (whereas he yet gaue his honde therupon) and done all these thinges, he shall not escape.

Therfore thus saieth the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will bringe myne ooth that he hath despysed, and my couenaunt that he hath broken, vpon his owne heade. I wil cast my net aboute him, and catch him in my yarne. To Babilon will I cary him, there will I punysh him, because of the greate offence that he made me. As for those yt fle from him out of ye hoost, they shalbe slayne with the sweard. The residue shalbe scatred towarde all the wyndes: and ye shal knowe, that I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Thus saieth the LORDE God: I will also take a braunch from an hie Cedre tre, and will set it, and take the vppermost twygge, that yet is but tendre, and plante it vpon an hie hill: Namely, vpon the hie hill of Sion will I plante it: that it maye bringe forth twygges, and geue frute, and be a greate Cedre tre: so that all maner of foules maye byde in it, and make their nestes vnder the shadowe of his braunches.

And all the trees of the felde shall knowe, that I the LORDE haue brought downe the hie tre, and set the lowe tre vp: that I haue dryed vp the grene tre, and made the drye tre to florish: Euen I the LORDE ye spake it, haue also brought it to passe.

The XVIII. Chapter.

THe worde of the LORDE came vnto me, on this maner: what meane ye by this comon prouerbe, that ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: The fathers haue eaten soure grapes, and the childrēs teth are set on edge? As truly as I lyue, saieth ye LORDE God, ye shal vse this bywordē nomore in Israel.

Beholde, all soules are myne. Like as the father is myne, so is ỹ sonne myne also. The soule that synneth, shal dye. Yf a man be god
ly, and do the thinge that is equall & right,
(he eateth not vpon the hilles: he lifteth not
his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defy-
leth not his neghbours wife: he medleth w̄
no menstruous woman: he greueth no body:
he geueth his detter his pledge agayne: he
taketh none other mans good by violēce: he
parteth his mete with the hongrie: he clo-
theth the naked: he lendeth nothinge vpon
vsury: he taketh nothinge ouer: he withdra-
weth his honde from doinge wronge: he hād
leth faithfully betwixte man & man: he wal-
beth in my commaundementes, & kepeth my lawes, & performeth thē faithfully:) This is a rightuous mā, he shal surely lyue, saieth
the LORDE God.

Yf he now get a sonne, that is a murthu-rer, a shedder of blonde: yf he do one of these thinges (though he do not all) he eateth v-
pon the hilles: he defyleth his neghbours
wife: he greueth the poore and nedy: he rob-
beth and spoyleth: he geueth not the detter
his pledge agayne: he lifteth vp his eyes vn
to Idols, & medleth with abhominable thin-
ges: he lendeth vpon vsury, and taketh more ouer. Shal this man lyue? He shal not lyne. Seinge he hath done all these abhomina cions, he shall dye: his blonde shalbe vpon
him.

Now yf this man get a sonne also, that seithall this fathers synnes, which he hath done: and feareth, nether doth soch like: Namely, he eateth not vpon the mountaynes: he lifteth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neghbours wife: he
vexeth no man: he kepeth no mans pledge:
he nether spoyleth, ner robbeth eny man: he
dealeth his meate with the hungrie: he clo-
theth the naked: he oppresseth not the poo-
re: he receaueth no vsury, ner eny thinge ouer: he kepeth my lawes, and walketh in my commaundementes: This man shal not dye
in his fathers synne, but shall lyue without fayle. As for his father: because he oppressed and spoyled his brother, and dyd wycked
ly amonge his people: lo, he is deed in his ow
ne synne. And yet saye ye: Wherfore thē shul
de not this sonne beare his fathers synne?
Therfore: because the sonne hath done equy
te and right, hath kepte all my commaunde-mentes, and done them: therfore, shall he ly-
ue in dede.

The same soule ỹ synneth, shall dye. The
sonne shal not beare the fathers offence, ne-
nether shal the father beare the sonnes offence. The rightuousnes of the rightuous shall be vpon himself, and the wickednes of the wicked shal be vpon him self also. But yf ỹ
vngodly will turne awaye, from all his syn-
nes that he hath done, and kepe all my com-
maundemētes, and do the thinge ỹ is equall & right: doutles he shall lyue, and not dye. As for all his synnes that he dyd before, they shall not be thought vpon: but in his righ-tuousnes that he hath done, he shall lyue. For haue I eny pleasure in the death of a synner, saieth the LORDE God? but rather that
he conuerte, and lyue?

Agayne: yf the rightuous turne awaye
from his rightuousnes, and do iniquyte, acor
dinge to all the abhominacions, that ỹ wicked mā doth: shal he lyue? All the rightuous-nes that he hath done, shall not be thought
vpō: but in the sawte that he hath offended
withall, and in the synne that he hath done,
he shal dye.

And yet ye saye: Tush, the waye of ỹ LOR
DE is not indifferēt. Heare therfore ye house of Israel: Is not my waye right? Or, are not youre wayes rather wicked? When a rightuous mā turneth awaye from his righ
tuousnesse, and medleth with vngodlynes:
he must dye therin: Yee for the vnrightuous-
nes that he hath done, must he dye. Agayne:
when the wicked man turneth awaye from his wickednesse, that he hath done, and doth
the thinge which is equall and right: he shal
saue his soule alyue. For in so moch as he remembreth himself, and turneth him from all
the vngodlynes, that he hath vsed, he shall
lyue, and not dye.

And yet saieth the house of Israel: Tush,
the waye of the LORDE is not equall. Are my wayes vnright, o ye house of Israel? Are not youre wayes rather vnequall? As for me, I wil iudge euery man, acordinge to his
wayes, O ye house of Israel, saieth the LOR DE God. Wherfore, be converted, and turne
you clene from all youre wickednesse, so shal
there no synne do you harme. Cast awaye frō
you all youre vngodlynesse, that ye haue done: make you new hertes and a new spirite.
Wherfore wil ye dye, O ye house of Israel?
seynge I haue no pleasure in ỹ death of him
that dyeth, saieth the LORDE God. Turne
you then, and ye shal lyue.

ters, and that beside thy couenaunt. And so I wil renue my couenaunt with the, ye thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE: that thou mayest thincke vpō it, be ashamed, and excuse thine owne confucion nomore: when I haue forgeuen the, all that thou hast done, saieth the LORDE God.

The XVII. Chapter.

A

THe worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man: put forth a darcke speakynge and a parable, vnto the house of Israel, and saye: Thus saieth the LORDE God: There came a greate Aegle with greate wynges, yee w mightie longe wynges, and full of fethers of dyuerse colours, vpon the mount of Libanus, and toke a braunch from a Cedre tre, and brake of the toppe of his twygge, and caried it into the londe of Canaan, and set it in a cite of marchauntes. He toke also a braunch of the londe, and planted it in a frutefull grounde, he brought it vnto greate waters, & set it as a willye tre therby. Then dyd it growe, and was a greate wyne stocke, but lowe by the grounde: thus there came of it a vyne, and it brought forth blossomes, & spred out braunches.

an.7.a

But there was another Aegle, a greate one, which had greate wynges and many fethers: and beholde, ye rotes of this vyne had an hūger after him, and spred out his braunches towarde him, to water his frutes: Nevertheles it was plāted vpon a good grounde beside greate waters: so that (by reason) it shulde haue brought out braunches and

frute, and haue bene a goodly vyne. Speake thou therfore, thus saieth the LORDE God: Shal this vyne prospere? shal not his rotes be pluckte out, his frute broken of, his grene braunches wythereed and fade awaye? yee without ether stronge arme or many people, shal it be plucked vp by the rotes. Beholde, it was planted: shall it prospere therfore? Shall it not be dryed vp and withered, yee euen in the shutinge out of his blossomes, as soone as ye east wynde bloweth?

Moreouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me sayenge: Speake to that frauwarde housholde: knowe ye not, what these thinges do signifie? Tell them: Beholde, the kinge of Babilon came to Jerusalem, and toke the kinge & his prynces, and ledde them to Babilon.

He toke of the kinges sede, and made a couenaunt with him, and toke an ooth of him: The prynces of the londe toke he with him also, that the londe might be holden in subiection, and not to rebelle, but kepe the couenaunt, and fulfill it. But he fell from him, & sent his Embassitours into Egipte, that he might haue horses & moch people. Shulde that prospere? Shulde he be kepte safe, that doth soch thinges? Or shulde he escape, that breaketh his couenaunt?

As truly as I lyue, saieth the LORDE God: He shal dye at Babilon, in ye place where the kinge dwelleth, that made him kinge whose ooth he hath despised, and whose couenaunt he hat broken. Nether shall Pharao with his greate hooste and multitude of people, maynteyne him in the warre: when they cast vp diches, and set vp bulworkes to destroye moch people. For seinge he hath despysed the ooth, and broken the couenaunt (whereas he yet gaue his honde therupon) and done all these thinges, he shall not escape.

Therfore thus saieth the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will bringe myne ooth that he hath despysed, and my couenaunt that he hath broken, vpon his owne heade. I wil cast my net aboute him, and catch him in my yarne. To Babilon will I cary him, there will I punysh him, because of the greate offence that he made me. As for those y fle from him out of ye hooste, they shalbe slayne with the swearde. The residue shalbe scatred towarde all the wyndes: and ye shal knowe, that I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Thus saieth the LORDE God: I will also take a braunch from an hie Cedre tre, and will set it, and take the vppermost twygge, that yet is but tendre, and plante it vpon an hie hill: Namely, vpon the hie hill of Sion will I plante it: that it maye bringe forth twygges, and geue frute, and be a greate Cedre tre: so that all maner of foules maye byde in it, and make their nestes vnder the shadowe of his braunches.

And all the trees of the felde shall knowe, that I the LORDE haue brought downe the hie tre, and set the lowe tre vp: that I haue dryed vp the grene tre, and made the drye tre to florish: Euen I the LORDE ye spake it, haue also brought it to passe.

The XVIII. Chapter.

THe worde of the LORDE came vnto me, on this maner: what meane ye by this comon prouerbe, that ye vse in the londe of Israel, sayenge: The fathers haue eaten soure grapes, and the childrēs teth are set on edge? As truly as I lyue, saieth ye LORDE God, ye shal vse this bywordе nomore in Israel.

Beholde, all soules are myne. Like as the father is myne, so is ỹ sonne myne also. The soule that synneth, shal dye. Yf a man be god
ly, and do the thinge that is equall & right,
(he eateth not vpon the hilles: he lifteth not
his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defy-
leth not his neghbours wife: he medleth w
no menstruous woman: he greueth no body:
he geueth his detter his pledge agayne: he
taketh none other mans good by violēce: he
parteth his mete with the hongrie: he clo-
theth the naked: he lendeth nothinge vpon
vsury: he taketh nothinge ouer: he withdra-
weth his honde from doinge wronge: he hād
leth faithfully betwixte man & man: he wal-
beth in my commaundementes, & kepeth my
lawes, & performeth thē faithfully:) This
is a rightuous mā, he shal surely lyue, saieth
the LORDE God.

Yf he now get a sonne, that is a murthu-rer, a shedder of bloude: yf he do one of these thinges (though he do not all) he eateth v-
pon the hilles: he defyleth his neghbours
wife: he greueth the poore and nedy: he rob-
beth and spoyleth: he geueth not the detter
his pledge agayne: he lifteth vp his eyes vn
to Idols, & medleth with abhominable thin-
ges: he lendeth vpon vsury, and taketh more ouer. Shal this man lyue? He shal not ly-
ue. Seinge he hath done all these abhomina cions, he shall dye: his bloude shalbe vpon
him.

Now yf this man get a sonne also, that seithall this fathers synnes, which he hath
done: and feareth, nether doth soch like: Namely, he eateth not vpon the mountaynes: he lifteth not his eyes vp to the Idols of Israel: he defyleth not his neghbours wife: he
vexeth no man: he kepeth no mans pledge:
he nether spoyleth, ner robbeth eny man: he
dealeth his meate with the hungrie: he clo-
theth the naked: he oppresseth not the poo-
re: he receaueth no vsury, ner eny thinge o-
uer: he kepeth my lawes, and walketh in my
commaundementes: This man shal not dye
in his fathers synne, but shall lyue without
fayle. As for his father: because he oppressed and spoyled his brother, and dyd wycked
ly amonge his people: lo, he is deed in his ow
ne synne. And yet saye ye: Wherfore thē shul
de not this sonne beare his fathers synne?
Therfore: because the sonne hath done equy
te and right, hath kepte all my commaunde-
mentes, and done them: therfore, shall he ly-
ue in dede.

The same soule ỹ synneth, shall dye. The
sonne shal not beare the fathers offence, ne-
nether shal the father beare the sonnes offen
ce. The rightuousnes of the rightuous shall
be vpon himself, and the wickednes of the
wicked shal be vpon him self also. But yf ỹ
vngodly will turne awaye, from all his syn-
nes that he hath done, and kepe all my com-
maundemētes, and do the thinge ỹ is equall & right: doutles he shal lyue, and not dye. As for all his synnes that he dyd before, they
shall not be thought vpon: but in his righ-tuousnes that he hath done, he shal lyue. For
haue I eny pleasure in the death of a syn-
ner, saieth the LORDE God? but rather that
he conuerte, and lyue?

Agayne: yf the rightuous turne awaye
from his rightuousnes, and do iniquyte, acor
dinge to all the abhominacions, that ỹ wicked mā doth: shal he lyue? All the rightuous-
nes that he hath done, shall not be thought
vpō: but in the fawte that he hath offended
withall, and in the synne that he hath done,
he shal dye.

And yet ye saye: Tush, the waye of ỹ LOR
DE is not indifferēt. Heare therfore ye house of Israel: Is not my waye right? Or, are not youre wayes rather wicked? When a rightuous mā turneth awaye from his righ
tuousnesse, and medleth with vngodlynes:
he must dye therin: Yee for the vnrightuous-
nes that he hath done, must he dye. Agayne:

his wickednesse, that he hath done, and doth
the thinge which is equall and right: he shal
saue his soule alyue. For in so moch as he remembreth himself, and turneth him from all
the vngodlynes, that he hath vsed, he shall
lyue, and not dye.

And yet saieth the house of Israel: Tush,
the waye of the LORDE is not equall. Are
my wayes vnright, o ye house of Israel? Are not youre wayes rather vnequall? As for me, I wil iudge euery man, acordinge to his
wayes, O ye house of Israel, saieth the LOR

you clene from all youre wickednesse, so shal
there no synne do you harme. Cast awaye frō
you all youre vngodlynesse, that ye haue done: make you new hertes and a new spirite.
Wherfore wil ye dye, O ye house of Israel?
seynge I haue no pleasure in ỹ death of him
that dyeth, saieth the LORDE God. Turne
you then, and ye shal lyue.

whelpes: One of hir whelpes she brought vp, & it became a lyon: it lerned to spoyle, and to deuoure folke. The Heithen herde of him, & toke him in their nettes, & brought him in chaynes vnto the londe of Egipte.

Now when the damme sawe, that all hir hope & comforth was awaye, she toke another of hir whelpes, and made a lyon of him: which wente amonge the lyons, & became a fearce lyon: lerned to spoyle and to deuoure folcke: he destroyed their palaces, and made their cities waist: In so moch that the whole londe and euery thinge therin, were vtterly desolate, thorow the very voyce of his roaringe.

Then came the Heithen together on euery syde out of all countrees agaynst him, layed their nettes for him, and toke him in
xe. 25. a c 39. c a their pytte. So they bounde him with chaynes, and brought him to the kinge of Babilon: which put him in preson, that his voyce shulde no more be herde vpon the mountaynes of Israel. As for thy mother, she is like a
B vyne in thy blonde, planted by the water syde: hir frutes and braunches are growen out of many waters: hir stalkes were so stronge, that men might haue made staues therof for officers: she grew so hie in hir stalkes.

So when men sawe that she exceaded y heith and multitude of hir braunches, she was roted out in displeasure, and cast downe to the grounde. The East wynde dryed vp hir frute, hir stronge stalkes were broken of, wythered and brent in the fyre. But now she is planted in the wilderneſſe, in a drye and thurstie grounde. And there is a fyre gone out of hir stalkes, which hath bret vp hir braunches and hir frute: so that she hath no mo stronge stalkes, to be staues for officers. This is a piteous and miserable thinge.

The XX. Chapter.

A c. 14. a AN in the vij yeare the x daye of the v Moneth, it happened, that certayne of the elders of Israel came vnto me for to axe counsell at the LORDE, and sat them downe by me. Then came the worde of the LORDE vnto me on this maner: Thou sonne of man: Speake to the elders of Israel, and saye vnto them: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Are ye come hither to axe enythinge at me? As truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE,) I will geue you no answere. Wilt thou not reprooue them (thou sonne of man) wilt thou not reprooue them? Shewe them the abhominacions of their forefathers, & tell the: o. 3. b Thus saieth the LORDE God: In the daye when I chose Israel, and lift vp myne honde vpon the sede of the house of Jacob, & shewed my self vnto them in the londe of Egipte: Yee when I lifte vp myne honde ouer the, and sayde: I am the LORDE youre God, euen in the daye that I lift vp myne honde ouer them, to bringe them out of the londe of Egipte: in to a londe that I had prouyded for them, which floweth with mylcke and hony, and is a pleasaunt lode amonge all other: Then sayde I vnto them: Caste awaye euery man the abhominacions that he hath before him, and defyle not youre selues with the Idols of Egipte, for I am the LORDE youre God.

But they rebelled agaynst me, and wolde not folowe me: to caste awaye euery man the abhominacions of his eyes, and to forsake the Idols of Egipte. Then I made me to poure my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them: yee euen in the myddest of the londe of Egipte. But I wolde not do it, for my names sake: that it shulde not be vnhalowed before the Heithen, amonge whom they dwelt, and amonge whom I shewed my self vnto them, that I wolde bringe them out of the londe of Egipte. Now when I had caried them out of the londe of Egipte, and brought them in to the wilderneſſe: I gaue them my commaundementes, & shewed the my lawes: which who so kepeth shall lyue in them. I gaue them also my holy dayes, to be a token betwixte me and them, and therby to knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haloweth them. And yet the house of Israel rebelled agaynst me in the wilderneſſe, they wolde not walke in my commaundementes, they haue caste awaye my lawes: (which who so kepeth shulde lyue in them,) and my Sabbath daies haue they greatly vnhalowed.

The I made me to poure out my indignacion vpon them, & to consume them in the wilderneſſe. Yet I wolde not do it, for my names sake: lest it shulde be dishonoured before the Heithe, from the which I had caried them awaye. But I swore vnto them in the wilderneſſe, that I wolde not bringe them in to the londe, which I gaue them: a londe that floweth with mylcke & hony, & is a pleasure of all londes: & y because they refused my lawes, & walked not in my comaundemetes, but had vnhalowed my Sabbathes, for their herte was gone after their Idols. Neuertheles myne eye spared the, so y I wolde not vtterly slaye the, & consume the in the wilderneſſe. Moreouer, I sayde vnto their sonnes in y wilderneſſe: walke not in the statutes of yo forefathers, kepe not their ordinaunces, and defyle not youre selues with their Idols, for I am the LORDE youre God. But walke in my statutes, kepe my lawes & do them, halowe my Sabbathes: for they are a token betwitte me & you, that ye maye knowe, how y I am the LORDE. Notwithstōdinge, their sonnes rebelled againste me also: they walked not in my statutes, they kepte not my lawes to fulfill them (which he that doth shall lyue in them) nether halowed they my Sabbath dayes. Thē I made me agayne to poure out my indignacion ouer them, and to satisfie my wrath vpon them in the wildernesse. Nevertheles I withdrewe my honde for my names sake, lest it shulde be vnhalowed amonge the Heithē, before whom I had brought them forth. I lift vp myne honde ouer them also in the wilderneſſe, that I wolde scatre them amonge the Heithen, and strowe them amonge the nacions: because they had not kepte my lawes, but cast asyde my commaundementes, vnhalowed my Sabbathes, and lift vp their eyes to their fathers Idols. Wherfore I gaue them also commaundementes not good, & lawes thorow the which they shulde not lyue, & I vnhalowed them in their owne giftes: (when I appoynted for myself all their first borne) to make them desolate: that they might knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Therfore (O thou sonne of man) tell the house of Israel, thus saieth the LORDE God: Beside all this, youre forefathers haue yet blaſphemed me more, and greatly offended againſt me: For after I had brought them in to the londe, y I promysed to geue them, when they sawe euery hie hill & all the thicke trees: they made there their offringes, and prouoked me with their oblacions, makinge swete sauoures there, & poured out their drinke offeringes. Then I axed them: what haue ye to do with all, that ye go thither? And therfore is it called the hie place vnto this daye. Wherfore, speake vnto the house of Israel: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Ye are euen as vnclene as youre forefathers, & committe whordome also with their abhominacions. In all youre Idols, where vnto ye bringe youre oblacions, & to whose honoure ye burne youre children: ye defyle youre selues, euen vnto this daye: how darre ye thē come, and axe eny question at me? O ye house holde of Israel: As truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE God) ye get no answere of me: & as for the thinge that ye go aboute, it shal not come to passe, where as ye saye: we wil be as the Heithen, & do as other people in the londe, wod & stone wil we worshipe.

As truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE God) I myself, wil rule you with a mightie honde, with a stretched out arme, and with indignacion poured out ouer you: & wil bringe you out of the nacions and londes, wherin ye are scatred: and gather you together with a mightie hōde, with a stretched out arme & wt indignacion poured out vpon you: & wil bringe you into the wildernesse of the people, & there I will reason with you face to face. Like as I punished yo^r forefathers in the wildernesse, so wil I punish you also, saieth the LORDE God. I wil bringe you vnder my iurisdiction, and vnder the bonde of the couenaunt. The forsakers also and the transgressours wil I take from amonge you, & bringe them out of the londe of youre habitacion: as for the londe of Israel, they shall not come in it: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE. E

Go now then (saieth the LORDE God) ye house of Israel, cast awaye, and destroye euery man his Idols: then shal ye heare me, and nomore blaspeme my holy name with youre offrynges and Idols. But vpon my holy hill, enē vpon the hie hill of Israel shal all the house of Israel and all that is in the londe, worshipe me: and in the same place will I fauoure them, and there will I requyre youre heaue offringes, and the firstlinges of youre oblacions, with all youre holy thinges. Esa. 2. c 30. d Ezec. 14. Deu. 12. 14. b

I wil accepte youre swete sauoure, when I bringe you from the nacions, and gather you together out of the londes, wherin ye be scatred: that I maye be halowed in you before the Heithen, and that ye maye knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue brought you in to the londe of Israel: yee in to the same lōde, that I swore to geue vnto youre fore fathers. There shal ye call to remembraunce youre owne wayes and all youre ymaginacions, wherin ye haue bene defyled: and ye shal be displeased with youre owne selues, for all youre wickednes, that ye haue done. And ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE: when I entreate you after myname, not after yo^r wicked wayes, ner accordinge to youre corrupte workes: O ye house of Israel, saieth the LORDE. S Iere. 3. a 18. a 31. c

Moreouer, the worde of y LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of mā, set thy face towarde the south, & speake to the south wynde, and saye to the wodde towarde the souht: heare the worde of the LORDE, thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil kyndle a fyre in the, & shal cõsume the grene trees w^t the drye. No man shal be able to quench his flame, but all that loketh from the south to the north, shal be brent therin: & all flesh shal se, that I the LORDE haue kyndled it, so that no man maye quench it. Then sayde I:

e. 20.b O LORDE, they wil saye of me: Tush, they are but fables, that he telleth.

The XXI. Chapter.

A THe worde of the LORDE came to me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face towarde Jerusalem, speake agaynst the Sanctuary, & prophecie agaynst the londe of Israel, saye to the lõde of Israel: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil vpon the, & wil drawe my swearde out of y sheth, & rote out of y both the righteous & the wicked. Seinge then that I will rote out of the both the righteous & wicked, therfore shal my swearde go out of his sheth, agaynst all flesh from the north to the south: that all flesh maye knowe, how that I the LORDE haue drawen my swearde out of the sheth, & it shal not be put in agayne.

Mourne therfore (o thou sonne of man) y thy loynes crack withall, yee mourne bytterly for them: And yf they saye, wherfore mournest thou? Then tell them: for the tydinges that commeth, at the which all hertes shall melt, all hondes shal be letten downe, all stomackes shal faynte, and all knees shall waxe feble. Beholde, it commeth & shal be fulfilled, saieth the LORDE God.

B Agayne, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophecie, and speake: Thus saieth the LORDE God: speake, the swearde is sharpened & wel scoured. Sharpened is it for the slaughter, &
10.a scoured y it maye be bright. O, the destroyenge staff of my sonne, shal bringe downe all wodde. He hath put his swearde to y dightinge, y good holde maye be take of it. This swearde is sharpened & dight, y it maye be geuen in to the honde of the manslayer.

Crie (o thou sonne of man) and howle, for this swearde shal smyte my people, & all the rulers in Israel, which with my people shall be slayne downe to the grounde thorow this swearde. Smyte thou vpõ thy thee, for, wherfore shulde not the plage & staff of iudgmẽt come? Prophecy thou sonne of man, & smyte thine hõdes togetther: make the swearde two edged, yee make it thre edged, y manslayers swearde, that swearde of the greate slaughter, which shal smyte them, euen in their preuy chambres: to make them abasshed & fayn te at the hertes, & in all gates to make some of them fall. O how bright and sharpe is it, how wel dight & mete for y slaughter? Get the to some place alone, ether vpon the right honde or on the leste, whither so ever thy face turneth. I wil smyte my hondes together also, and satisfie my worthy full indignacion: Euen I the LORDE haue sayde it.

The worde of the LORDE came yet vnto me agayne, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, make the two stretes, that the swearde of y kinge of Babilõ maye come. Both these stretes shall go out of one londe. He shal set him vp a place, at the heade of the strete shal he chose him out a corner. Make y a strete, that the swearde maye come towarde Rabath of the Ammonites, and to the stronge cite of Jerusalem. For the kinge of Babilon shall stonde in the turnynge of the waye, at the heade of the two stretes: to axe councell at the soythsayers, castinge the lottes with his arowes, to axe councell at the Idols, and to loke in the lyuer. But the soythsayenge shall poynte to the right syde vpon Jerusalem, that he maye set men of warre, to smyte it with a greate noyse, to crie out Alarum, to set batellrammes agaynst the gates, to graue vp dyches, & to make bulwerkes.

Neuertheles, as for y soythsayenge, they shall holde it but for vanite, euen as though a ieste were tolde them: Yee and they themselues remembre their wickednesse, so that by right they must be take and wonne. Therfore saieth the LORDE God: For so moch as ye youre selues shewe youre offence, and haue opened youre wickednesse, so that in all youre workes men maye se youre synnes: Yee in so moch (I saye) that ye youre selues haue made mencion therof, ye shalbe taken by violence.

O thou shamefull wicked gyde of Israel, whose daye is come: euen the tyme that wickednesse shall haue an ende: Thus saieth the LORDE God: take awaye the myter, and put of the crowne, and so is it awaye: the humble is exalted, and the pronde brought lowe. Punysh, punysh, yee punysh them will I, and destroye them: and that shall not be fulfilled, vntill he come, to whom the iudgment belongeth, and to whom I haue geue it. And thou (o sonne of man) prophecy, & speake: Thus saieth the LORDE God to the children of Ammon, & to their blasphemy, speake thou: The swearde, the swearde, is drawen forth alredy to the slaughter, & scoured that it glistreth (because thou hast loked the vanities, & prophecied lyes) y it maye come vpon thy necke, like as vpō the other vngodly, which be slayne: whose daye came, when their wickednesse was full.

Though it were put vp agayne into the sheath, yet will I punysh the, in the londe where thou wast norished & borne, and pour my indignacion vpon the, and will blowe vpon the in the fyre of my wrath, and delyuer the vnto cruell people, which are lerned to destroye. Thou shalt fede the fyre, and yͤ blonde shall be shed in the londe, that thou mayest be put out of remembraunce. Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

The XXII. Chapter.

MOreouer, the worde of yͤ LORDE came vnto me, & sayde: Thou sonne of man, wilt thou not reprone this blondthurstie cite? Shewe thē their abhominaciōs, & tell them: Thus saieth the LORDE God: O thou cite, yͤ sheddest blonde in yͤ myddest of the, yͤ thy tyme maye come also: and makest the Idols to defyle the withall. Thou hast made thy self gilty, in yͤ blonde yͤ thou hast shed: & defyled yͤ i yͤ ydols, which thou hast made. Thou hast caused thy daies to drawe nye, & made the tyme of thy yeares to come. Therfore will I make yͤ to be confounded amōge the Heithē, & to be despised in all the lōdes, whether they be nye or farre frō the: they shal laugh yͤ to scorne, thou yͤ hast gotten the soo foule a name, & art full off myschefe. Behelde, the rulers of Israel haue brought euery man his power, to shed blonde in the. In the haue they despised father & mother, in the haue they oppressed the straūger, in the haue they vexed the wyddowe & the fatherlesse. Thou hast despysed my Sāctuary, and vnhalowed my Sabbath. Murtherers are there in the, that shed blonde, & eate vpon the hilles, and in the they vse vnhappynesse.

In yͤ haue they discouered their fathers shame, in the haue they vexed wemen in the vnsickneesse. Euery mā hath dealte shamefully with his neghbours wife, & abhominably defyled his doughter in lawe. In the hath euery man forced his owne sister, euen his fathers doughter. Yee gyftes haue bene receaued in the, to shed blonde. Thou hast taken vsury & encreace, thou hast oppressed thy neghbours by extorcion, and forgotten me, saieth the LORDE God. Behelde, I haue smytten my hondes vpō thy couetousnesse, that thou hast vsed, and vpon the blonde which hath bene shed in the. Is thy herte able to endure it, or maye thy hondes defende themselues, in the tyme that I shall bringe vpon the? Euen I the LORDE that speake it, will bringe it also to passe. Eze. 13. c 15. b

I will scatre the amonge the Heithen, & strowe the aboute in the lōdes, and wil cause thy fylthynesse to ceasse out off the: yee and I will haue the in possession in the sight of the Heithen, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, the house of Israel is turned to drosse. All they that shulde be brasse, tynne, yrō & leade, are in the fyre become drosse. Ther fore, thus saieth the LORDE God: For so moch as ye all are turned in to drosse, beholde: I will bringe you together vnto Jerusalem, like as syluer, brasse, yron, tynne and leade are put together in the fornace, and the fyre blowen there vnder to melt them: Euen so will I gather you, put you in together, and melt you in my wrath and indignacion. I will bringe you together, and kyndle the fyre of my cruell displeasure vnder you, that ye maye be melted therin. Esa. 1. c C

Like as the syluer is melted in the fyre, so shall ye also be melted therin: that ye maye knowe, how that I the LORDE haue poured my wrath vpon you.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayēge: Thou sonne of mā, tell her: Thou art an vnclene londe, which is not rayned vpon in the daye off the cruell wrath: thy prophetes that are in the, are sworne together to deuoure soules, like as a roaringe Lyon, that lyueth by his pray. They receaue riches and good, and make many wyddowes in yͤ. Thy prestes breake my lawe, and defyle my Sanctuary. They put no dyfference betwene the holy and vnholy, nether discerne betwene the clene and vnclene: they turne their eyes fro my Sabbathes, and I am vnhalowed amonge them. Mich. 3. D Leui. 10. Thy rulers in the are like rauyshinge wolues, to shed blonde, and to destroye soules, for their owne covetous lucre. As for thy prophetts, they dawbe with vntempered claye, they se vanities, and prophecie lies vnto them, sayenge: the LORDE God sayeth so, where as the LORDE hath not spoken. The people in the londe vseth wicked extorciō and robbery. They vexe the poore and nedy: and oppresse the straunger agaynst right. And I sought in the londe for a man, that wolde make vp the hedge, and set him self in the gappe before me in the lōdes behalfe, yͤ I shulde not vtterly destroye it: but I coude fynde none. Therfore wil I pou Mich. 3. d Soph. 3. Eze. 13. b Exo. 22. b re out my cruell displeasure vpon them, and burne them in the fyre of my wrath: their owne wayes will I recompence vpō their heades, saieth the LORDE God.

The XXIII. Chapter.

A THe worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, there were two womē, that had one mother: These (when they were yonge) beganne to playe the harlottes in Egipte. There were their brestes brussed, and the pappes off their maydenheade destroyed. The eldest of them was called Oola, and hir yongest sister Ooliba. These two were myne, and bare sonnes and doughters. Their names were, Samaria, and that was Oola: and Jerusalem, that was Ooliba. As for Oola, she beganne to go a whorynge, when I had takē her to me. She was set on fyre vpon hir louers the Assirians, which had to do with her: euen the prynces and lordes, that were deckte in costly araye: fayre yonge men, lusty ryders of horses.

Ezech.20.a

3.Re.15.d

Thus thorow hir whordome, she cleued vnto all the yonge men off Assiria: yee she was madde vpon them, and defyled herselff with all their Idols. Nether ceassed she frō the fornicaciō, that she vsed with the Egipcians: for in hir youth they laye w' her, they brussed the brestes of hir maydenheade, and poured their wordome vpon her. Wherfore, I delyuered her in to ỹ hōdes of hir louers, euen the Assirians, whom she so loued. The se discouered hir shame, toke hir sonnes and doughters, and slewe her with the swearde: An euell name gat she of all people, ād they punyshed her.

4.Re.17.c

Ezech.16.b

B Hir sister Ooliba sawe this, ād destroyed herself w' inordinate loue, more then she, ỹ exceaded hir sister in whordome: she loued ỹ Assirians (which also laye w' her) namely, the prynces ỹ greate lordes, that were clothed w' all maner of gorgious apparell, all lusty horsmen and fayre yonge personnes. Then I sawe, that they both were defyled alike. But she increased still in whordome: for when she sawe men paynted vpon the wall, the ymages off the Caldees set forth with fresh colours, with fayre gyrdles about them, and goodly bonettes vpon their heades, lokynge all like prynces (after ỹ maner of the Babiloniās and Caldees in their owne londe, where they be borne) Immediatly, as soone as she sawe them, she brent in loue vpon them, and sent messāgers for them in to the londe of the Caldees.

Ierem.3.b

4.Re.16.b

Now when the Babiloniās came to her, they laye with her, and defyled her with their whordome, and so was she poluted with them. And when hir lust was abated from them, hir whordome and shame was discouered ỹ sene: then my herte forsoke her, like as my herte was gone from hir sister also. Nevertheles she vsed hir whordome euer the longer the more, and remembred the dayes off hir youth, wherin she had played the harlot in the londe off Egipte: she brent in lust vpon them, whose flesh was like ỹ flesh of Asses, and their sede like the sede off horses. Thus thou hast renued the fylthynesse of thy youth, when thy louers bressed ỹ pappes, and marred thy brestes in Egipte.

Therfore (o Ooliba) thus saieth ỹ LORDE God. I will rayse vp thy louers (with whom thou hast satisfied thy lust) agaynst the, and gather them together rounde aboute the: Namely, the Babilonians, and all the Caldees: Pecod, Schoa and Coa, with all the Assirians: all yonge and fayre louers: prynces and lordes, knyghtes and gentlemen, which be all good horsmen: These shall come vpon the with horses, charettes, ỹ a greate multitude of people: which shal be harnessed aboute the on euery syde, w' brestplates, sheldes and helmettes. I will punysh ỹ before them, yee they thē selues shal punysh the, acordinge to their owne iudgmēt. I will put my gelousy vpon the, so that they shall deale cruelly with the. They shal cut of thy nose and thine eares, and the remnaunt shall fall thorow the swearde. They shall cary awaye thy sonnes and doughters, ỹ therof due shalbe brent in the fyre. Thy shal stripe the out of thy clothes, ỹ cary thy costly Jewels awaye with them.

Thus will I make an ende off thy fylthynesse ỹ whordome, which thou hast brought out of the lōde of Egipte: so that thou shalt turne thine eyes nomore after them, ỹ cast thy mynde nomore vpon Egipte. For thus saieth the LORDE: Beholde, I will deliuer ỹ in to the hōdes of them, whom thou hatest, yee euen in to the hondes of them, with whō thou hast fulfylled thy lust, which shall deale cruelly with ỹ: All thy labour shal they take with them, and leaue the naked and bare, and thus the shame of thy filthy whordome shal come to light. All these thinges shal happen vnto the, because of thy whordome, which thou hast vsed amonge the Gentiles, with whose Idols thou hast defyled ỹ self. Thou hast walked in the waye of thy sister, therfore will I geue the hir cuppe in thy hande.

Thus saieth the LORDE God: Thou shalt drynke off thy sisters cuppe, how depe & farre so euer it be to the botome. Thou shalt be laughed to scorne, and had as greatly in derision, as is possible. Thou shalt be full off dronckennes and sorowe, for the cuppe of ỹ sister Samaria is a cuppe of destruccion & waistinge: the same shalt thou drynke, and suppe it out euē to ỹ dregges, yee thou shalt eate vp the broken peces off it, and so teare thine owne brestes: For euen I haue spoken it, saieth the LORDE God.

Therfore thus saieth ỹ LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast forgottē me, & cast me
E aſyde, so beare now thine owne fylthinesse & whordome. The LORDE sayde moreouer vnto me: Thou sonne of mā, wilt thou not reproue Ola & Oliba: Shewe thē their abhominacions: namely, ỹ they haue brokē their wedlocke, & stayned their hōdes w' blonde: yee euen w' their Idols haue they committed aduoutry, & offred them their owne children (to be deuoured) whō they had borne vnto me. Yee & this haue they done vnto me also: they haue defyled my Sānctuary in that same daye, & haue vnhalowed my Sabbath. For when they had slayne their childrē for their Idols, they came the same daye in to my Sanctuary, to defyle it. Lo, this haue they done in my house. Beside all this, thou hast sent ỹ messaungers for men out of farre coūtrees: and whē they came, thou hast bathed, trymmed and set forth thy selff off the best fashion: thou satteſt vpō a goodly bed, & a table spred before the: wherupon thou hast set myne incense and myne oyle.

G Then was there greate cheare w' her, & the men ỹ were sent frō farre coūtrees ouer the deserte: vnto these they gaue bracelettes vpon their hondes, & set glorious crownes vpon their heades. Then thought I: no doute, these wil vse their harlotry also w' yōder olde whore. And they wente in to her, as vnto a comon harlot: Euen so wente they also to Ola & Oliba, those filthy women.

O ye all that loue vertue and righteousnes, iudge thē, punysh them: as aduoutrers and murtherers ought to be iudged and punyshed. For they are breakers off wedlocke, and the blonde is in their hondes. Wherfore thus saieth the LORDE God: bringe a greate multitude off people vpon them, and make them be scatred and spoyled: these shal stone them, and gorre them with their swerdes. They shal slaye their sonnes and doughters and burne vp their houses with fyre.

Thus will I destroye all soch fylthynes out off the londe: that all women may lerne, not to do after youre vnclēnesse. And so they shall laye youre fylthinesse vpon youre owne selues, and ye shalbe punyshed for the synnes, that ye haue committed with youre Idols: & ye shall knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The XXIIII. Chapter.

A In the ix. yeare, in the x. Moneth, the x. daye off the Moneth, came the worde off the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne off man, wryte vp the name off this daye, yee euē ỹ houre of this present daye: when the kynge of Babilon set himself agaynst Jerusalē. Shewe ỹ obstinate housholde a parable, & speake vnto thē: Thus sayet the LORDE God: Get the a pot, set it on, & poure water in to it: put all the peces together in it, all the good peces: the loyne and the shulder, & fyll it with the best bones. Take one off the best shepe, & an heape off bones withall: let it boyle well, & let the bones seyth well therin. Eze. 17. a / Eze 11. b

With that, sayde the LORDE God on this maner: Wo be vnto the bloudy cite of ỹ pot, Nau. 3. c / Aba. 2. a wherupon the rustynesse hāgeth, and is not yet scoured awaye. Take out the peces that are in it, one after another: there nede no lottes be cast therfore, for the blonde is yet in it
B Vpon a playne drye stone hath she poured it, and not vpon the grounde, that it might be couered with dyst. And therfore haue I letten her poure hir blonde vpon a playne drye stony rocke, because it shulde not be hid, and that I might bringe my wrothfull indignacion and vengeaunce vpon her.

Wherfore, thus saieth ỹ LORDE God: O, wo be vnto that bloudthurstie cite, for whō I wil prepare a heape off wodde: beare thou ỹ bones together, kyndle thou the fyre, seeth the flesh, let all be well soddē, that the bones maye be suckte out. Moreouer, set the pot empty vpon the coales, that it maye be warme and the metall hote: that the fylth and rustynesse maye be consumed. But it will not go off, there is so moch off it: the rustinesse must be brent out. Thy filthinesse is abhominable, for I wolde haue clensed the, but thou woldest not be clensed. Thou canst not be pourged from thine vnclennesse, till I haue poured my wrothfull indignacion vpon the. Euen I the LORDE haue so deuysed: Yee it is come therto allredy, that I will do it. I will not go backe, I will not spare, I wil not be intreated: but acordinge to thy wayes & ymaginacions, thou shalt be punyshed, saieth the LORDE God.

C And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, beholde, I will take awaye the pleasure off thine eyes w' a plage: yet shalt thou nether mourne ner wepe, ner water thy chekes therfore: thou mayest mourne by thy selff alone, but vse no deadly lamentacion. Holde on thy bonet, and put on thy shues vpon thy fete, couer not thy face, and eate no mourners bred. So I spake vnto the people bytymes in the mornynge, and at euen my wyfe dyed: then vpon the nexte morow, I dyd as I was cõmaunded. And y people sayde vnto me: wilt thou not tell vs, what that signifieth, which thou doest? I answered them, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Tell the house of Israel, thus saieth y LODDE God: beholde, I wil suspende my Sanctuary: euẽ the glory of youre power, the pleasure of yo' eyes, and the thinge that ye loue: youre sonnes and doughters whom ye haue left, shal fall thorow the swerde.

D Like as I haue done, so shall ye do also: Ye shal not hyde youre faces, ye shal eate no mourners bred: youre bonettes shal ye haue vpon youre heades, & shues vpon youre fete Ye shal nether mourne ner wepe, but in youre synnes ye shal be sorou full, and one repẽte with another. Thus Ezechiel is youre shewtokẽ. For loke as he hath done, so (when this commeth) ye shall do also: that ye maye lerne to knowe, that I am y LORDE God. But beholde, O thou sonne of man: In the daye when I take from them their power, their ioye and honoure, the lust off their eyes, the burthẽ of their bodies: namely, their sonnes and doughters: Thẽ shall there one escape, and come vnto the, for to shewe the. In that daye shal y mouth be opened to him, which is escaped, that thou mayest speake, and be nomore domme: Yee and thou shalt be their shewtokẽ, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The XXV. Chapter.

A The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, set thy face agaynst y Ammonites, prophecy vpon them, and saye vnto the Ammonites: Heare the worde off the LORDE God, Thus saieth the LORDE God: For so moch as thou speakest ouer my Sanctuary: A ha, I trow it be now suspended: and ouer the londe of Israel, I trow it be now desolate: yee ad ouer the house of Juda, I trow they be now led awaye presoners: Beholde, I will delyuer y to the people of the east, y they maye haue the in possession: these shal set their castels and houses in the. They shall eate thy frute, and drynke vp thy mylcke. As for Rabath, I wil make of it a stall for camels, and of Ammon a shepefolde: and ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Ezec. 21 d
Ezec. 49. a

For thus saieth the LORDE God: In so moch as thou hast clapped with thine hondes, and stamped with thy fete, yee reioyced in thine herte ouer the londe of Israel with despyte: beholde, I wil stretch out myne hõde ouer the also, and delyuer the, to be spoyled off the Heithen, and rote the out from amonge the people, and cause the be destroyed out off all londes: yee I will make the be layed waist, that thou mayest knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus saieth y LORDE God: For so moch as Moab and Seir do saye: As for the house off Juda, it is but like as all other Gẽtiles be: Therfore beholde, I will make the cities off Moab weapenlesse, and take awaye their strength: their cities and chefe coastes off their londe, which are the pleasures off the countre: As namely, Betiesimoth, Baalmeõ and Cariathaim: these will I open vnto the off the east, y they maye fall vpon the Ammonites: and will geue it them in possession: so that the Ammonites shal no more be had in remẽbraunce amonge the Heithen. Even thus will I punysh Moab also, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

Moreouer, thus sayeth the LORDE God: Because that Edom hath auenged & eased him selfe vpon the house off Juda, therfore thus saieth the LORDE: I will reach out myne honde vpon Edom, and take awaye man and beest out off it. From Themã vnto Dedan wil I make it desolate, they shalbe slayne with the swearde. Thorow my people of Israel, wil I auenge me agayne vpõ Edõ: they shal hãdle him, accordinge to my wrath and indignaciõ, so that they shal knowe my vengeaunce, saieth the LORDE God.

Thus saieth y LORDE God: For so moch as the Philistynes haue done this: namely, taken vengeaunce with despitefull stomackes, and off an olde euell will set them selues to destroye: Therfore thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil stretch out myne hõde ouer the Philistynes, and destroye the destroyer, and cause all the remnaunt off the see coast to perish. A greate vengeaunce will I take vpon them, and punysh them cruelly: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE, which haue auenged me off them.

The XXVI. Chapter.

IT happened, that in the xi. yeare, the first daye off the Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, Because that Tyre hath spoken vpon Jerusalem: Aha, now I trow the portes of the people be broken, and she turned vnto me, for I haue destroyed my dely full. Yee therfore saieth ỹ LORDE God: Beholde O Tyre, I will vpō the, I wil bringe a greate multitude off people agaynst ỹ, like as whē the see aryseth with his wawes: These shal breake the walles off Tyre, and cast downe hir towres: I wil scrape the grounde from her, and make her a bare stone: yee as the dryenge place, where the fyshers hange vp their nettes by the see syde. Euen I haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God. The Gētiles shal spoyle her: hir doughters vpon the felde shall perish with the swearde, ỹ they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

For thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I will bringe hither Nabuchodonosor (which is the kynge off Babilon & a kynge of kynges) from the North, vpō Tyre, with horses, charettes, horsmen and with a greate multitude of people. Thy doughters that are in the londe, shal he slaye with ỹ swearde: But agaynst ỹ, he shall make bullworkes & graue vp dyches aboute the, & lift vp his shylde agaynst ỹ. His slynges & batelrāmes shal he prepare for thy walles, & wt his weapēs breake downe thy towres. The dust of his horses shal couer ỹ, they shalbe so many: ỹ walles shal shake at the noyse of ỹ horsemen, charettes & wheles: when he cōmeth to thy portes, as men do in to an open cite. With the hoffes off his horse fete, shal he treade downe all thy stretes.

He shal slaye thy people wt the swearde, & breake downe the pilers of thy strength. They shal waist awaye thy riches, & spoyle ỹ marchaūdise. Thy walles shal they breake downe, & destroye thy houses of pleasure. Thy stones, thy tymbre & foundacions, shall they cast in the water. Thus wil I bringe the melody of thy songes, & the voyce of thy mynstrelsy to an ende, so that they shal nomore be herde. I wil make a bare stone off the, yee a dryenge place for nettes, and shalt neuer be buylded agayne: For euē I ỹ LORDE haue spoken it, sayeth the LORDE God: thus hath the LORDE God spoken concernynge Tyre: The Jles shall be moued at the noyse off thy fall, & at the crie of the slayne, ỹ shal be murthured in the. All kynges off the see shall come downe from their seates regall: they shal laye awaye their roabes, and put off their costly clothinge: Yee with tremblinge shal they be clothed, they shall syt vpō the grounde: they shal be afrayed at thy sodane fall, and be abasshed at the.

They shal mourne for the, and saye vnto the: O thou noble cite, ỹ hast bene so greatly occupyed off olde, thou that hast bene the strongest vpon the see wt thine inhabitours off whom all men stode in feare: How art thou now so vtterly destroyed? Now at the tyme off thy fall the inhabitours off the Jles, yee and the Jles them selues shall stonde in feare at thine ende. For thus sayeth the LORDE God: when I make the a desolate cite (as other cities be, that no man dwell in) and when I bringe the depe vpon the, ỹ greate waters maye couer the: Then will I cast the downe vnto them, that descende into ỹ pytte: vnto a people that hath bene lōge deed, and set the in a londe ỹ is beneth, like the olde wyldernes, with them which go downe to their graues, so ỹ no mā shal dwell more in the. And I wil make the to be no more in honor, in the lōde of the lyuynge. I wil make an ende off the, ād thou shalt be gone. Though thou be sought for, yet shalt thou not be founde for euermore, saieth ỹ LORDE God.

The XXVII. Chapter.

THe worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou soiane off mā, make a lamentable cōplaynte vpon Tyre, & saye vnto Tyre, which is a porte off the see, ỹ occupieth with moch people: and many Jles: thus speaketh ỹ LORDE God: O Tyre thou hast sayde: what, I am a noble cite. thy borders are in the myddest of the see, and thy buylders haue made the maruelous goodly. All ỹ tables haue they made of Cipre trees of the mount Senir. Frō Libanus haue they takē Cedre trees, to make the mastes: & the Okes of Basan to make the rowers.

Ezec. 26. 28.

Thy boordes haue they made of yuery, & of costly wod out of the Jle of Cethim. Thy sale was of whyte small nedle worke out off the londe of Egipte, to hāge vpō thy mast: & thy hanginges of yalow sylcke & purple, out of ỹ Jles of Elisa. They of Sidō & Arnad were thy maryners, & the wyseste in Tyre were thy shypmasters. The eldest and wyseste at Gebal were they, that mended & stopped thy shippes.

All shippes off the see with their shipmē occupied their marchaundies in the. The Perses, Lydians and Lybians were in thyne hooste, and helped the to fight: these hanged vp their shildes & helmettes with the, these set forth thy beuty.

They off Arnad were with thine hooſt roūde aboute thy walles, & were thy watchmen vpon thy towres: theſe hanged vp their ſhildes roūde aboute thy walles, and made the maruelous goodly. Tharſis occupide with the in all maner of wares, in ſyluer, yron, tynne and lead, and made thy market greate. Iauan, Tubal and Meſech were thy marchauntes, which brought the men, & ornamentes off metall for thy occupyenge. They off the houſe of Thogarma brought vnto the at the tyme off thy Marte, horſe, horſmen and mules. They off Dedan were thy marchaūtes: and many other Iles that occupyed with the, brought the wethers, elephāt bones and Payeockes for a preſent. The Sirians occupied with the, becauſe of thy dyuerſe workes, and increaſed thy marchaundies, with Smaragdes, with ſcarlet, with nedle worke, w^t^ whyte lynninge cloth, with ſylcke and with Chriſtall.

Ezec. 25. f

Iuda and the londe off Iſrael occupide with the, and brought vnto thy markettes, wheate, balme, hony, oyle, & triacle. Damaſcus alſo vſed marchaūdies with the, in the beſt wyne and whyte woll: becauſe thy occupienge was ſo greate, and thy wares ſo many. Dan, Iauan, and Meuſal haue brought vnto thy markettes, yron redy made, with Caſia and Calamus, accordinge to thyne occupienge. Dedan occupied with the, in fayre tapeſtry worke and quyßhyns. Arabia & all the princes off Cedar haue occupied w^t^ the, in ſhepe, wethers and goates.

The marchauntes off Seba and Rema haue occupied alſo with the, in all coſtly ſpices, in all precious ſtones and golde, which they brought vnto thy marckettes. Haran, Chene and Eden, the marchauntes off Saba, Aſſiria and Chelmad, were all doers with the & occupied with the: In coſtly rayment, off yalow ſylke and nedle worke, (very precious, & therfore packte & boūde together w^t^ roapes) yee and in Cedre wodde, at the tyme off the marckettes. The ſhippes of Tharſis were the cheſe off thy occupienge.

Thus thou art full, and in greate worſhipe, euen in the myddeſt off the ſee. Thy maryners were euer brynginge vnto the out of many waters. But the eaſte wynde ſhal ouerbeare the into the myddeſt off the ſee: ſo that thy wares, thy marchaūdies, thy ryches, thy maryners, thy ſhipmaſters, thy helpers, thy occupiers (that brought the thinges neceſſary) the men off warre that are in the: yee and all thy comons ſhall periſh in the myddeſt off the ſee, in the daye off thy fall. The ſuburbes ſhall ſhake at the loude crie off thy ſhippmen. All whitry men, and all mariners vpō the ſee, ſhall leapē out of their bootes, and ſet them ſelues vpon the lōde. They ſhal lift vp their voyce because off the, and make a lamentable crye. They ſhall caſt dust vpon their heades, ād lye downe in aſſhes. They ſhal ſhaue them ſelues, & put ſacke cloth vpon them for thy ſake,

They ſhall mourne for the with herteſ ſorow, and heuy lamentacion, yee their children alſo ſhall wepe for the: Alas, what one hath ſo bene deſtroyed in the ſee, as Tyrus? When thy wares & marchaundies came out the ſees, thou gaueſt all people ynough. The kynges off the earth haſt thou made riche thorow the multitude off thy wares and occupienge: But now art thou caſt downe into the depe of the ſee, all thy reſorte of people is periſhed with the. All they that dwell in the Iles are abaſhed at the, and all their kynges are afrayed, yee their faces haue changed coloure. The marchauntes of the nacions wondre at the, In that thou art ſo done brought to naught, & cōmeſt nomore.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, ſayenge: Thou ſonne of man, ſay to the prynce of Tyre: Thus ſaieth the LORDE God: becauſe thou haſt a proude hert and haſt ſayde: I am a God, I haue my ſeate in the myddeſt off the ſee like a god: where as thou art but a man & not God, & yet ſtondeſt in thine owne cōceate, that thou art God: Beholde, thou thynkeſt thy ſelfe wyſer then Daniel, that there is no ſecretes hyd from the. With thy wißdome & thy vnderſtondinge, thou haſt gotte the greate welth vnto the, and gathered treaſure of ſyluer & golde. With thy greate wißdome and occupienge, haſt thou increaſed thy power, and becauſe of thy greate riches thy hert is proude.

Therfore thus ſaieth the LORDE God: Forſo mocheas thou haſt lift vp thine herte, as thoughe thou werſt God: beholde, I will bringe enemies vpon the, euen the tyraunnes of the Heithē: theſe ſhal drawe out their ſwordes vpon thy beuty and wißdome, and ſhall defyle thy glory. They ſhal caſt the downe to the pytte, ſo that thou ſhalt dye in the middeſt of the ſee, as they that be ſlayne. Let it, yff thou wilt ſaye then (before thē that ſlayeth the) I am God: where as thou art but a man, and not God, in the hondes of them that ſlaye the. Dye ſhalt thou, euen as the vncircumciſed in the hōdes of the enemies: for I myſelf haue ſpoken it, ſaieth the LORDE God.

Moreouer, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, make a lamentable complaynte ouer the kynge of Tyre, & tell him: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Thou art a seale of a lickneſſe, full off wyßdome & excellent beuty. Thou haſt bene in ỹ pleaſaũt gardẽ off God: thou art decte with all maner of precious stones: with Rubi, Topas, Chriſtall, Jacyncte, Onyx, Jaſpis, Saphir, Smaragde, Carbũcle, & golde. Thy beuty & ỹ holes ỹ be in ỹ were ſet forth in the daye of ỹ creacion. Thou art a sayre Cherub, ſtretched wyde out for to couer.

I haue ſet the vpon the holy mount off God, there haſt thou bene, and walked amõge the sayre glisteringe stones. From the tyme of thy creacion thou haſt bene right excellent, tyll wickednesſe was founde in the.

Because off thy greate marchaundiſe, thy hert is full of wickednesſe, & thou haſt offended. Therfore wil I caſt the from the mount of God, (O thou coueringe Cherub) and deſtroye the amõge the glisteringe stones. Thy hert was proude in ỹ sayre beuty, & thorow thy beuty thou haſt deſtroyed thy wißdome. I will caſt ỹ downe to the grounde, & ỹ in ỹ sighe of kynges. Thou haſt defyled thy Sãctuary, w' thé greate wickednesſe off thy vnrighteous occupyenge. I wil bringe a fyre from the myddeſt of the, to conſume the: ãd wil make the to aſſhes, in the sighe of all thẽ ỹ' lóke vpon the. All they that haue bene acquainted with the amonge the Heithẽ, ſhal be abaſſhed at the: ſeinge thou art ſo clene brought to naught, and cõmeſt no more vp.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, ſayenge: Thou ſonne of man, ſet thy face agaynſt Sidõ, Prophecie vpõ it, and ſpeake. Thus ſaieth the LORDE God: Beholde o Sidon, I wil vpõ the, & get me honoure in the: that it maye be knowne, how that I am ỹ LORDE, when I punyſh her, & get me honoure in her. For I will ſende peſtilence & bloud ſheddinge in to hir ſtretes, ſo ỹ' thoſe which be ſlayne with the ſwerde, ſhal lye rounde aboute in the myddeſt of her: & they ſhal knowe, that I am the LORDE. She ſhal no more be a prickinge thorne, & an hurtinge briere vnto the house of Iſrael, ner vnto thẽ that lye rounde aboute her and hate her: and they ſhal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus ſaieth the LORDE God: when I gather the houſholde of Iſrael together agayne, from the nacions amonge whom they be ſcatred: then ſhal I be ſanctified in thẽ, in ỹ' ſighe of the Gẽtiles: & they ſhal dwell in the lõde, ỹ' I gaue to my ſeruaunt Jacob. They ſhal dwell ſafely therin, buylde houſes, and plante vynyardes: Yee ſafely ſhal they dwell therin, when I haue punyſhed all thoſe, that deſpyſe them rounde aboute: and then ſhall they knowe, ỹ' I am the LORDE their God. The XXIX. Chapter.

IN the x. yeare, vpon the xij. daye off the j. Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, ſayẽge: O thou ſonne off mã, ſet now thy face agaynſt Pharao the kynge off Egipte, Prophecye agaynſt him and agaynſt the whole lõde of Egipte: Speake, and tell him, thus ſaieth the LORDE God: beholde, o Pharao thou kinge of Egipte, I wil vpõ the, thou greate whall fyſh, ỹ' lyeſt in ỹ' waters: Thou ỹ' ſayeſt: the water is myne, I haue made it myſelf. I wil put an hoke in thy chawes, & hãge all the fiſh in thy waters vpõ thy ſkales: after ỹ' I wil drawe the out of thy waters, yee & all the fiſh of ỹ' waters that hange vpon thy ſkales. A Bſa. 19. a 20. a Iere. 46. Eze. 30. 31. 32.

I wil caſt the out vpon the drylõde with the fiſh of thy waters, ſo that thou ſhalt lye vpon the felde. Thou ſhalt not be gathered ner taken vp, but ſhalt be meate for the beeſtes of the felde, & for the foules off the ayre: that all they which dwell in Egipte, maye knowe, that I am the LORDE: because thou haſt bene a ſtaff of rede to the houſe of Iſrael. When they toke holde of ỹ' w' their hõde thou brakeſt and prycdeſt them on euery ỹde: and yff they leaned vpõ the, thou brakeſt, ãd hurtdeſt the reynes of their backes. Ther fore, thus ſayeth the LORDE: God: beholde, I will bringe a ſwearde vpon the, and rote out of the both man and beeſt. Yee the londe of Egipte ſhalbe deſolate and waiſt, & they ſhal knowe, that I am the LORDE: Becauſe he ſayde: the water is mine, I my ſelf haue made it. Beholde ther fore, I wil vpon the, & vpon thy waters: I will make the londe off Egipte waiſt and deſolate, from the towre of Syenes vnto the borders of the Moriãs londe: ſo that in xl. yeares there ſhall no fote off man walke there, nether fote of catell go there, nether ſhal it be inhabited. I wil make the londe of Egipte to be deſolate amonge other waiſt countrees, and her cities to lye voyde xl. yeares, amonge other voyde cities: And I wil ſcatre the Egipcians amonge the Heithen and nacions. 4. Re. 18. Eſa 30. a 31. a. 36. a B

Agayne, thus ſayeth the LORDE God: Whẽ the xl. yeares are expyred, I wil gather the Egipcians together agayne, out off the naciõs, amonge whõ they were ſcatred, and wil bringe the preſoners off Egipte agayne in to the londe off Pathures their owne na- Iere. 46. f

They off Arnad were with thine hooste roūde aboute thy walles, & were thy watchmen vpon thy towres: these hanged vp their shildes roūde aboute thy walles, and made the maruelous goodly. Tharsis occupide with the in all maner of wares, in syluer, yron, tynne and lead, and made thy market greate. Jauan, Tubal and Mesech were thy marchauntes, which brought the men, & ornamentes off metall for thy occupyenge. They off the house of Thogarma brought vnto the at the tyme off thy Marte, horse, horsmen and mules. They off Dedan were thy marchaūtes: and many other Jles that occupyed with the, brought the wethers, elephāt bones and paycockes for a present The Sirians occupied with the, because of thy dyuerse workes, and increased thy marchaundies, with Smaragdes, with scarlet, with nedle worke, w^t whyte lynninge cloth, with sylcke and with Christall.

Ezec. 25. c

Juda and the londe off Jsrael occupide with the, and brought vnto thy markettes, wheate, balme, hony, oyle, & triacle. Damascus also vsed marchaūdies with the, in the best wyne and whyte woll: because thy occupienge was so greate, and thy wares so many. Dan, Jauan, and Meusal haue brought vnto thy markettes, yron redy made, with Casia and Calamus, according to thyne occupienge. Dedan occupied with the, in fayre tapestry worke and quyßhyns. Arabia & all the princes off Cedar haue occupied w^t the, in shepe, wethers and goates.

The marchauntes off Seba and Rema haue occupied also with the, in all costly spices, in all precious stones and golde, which they brought vnto thy marckettes. Haran, Chene and Eden, the marchauntes off Saba, Assiria and Chelmad, were all doers with & occupied with the: Jn costly rayment, off yalow sylke and nedle worke, (very precious, & therfore packte & boūde together w^t roapes) Yee and in Cedre wodde, at the tyme off & marckettes. The shippes of Tharsis were the chefe off thy occupienge.

Thus thou art full, and in greate worshipe, euen in the myddest off the see. Thy maryners were euer brynginge vnto the out of many waters. But & easte wynde shal ouerbeare the in to the myddest off the see: so & thy wares, thy marchaūdies, thy ryches, thy maryners, thy shipmasters, thy helpers, thy occupiers (that brought the thinges necessary) the men off warre that are in the: yee and all thy comons shall perish in the myddest off the see, in the daye off thy fall. The suburbes shall shake at the loude crie off thy shippmen. All whirry men, and all maryners vpō the see, shall leapé out of their bootes, and set them selues vpon the lōde. They shal lift vp their voyce because off the, and make a lamentable crye. They shall caste dust vpon their heades, ād lye downe in the asshes. They shal shaue them selues, & put sacke cloth vpon them for thy sake.

C

They shall mourne for the with herfull sorow, and heuy lamentacion, yee their children also shall wepe for the: Alas, what citie hath so bene destroyed in the see, as Tyre is? When thy wares & marchaundies came fro the sees. thou gaueste all people ynough. The kynges off the earth hast thou made rich, thorow the multitude off thy wares and occupienge: But now art thou cast downe in to the depe of the see, all thy resorte of people is perished with the. All they that dwell in the Jles are abasshed at the, and all their kynges are afrayed, yee their faces haue chaunged coloure. The marchauntes of the nacions wondre at the, Jn that thou art so cleane brought to naught, & cōmest nomore vp.

The XXVIII. Chapter.

THe worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, tell the prynce of Tyre: Thus saieth the LORDE God: because thou hast a proude hert and hast sayde: Jam a God, Jhaue my sete in the myddest off the see like a god: where as thou art but a man & not God, & yet stondest in thine owne cōceate, that thou art God: Beholde, thou thynkest thy selfe wyser then Daniel, that there is no secretes hyd from &. With thy wißdome & thy vnderstondinge, thou hast gottē the greate welthynesse, and gathered treasure of syluer & golde. With thy greate wißdome and occupienge, hast thou increased thy power, and because of thy greate riches thy hert is proude.

Therfore thus saieth & LORDE God: For so moch as thou hast lift vp thine herte, as though thou werst God: beholde, Jwil bringe enemies vpon the, euen the tyraunnes of the heithē: these shal drawe out their swerdes vpon thy beuty and wißdome, and shall defyle thy glory. They shal cast the downe to the pytte, so that thou shalt dye in the middest of the see, as they that be slayne. Let se, yff thou wilt saye then (before thē that slaye &) Jam God: where as thou art but a man, and not God, in the hondes of them that slaye the. Dye shalt thou, euen as the vncircumcised in the hōdes of & enemies: for Jmyself haue spoken it, saieth the LORDE God.

Moreouer, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, make a lamentable complaynte ouer the kynge of Tyre, & tell him: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Thou art a seale of a lickneſſe, full off wyßdome & excellent beuty. Thou haſt bene in ẏ pleaſaũt gardẽ off God: thou art decte with all maner of precious ſtones: with Ruby, Topas, Chriſtall, Jacyncte, Onyx, Jaſpis, Saphir, Smaragde, Carbũcle, & golde. Thy beuty & ẏ holes ẏ be in ẏ were ſet forth in the daye of ẏ creacion. Thou art a fayre Cherub, ſtretched wyde out for to couer.

I haue ſet the vpon the holy mount off God, there haſt thou bene, and walked amõge the fayre gliſteringe ſtones. From the tyme of thy creacion thou haſt bene right excellent, tyll wickednesſe was founde in the.

C 2.a.b Becauſe off thy greate marchaundiſe, thy hert is full of wickednesſe, & thou haſt offended. Therfore wil I caſt the from the mount of God, (O thou coueringe Cherub) and deſtroye the amõge the gliſteringe ſtones. Thy hert was proude in ẏ fayre beuty, & thorow thy beuty thou haſt deſtroyed thy wißdome. I will caſt ẏ downe to the grounde, & ẏ in ẏ ſight of kynges. Thou haſt defyled thy Sãctuary, w' thé greate wickednesſe off thy ontrightuous occupyenge. I wil bringe a fyre from the myddeſt of the, to conſume the: ãd wil make the to aſſhes, in the ſight of all thẽ ẏ' loke vpon the. All they that haue bene acquaynted with the amonge the Heithẽ, ſhal be abaſſhed at the: ſeinge thou art ſo clene brought to naugth, and cõmeſt no more vp.

And the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, ſayenge: Thou ſonne of man, ſet thy face agaynſt Sidõ, Prophecie vpõ it, and ſpeake. Thus ſaieth the LORDE God: Beholde o Sidon, I wil vpõ the, & get me honoure in the: that it maye be knowne, how that I am ẏ LORDE, when I punyſh her, & get me honoure in her. For I will ſende peſtilence & bloud ſheddinge in to hir ſtretes, ſo ẏ' thoſe which be ſlayne with the ſwerde, ſhal lye rounde about in the myddeſt of her: & they ſhal knowe, that I am the LORDE. She ſhal no more be a prickinge thorne, & an hurtinge briere vnto the houſe of Iſrael, ner vnto thẽ that lye rounde aboute her and hate her: and they ſhal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

Thus ſaieth the LORDE God: when I gather the houſholde of Iſrael together agayne, from the nacions amonge whom they be ſcatred: then ſhal I be ſanctified in thẽ, in ẏ' ſighe of the Gẽtiles: & they ſhal dwell in the lõde, ẏ' I gaue to my ſeruaunt Jacob. They ſhal dwell ſafely therin, buylde houſes, and plante vynyardes: Yee ſafely ſhal they dwell therin, when I haue punyſhed all thoſe, that deſpyſe them rounde aboute: and then ſhall they knowe, ẏ' I am the LORDE their God. B I will bringe a ſwearde vpon the, and rote out of the both man and beeſt. Yee the londe of Egipte ſhalbe deſolate and waiſt, & they ſhal knowe, that I am the LORDE: Becauſe he ſayde: the water is mine, I my ſelf haue made it. Beholde ther fore, I wil vpon the, & vpon thy waters: I will make the londe off Egipte waiſt and deſolate, from the towre of Syenes vnto the borders of the Moriãs londe: ſo that in xl. yeares there ſhall no fote off man walke there, nether fote of catell go there, nether ſhal it be inhabited. I wil make the londe of Egipte to be deſolate amonge other waiſt countrees, and her cities to lye voyde xl. yeares, amonge other voyde cities: And I wil ſcatre the Egipcians amonge the Heithen and nacions.

tyne countre, that they maye be there a lowly small kyngdome: yee they shal be the smalleste amonge other kyngdomes, lest they exalte them selues aboue the heithen: for I will so mynish them, that they shall nomore rule the heithen. They shall nomore be an hope vnto the house off Israel, nether prouoke thē enymore to wickednesse, to cause them turne backe, and to folowe them: ād they shal know, that I am the LORDE God.

C In the xxvij. yeare, the first daye of the first Moneth, came ỹ worde off the LORDE vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilon hath made his hoost, with greate trauayle and labourre to come before Tyre: that euery heade maye be balde, and euery shulder bare. Yet hath Tyre geuen nether him ner his hoost eny reward, for ỹ greate trauayle ỹ he hath taken there. Therfore thus saieth ỹ LORDE God: beholde I will geue the lōde of Egipte vnto Nabuchodonosor the kynge off Babilō, ỹ he maye take awaye all hir substaūce, robbe hir robberies, ād spoyle hir spoyles, to paye his hoost their wagies withall. I wil geue him the londe of Egipte for his labourre, that he toke for me before Tyre. At the same tyme wil I cause the horne off the house of Israel to growe forth, ⁊ open thy mouth agayne amonge them: that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

The XXX. Chapter.

A MOreouer, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, prophecy ⁊ speake: thus saieth the LORDE God: Mourne, wo worth this daye, for the daye is here, the daye of ỹ LORDE is come: the darcke daye of ỹ heithē the houre is at honde, the swearde commeth vpon Egipte. When the wounded men fall downe in Egipte, when hir people are taken awaye, and when hir foundaciōs are destroyed: the Morians londe shal be afrayed, yee the Morians londe, Lybia ⁊ Lydia, all their comon people, ⁊ Chub, ⁊ all ỹ be confederate vnto thē, shal fall w^t thē thorow ỹ swearde.

Ezc. 29. 31-32.

Thus saieth ỹ LORDE: The mayntayners of the lōde of Egipte shal fall, the pryde of hir power shal come downe: euē vnto the tower off Syenes shall they be slayne downe

B w^t the swearde, saieth ỹ LORDE God: amonge other desolate countrees they shal be made desolate, ⁊ amōge other waist cities they shalbe waisted. And they shal knowe, ỹ I am ỹ LORDE, when I kyndle a fyre in Egipte, ⁊ when all hir helpers are destroyed.

At that tyme, shal there messaungers go forth frome in shippes, to make ỹ careles Morians afrayed: and sore we shal come vpon them in the daye of Egipte, for doutles it shal come. Thus saieth the LORDE God: I wil make an ende of the people of Egipte thorow the honde of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon. He and his people with him, yee and the cruell tyrauntes of the heithen shalbe brought to destroye the londe. They shal drawe out their swerdes vpon Egipte and fyll the londe full of slayne men. I will drye vp their floudes of water, ād sell the lōde into the hondes of wicked people. The lōde and all ỹ is therin, wil I destroye thorow the enemies. Euē I the LORDE haue sayde it.

And thus saieth the LORDE God: I will destroye the Idols, and brynge the ymages of Noph to an ende. There shal nomore be a prynce of Egypte, and a fearfulnesse will I sende into the Egipcians londe. As for pathures, I wil make it desolate, ād kyndle a fyre in Zoan. Alexandria will I punysh, ⁊ powre my wroth full indignaciō vpō Sin, which is the strength of Egipte. All the sustaunce of Alexandria will I destroye, and kyndle a fyre in Egipte.

Sin shalbe in greate heuynesse, Alexandria shalbe roted out, and Noph shall haue daylie sorowe. The best men off Heliopelis ⁊ Bubasto shalbe slayne with the swearde, ād caried awaye captyue. At Taphnis the daye shalbe darcke, when I breake there the scepter of the londe of Egipte, and when ỹ pompe of hir pow^r shal haue an ende. A clonde shal couer her, and hir doughters shalbe led awaye into captyuyte. Thus will I punysh Egipte, that they maye knowe, how that I am the LORDE.

It happened in the xi. yeare, vpon the seuēth daye of ỹ first Moneth, ỹ the LORDES worde came vnto me, sayēge: Beholde, thou sonne of mā, I wil breake ỹ arme of pharao kynge of Egipte: and lo, it shal not be bounde vp to be healed, nether shal eny playster be layed vpon it, for to ease it, or to make it so strōge, as to holde a swearde. Therfore, thus saieth the LORDE God: beholde, I will vpon pharao ỹ kinge of Egipte, ⁊ bruse his strōge arme (yet is it but a broken one) ⁊ will smyte the swearde out of his honde.

As for the Egipcians, I wil scatre them amonge the heithen, ⁊ strowe thē in the londes aboute. Agayne I wil strengthe ỹ^e arme of the kinge of Babilō, ⁊ geue him my swearde in his hōde: but I wil breake pharaos arme, so ỹ^e he shal holde it before him pitevsly, like a wounded man.

Yee I will stablisshe the kynge of Babilons
arme, & the armes of Pharao shal fall dowe ne: that it maye be knowne, that I am the LORDE, which geue the kynge off Babilon
my swearde in his hõde, that he maye drawe it out vpon the londe of Egipte: and that when I scatre the Egipcians amonge the Gentiles, and strowe them in y lõdes abou
te, they maye knowe, y I am the LORDE.

The XXXI. Chapter.

A MOreouer, it happened in the xi. yeare
y first daye of the thirde Moneth, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, spea ke vnto Pharao the kynge of Egipte, ād to all his people: Whom art thou like in y great nesse: Beholde, Assur was like a Cedre tre
vpō the mount of Libanus, with fayre brau ches: so thicke, that he gaue shadowes, and shot out very hye. His toppe reached vnto the cloudes. The waters made him greate, and the depe set him vp an hye. Roūde abou te the rotes of him rāne there floudes of wa ter, he sent out his litle ryuers vnto all the trees of the felde. Therfore was he hyer thā
all the trees of the felde, and thorow y mul titude of waters that he sent frō him, he op tayned many and longe braunches. All fou les of the ayre made their nestes in his brau-ches, vnder his bowes gēdred all the beastes
of y felde, & vnder his shadow dwelt all peo ple. Fayre and beutifull was he in his great nesse, and in the length of his braunches, for his rote stode besyde greate waters: no Cedre tre might hyde him. In the pleasāt gar den of God, there was no fyre tre like his braūches, the playne trees were not like y bo wes of him. All the trees in the garden off God might not be cōpared vnto him in his beuty: so fayre and goodly had I made him with the multitude of his braunches: In so moch, y all the trees in the pleasāt gardē of God, had envye at hī. Therfore, thus saieth
B the LORDE God: For so moch as he hath lift vp himself so hie, & stretched his toppe in to the cloudes, & seinge his hert is proude in his highnesse: I wil delyuer him in to y hondes of y mightiest amōge y Heithē, which shall rote him out. Acordīge to his wickednes will I cast him awaye, the enemies shal destroye him, & the mighty men of the Heithen shall so scatre him, that his braunches shal lye vpon all mountaynes & in all valleys: his bowes shall be broken downe to the grounde thorow out the londe. Then all the people of the londe shal go from his shadowe, and forsake him. When he is fallē, all y foules of y ayre shal syt vpon him, and all wilde beestes of the felde shal go aboute amonge his brau ches: so that from hence forth, no tre in the water shall attayne to his hyenesse, nor reach his toppe vnto the cloudes, nether shall eny tre off the water stonde so hye, as he hath do ne. For vnto death shall they all be delyue-red vnder the earth, and go downe to y grau
e, like other men.

Moreouer, thus saieth the LORDE God: C
In the daye when he goeth downe to the graue, I wil cause a lamentacion to be made. I will couer the depe vpon him, I will staunch his floudes, and the greate waters shalbe restrayned. I shall cause Libanus to be sorowfull for his sake, and all the trees off the felde shall be symyttē. I wil make the Hei Esa. 14. c then shake at the sounde of his fall, when I Eze. 32. c cast him downe to hell, with them y descende in to the pytte. All the trees of Eden, wt all the chosen and best trees of Libanus, yee and all they that are planted vpon the waters, shal mourne with him also in the lower habitaciōs: for they shal go downe to hell wt him, vnto thē that be slayne with the swear-de, which dwelt afore vnder the shadow off his arme amōge the Heithē. To whom shalt thou be lickened, that art so glorious & greate, amonge the trees off Eden: Yet art thou cast downe vnder y earth (amonge the trées off Eden) where thou must lye amonge the vncircumcised, with them that be slayne wt
the swearde. Euen thus is it with Pharao & all his people, saieth the LORDE God.

The XXXII. Chapter.

IN the xij. yeare, the first daye of the A
xij. Moneth, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take vp a lamentacion vpō Pharao Eze. 29.
the kynge of Egipte, & saye vnto him: Thou 30. 31.
art reputed as a Lyon of the Heithen, & as a whalfish in the see. Thou castest y waters aboute the, thou troublest the waters wt thy fete, and stampest in their floudes. Thus sa yeth the LORDE God: I wil sprede my net o- c Eze. 12. h uer y, namely, a greate multitude of people: 17. c these shal dryue the in to my yarne, for I will cast the vpō the lōde, and let the lye vpō the felde, that all the foules of the ayre maye syt vpō the: I wil geue all the beastes of the felde ynough off the. Thy flesh will I cast vpō the hilles, and fyll the valleys with thy hyenesse. I will water the londe with the abundaunce off thy bloude euen to the moū taynes, & y valleys shal be full off the.

When thou art put out, I will couer the Eze. 13. i heauen, and make his starres dymme. I will 32. c spiede a cloude ouer the Sonne, ād the Moone shall not geue hir light. All the lightes

B off heauen will I put out ouer the, and bringe darcknesse vpon thy londe, saieth ỹ LORDE God. I wil trouble the hertes off many people, when I bringe thy destruccion amōge the Heithen and countrees, whom thou knowest not. Yee I will make many people with their kynges sō afrayed thorow ỹ, that their hayre shal stonde vp, whē I shake my swearde at their faces. Sodenly shal they be astonnyed, euery man in him self, at ỹ daye of thy fall.

For thus saieth the LORDE God: the kynge of Babilons swearde shal come vpon ỹ, with ỹ sweardes of the worthies will I smyte downe thy people. All they that be mighty amonge the Gētiles, shal waist the proude pompe of Egipte, and bringe downe all hir people. All the catell also of Egipte wil I destroye, that they shal come nemore vpō the waters: sō that nether mās fote ner beastes clawe, shal stere them eny more. Then wil
C I make their waters cleare, and cause their floudes to runne like oyle, sayeth the LORDE God: when I make the londe of Egipte desolate, and when ỹ countre with all that is therin, shalbe layde waist: and whē I smyte all thē which dwell in it, that they maye knowe, that I am the LORDE. This is the mournynge, that the doughters off the Heithen shall make: Yee a sorow and lamentaciō shal they take vp, vpon Egipte and all hir people, saieth the LORDE God.

In the xij. yeare, the xv. daye of the Moneth, came the worde off the LORDE vnto me sayenge: Thou sonne of man. Take vp a lamentacion vpon the people of Egipte, and cast them downe, yee ād the mightie people Esa. 14. C Eze. 31. C of the Heithē also, euen with thē that dwell beneth: and with them that go downe in to the graue. Downe (how fayre so euer thou be) and laye the with the vncircumcised. Amōge those that be slayne with the swearde, shal they lye. The swearde is geuen alredy, he shal be drawen forth and all his people.
D The mightie worthies and his helpers, ỹ be gone downe and lye with the vncircumcised and with them that be slayne with ỹ swearde: shal speake to him out of the hell.

Assur is there also with his company, ād their graues rounde aboute, which were slayne ād fell all with the swearde, whose graues lye besyde him in the lowe pytte. His comōs are buried rounde aboute his graue: altogether wounded and slayne with the swearde, which men afore tyme brought feare into ỹ londe off the lyuynge.

There is Elam also with all his people, and their graues rounde aboute: which all beynge wounded and slayne with the swearde, are gone downe vncircumcised vnder the earth, which neuertheles somtyme brought feare in to the londe off the lyuynge: for the which they beare their shame, with the other that be gone downe to ỹ graue.

Their buryall is geuen them and all their people, amonge them that be slayne. Their graues are rounde aboute all them, which be vncircumcised, and with them that be slayne thorow the swearde: for seynge that in tymes past they made the londe off the lyuynge afrayed, they must now beare their owne shame, with them that go downe to the pyte, and lye amonge them, that be slayne.

There is Mesech also and Tubal, and their people, and their graues rounde aboute. These all are amonge the vncircūcised, and them that be slayne with the swearde, because afore tyme they made the londe off the lyuynge afrayed.

Shulde not they then lye also amonge ỹ worthies, and vncircumcised Giauntes? which w^t their weapens are gone downe to hel: whose sweardes are layed vnder their heades, whose wickednesse is vpon their bones: because that as worthies, they have brought feare in to ỹ lōde of ỹ lyuinge? Yee amōge the vncircūcised shalt thou be destroyed, and slepe with them, that perished thorow the swearde.

There is the lōde off Edom with hir kynges and princes also, which w^t their strēgth are layed by them that were slayne with the swearde, yee amonge the vncircumcised, and them which are gone downe in to the pytte. Moreouer, there be all the princes of the north, with all the Sidoniās, which are gone downe to the slayne.

With their feare and strength they are come to confucion, and lye there vncircumcised, amonge those that be slayne with the swearde: and beare their owne shame, with them that be gone downe to y^e pytte. Now when Pharao seyth this, he shal be comforted ouer all his people, that is slayne with the swearde: both Pharao ỹ all his hoost, saieth ỹ LORDE God. For I haue geuē my feare in the lōde of the lyuynge. But Pharao ỹ all his people shall lye amōge the vncircumcised, and amonge them that be slayne with the swearde, saieth the LORDE God.

The XXXIII. Chapter.

A AGayne, the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off man, Speake to the childrē of thy people, and tell them: When I sende a swearde vpon a londe, yf the people off the londe take a man off their countre, and set him to be their watchman: yf same man (whā he seyth the swearde come vpon the londe) shall blowe the trompet, and warne the people.

Ezech.d

Yff a man now heare the noyse off the trompet & will not be warned, and the swearde come ād take him awaye: his bloude shall be vpō his owne heade: For he herde the soūde of the trompet, and wolde not take hede, therfore his bloude be vpon him. But yff he will receaue warnynge, he shal saue his life. Agayne, yf the watchman se the swerde come, and shewe it not with the trompet, so y the people is not warned: yff the swearde come then, and take eny man from amōge thē: the same shall be taken awaye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre off the watchmans honde.

B And now (O thou sonne of man) I haue made the a watchman vnto the house of Israel: that where as thou heaurest eny thinge out of my mouth, thou mayest warne them on my behalfe. Yff I saye vnto the wicked: thou wicked, thou shalt surely dye: and thou geuest him not warnynge, that he maye bewarre off his vngodly waye: then shall the wicked dye in his owne synne, but his bloude will I requyre of thy honde. Neuertheles yf thou warne the wicked off his waye, to turne from it, where as he yet wil not be turned from it: then shal he dye because off his synne, but thou hast delyuered thy soule.

Therfore (O thou sonne off man) speake vnto the house off Israel, Ye saye thus: Oure offences and synnes lye vpon vs, and we be corrupte in them: how shulde we then be restored vnto life? Tell them: As truly as I lyue (saieth the LORDE God) I haue no pleasure in the death off the wicked, but moch rather that the wicked turne from his waye and lyue. Turne you, turne you from yo^r vngodly wayes, o ye off the house off Israel. Oh, wherfore will ye dye?

C Thou sonne off man, tell the childrē off thy people: The rightuousnes of the righteous shall not saue him, whan so euer he turneth awaye vnfaithfully: Agayne, the wickednesse of the wicked shal not hurte him, whan so euer he conuerteth from his vngodlynesse:

Ezech.d

And yf rightuousnesse of the rightuous shal not saue his life, when so euer he synneth. Yff I saye vnto the rightuous, that he shall surely lyue, and so he trust to his owne rightuousnesse, and do synne: then shall his rightuousnesse be nomore thought vpon, but in the wickednesse that he hath done, he shall dye.

Esa.55.b Iere.18.c

Agayne, yff I saye to the wicked: thou shalt surely dye: and so he turne frō his synnes, and do the thinge that is laufull and right: In so moch that the same wicked mā geueth the pledge agayne, restoreth that he had taken awaye by robbery, walketh in the cōmaundementes off life, and doth no wrōge:

Then shall he surely lyue, and not dye. Nether synnes that he had done, shal neuer be thought vpon: For in so moch as he doth now the thynge that is laufull and right, he shall lyue. And yet the children off thy people saye: Tush, the waye of the LORDE is not right, where as their owne waye is rather vnright.

D When the rightuous turneth from his rightuousnesse, and doeth the thynge that is wicked, he shall dye therfore. But yf the wicked turne from his wickednesse, doinge the thinge that is laufull and right, he shall lyue therfore. Yet ye saye: the waye of y^e LORDE is not equall. O ye house of Israel, I wil iudge euery one of you after his wayes.

Eze.18. Ro.2.a

In the xij. yeare, the v. daye of the x. Moneth of oure captyuyte, it happened, that one which was fled out of Jerusalem, came vnto me, and sayde: y cite is destroyed. Now the honde of the LORDE had bene vpon me the euenynge, afore this man (which was escaped) came vnto me, and had opened my mouth, vntyll the mornynge that he came to me: Nether he opened my mouth, so y I was nomore domme. Then came the worde of y LORDE vnto me, and sayde: Thou sonne off man, these that dwell in the waisted londe of Israel, saye: Abraham was but one man, ād he had the londe in possessiō: now are we many, and the londe is geuen vs to possesse also. And therfore tell them: Thus saieth the LORDE: In the bloude haue ye eaten, youre eyes haue ye lift vp to Idols, and haue shed bloude: shal ye then haue the londe in possession?

E Leui.17 Deu.12

Ye leane vpon youre swearde, ye worke abhominacions, euery one defyleth his neighbours wife: and shal ye then possesse the londe? Saye thou these wordes vnto thē: Thus saieth the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, all ye that dwell in this wilderneſſe, shall be slayne w^t the swearde: what so is vpon the felde, will I geue vnto the beestes to be deuoured: those that be in stronge holdes and dennes, shall dye off the pestilēce. For I wil make the londe desolate and waist, and ỹ pōpe off hir strength shall come to an ende. The mountaynes in Israel shal be so waiste that no man shall trauayle therby.

Eze. 25.c Then shall they lerne to knowe, that I am the LORDE, whē I make the lōde waist and desolate, because off all their abhominacions, that they haue wrought. And thou sonne off man, the children off thy people ỹ talke of the, by the walles ād in the dores of their houses, sayenge one to another: come, let vs heare, what worde is gone forth from the LORDE: These come vnto the, after ỹ maner of a greate people: yee my people syt downe before the, and heare thy wordes, but Esa. 29.c Mat. 15.a they do not therafter: For in their mouthes they shewe them selues, as though they were feruent, but their herte goeth after their owne couetous lucre. And as a balet ỹ hath a swete tune, ād is pleasāūt to synge, so shalt thou be vnto them: thy wordes shal they heare, but they will not do therafter. Whē this commeth to passe (for lo, it cōmeth in dede) then shal they knowe, that there hath bene a prophet amonge them.

The XXXIIII. Chapter.

A AND the worde off the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne off mā, prophecye agaynst the shepherdes of Israel, prophecy, and speake vnto them: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Wo be vnto Eze. 13.a re. 14.b 23.a. the shepherdes off Israel, that fede them selues. Shulde not the shepherdes fede ỹ flockes?

Ye haue eaten vp the fatte, ye haue clothed you with the woll: the best fedde haue ye slayne, but ỹ flocke haue ye not noushed: Luc. 4.b The weake haue ye not holden vp, the sicke haue ye not healed: the broken haue ye not bounde together, the outcastes haue ye not 1. Pe. 5.a brought agayne: ỹ lost haue ye not sought, but churlishly and cruelly haue ye ruled thē. Thus are they scatred here and there without a shepherde: yee all the beastes off the felde deuoure them, and they go astraye.

My shepe go wandringe vpon all mountaynes and vpon euery hye hill, yee they be scatred abrode in all feldes, and there is no man, that careth for them, or seketh after them.

B Therfore o ye shepherdes, heare the worde off the LORDE, Thus sayeth the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, for so moch as my shepe are robbed, and deuoured off all the wylde beestes off the felde, hauynge no shepherde: and seynge that my shepherdes take no regarde off my shepe, but fede them selues only, and not my shepe: Therfore heare ỹ worde off the LORDE, o ye shepherdes: Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Beholde, I myself will vpon the shepherdes, and requyre my shepe from their hondes, and make thē ceasse from fedynge of my shepe: yee the shepherdes shall fede them selues nemore: For I will delyuer my shepe out off their mouthes so that they shall not deuoure them after this.

For thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I will loke to my shepe myselff, and sēke them. Like as a shepherde amōge the flocke seketh after the shepe that are scatred abrode, euen so will I seke after my shepe, and gather them together out off all places, where they haue bene scatred in the cloudy and darcke daye. I will brynge them out from all people, and gather them together out of all londes. I will brynge thē in to their owne londe, and fede them vpon the mountaynes off Israel, by the ryuers, and in all the places of the countre. I will fede them in right good pastures, and vpon the hie mountaynes off Israel shall there foldes be. There shal they lye in a good folde, ād in a fat pasture shall they fede: euen vpon the mountaynes of Israel.

I will fede my shepe myselff, and bringe them to their rest, sayeth the LORDE God. Soch as be lost, will I seke: soch as go astraye, wil I brynge agayne: soch as be wōūded, will I bynde vp: soch as be weake, will I make stronge: soch as be fat and well lykinge, those will I preserue, and fede them with ỹ thinge that is lawfull. And as for you (o my shepe) sayeth the LORDE God: I will put a difference amonge the shepe, amonge the wethers ād the goates. Was it not ynough for you, to eat vp the good pasture, but ye must treade downe the residue of youre pasture w^t youre fete also? Was it not ynough for you to drynke cleare water, but ye must trouble the residue also with youre fete?

Thus my shepe must be fayne to eate ỹ thinge, that ye haue troden downe with yo^r fete, and to drynke it, that ye with youre fete haue defyled.

Therfore, thus sayeth the LORDE God vnto them: Beholde, I will seuer the fat shepe from the leane: for so moch as ye haue shot the weake shepe apō ỹ sydes & shulders, and runne vpon them with youre homes, so longe till ye haue vtterly scatred them abrode. I wil helpe my shepe, so ỹ they shal nomore be spoyled: yee I wil discerne one shepe from another. I wil rayse vp vnto them one only shepherde: euen my seruaunt Dauid, he shal fede thē, and he shal be their shepherde. I the LORDE wil be their God, and my seruaunt Dauid shal be their prince: Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it.

Moreouer, I wil make a couenaunt of peace with them, and dryue all euell beastes out of the londe: so that they maye dwell safely in the wilderneſſe, and slepe in the woddes. Good fortune ⁊ prosperite wil I geue them, and vnto all that be rounde aboute my hill. A prosperous shower and rayne wil I sende them in due season, that the trees in the wodde maye bringe forth their frutes, ⁊ ỹ groũde his increase. They shalbe safe in their londe, and shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue brokē their yocke, and delyuered them out of the hondes of those, that helde them in subiection.

They shal nomore be spoyled of the Heithen, ner deuoured with the beastes of the lōde: but safely shal they dwell, ⁊ no man shall fraye them. I wil set vp an excellēt plāte for them, so ỹ they shal suffre no more hunger in the londe, neither beare the reproſe of ỹ Heithen eny more. Thus shal they vnderstonde, that I the LORDE their God am wt them, ⁊ ỹ they (euen the house of Israel) are my people, saieth the LORDE God. Ye men are my flocke, ye are the shepe of my pasture: and I am youre God, saieth the LORDE God.

The XXXV. Chapter.

Moreouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, turne thy face towarde the mount Seir, prophecy vpon it, ⁊ saye vnto it: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, (o thou mount Seir) I will vpon the, I will reach out myne hōde ouer the, yee waist ⁊ desolate wil I make the. Thy cities wil I breake downe, ⁊ thou shalt lye voyde: that thou mayest knowe, how that I am the LORDE. For so moch as thou beareſt an olde enemyte agaynst the children of Israel, ⁊ with a cruel honde hast made them afrayed, what tyme as they were troubled ⁊ punyshed for their synne: Therfore, as truly as I lyue (saieth ỹ LORDE God) I wil prepare the vnto bloude, yee bloude shal folowe vpon the: seinge thou layest waite for bloude, therfore shall bloude persecute the. Thus wil I make the mount Seir desolate ⁊ waist, and bringe to passe, that there shall no man go thither, ner come from thence. His mountaynes wil I fyll wt his slayne men: thy hilles, dales and valleys shall lye full of them, that are slayne with ỹ swearde. I wil make the a perpetuall wilderneſſe, so that noman shal dwell in thy cities: ỹ ye maye knowe, how ỹ I am the LORDE.

And because thou hast sayde: what, both these nacions and both these londes must be myne, ⁊ I will haue them in possession, where as the LORDE was there. Therfore, thus saieth the LORDE God: As truly as I lyue, I will hādle the acordinge to thy wrath and gelousy, like as thou hast dealt cruelly with them: that I maye be knowne amōge them, how I haue punyshed the. Yee and that thou alsō mayest be sure, that I the LORDE haue herde all thy despyteful wordes, which thou hast spokē agaynst the mountaynes of Israel, sayenge: Lo, they are made waist, and geuen vs to deuoure. Exo. 15. c

Thus with youre mouthes ye haue made youre boost agaynst me, yee ⁊ multiplied youre prōde wordes agaynst me, which I haue herde altogether. Where vnto, thus saieth ỹ LORDE God: when the whole worlde is in wealth, then wil I make the waist. And like as thou (o mount Seir) wast glad, because the heretage of the house of Israel was destroyed: euen so wil I do vnto the also, that thou and whole Edom shall be destroyed, ⁊ knowe, that I am the LORDE. Eze. 22. c 26. 2

The XXXVI. Chapter.

Thou sonne of man, prophecie vpon the mountaynes of Israel, ⁊ speake: heare the worde of the LORDE, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Because yo enemie hath sayde vpon you: A ha, ỹ hie euerlastynge places are now become ours: prophecy therfore, ⁊ speake: thus saieth ỹ LORDE God: Seinge ye be waisted ⁊ trodē downe on euery syde, ⁊ become a possession vnto ỹ residue of ỹ Gētiles, which haue brought you in to mēs mouthes ⁊ vnto an euel name amonge ỹ people: Therfore, heare the worde of the LORDE God, o ye mountaynes of Israel: Thus saieth the LORDE God vnto the mountaynes and hilles, valleys ⁊ dales, to the voyde wildernesses ⁊ desolate cities, which are spoyled, and had in derision on euery syde, amonge the residue of the Heithē: Yee euē thus saieth the LORDE God: In the fyre of my gelousy haue I taken a deuyce, agaynst the residue of the Gētiles, and agaynst all Edom: which haue takē in my lōde vnto thē selues for a possession: which also reioyced frō their whole herte wt a despiteful stomacke, to waist it, and to spoyle it. Eze. 35.

B prophecy therfore vpon the londe of Israel, speake vnto ỹ mountaynes and hilles, to valleys and dales, thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, this haue I deuysed in my gelousy and terrible wrath: For so moch as ye haue suffred reproſe of the Heithen, therfore thus saieth the LORDE God: I haue swore ne, that the Gentiles which lye aboute you, shal beare youre confucion them selues. And as for you (o mountaynes of Israel) ye shall shute out youre braunches, and bringe forth youre frute to my people of Israel, for it is harde by, that it wil come.

Beholde, I come vnto you, and vnto you will I turne me, that ye maye be tylled and sowen. I wil sende you moch people, which shalbe all of the house of Israel: the cities shalbe inhabited, and ỹ decayed places shal be repayred againe. I wil prouyde you with moch people and catell, which shal increase & bringe frute. I wil restore you also to youre olde estate, and shewe you more kindnes thē euer ye had before: wherby ye shal knowe ỹ I am the LORDE. Yee people wil I sende vnto you (o my folke of Israel (which shal haue the in possession, and thou shalt be their inheritaunce, so that thou shalt nomore be C without them. Agayne, thus saieth the LORDE God: For so moch as they saye vnto you: thou art an eater vp of men, and a waister of thy people: therfore thou shalt eate no mo men, nether destroye thy people eny more, saieth the LORDE God. And I wil not suffre the, for to heare thine owne confucion amonge the Gentiles from henssforth. Thou shalt not beare the reproſe of the nacions, ner cast out thine owne people enymore, saieth the LORDE God.

Moreuer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: O thou sonne of mā, when the house of Israel dwelt vpon their owne grounde, they defyled them selues with their owne wayes & ymaginacions: so that in my sight their waye was like the vncleanesse of a menstruous woman. Wherfore I poured my wroth full displeasure vpon them, because of the bloude that they had shed in the londe, & because of their Idols, wherwith they had defyled them selues. I scatred them also amonge the Heithen, so that they were strowed aboute in the lōdes. Acordinge to their wayes & after their owne inuencions, so dyd I punysh them.

D Now when they were gone vnto the Heithen, and come in amonge them, they dishonoured my holy name: so that it was sayde of them: Are these the people of God, & must go out of their owne londe? Then spared I my holy name, which ỹ house of Israel had dishonoured amonge the Gentiles, to whom they came. Therfore tell ỹ house of Israel: Thus saieth the LORDE God: I do not this for yo' sakes (o house of Israel) but for my holy names sake, which ye dishonoured amonge the Heithen, when ye came to them. Therfore, I wil halowe my greate name agayne, which amonge the Gētiles is euel spoken of: for ye youre selues haue dishonoured it amōge them. And the Gentiles shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, when I am honoured in you before their eyes, saieth ỹ LORDE God.

As for you, I wil take you from amonge the Heithen, and gather you together out of all countrees, and bringe you agayne into youre owne londe. Then will I poure clene water vpon you, & ye shalbe clene: Yee from all youre vncleanesse and from all yo' Idols shal I clense you. A new herte also wil I geue you, and a new sprete wil I put in to you: As for that stony hert, I will take it out of youre body, and geue you a fleßhy herte. I wil geue you my sprete amonge you, and cause you to walke in my commaundemētes, to kepe my lawes, and to fulfill them.

And so ye shall dwell in the londe, that I gaue to yo' forefathers, & ye shal be my people, and I wil be youre God. I wil helpe you out of all youre vncleanesse, I wil call for the corne, and wil increase it, and wil let you haue no honger. I will multiplie the frutes of the trees and ỹ increase of the felde for you, so that ye shal beare no more reproſe of honger amōge the Heithē. Then shal ye remēbre yo' owne wicked wayes, and youre ymaginacions, which were not good: so that ye shal take displeasure at youre owne selues, by reason of youre synnes and abhominacions.

But I wil not do this for youre sakes (saieth the LORDE God) be ye sure of it. Therfore (o ye house of Israel) be ashamed of youre synnes. Moreuer, thus saieth the LORDE God: what tyme as I shal clēse you from all youre offences, then wil I make the cities to be occupied agayne, and wil repayre the places that be decayed. The desolate londe shal be buylded agayne, which afore tyme laye waist, in the sight of all them, that were by. Then shal it be sayde: This waist lōdeis become like a garden of pleasure, and the voyde, desolate and broke downe cities, are now stronge, and fensed agayne. Then the residue of the Heithen that lye rounde aboute you, shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which repayre that was broken downe, and plante agayne, that was made waist. Euen I the LORDE haue spoken it, & wil do it in dede.

Thus saieth the LORDE God: I wil yet once be founde agayne of ỹ house of Israel, & do this for them: I shal increase them as a flocke of men. Like as the holy flocke and the flocke of Jerusalem are in the hie solempne feastes: so shal also the wilde waisted cities be fylled with flockes of men: and they shal knowe, that I am the LORDE.

The XXXVII. Chapter.

THe honde of the LORDE came vpon me, & caried me out in the spirite of the LORDE, & let me downe in a playne felde, that laye full of bones, & he led me rounde aboute by them: & behelde, the bones that laye vpon the felde, were very many, & maruelous drye also. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne of man: thinkest thou these bones maye lyue agayne? I answered: O LORDE God, thou knowest. And he sayde vnto me: Prophecy thou vpon these bones, & speake vnto them: Ye drye bones, heare the worde of the LORDE. Thus saieth the LORDE God vnto these bones: Beholde, I will put breth into you, that ye maye lyue: I wil geue you synowes, & make flesh growe vpon you, & couer you ouer with slynne: & so geue you breth, that ye maye lyue, and knowe, that I am the LORDE.

So I prophecied, as he had cõmaunded me. And as I was prophecienge, there came a noyse and a greate mocion, so that the bones came euery one to another. Now whē I had loked, beholde, they had synowes, and flesh grewe vpon them: and aboue they were couered with slynne, but there was no breth in them. Then sayde he vnto me: Thou sonne of man, prophecie thou towarde the wynde: prophecy, and speake to the wynde: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Come (o thou ayne) from the foure wyndes, & blowe vpon these slayne, that they maye be restored to life. So I prophecied, as he had commaunded me: Then came the breth into them, and they receaued life, and stode vp vpon their fete, a maruelous greate sorte.

Moreouer, he sayde vnto me: Thou sonne of man, these bones are the whole house of Israel. Beholde, they saye: oure bones are dryed vp, oure hope is gone, we are clene cut of. Therfore prophecie thou, & speake vnto them. Thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil open youre graues (o my people) & take you out of youre sepulcres, & bringe you into the londe of Israel agayne. So shall ye knowe ỹ I am the LORDE, whē I open youre graues, & bringe you out of them. My spirite also wil I put in you, & ye shal lyue: I wil set you agayne in youre owne londe, and ye shal knowe, that I am the LORDE, which haue sayde it, and fulfilled it in dede.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto me, C sayenge: Thou sonne of man, take a sticke and wryte vpon it: Vnto Juda & to the children of Israel his companyons. Then take another sticke, and wryte vpon it: Vnto Joseph the stocke of Ephraim, and to all the housholde of Israel his companyons. And than take both these together in thine honde, so shal there be one stycke therof. Now yf the childrē of thy people saye vnto the: wilt thou not shewe vs, what thou meanest by these? Then geue them this answere: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, I wil take Oseer. b the stocke of Joseph, which is in the honde of Ephraim, and of the trybes of Israel his felowes, and wil put them to the stocke of Juda, & make them one stocke, and they shal be one in my honde. And the two stickes where vpon thou wryteste, shalt thou haue in thine honde, that they maye se, and shalt saye vnto them:

Thus saieth the LORDE God: beholde, I wil take awaye the childrē of Israel from amonge the Heithen, vnto whom they be gone, and wil gather them together on euery syde, and bringe them agayne in to their owne londe: yee I wil make one people of thē in ỹ londe, vpon the mountaynes of Israel, and they all shal haue but one kinge. They shall D nomore be two peoples from henforth, nether be deuyded in to two kingdomes: they shal also defyle thē selues nomore with their abhominacions, Idols and all their wicked doinges. I wil helpe thē out of all their dwellinge places, wherin they haue synned: & will so clense them, that they shal be my people, and I their God.

Dauid my seruaunt shalbe their kinge, & Eze 34. C they all shal haue one shepherde only. They Ioh 10. b shal walke in my lawes, and my commaundementes shal they both kepe & fulfill. They shal dwell in the londe, that I gaue vnto Jacob my seruaunt, where as youre fathers also haue dwelt. Yee euē in the same londe shal they, their children, & their childers children dwell for euermore: and my seruaunt Dauid shal be their euerlastynge prynce. Moreouer, I will make a bonde of peace with them, which shal be vnto them an euerlastinge couenaunt. I wil sattle thē also, and multiplie them, my Sanctuary wil I set amonge thē for euermore.

My dwellinge shalbe w̄ them, yee I wil be their God, & they shalbe my people. Thus the Heithen also shal knowe, that I the LORDE am y holy maker of Israel: whē my Sanctuary shal be amonge them for euer more.

The XXXVIII. Chapter.

A AND the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thou sonne of man, turne thy face towarde Gog in the londe of Magog, which is the chefe prynce at Mesech and Tubal: prophecy agaynst him, and saye: Thus saieth the LORDE God: O Gog thou chefe prynce of Mesech and Tubal: beholde, I wil vpon the, and wil turne the about, and put a bytt in thy chawes: I wil bringe the forth and all thine hoost, both horse & horsmen, which be all weapened of the best fashion: a greate people, that handle altogether speares, shyldes, and swerdes: the Perses, Moryans and with them the Lybians, which all beare shyldes and helmettes: Gomer, and all his hoostes: the house of Thogorma out of the north quarters, and all his hoostes, yee and moch people with the.

Ezec. 39. Apo. 20. c

Therfore prepare the, set thy self in araye with all thy people, that are come vnto the by heapes, and be thou their defence. After many dayes thou shalt be visited, and in the latter yeares thou shalt come in to the lōde, that hath bene destroyed with the swearde, & now is replenished agayne w̄ dyuerse people vpon the mountaynes of Israel, which haue lōge lyen waist. Yee they be brought out of the nacions, & dwell all safe. Thou shalt come vp like a stormy wether, to couer the lōde, and as it were a darcke cloude: thou with all thine hoostes, and a greate multitude of people with the.

B Moreouer, thus saieth the LORDE God: At the same tyme shal many thinges come in to thy mynde, so that thou shalt ymagyn myschefe, and saye: I wil vp to yonder playne londe, seinge they syt at ease, and dwell so safely (for they dwell all without eny walles, they haue nether barres nor dores) to spoyle them, to robbe thē, to laye honde vpon their so wel inhabited wildernesses: agaynst that people, y is gathered together from amonge the Heithē, which haue gotten catell and good, and dwell in the myddest of the londe. Then shal Saba and Dedan and the marchauntes of Tharsis w̄ all their Worthies, saye vnto the: Art thou come to robbe? Hast thou gathered thy people together, because thou wilt spoyle? to take syluer and golde: to cary awaye catell and good: and to haue a greate pray?

Therfore, o thou sonne of man, thou shalt prophecie, and saye vnto Gog: Thus saieth the LORDE God: In that daye thou shalt knowe, that my people of Israel dwelleth safe: and shalt come from thy place, out of the north partes: thou and moch people w̄ the, which ryde vpon horses, wher of there is a greate multitude and an innumerable sorte. Yee thou shalt come vpon my people of Israel, as a cloude to couer the lōde. This shal come to passe in the latter dayes: I wil bringe the vp in to my londe, that the Heithen maye knowe me, when I get me honoure vpon the (o Gog) before their eyes.

Thus saieth the LORDE God: Thou art he, of whom I haue spoken afore tyme, by my seruauntes y prophetes of Israel, which prophecied in those dayes & yeares, that I shulde bringe the vpon them. At the same tyme, when Gog commeth vp in to the londe of Israel (saieth the LORDE God) shal my indignacīō go forth in my wrath. For in my gelousy and hote displeasure I haue denyed, that there shalbe a greate trouble in the londe of Israel at that tyme. The very fysshes in the see, the foules of the ayre, the beestes of the felde, and all the men y are vpon the earth, shal tremble for feare of me.

The hilles also shalbe turned vp side downe, the stayres of stone shal fall, and all walles shal syncke to the grounde. I wil call for a swearde vpon them in all my mountaynes, saieth the LORDE God: so that euery mans swearde shal be vpon another. With pestilence and bloude wil I punysh him: stormy rayne and hale stones, fyre and brymstone, wil I cause to rayne vpon him and all his heape, yee and vpon all that greate people that is with him. Thus wil I be magnified, honoured, and knowne amonge the Heither: that they maye be sure, how y I am y LORDE.

The XXXIX Chapter.

THerfore o thou sonne of man, prophecie agaynst Gog, and speake: Thus saieth the LORDE God: Beholde, o Gog: thou chefe prynce at Mesech and Tubal, I wil vpon the, and turne the about, & carie the forth, & lede y from the north partes, and bringe the vp to the mountaynes of Israel. As for thy bowe, I wil smyte it out of thy left honde, and cast thine arowes out of thy right honde. Thou with all thine heape, and all the people that is with the, must fall vpon the mountaynes of Israel. Thus wil I geue the vnto y foules and wilde beastes of the felde, to be deuoured: there must thou lye vpon the felde: for euē I the LORDE haue spoken it, saieth the LORDE God.

B Into Magog, and amonge those that sit so carlesse in the Iles: wil I sende a fyre, and they shal knowe, y I am the LORDE. I wil make also the name of my holynesse to be knowne amonge my people of Israel: and I will not let my holy name be euel spoken of eny more: but the very Heithen also shal know, that I am the LORDE, the holy one of Israel. Beholde, it commeth, and shalbe fulfilled in dede, saieth the LORDE God. This is the daye, wherof I haue spoken: They that dwell in y cities of Israel, shal go forth and set fyre vpon the weapens, and burne them: shyldes and speres, bowes and arowes, bylles and clubbes: seuen yeares shall they be burnynge therof, so that they shall els bringe no stickes from y felde, nether haue nede to hewe downe eny out of the wodde: For they shall haue weapens ynew to burne. They shal robbe those that robbed them, and spoyle those that spoyled them, saieth y LORDE God.

C At the same tyme will I geue vnto Gog a place to be buried in, in Israel: euē the valley, where thorow men go from the east to the see warde. Those that trauayle therby, shal abboure it. There shal Gog and all his people be buried: and it shalbe called the valley of the people of Gog. Seuen monethes longe shall the house of Israel be burienge of them, that they maye clense the lōde: Yee all the people of the londe shal burie them, O it shal be a glorious daye, when I get me that honoure, saieth the LORDE God. They shal ordene men also to be deedburiers, euer goinge thorow the lōde, and appoynte them certayne places to bury those in, which remayne vpon the felde, that the londe maye be clensed. From ende to ende shal they seke, and that vij monethes lōge. Now those that go thorow the londe, where they se a mans bone, they shall set vp a token by it, till the deedburiers haue buried it also, in the valley of the people of Gog. And the name of the cite shalbe called Hamona: Thus shall they make the londe clene.

And thou sonne of man thus saieth the D LORDE God: Speake vnto all the foules and euery hyde, yee and to all the wilde beastes of the felde: heape you together and come, gather you roūde aboute vpō my slaughter, that I haue slayne for you: euen a greate slaughter vpon the mountaynes of Israel: eate flesh, and drynke blonde. Ye shal eate y flesh of the worthies, and drynke the blonde of the princes of the londe: of the wethers, of the lambes, of the goates, and of the oxen that be all slayne at Basan. Eate y fat yonre bely full, and drynke blonde, till ye be dronken of the slaughter, which I haue slayne vnto you. Fyl you at my table, with horses & stronge horsmen: with captaynes and all maner of warre, saieth the LORDE God.

I will bringe my glory also amonge the Gentiles, that all the Heithen maye se my iudgment, that I haue kept, and my honde which I haue layed vpon them: that y house of Israel maye knowe, how that I am y LORDE their God, from that daye forth. And the Heithen shal knowe, that where as E the house of Israel were led in to captiuyte: it was for their wickednes sake, because they offended me.

F For the which cause I hyd my face from them, and delyuered them in to the hondes of their enemies, that they might all be slayne with the sworde. Accordinge to their vncleanesse & vnfaithfull dealinges, so haue I entreated them, and hyd my face from them. Therfore thus saieth y LORDE God: Now will I bringe agayne the captyues of Jacob, and haue mercy vpon the whole house of Israel, and be gelous for my holy names sake. All their confucion and offence that they haue done agaynst me, shal be taken awaye: and so safely shal they dwell in their londe, that no man shal make them afrayed. And when I haue brought thē agayne from amonge the people, when I haue gathered them together out of their enemies londes, and am praysed in them before many Heithen: then shall they knowe, that I am the LORDE their God, which suffred them to be led in to captiuyte amonge the Heithen, but now haue brought them agayne in to their owne londe, and not left one of them yonder.

After that, will I hyde my face nemore from them, but will poure out my spirite vpon the house of Israel, saieth the LORDE Exx. 36. d God.

The xl. Chapter.

A In the xxv yeare of oure captiuyte, in the begynnynge of the yeare, the x daye of the moneth: that is the xiiij yeare, after that y cite was smytten downe: the same daye came the honde of the LORDE vpon me, and caried me forth: euen in to the londe of Israel, brought he me in the visions of God: and set me downe vpō a marueloushie mountayne, wher vpon there was a buyldinge (as it had bene of a cite) towarde the north.

Thither he caried me, and beholde, there was a man, whose similitude was like brasse, which had a threde of flax in his honde, and a meterodde also. He stode in the dore, & sayde vnto me: marcke well with thine eyes, herken to with thine eares, and fasten it in thine hert, what so euer I shal shewe the, for to the intent that they might be shewed the, therfore art thou brought hither. And what soeuer thou seyst, thou shalt certifie the house of Israel therof.

Beholde, there was a wall on the outsyde roundeabout the house: the meterodde that he had in his honde, was six cubites longe & a spanne. So he measured the bredth of the buyldinge, which was a meterodde, and the
B heyth also a meterodde. Then came he vnto the east dore, and went vp the stares, & measured the postes of the dore: the one was a meterodde thicke, and the other was a meterodde long. The chambers were [illegible] the poste of the dore within [illegible] meterodde. He measured also the porche of the vtermer dore, which contey[illegible] meterodde. He measured he the entrie of [illegible] conteyned eght cubites, and his pilers two cubites: and this entrie stode inwarde.

The chambers of the dore eastwarde, were three on euery syde: alike brode and longe. The pilers also that stode of both the sydes, were of one measure. After this, he measured the wydenesse of the dore: which was x cubites, & the heyth of the dore xiij cubites. The edge before the chābres was one cubite brode vpō both the sydes, & the chambres six cubites wyde of either syde. He measured the dore from the rygge of one chābre to another, whose wydenesse was xxv cubites, & one dore stode agaynst another. He made pilers also lx cubites hie, roūde about the courte dore. Before the inwarde parte vnto the fore entre of the ynnermer dore, were fiftie cubites. The chambers and their pilers within, roūnde about vnto the dore, had syde wyndowes: So had the fore entries also, whose wyndowes went roūnde about within. And vpon the pilers there stode date trees.

C Then brought he me in to the fore courte, where as were chābres & paued worckes, made in the fore courte roūde about: xxx chābres vpon one paued worcke. Now the paued worke was a lōge beside the dores, and that was the lower paued worke. After this, he measured the bredth from the lower dore, vnto the ynnermer courte of the outsyde, which had an hundreth cubites vpon the east & the north parte. And the dore in the vtermost courte toward the north, measured he after the lēgth and bredth: his three chambres on either syde, with his pilers & fore entries, which had euen the measure of the first dore. His heyth was fiftie cubites, the bredth xxv cubites: his wyndowes & porches with the date trees, had euen like measure as the dore toward the east: there where vij steppes go vp vpō, & their porche before them. The dore of the ynnermer courte stode stondinge ouer agaynst the dore, that was toward the north east. From one dore to another, he measured an C cubites.

After that, he brought me to the south syde, where there stode a dore toward the south, whose pilers and porches he measured, they had the fyrst measure, & with their porches they had wyndowes roūnde about, like the first wyndowes. The heyth was l cubites, & bredth xxv, with steppes to go vp vpon. The porche stode before him, with his pilers and date trees on either syde. And the dore of the ynnermer courte stode toward the south, & he measured from one dore to another an C cubites. So he brought me in to the ynnermer courte, thorow the dore of the south syde which he measured, & it had the measure afore sayde. In like maner, his chambres, pilers and fore entries, had euen the fore sayde measure also. And he had with his porches roūnde about, wyndowes of l cubites hye, & xxv cubites brode. The porches roūnde about were xxv cubites longe, and v cubites brode: and his porch reached vnto the vtermost courte: vpon his pilers there were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp vpon.

He brought me also in to the ynnost courte vpon the east syde, and measured the dore acordinge to the measure afore sayde. His chambers, pilers and porches had euen the same measure, as the first had: & with his porches he had wyndowes roūnde about. The heyth was l cubites, the bredth xxv cubites: his porches reached vnto the vtermost courte: his pilers also had date trees on either syde, and viij steppes to go vp vpon. And he brought me to the north dore, and measured it, which also had the fore sayde measure. His chābres, pilers and porches had wyndowes roūnde about: whose heyth was l cubites, and the bredth xxv. His pilers stode toward the vtemost courte, and vpon them both were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp vpon. There stode a chambre also, whose entraūce was at the dore pilers, and there the burntoffringes were wasshed.

In the dore porche, there stode on ether syde two tables for the slaughtringe: to slaye the brentoffringes, synneoffringes and trespaceoffringes ther vpon. And on the out syde as men go forth by the north dore, there stode two tables. Foure tables stode on ether syde of the dore, that is viij tables, wher vpon they slaughted. Foure tables were of hewen stone for the burntoffringes, of a cubite and a half longe and brode, and one cubite hie: wher vpon were layed ỹ vessels and ornamentes, which were vsed to the burnt & slayne offeringes, when they were slaughted. And within there were hokes foure fyngers brode, fastened rounde aboute, to hange flesh vpon, & vpon the tables was layed the offringe flesh. On the out syde of the ynnermer dore were the syngers chambers [illegible] the inwarde courte beside ỹ north dore [illegible] agaynst the south. There stode one also [illegible] for the east dore northwarde.

And he sayde vnto me: This chambre [illegible] the south syde belongeth to the prestes, [illegible] kepe the habitacion: and this towarde the north, is the prestes that wayte vpon the aulter: which be the sonnes of Sadoch, that do seruyce before the LORDE in steade of the children of Leui. So he measured the fore courte, which had in lengthe an C cubites, and as moch in bredth by the foure corners. Now the aulter stode before the house: And he brought me to the fore entre of the house, and measured the walles by the entre dore: which were fyue cubites longe on ether syde. The thickneſſe also of the dore on ether syde, was thre cubites. The lēgth of the porche was xx cubites. the bredth xj. cubites, and vpon steppes went men vp to it: by the walles also were pilers, on either syde one.

The XLI. Chapter.

AFter this he brought me to the temple, and measured the postes: which were of both the sydes vj. cubites thicke, acordinge to the wydeneſſe of the tabernacle. The bredth of ỹ dore was x. cubites, & the walles of the dore on either syde fyue cubites. He measured the lengthe therof, which conteyned xl. cubites, and the bredth xx. Thē wente he in, and measured the dore postes, which were two cubites thicke: but the dore itself was sixe cubites, and the bredth of the dore was vij. cubites. He measured the lēgth and bredth ther of, which were euery one xx. cubites, before the temple.

And he sayde vnto me: this is the holyest of all. He measured also the wall of the house, which was sixe cubites. The chambres ỹ stode rounde aboute ỹ house, were euery one foure cubites wyde, and one stode harde vpō another, wherof there were xxxiij. And there stode postes beneth by the walles rounde aboute the house, to beare thē vp: but in ỹ wall of ỹ houſe they were not fastened: The syde chambres were the hyer the wyder, and had steppes thorow them rounde aboute ỹ house. Thus was it wyder aboue, that from the lowest men might go to the hyest & mydde chābers. I sawe also that the house was very hye rounde aboute. The foundacion of the syde chambres was a meter rodde (that is sixe cubites) brode. The thickneſſe of the syde wall without, conteyned fyue cubites, & so [illegible] wall of the chābers in ỹ house.

[illegible] chambers, was ther wyde- [illegible] rounde aboute ỹ house. The [illegible] ouer agaynst the out [illegible] was towarde the north, ỹ [illegible] south: and the thickneſſe [illegible] v cubites rounde abou- [illegible] buylding that was separated [illegible] west, was lxx. cubites wyde: the wall [illegible] buylding was v cubites thicke rounde aboute, and the length foure score cubites and ten. So he measured the house which was an C. cubites longe, and the separated buylding with the wall were an C. cubites lōge also. The wydneſſe before the house and of it ỹ was separated towarde the east, was an C. cubites.

And he measured the length of the buylding before and behinde with the chābers vpon both the sydes: and it conteyned an C. cubites. The ynnermer temple, the porch of the forecourte, ỹ syde postes, these thre had syde wyndowes, and pilers rounde aboute ouer agaynst the postes, from the grounde vp to the wyndowes: The wyndowes themselues were syled ouer with bordes: & thus was it aboue the dore, vnto the ynmoſt house, and without also: Yee the whole wall on euery syde both within and without was syled ouer w̄ greate bordes. There were Cherubins and date trees made also, so that one date tre stode euer betwixte two Cherubins: One Cherub had two faces, ỹ face of a man lokinge a syde towarde the date tre, and a lyons face on the other syde. Thus was it made roūde aboute in all the house: Yee the Cherubins and date trees were made from the grounde vp aboue the dore, and so stode they also vpon the wall of the temple.

The byposte of the temple were foure squared, and the fashion of the Sanctuary was, euen as it appeared vnto me a fore in ỹ

Thither he caried me, and beholde, there was a man, whose simulitude was like brasse, which had a threde of flax in his honde, and a meterodde also. He stode in the dore, & sayde vnto me: marcke well with thine eyes, herken to with thine eares, and fasten it in thine hert, what so euer I shal shewe the, for to the intent that they might be shewed the, ther fore art thou brought hither. And what soeuer thou seyst, thou shalt certifie the house of Israel therof.

Beholde, there was a wall on the outsyde roumde aboute the house: the meterodde that he had in his honde, was six cubites longe & a spanne. So he measured the bredth of the buylding, which was a meterodde, and the
B heyth also a meterodde. Then came he vnto the east dore, and wente vp the stares, & measured the postes of the dore: eche of them one was a meterodde thicke, [illegible] was a meterodde longe, [illegible] the chambers were [illegible] poste of the dore within the [illegible] meterodde. He measured also [illegible] the of the vtermer dore, which conteyned a meterodde. Thē measured he the entrie of the dore, that conteyned eight cubites, and his pilers two cubites: and this entrie stode inwarde.

The chambers of the dore eastwarde, were three on euery syde: alike brode and longe. The pilers also that stode of both the sydes, were of one measure. After this, he measured the wydenesse of the dore: which was x cubites, & the heyth of the dore xiij cubites. The edge before the chābres was one cubite brode vpō both the sydes, & the chambres six cubites wyde of either syde. He measured ỹ dore from the rygge of one chābre to another, whose wydenesse was xxv cubites, & one dore stode agaynst another. He made pilers also lx cubites hie, roumde aboute the courte dore. Before the inwarde parte vnto the fore entre of the ynnermer dore, were fiftie cubites. The chambers and their pilers within, roumde aboute vnto ỹ dore, had syde wyndowes: So had the fore entries also, whose wyndowes wente roumde aboute within. And vpon the pilers there stode date trees.

C Then brought he me in to the fore courte, where as were chābres & paued worckes, made in ỹ fore courte roūde aboute: xxx chābres vpon one paued worcke. Now the paued worke was a lōge beside the dores, and that was the lower paued worke. After this, he measured ỹ bredth from the lower dore, vnto the ynnermer courte of the out syde, which had an hundreth cubites vpon the east & the north parte. And the dore in the vtermost courte toward the north, measured he after the lēgth and bredth: his three chambres also on either syde, with his pilers & fore entries: which had euen the measure of the first dore. His heyth was fiftie cubites, the bredth xxv cubites: his wyndowes & porches with his date trees, had euen like measure as the dore toward the east: there where viij steppes to go vp vpō, & their porche before them. Now ỹ dore of the ynnermer courte stode straight ouer agaynst the dore, that was toward ỹ north east. From one dore to another, he measured an C cubites.

After that, he brought me to the south syde, where there stode a dore toward ỹ south whose pilers and porches he measured, they had the fyrst measure, & with their porches they had wyndowes roumde aboute, like the first wyndowes. The heyth was l cubites, ỹ bredth xxv, with steppes to go vp vpon: his porche stode before him, with his pilers and date trees on either syde. And the dore of the ynnermer courte stode toward the south, & he measured from one dore to another an C cubites. So he brought me in to ỹ ynnermer courte, thorow the dore of the south syde which he measured, & it had the measure afore sayde. In like maner, his chambres, pilers and fore entries, had euen the fore sayde measure also. And he had with his porches roumde aboute, wyndowes of l cubites hye, & xxv cubites brode. The porches roumde aboute were xxv cubites longe, and v cubites brode: and his porch reached vnto ỹ vttemost courte: vpon his pilers there were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp vpon.

He brought me also in to the ynnost courte vpon the east syde, and measured the dore, acordinge to ỹ measure afore sayde. His chābers, pilers and porches had euen the same measure, as the first had: & with his porches he had wyndowes roūde aboute. The heyth was l cubites, ỹ bredth xxv cubites: his porches reached vnto the vttemost courte: his pilers also had date trees on either syde, and viij steppes to go vp vpon. And he brought me to the north dore, and measured it, which also had the fore sayde measure. His chābres, pilers and porches had wyndowes roumde aboute: whose heyth was l cubites, and the bredth xxv. His pilers stode toward the vttemost courte, and vpon them both were date trees, and viij steppes to go vp vpon. There stode a chambre also, whose intraūce was at the dore pilers, and there the burnt offringes were wasshed.

In the dore porche, there stode on ether syde two tables for the slaughtinge: to slaye the brentoffringes, symeoffringes and trespaceoffringes therupon. And on the out syde as men go forth to the north dore, there stode two tables. Foure tables stode on ether syde of the dore, that is viij tables, wherupon they slaughted. Foure tables were of hewen stone for the burntoffringes, of a cubite and a half longe and brode, and one cubite hie: wherupon were layed ỹ vessels and ornamentes, which were vsed to the burnt & slayne offeringes, when they were slaughted. And within there were hokes foure fyngers brode, fastened roũde aboute, to hange flesh vpon, & vpon the tables was layed the offringe flesh. On the outsyde of the ynnermer dore were the syngers chambers in the inwarde courte besyde ỹ north dore ouer agaynst the south. There stode one also syde the east dore northwarde.

And he sayde vnto me: This chambre on the south syde belongeth to the prestes, that kepe the habitacion: and this towarde the north, is the prestes that wayte vpon the aulter: which be the sonnes of Sadoch, that do seruyce before the LORDE in steade of the children of Leui. So he measured the fore courte, which had in length an C cubites, and as moch in bredth by the foure corners. Now the aulter stode before the house: And he brought me to the fore entre of the house, and measured the walles by the entre dore: which were fyue cubites longe on ether syde. The thickneſſe also of the dore on ether syde, was thre cubites. The lẽgth of the porche was xx cubites. the bredth xj. cubites, and vpon steppes went men vp to it: by the walles also were pilers, on either syde one.

The XLI. Chapter.

AFter this he brought me to the temple, and measured the postes: which were of both the sydes vj. cubites thicke, acordinge to the wydeneſſe of the tabernacle. The bredth of ỹ dore was x. cubites, & the walles of the dore on either syde fyue cubites. He measured the length therof, which conteyned xl. cubites, and the bredth xx. Thẽ wente he in, and measured the dore postes, which were two cubites thicke: but the dore itself was sixe cubites, and the bredth of the dore was vij. cubites. He measured the lẽgth and bredth therof, which were euery one xx. cubites, before the temple.

And he sayde vnto me: this is the holyest of all. He measured also the wall of the house, which was sixe cubites. The chambres ỹ stode roũde aboute ỹ house, were euery one foure cubites wyde, and one stode harde vpõ another, wherof there were xxxiij. And there stode postes beneth by the walles roũde aboute the house, to beare thẽ vp: but in ỹ wall of ỹ house they were not fastened: The syde chambres were the hyer the wyder, and had steppes thorow them roũde aboute ỹ house. Thus was it wyder above, that from the lowest men might go to the hyest & mydde chãbers. I sawe also that the house was very hye roũde aboute. The foundacion of the syde chambres was a meter rodde (that is sixe cubites) brode. The thickneſſe of the syde wall without, conteyned fyue cubites, & so [illegible] wall of the chãbers in ỹ house.

[illegible] chambere, was the wyde- [illegible] roũde aboute ỹ house. The [illegible] ouer agaynst the out [illegible] was towarde the north, ỹ [illegible] south: and the thickneſſe [illegible] v cubites roũde about- [illegible] buyldinge that was separated [illegible] west, was lxx. cubites wyde: the wall [illegible] buyldinge was v cubites thicke roũde aboute, and the length foure score cubites and ten. So he measured the house which was an C. cubites longe, and the separated buyldinge with the wall were an C. cubites lõge also. The wydneſſe before the house and of it ỹ was separated towarde the east, was an C. cubites.

And he measured the length of the buyldinge before and behinde with the chãbers vpon both the sydes: and it conteyned an C. cubites. The ynnermer temple, the porch of the forecourte, ỹ syde postes, these thre had syde wyndowes, and pilers roũde aboute ouer agaynst the postes, from the grounde vp to the wyndowes: The wyndowes themselues were syled ouer with bordes: & thus was it aboue the dore, vnto the ymmost house, and without also: Yee the whole wall on euery syde both within and without was syled ouer w̃ greate bordes. There were Cherubins and date trees made also, so that one date tre stode euer betwixte two Cherubins: One Cherub had two faces, ỹ face of a man lokinge a syde towarde the date tre, and a lyons face on the other syde. Thus was it made roũde aboute in all the house: Yee the Cherubins and date trees were made from the grounde vp aboue the dore, and so stode they also vpon the wall of the temple.

The byposte of the temple were foure squared, and the fashion of the Sanctuary was, euen as it appeared vnto me a fore in ỹ vision. The table was of wodde, thre cubites hie and two cubites longe: his corners, the length and the walles were of wodde. And he sayde vnto me: This is the table, that shal stonde before the LORDE. The temple and the holiest of all had ether of them two dores, and euery dore had two litle wicketes which were folden in one vpon another, on euery syde two. And vpon the dores of the temple there were made Cherubins and date trees, like as vpon the walles: and a greate thicke balke of wodde was before on the out syde of the porche. Vpō both the sydes of the walles of the porche, there were made depe wyndowes and date trees, hauynge beames and balkes, like as the house had.

The XLII. Chapter.

A Then caried he me out in to the fore courte towarde the north, & brought me in to the chambre that stode ouer agaynst the backebuyldinge northwarde, which had the length of an C. cubites, whose dore turned towarde the north. The wydenesse conteyned L. cubites, ouer agaynst the xx. cubites of the ynnermer courte, & agaynst the paued worke that was in the fore courte. Besyde all these thre there stode pilers, one ouer against another: And before this chābre there was a walkinge place of x. cubites wyde, and within was a waye of one cubite wyde, and their dores towarde the north. Thus the hyest chambres were allwaye narower then the lowest and myddelmost of ye buildinge: for they bare chambre vpon chambre, and stode thre together one vpon another, not hauynge pilers like the fore courte: therfore were they smaller then those beneth and in the myddest, to reken from the grounde vpwarde.

B The wall without that stode by ye chambres towarde the vttemost courte vpon the fore syde of the chambres, was L. cubites lōge: for the lēgth of ye vttemost chambers in the fore courte was L. cubites also: but the length therof before the temple was an C. cubites. These chambres had vnder them an intraunce of the east syde, wherby a man might go in to them out of the fore courte, thorow the thicke wall of the fore courte towarde the east, right ouer agaynst the separated buyldinge. Before the same buyldinge vpō this syde there were chābers also which, had a waye vnto them, like as the chambers on the north syde of the same length and wydenesse.

Their intraunce, fashion and dores were all of the same maner. Yee euen like as the other chamber dores were, so were those also of the south syde. And before the wayewarde the syngers steppes on the east syde, there stode a dore to go in at. Then sayde he vnto me: The chambers towarde the north & the south, which stōde before the backebyldinge: those be holy habitacions, wherin the prestes that do seruyce before the LORDE, must eate the most holy offringes: and there must they laye the most holy offringes: meat offringes, synneoffringes & trespaceoffringes, for it is an holy place. When the prestes come therin, they shal not go out in to the fore courte: but (seynge they be holy) they shall leaue the clothes of their ministracion, and put on other garmentes, when they haue ony thinge to do with the people.

Now when he had measured all the ynnermer house, he brought me forth thorow the east porte, and measured the same rounde aboute. He measured the east syde with ye meterodde, which rounde aboute conteyned v. C. meteroddes. And the north syde measured he, which conteyned rounde aboute euen so moch. The other two sydes also towarde the south and the west (which he measured) conteyned ether of them v. C. meteroddes. So he measured all ye foure sydes where there wente a wall rounde aboute v. C. meteroddes longe, and as brode also, which separated the holy from the vnholy.

The XLIII. Chapter.

SO he brought me to ye dore, that turneth towarde the east. Beholde, the came the glory of the God of Israel from out of the east, whose voyce was like a greate noyse of waters, and the earth was lightened with his glory. His sight to loke vpon was like the first, that I sawe, when I wente in, what tyme as the cite shulde haue bene destroyed: and like the vision that I sawe by the water of Cobar. Then fell I vpon my face, but the glory of the LORDE came in to the house thorow the east dore. So a wynde toke me vp, and brought me in to ye ynnermer courte: & beholde, the house was full of the glory of the LORDE.

I herde one speakinge vnto me out of the house, and there stode one by me, that sayde vnto me: O thou sonne of man, this rowme is my seate, and the place of my fotesteppes: where as I wil dwell amonge the children of Israel for euermore: so that the house of Israel shal nomore defyle my holy name, neither they, ner their kinges, thorow their whordome, thorow their hie places, & thorow the deed bodies of their kinges: which haue buyl

ded their threſholdes in maner harde vpon my threſholdes, and their poſtes almoſt at my poſtes: ſo that there is but a bare wall be twixte me and them.

Thus haue they defyled my holy name with their abhominacions, that they haue cõmitted. Wherfore I haue deſtroyed them in my wrath: But now they ſhal put awaye their whordome and the deed bodies of their kinges out of my ſight, that I maye dwell amõge them for euermore. Therfore (o thou ſonne of man) ſhewe thou the houſholde of Iſrael a temple, that they maye be aſhamed of their wickednesſe, and meaſure them ſelues an example therat.

And when they be aſhamed of all their workes, then ſhewe them the fourme and faſhion of the temple: the cõmynge in, the goinge out, all the maner and deſcripcion therof, yee all the vſes and ordinances of it, ỹ they maye kepe & fulfill all the faſhions and cuſtomes therof.

C This is the deſcripcion of the houſe: Abo
ue vpõ the mount rounde aboute all the corners, it ſhalbe ỹ holieſt of all. Beholde, that is the deſcripcion and faſhion of the houſe.
This is the meaſure of the aulter (after the true cubite, : which is a ſpanne longer then another cubite) his botome in the myddeſt was a cubite longe and wyde, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute it, was a ſpanne brode. This is the heyth of the aulter: From the grounde to the lower ſteppes the length is two cubites, and the bredth one cubite:
and from the lower ſteppes to the higher are foure cubites, & the bredth but one cubite.

The aulter was foure cubites hie, & from the aulter vpwarde ſtode foure homes, and it was xij cubites longe and xij cubites brode, vpon the foure corners: the coueringe of the aulter was xiiij cubites longe and brode vpon the foure corners, and the ledge that wente rounde aboute, had half a cubite: and the botome therof rounde aboute one cubite: his ſteppes ſtode towarde the eaſte. And he ſayde vnto me: Thou ſonne of man, thus ſaieth the LORDE God: theſe are the ordinaunces and lawes of the aulter, in the daye whẽ it is made, to offre burntoffringes, and to ſprenkle blonde ther vpon. To the prieſtes, to ỹ Leuites that be of the ſede of Sadoch,
and treade before me to do me ſeruyce, ſaieth
the LORDE God: Vnto theſe geue thou a yon ge bullocke, for a ſynoffringe: & take the blon de of him & ſprenkle his foure homes withal, & the foure corners of the aulter coueringe,
with the ledge that goeth rounde aboute: he Leui.16.f
re with ſhalt thou clenſe it, and reconcile it.
Thou ſhalt take the bullock alſo of the ſyn-offringe, & burne him in a ſeuerall place with out the Sanctuary.

The nexte daye, take a goot buck without blemiſh for a ſynoffringe, to reconcile the aul ter withall: like as it was reconciled with ỹ bullocke. Now when thou haſt made it cle-ne, then offre a yonge bullocke without blemiſh, and a ramme out of the flocke without blemiſh alſo: Offre them before the LORDE, Leui.22.c
and let the prieſt caſt ſalt therpon, and ge- Leui.2.b
ue them ſo vnto the LORDE for a burnt of-fringe. Seuen dayes ſhalt thou bringe, euery daye a goot bucke. A yonge bullocke & a ram me of the flocke (both without blemiſh) ſhal they offre. Seuen dayes ſhal they reconcile and clenſe the aulter, & offre vpon it. When theſe dayes are expired, then vpon the viij daye and ſo forth, the prieſtes ſhal offre their burntoffringes and healthoffringes vpõ ỹ aulter: ſo wil I be mercifull vnto you, ſaieth
the LORDE God.

The XLIIII. Chapter.

AFter this, he brought me agayne to ỹ outwarde dore of the Sanctuary on the eaſt ſyde, and that was ſhut. Then ſayde the LORDE vnto me: This dore ſhal be ſtil ſhut, and not opened for eny mã to go thorow it, but only for the LORDE God of Iſrael: yee he ſhal go thorow it, els ſhal it be ſhut ſtill. The prynce himſelf ſhal come tho-row it, that he maye eate bred before the LOR DE. At the porche ſhal he come in, and there ſhal he go out agayne. Then brought he me Exo 40.c
to the dore, vpon the north ſyde of the hou- 24.d
ſe. And as I loked aboute me, behold, the Nu.9.c
glory of the LORDE fylled the houſe: and I 3.Reg.8.b fell downe vpon my face. So the LORDE 2.Par.7.i ſpake vnto me: O thou ſonne of man, faſten
this to thine herte, behold, and take diligẽt hede to all that I wil ſaye vnto the, concernynge all the ordinaunces of the LORDE and all his lawes: ponder well with thine herte
the commynge in of the houſe and the goin-ge forth of the Sanctuary: and tell that ob-ſtinate houſholde of Iſrael: Thus ſaieth the LORDE God: O houſe of Iſrael, ye haue now done ynough with all youre abhominacions, ſeynge that ye haue brought in to my Sanctuary ſtranngers, hauynge vncircumciſed hertes & fleſh, where thorow my Sãctuary is defiled, whẽ ye offre my bred, fat, & blonde.

Thus with all youre abhominacions ye haue broken my couenaunt, and not kepte
the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary:

but set kepers of my Sanctuary, euen after youre owne mynde. Therfore thus saieth ỹ LORDE God: Of all the straungers that dwell amõge the childrẽ of Jsrael, no straunger (whose herte ỹ flesh is not circumcised) shal come within my Sanctuary: No ner the Lewites that be gone backe fro me, and haue disceaued the people of Jsrael with erroures, goinge after their Jdols: therfore shal thei beare their owne wickednes. Shulde they be set and ordened to ministre, vnder the dores of the house of my Sanctuary: and to do seruyce in the house: to slaye burntoffringes and sacrifices for ỹ people: to stõde before them, and to serue them: seynge the seruyce that they do them, is before their Jdols, and cause the house of Jsrael to stomble thorow wickednesse?

2.Reg.2.f For the which cause J haue pluckte out myne honde ouer them (saieth the LORDE) so that now they must beare their owne iniquyte, and not to come nye me, to serue me with their preasheade, in my Sanctuary, and most holyest of all: that they maye beare their owne shame and abhominacions, which they haue done. Shulde J vse them to be porters of the house, and to all the seruyce ỹ is done therin? But the prestes ỹ Lewites the sonnes of Sadoch, that kepte the holy ordinaunces of my Sanctuary, when the children of Jsrael were gone fro me: shal come to me, to do me seruyce, to stonde before me, and to offre me the fat and the bloude, saieth the LORDE God.

C Eze.43.d 48.b

They shall go in to my Sanctuary, and treade before my table, to do me seruyce, and to waite vpõ myne ordinaunces. Now whẽ they go in at the dores of the ynnermer courte, they shal put on lynnynge clothes, so that no wollyne come vpon them: whyle they do seruyce vnder the dores of ỹ ynnermer courte, and within. They shal haue fayre lynnynge bonettes vpon their heades, and lynnynge breches vpon their loynes, which in their labour they shal not put about them: And when they go forth to the people in to the outwarde courte, they shal put of the clothes, wherin they haue ministred, and laye them in the habitacion of the Sanctuary, & put on other apparell, lest they onhalowe ỹ people with their clothes.

D Leui.19.f 21.a Leui.10.c 21.b Ose.1.a 3.a

They shal not shaue their heades, ner norish the bushe of their hayre, but rõde their heades only. All the prestes that go in to the ynmost courte, shall drynke no wyne. They shall mary no wydowe, nether one that is put from hir husbonde: but a mayde of the sede of the house of Jsrael, or a wydowe, that hath had a prest before.

They shal shewe my people the difference betwene the holy and vnholy, betwixte the clene and vnclene. Yf eny discorde arise, they shal discerne it, and geue sentence after my iudgmentes. My solempne feastes, my lawes and ordinaunces shal they kepe, and halowe my Sabbathes. They shal come at no deed persone, to defyle them selues: (excepte it be father or mother, sonne or doughter, brother or sister that hath had yet no husbonde) in soch they maye be defyled.

And when he is clensed, there shal be rekened vnto him vij dayes: and yf he go into the Sanctuary agayne to do seruyce, he shal bringe a synoffringe saieth the LORDE God. They shall haue an heretage, yee J my self wil be their heretage: els shall ye geue thẽ no possession in Jsrael, for J am their possessiõ. The meatoffringe, synoffringe & trespace offringe shal they eate, and euery dedicate thinge in Jsrael, shal be theirs. The firstlinges of all the first frutes, and all fre will offringes shal be the prestes.

Ye shall geue vnto the prest also the firstlinges of youre dowe, that God maye prospere the resydue. But no deed carion shall the prest eate, ner soch as is deuoured of wilde beestes, foules or catell.

The XLV. Chapter.

When ye deuyde the lõde by the lott, ye shal put aside one parte for the LORDE, to be holy from other londes: namely, xxv M meteroddes longe, and x M brode. This shalbe holy, as wyde as it is rounde aboute. Of this parte there shal be longe vnto the Sanctuary v C meteroddes in all the foure corners; and l cubites wyde rounde aboute to the suburbes. And from this meausre, namely of xxv M meteroddes longe, and x M brode, thou shalt measure, wherin the Sanctuary and the holiest of all maye stonde.

The resydue of that holy grounde shall be the prestes, which do seruyce in the Sanctuary of the LORDE, and go in before the LORDE to serue him, that they maye haue rowme to dwell in.

As for the Sanctuary, it shal stonde for it self: and to the Lewites the serue in that house, there shalbe geuen xx habitacions, of the xxv M lẽgth & x M bredth: ye shal geue also vnto the cite a possessiõ of v M meteroddes brode, & xxv M longe, beside the parte of ỹ Sanctuary: that shal be for the whole howse of Jsrael. Vpon both the sydes of the Sanctuarys parte, & by the cite, there shalbe geuen vnto the prynce, what so euer lyeth ouer agaynst the cite, as farre as reacheth westwarde and eastwarde: which shalbe as longe as one parte, frō ỹ west vnto ỹ east.

This shalbe his owne lōde in Israel, that my princes be no more chargeable vnto my people. And soch as remayneth yet ouer in the londe, shalbe geuen to the house of Israel accordinge to their trybes. Thus saieth the LORDE God: O ye princes, ye haue now oppressed and destroyed ynough: now leaue of, handle now accordinge to the thinge, that is equall and lawfull: and thrust out my people no more, sayeth ỹ LORDE God. Ye shal haue a true weight, a true Epha, & a true Bat.

The Epha & the Bat shalbe a like. One Bat shal cōteyne ỹ tēth parte of an Homer, and so shal one Epha do: their measure shal be after ỹ Homer. One Sycle maketh xx. Geras. So xx. Sycles, and xxv. & xv. Sycles make a pounde. This is the Heaue offrynge, that ye shal geue to be heaued: namely, the xvj. parte of an Epha, out of an Homer of wheat: and the xvj. parte of an Epha, out of an Homer of barlie. The oyle shal be measured with the Bat: euen the x. parte of one Bat out of a Cor.

Ten Battes make one Homer: for one Homer maketh ten Battes. And one lābe from two hundreth shepe out of the pasture of Israel, for a meatoffrynge, burntoffrynge and healthoffrynge, to recōcile them, sayeth the LORDE God. All the people of the londe shal geue this heaue offrynge with a fre wil. Agayne, it shal be the princes parte to offre burntoffrynges, meatoffrynges and drynkoffrynges vnto the LORDE, in the holy dayes, new Moones, Sabbathes, and in all the hye feastes of the house of Israel. The synoffrynge, meatofferynge, brentofferynge & healthoffringe shal he geue, to recōcile the house of Israel. Thus sayeth ỹ LORDE God: The first daye of the first moneth thou shalt take a yōge bullocke without blemysh, and clense the Sanctuary.

So the preist shal take of the bloude of ỹ synoffrynge, and sprenkle it vpon the postes of the house, and vpon the foure corners of the aulter, with the dorepostes of the ynnermer courte. And thus shalt thou do also the seuenth daye of ỹ moneth (for soch as haue symed of ignoraunce, or beynge disceaued) to reconcile the house withall. Vpon ỹ xiiij. daye of the first moneth ye shal kepe Easter. Seuē dayes shal the feast contynue, wherin there shal no sower ner leuēded bred be eatē.

Vpon the same daye shal ỹ prynce geue for hymself and all the people of the londe, a bullocke for a synoffringe. And in the feast of the seuen dayes he shal offre euery daye a bullocke & a ram, that are with out blemysh, for a burntoffrynge vnto the LORDE: & an he gaote daylie for a synoffrynge. For the meatoffrynges he shall geue euer an Epha to a bullocke, an Epha to a ram, & an Hin of oyle to an Epha. Vpon ỹ xv. daye of the seuenth moneth, he shal kepe the seuen dayes holy one after another, euē as the other vij. dayes: with the synoffrynge, burntoffringe, meatoffrynge, and with the oyle.

The XLVI. Chapter.

THus sayeth the LORDE God: ỹ dore of the ynnermer courte towarde the east, shall be shut the vj. worke dayes: but in the Sabbath and in the daye of the new Moone, it shalbe opened. Then shal the prynce come vnder the dore porche, & stonde still without by the dore cheke. So ỹ prestes shall offre vp his burnt & healthoffrynges. And he shal worshipe at the dore poste, and go his waye forth agayne: but ỹ dore shal nomore be shut till the euenynge.

On the same maner shal the people of the londe also do their worshipe before the LORDE, without this dore vpon the Sabbathes and new Moones. This is now the burntoffrynge, that the prynce shall bringe vnto the LORDE vpon the Sabbath: sixe lambes without blemysh, & a ram without blemysh, and an Epha for a meatoffringe, with ỹ ram. As for the lambes, he maye geue as many meatoffrynges to them, as he wil, & an Hin of oyle to an Epha. In the daye of the new moneth, it shalbe a yonge bullocke without blemysh, sixe lambes & a ram also without blemysh. With the bullocke he shal geue an Epha, and with the ram an Epha also for a meatofferinge: but to ỹ lambes, what he maye come by: And euer an Hin of oyle to an Epha. When the prynce cōmeth, he shall go vnder the dore porche, and euen there departe forth agayne. But when the people of the londe come before the LORDE in the hye solempne feast, as many as come in by the north dore to do worshipe, shal go out agayne at the south dore. And they that come in at the south dore, shal go forth agayne at ỹ north dore. There shal none go out at the dore where he came in, but shal go forth right ouer on the other syde, and the prynce shall go in and out amonge them.

Vpon the solempne and hie feaste dayes, this shalbe the meatofferynge: An Epha to a bullock, and an Epha to a ram: and to the lambes, as many as he wil, but euer an Hin of oyle to an Epha. Now when the prynce bryngeth a burntofferynge or an healthofferynge with a fre wil vnto the LORDE, the east dore shalbe opened vnto him, ẏ he maye do with his burnt & healthofferynges, as he doth vpō the Sabbath: and when he goeth forth, the dore shal be shut after him agayne. He shal daylie bryng vnto the LORDE a lambe of a yeare olde without blemish for a burntofferynge: this shall he do euery morynge. And for a meatofferynge he shal gene the sixte parte of an Epha, & the thirde parte of an Hin of oyle (to mynge with the cakes) euery morynge. Yee this shalbe a daylie meatofferinge vnto the LORDE, for an euerlastinge ordinaunce: & thus shal the lambe, the meatofferynge and oyle be geuen euery morynge, for a dailie burntofferinge.

Moreouer, thus sayeth the LORDE God: Yf the prynce gene a gifte vnto eny of his sonnes, then shall it be his sonnes heretage perpetuall, ẏ he maye possesse it. But yf he wil gene one of his seruauntes some of his heretage, it shall be his to the fre yeare, and thē to returne agayne vnto ẏ prynce: for his heretage shalbe his sonnes only. The prynce also shal take none of the peoples enheritaunce, ner put thē from their possession: but to his owne sonnes shal he gene his possession, that my people be not scatred abrode, but that euery man maye haue his owne.

And he brought me thorow the intraunce at the syde of the dore to ẏ habitacion of the Sanctuary, that belongeth to ẏ prestes and stode towarde the north, & beholde, there was a place vpon the west syde, then sayde he vnto me: This is the place, where the prestes shall dight the trespace and synofferynges, & bake ẏ meatofferynges: that they nede not beare thē in to the outwarde courte, and so to vnhalowe the people. So he brought me in to the vttemost courte, rounde aboute all the foure corners. Beholde, in euery corner of ẏ fore courte, there was yet a litle courte. Yee in all the foure corners of the courte, there was made a litle courte of xl. cubites longe, and xxx. cubites brode: these foure litle courtes were of one like measure, & there went a rygge wall rounde aboute them all foure, vnder the which there were harthes made rounde aboute. Then sayde he vnto me: This is the kechin, where the ministers of the house shal dight the slayne offerynges of the people.

The XLVII. Chapter.

AFter this he brought me agayne beh re the dore of the house: & beholde, there guſſhed out waters from vnder ẏ postes of the house eastwarde (for the house stode towarde the east) that ranne downe vpō the right syde of the house, which lyeth to the aulter south warde. Thē caried he me out to the north dore, and brought me south there rounde aboute by the vttemost dore, ẏ turneth eastwarde. Beholde, there came forth the water vpon the right syde. Now whan the man ẏ had the meterodde in his honde wente out vnto the east dore, he measured a M. cubites, & thē he brought me thorow ẏ water, euē to the ancles: so he measured yet a thousande, & brought me thorow ẏ water agayne vnto the knees: yet measured he a thousande, and brought me thorow the water vnto the loynes. After this he measured a thousande agayne, then was it soch a ryuer, ẏ I might not wade thorow it: The water was so depe, that it was nedefull to haue swymmed, for it might not be waded ouer. And he sayde vnto me: hast thou seē this, o thou sonne of man? and with that, he brought me to the ryuer banck agayne.

Now when I came there, there stode many trees vpon ether syde of the ryuer bāke. Then sayde he vnto me: This water that floweth out towarde the east, and runneth downe in to the playne felde, commeth into the see: and from the see it runneth out, & maketh the waters whole. Yee all that line and moue, where vnto this ryuer commeth, shal recouer. And where this water cōmeth, there shalbe many fysh. For all that commeth to this water, shall be lusty and whole. By this riuer shal the fyßshers stonde from En gaddi vnto En Eglaim, & there sprede out their nettes: for there shalbe greate heapes of fysh, like as in the mayne see. As for his claye and pyttes, they shal not be whole, for why, it shalbe occupide for salt.

By this ryuer vpon both the sydes of the shore, there shall growe all maner of frutefull trees, whose leaues shall not fall of, ner ther shal their frute perish: but euer be rype at their monethes, for their water runneth out of the Sanctuary. His frute is good to eate, and his leaf profitable for medycine. Thus sayeth the LORDE God: Let this be the border, wherin ye shall deuyde the lōde vnto the xij. trybes of Israel, with the lyne. Parte it indifferently vnto one as vnto another: of the which lōde I swore vnto your fathers, that it shulde fall to youre enheritaunce.

This is the border of the londe vpon the northside, from the mayne see, as men go to Zadada: namely, Hemath, Berotha, Sabarim: from the borders of Damascus and Hemath vnto Hazar Tichon, that lieth vpon the coastes of Hauerā. Thus the borders frō the see forth, shalbe Hazar Enan, the border of Damascus the north, and the borders of Hemath: that is the north parte.

The east syde shal ye measure from Hauerā and Damascus, from Galead and the londe of Israel by Jordane and so forth, from the see coast, that lieth eastwarde: and this is the east parte.

The south syde is, from Thamar forth to the waters of strife vnto Cades, the ryuer, to the mayne see: and that is the south parte.

The west parte: namely the greate see from the borders therof, till a man come vnto Hemath: this is the west parte.

This londe shal ye parte amonge you, according to the trybes of Israel, and deuyde it to be an heretage for you, and for the straūgers that dwel amōge you, and begette children.

For ye shal take them amonge the childrē of Israell, like as though they were of youre owne housholde and countre, and they shal haue heretage with you amonge the childrē of Israel.

Loke in what trybe the straunger dwelleth, in the same trybe shal ye geue him his heretage, saieth the LORDE God.

The XLVIII. Chapter.

These are the names of the trybes that lye vpon the northsyde, by the waye of Hetlon, tyll thou commest vnto Hemath and Hazar Enam, the borders of Damascus towarde the north beside Hemath: Dan shalhaue his porciō from the east quarter vnto the west. Vpon the borders of Dan from the east syde vnto the west, shal Asser haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Asser frō the east parte vnto the west, shal Nephtali haue his porcion.

Vpon the borders of Nephtali from the east quarter vnto the west, shal Manasses haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Manasses from the east syde vnto the west, shal Ephraim haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ephraim from the east parte vnto the west, shal Ruben haue his porcion. Vpō the borders of Ruben from the east quarter vnto the west, shal Juda haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Juda from the east parte vnto the west, ye shal set a syde one porciō of xxv. M. meteroddes longe and brode (like as another porcion from the east syde vnto the west,) wherin the Sanctuary shal stōde.

As for the porcion, that ye shal separate out for the LORDE, it shalbe xxv. M. longe, and x. M. brode. Which separated holy porcion shal belonge vnto these: namely to the prestes, towarde the north xxv. M. & towarde the west x. M. brode, towarde the east x. M. brode also, & towarde the south xxv. M. longe, wherin the Sanctuary of the LORDE shal stonde. Yee this same place shal be the prestes, which are of the childrē of Sadoch, & haue kepte my holy ordinaunce: which wente not astraye in the erroure of the children of Israel, like as the Leuites are gone astraye: and this separated pece that they haue of the londe, shalbe the most holy, harde vpon the borders of the Leuites. And nexte vnto the prestes, shal the Leuites haue xxv. M. lōge and x. M. brode. This shalbe on euery syde xxv. M. longe, and x. M. brode. Of this porciō they shal sell nothinge, ner make eny permutacion therof, lest the chefe of the londe fall vnto other, for it is halowed vnto the LORDE.

The other v. M. after the bredth, which lyeth by the xxv. M, shalbe comon: it shal belonge to the cite and to the suburbes for habitacions, and the cite shal stonde in the myddest therof. Let this be the measure: towarde the north parte, v. C. & iiij. M: towarde the south parte, v. C. & iiij. M: towarde the east parte, v. C. and iiij. M: towarde the west parte, v. C. and iiij. M.

The suburbes harde vpon the cite, shall haue towarde the north, L. and ij. C: towarde the south, L. and two C: towarde the east, L. and two C: towarde the west also, L. and two C. As for the residue of the length, that lyeth hard vpon the separated holy grounde: namely, x. M. towarde the east and x. M. towarde the west, next vnto the holy porciō: it and the increase therof shal serue for their meate, that laboure in the cite. They that laboure for the welth of the cite, shall manteine this also, out of what tribe so euer they be in Israel.

All that is separated of the xxv. M. longe and xxv. M. brode on the foure partes, shall ye put a syde for the separated porcion of the Sanctuary, & for the possession of the cite. The residue vpon both the sydes of the Sanctuary and possession of the cite, shall belonge to the prynce, before the place of the xxv. M. vnto the east ende, & before the place of the xxv. M. westwarde, vnto the borders of ȳ cite: this shalbe ȳ prynces porcīō. This shalbe the holy place, and the house of the Sanctuary shal stonde in the myddest. Moreouer, from the Lewites and the cities possession, ȳ lye in the myddest of the prynces parte: loke what remayneth betwixte the border of Juda & the border of Ben Jamin, it shal be the prynces.

Now of the other trybes.

Frō the east parte vnto the west, shal Ben Jamin haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Ben Jamin frō the east syde vnto ȳ west, shal Symeon haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Symeō from the east parte vnto the west, shal Jsachar haue his porcion. Vpō the borders of Jsachar from the east syde vnto the west, shal Sabulon haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Sabulon from the east parte vnto the west, shal Gad haue his porcion. Vpon the borders of Gad southwarde, the coastes shal reach frō Thamar forth vnto the waters of strife to Cades, and to the floude, euen vnto the mayne see.

Exo. 22 Leui. 23.14

This is ȳ lōde wch his porcīōs, which ye shal distribute vnto the trybes of Jsrael, saieth ȳ LORDE God. Thus wyde shal the cite reach: vpon the north parte v C and iiij M measures. The portes of the cite, shal haue the names of the trybes of Jsrael. Thre portes of ȳ northsyde: One Ruben, another Juda, the thirde Leui.

Vpō ȳ east syde, v C & iiij M measures, wch ȳ thre portes: The one Joseph, another Be Jamin, the thirde Dan. Vpon the south syde v C and iiij M measures, with the thre portes: the one Symeon, another Jsachar, the thirde Sabulon. And vpon the west syde v C and iiij M measures, with thre portes also: the one Gad, another Asser, the thirde Nephtali. Thus shal it haue xviij M measures roūde aboute. And from that tyme forth, ȳ name of the cite shal be: the LORDE is there.

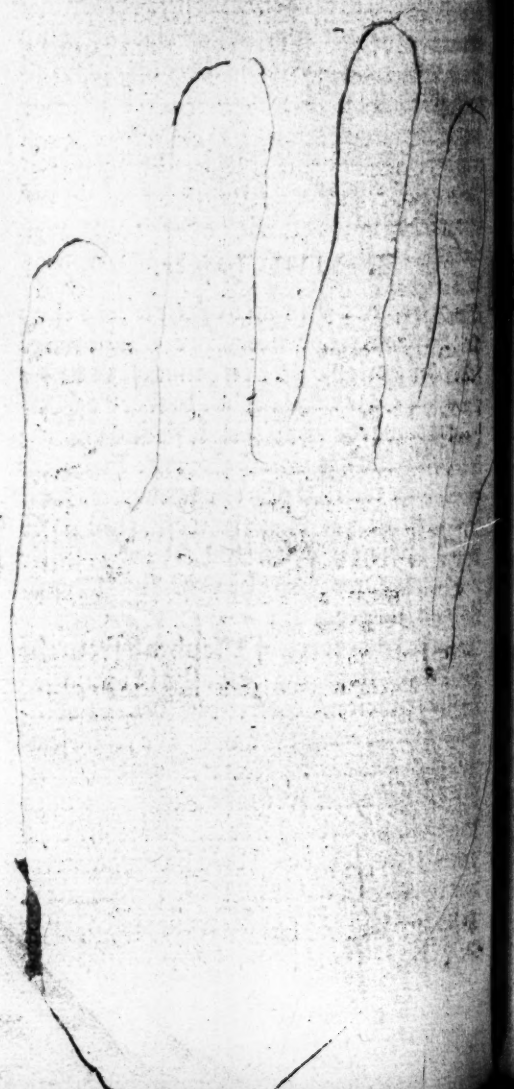
Chap. XI. XII. Certayne reuelacions of thinges for to come: some, of the delyueraunce frō the captiuyte of Babilon: some, of the destruccion of Jerusalem: some, concernynge the last dayes.



The first. Chapter.

IN the thirde yeare of the raigne of Joachim kynge off Juda, came Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon vnto Jerusalem, & besieged it: and the LORDE delyuered Joachim the kynge off Juda in to his honde, with certayne ornamentes of the house off God, which he caried awaye vnto the londe of Sennar, to the house of his god and there broughte them in to his gods treasury. And the kynge spake vnto Asphenes the chefe chamberlayne, that he shulde brynge him certayne of the children of Israel, that were come of the kynges sede and of princes, yonge springaldes with out eny blemish but fayre and well fauored, instructe in all wisdome, connynge and vnderstondinge: which were able to stonde in the kynges palace, to reade, and to lerne for to speake Caldeish.

Vnto these the kinge appoynted a certayne porcion of his owne meate and of the wine, which he dranck himself, for to norish the three yeare, that afterwarde they might stonde before the kynge. Amonge these now were certayne of the children off Juda: namely Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Azarias. Vnto these the chefe chamberlayne gaue other names, and called Daniel, Balthasar: Ananias, Sydrac: Misael, Misac: and Asarias, Abdenago. But Daniel was at a poynt with himself, that he wolde not be defyled thorow the kynges meate, ner the wyne which he dranke. And this he desyred off the chefe chamberlayne, lest he shulde defyle himself. So God gaue Daniel fauoure and grace before the chefe chamberlayne, that he sayde vnto him: I am afrayed off my lorde the kynge, which hath appoynted you youre meate and drynke, lest he spye youre faces to be worse lykynge then the other springaldes of youre age, and so ye shal make me loose my heade vnto the kynge.

Then Daniel answered Melassar, whom the chefe chamberlayne had set ouer Daniel, Ananias, Misael and Asarias, and sayde: O proue but ten dayes with thy seruauntes, and let vs haue potage to eate, and water to drynke: then lote vpon oure faces, and theirs that eate off the kinges meate. And as thou seyst, so deale with thy seruauntes. So he consented to them in this matter, and proued the x. dayes. And after the ten dayes, their faces were better lykinge & fatter, then all the yonge springaldes, which ate of the kinges meate.

Thus Melassar toke awaye their meate and wyne, and gaue them potage therfore. God gaue now these foure springaldes connynge and lernynge in all scripture and wisdome: but vnto Daniel specially, he gaue vnderstondinge off all visions and dreames.

Now when the tyme was expyred, that the kynge had appoynted to brynge in these yonge springaldes vnto him: the chefe chamberlayne brought them before Nabuchodonosor, and the kynge commoned with them. But amonge them all were founde none soch as Daniel, Ananias, Misael, and Asarias. Therfore stode they before the kynge, which in all wisdome and matters off vnderstondinge, that he enquered off them, founde them ten tymes better, then all the soythsayers and charmers, that were in all his realme. And Daniel abode still, vnto the first yeare of kynge Cyrus.

The II. Chapter

IN the secode yeare off the raigne of Nabuchodonosor, had Nabuchodonosor a dreame, where thorow his spirite was vexed, and his slepe brake from him. Then the kynge comaunded to call together all the soythsayers, charmers, witches and Caldees, for to shewe the kynge his dreame. So they came, and stode before the kynge. And the kynge sayde vnto them: I haue dreamed a dreame, & my spirite was so troubled therwith, that I haue clene forgotten, what I dreamed. Vpon this, the Caldees answered the kynge in the Syrians speach: O kynge, God saue thy life for euer. Shewe thy seruauntes the dreame, and we shal shewe the, what it meaneth. The kynge gaue the Caldees their answere, and sayde: It is gone fro me: Yf ye wil not make me vnderstonde the dreame with the interpretacion therof, ye shal dye, and youre houses shal be pryfed. But yff ye tell me the dreame and the meanynge therof, ye shall haue off me giftes, rewardes and greate honoure: only, shewe me the dreame and the significacion of it. They answered agayne, and sayde: the kynge must shewe his seruauntes the dreame, and so shal we declare, what it meaneth.

Then the kynge answerde, & sayde: I perceaue off a treuth, that ye do but prolonge the tyme: for so moch as ye se, that the thinge is gone fro me. Therfore, yff ye wil not tell me the dreame, ye shal all haue one iudgement. But ye fayne and dyssemble with lyinge wordes, which ye speake before me, tyll the tyme be past. Therfore tell me the dreame, and I shall knowe, yff ye can shewe me, what it neth. Vpon this, the Caldees gaue answere before the kynge, and sayde: there is no man vpon earth, that can tell the thinge, which ỹ kynge speaketh of: Nee there is nether kynge prynce ner LORDE, that euer axed soch thinges at a soythsayer, charmer or Caldeer: for it is a very harde matter, that the kynge requyreth. Nether is there eny, that can certifie the kynge theroff, excepte the goddes: whose dwellinge is not amonge the creatures.

C For ỹ which cause the kynge was wroth with greate indignaciō, and cōmaunded to destroye all the wyse men at Babilon: and ỹ proclamacion wēte forth, that the wyse mē shulde be slayne. They sought also to slaye Daniel with his cōpanyons. Then Daniel enquered Arioch the kynges steward, off the iudgment and sentence, that was gone forth alredy to kyll soch as were wyse at Babilon. He answered, and sayde vnto Arioch beinge then the kinges debyte: Why hath the kynge proclamed so cruell a sentence? So Arioch tolde Daniel the matter. Vpon this, wente Daniel vp, and desyred the kinge, ỹ he might haue leysoure, to shewe the kynge the interpretacion: and then came he home agayne & shewed the thinge vnto Ananias, Misael & Asarias his companiōs: ỹ they shulde beseke the God of heauen for grace in this secrete, that Daniel and his felowes with other soch as were wyse in Babilon, perished not. Then was the mystery shewed vnto Daniel in a visiō by nyght. And Daniel praysed ỹ God of heauē, Daniel also cryed loude, and sayde: O that the name of God might be praysed for euer and euer, for wißdome and strength are his owne: he chaungeth the tymes and ages: he putteth downe kynges, he setteth vp kynges: he geueth wyßdome vnto the wyse, and vnderstōdinge to those that vnderstōde he openeth the depe secretes: he knoweth ỹ the thynge that lyeth in darckneße, for the light dwelleth with him. I thanke the, and prayse the (O thou God off my fathers) that thou hast lent me wyßdome and strength, & hast shewed me the thinge, that we desyred off the, for thou hast opened the kynges matter vnto me.

D Vpon this wente Daniel in vnto Arioch, whom the kinge had ordened to destroye the wyse at Babilon: he wente vnto him, and sayde: destroye not soch as are wyse in Babilon, but bringe me in vnto the kynge, and I shal shewe the kynge the interpretacion. Then Arioch brought Daniel into the kynge in all the haist, and sayde vnto him: I haue founde a man amonge the presoners off Iuda, ỹ shal shewe the kinge the interpretacion. The answered the kynge, and sayde vnto Daniel whose name was Balthasar: Art thou he, ỹ cāst shewe me ỹ dreame, which I haue sene? & the interpretacion therof? Daniel answered the kynge to his face, and sayde: As for the secrete, for the which the kinge maketh inquisicion: it is nether the wyse, the sorcerer, the charmer ner the deuell conturer, that can certifie the kynge off it: Only God in heauē can open secretes, and he it is, that sheweth the kinge Nabuchodonosor, what is for to come in the latter dayes.

Thy dreame, and that which thou hast sene in thyne heade vpon thy bed, is this: O kynge, thou dideſt cast in thy mynde, what shulde come hereafter: So he that is the opener off mysteries, telleth the, what is for to come. As for me, this secrete is not shewed me, for eny wißdome that I haue, more then eny other lyuynge: but only that I might shewe the kynge the interpretacion, & that ỹ might knowe the thoughtes off his owne herte. Thou kynge sawest, and beholde: there stode before the a greate ymage, whose figure was maruelous greate, and his vysage grymme. The ymage heade was of fyne golde, his brest and armes off syluer, his body and loynes were off copper, his legges were off yron, his fete were parte off yron, and parte of earth.

This thou sawest, till the tyme that (without eny hondes) there was hewen off a stone which smote the ymage vpon the fete, that were both off yron and earth, and brake them to poulder: then was the yron, the earth, the copper, the syluer and golde broken altogether in peces: and became like the chaffe off corne, that the wynde bloweth awaye from ỹ somer floores, that they cā no more be found. But the stone that smote the ymage, became a greate mountayne, which fulfylleth the whole earth: This is the dreame. And now will we shewe before the kynge, what it meaneth.

O kynge, thou art a kynge off kynges: For the God off heauē hath geuē the a kingdome, ryches, strength and maiesty: & hath delyuered the all thinges, that are amōge ỹ children off men: the beastes off the felde, and the foules vnder the heauē, and geuen the dominion over them all. Thou art that golde heade. After ỹ there shal aryse another kingdome, which shal be lesse then thyne. The thyrde kingdome shal be lyke copper, and haue domination in all lōdes. The fourth kingdome shal be as stronge as yron. For like as yron brusseth and breaketh all thinges: Yee euen as yron beateth euery thinge downe, so shal it beate downe and destroye.

Where as thou sawest the fete and toes, parte of earth and parte off yron: that is a deuyded kyngdome, which neuertheles shal haue some off the yron grounde mixte with it, for so moch as thou hast sene the yron mixte with the claye.

The toes of the fete that were parte off yron and parte off claye, signifieeh: that it shalbe a kyngdome partely stronge and partely weake. And where as thou sawest yron myxte with claye: they shall myngle them selues w^t ^y sede off symple people, & yet not contynue one with another, like as yron wil not be souldered with a potsherde.

In the dayes off these kynges, shall the God of heauen set vp an euerlastinge kyngdome which shall not perish, and his kyngdome shall not be geuen ouer to another people: Nee the same shall breake and destroye all these kyngdomes, but it shall endure for euer.

And where as thou sawest, that without eny hondes there was cut out of the mount a stone, which brake the yron, the copper ^y earth, the syluer and golde in peces: by that hath ^y greate God shewed the kynge, what wyl come after this. This is a true dreame, and the interpretacion of it is sure.

Then the kynge Nabuchodonosor fell downe vpon his face, and bowed him self vnto Daniel, and commaunded that they shulde offre meat offrynges and swete odoures vnto him.

The kynge answerde Daniel, and sayde: Yee off a treuth, youre God is a God aboue all goddes, a LORDE aboue all kynges, and an opener of secretes: seynge thou canst discouer this mysterie. So the kynge made Daniel a greate man, and gaue him many and greate giftes.

He made him ruler off all the countrees of Babilon, and lorde of all the nobles, that were at Babilon. Now Daniel intreated the kynge for Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, so that he made them rulers ouer all the offyces in the londe off Babilon: but Daniel himself remayned still in the courte by the kynge.

The III. Chapter.

A NAbuchodonosor the kynge caused a golde ymage to be made, which was lx. cubites hye, and sixe cubites thicke. This he made to be set vp in the valley of Duran in the londe of Babilon & sent out to gather together the dukes, lordes & nobles, the iudges and officers, the debites ad shreues, with all the rulers of the londe: ^y they might come to the dedicacion of the ymage which Nabuchodonosor the kynge had set vp. So the dukes, lordes and nobles, the iudges and officers, debytes and shreues with all the rulers of the londe gathered them together, and came vnto the dedicatynge of ^y ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kinge had set vp.

Now when they stode before the ymage, which Nabuchodonosor set vp, the bedell cried out w^t all his might: O ye people, kynreddes and tunges, to you be it sayde: that whē ye heare the noyse off the trompettes, which shalbe blowne, w^t ^y harpes, shawmes, psalteries, Symphonies and all maner off Musick: ye fall downe and worshipe the golden ymage, ^y Nabuchodonosor the kynge hath set vp. Who so then falleth not downe and boweth himself, shal euen the same houre be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Therfore, when all the folke herde the noyse off the trompettes that were blowne, with the harpes, shawmes, psalteries, Symphonies and all kynde of Melody: thē all the people, kynreddes and nacions fell downe, and bowed them selues vnto the golden ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kynge had set vp.

Now were there certayne men off the Caldees, that went euen then and accused ^y Jewes, and sayde vnto kynge Nabuchodonosor: O kynge, God saue thy lyfe for euer. Thou beynge kynge hast geuen a commaūdemēt, that all men when they heare the noyse off the trompettes, harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all the other melodies: shall fall downe and bowe them selues towarde the golden ymage: who so thē fell not downe and worshipped not, that he shulde be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Now are there certaine Jewes, whom thou hast set ouer the offices of the londe off Babilon: namely, Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago. These men (o kynge) regarde not thy cōmaundemēt, yee they will not serue thy goddes, ner bowe them selues to the golden ymage, that thou hast set vp.

Then Nabuchodonosor in a cruell wrath and displeasure, commaunded, ^y Sidrac, Misac & Abdenago shulde be brought vnto him. So these men were brought before the kynge. Then Nabuchodonosor spake vnto them, and sayde: what? o Sidrac

neth. Vpon this, the Caldees gaue answere before the kynge, and sayde: there is no man vpon earth, that can tell the thinge, which ỹ kynge speaketh of: Yee there is nether kynge prynce ner LORDE, that euer axed soch thinges at a soythsayer, charmer or Caldeer: for it is a very harde matter, that the kynge requyreth. C For ỹ which cause the kynge was wroth with greate indignaciō, and cōmaunded to destroye all the wyse men at Babilon: and ỹ proclamacion wēte forth, that the wyse mē shulde be slayne. O kynge, thou art a kynge off kynges: For the God off heauē hath geuē the a kingdome, ryches, strength and maiesty: & hath delyuered the all thinges, that are amōge ỹ children off men: the beastes off the felde, & the foules vnder the heauē, and geuen the dominion ouer them all. Thou art that golde heade. After ỹ there shal arise another kingdome, which shal be lesse then thyne. The thyrde kingdome shal be lyke copper, and haue domination in all lōdes. The fourth kingdome shal be as stronge as yron. For like as yron bruseth and breaketh all thinges: Yee euen as yron beateth euery thinge downe, so shal it beate downe and destroye.

Where as thou sawest the fete and toes, parte of earth and parte off yron: that is a deuyded kyngdome, which neuertheles shal haue some off the yron grounde mixte with it, for so moch as thou hast sene the yron mixte with the claye.

The toes of the fete that were parte off yron and parte off claye, signifieeh: that it shalbe a kyngdome partely stronge and partely weake. And where as thou sawest yron myxte with claye: they shall myngle them selues w^t ^y sede off symple people, & yet not contynue one with another, like as yron wil not be souldered with a potsherde.

In the dayes off these kynges, shall the God of heauen set vp an euerlastinge kyngdome which shall not perish, and his kyngdome shall not be geuen ouer to another people: Yee the same shall breake and destroye all these kyngdomes, but it shall endure for euer.

And where as thou sawest, that without eny hondes there was cut out of the mount a stone, which brake the yron, the copper ^y earth, the syluer and golde in peces: by that hath ^y greate God shewed the kynge, what wyl come after this. This is a true dreame, and the interpretacion of it is sure.

Then the kynge Nabuchodonosor, fell downe vpon his face, and bowed him self vnto Daniel, and commaunded that they shulde offre meat offrynges and swete odoures vnto him.

The kynge answerde Daniel, and sayde: Yee off a treuth, youre God is a God aboue all goddes, a LORDE aboue all kynges, and an opener of secretes: seynge thou canst discouer this mysterie. So the kynge made Daniel a greate man, and gaue him many and greate giftes.

He made him ruler off all the countrees of Babilon, and lorde of all the nobles, that were at Babilon. Now Daniel intreated the kynge for Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, so that he made them rulers ouer all the offyces in the londe off Babilon: but Daniel himself remayned still in the courte by the kynge.

The III. Chapter.

A NAbuchodonosor the kynge caused a golde ymage to be made, which was lx. cubites hye, and sixe cubites thicke. This he made to be set vp in the valley of Duran in the londe of Babilon & sent out to gather together the dukes, lordes & nobles, the iudges and officers, the debites ad shreues, with all the rulers of the londe: ^y they might come to the dedicacion of the ymage which Nabuchodonosor the kynge had set vp. So the dukes, lordes and nobles, the iudges and officers, debytes and shreues with all the rulers of the londe gathered them together, and came vnto the dedicatynge of ^y ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kinge had set vp.

Now when they stode before the ymage, which Nabuchodonosor set vp, the bedell cried out w^t all his might: O ye people, kynredes and tunges, to you be it sayde: that whē ye heare the noyse off the trompettes, which shalbe blowne, w^t ^y harpes, shawmes, psalteries, Symphonies and all maner off Musick: ye fall downe and worshipe the golden ymage, ^y Nabuchodonosor the kynge hath set vp. Who so then falleth not downe and boweth himself, shal euen the same houre be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Therfore, when all the folke herde the noyse off the trompettes that were blowne, with the harpes, shawmes, psalteries, Symphonies and all kynde of Melody: thē all the people, kynredes and nacions fell downe, and bowed them selues vnto the golden ymage, that Nabuchodonosor the kynge had set vp.

Now were there certayne men off the Caldees, that went euen then and accused ^y Jewes, and sayde vnto kynge Nabuchodonosor: O kynge, God saue thy lyfe for euer. Thou beynge kynge hast geuen a commaūdemēt, that all men when they heare the noyse off the trompettes, harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all the other melodies: shall fall downe and bowe them selues towarde the golden ymage: who so thē fell not downe and worshipped not, that he shulde be cast in to an hote burnynge ouen. Now are there certaine Jewes, whom thou hast set ouer the offices of the londe off Babilon: namely, Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago. These men (o kynge) regarde not thy cōmaundemēt, yee they will not serue thy goddes, ner bowe them selues to the golden ymage, that thou hast set vp.

Then Nabuchodonosor in a cruell wrath and displeasure, commaunded, ^y Sidrac, Misac & Abdenago shulde be brought vnto him. So these men were brought before the kynge. Then Nabuchodonosor spake vnto them, and sayde: what? o Sidrac

Misac and Abdenago, will not ye serue my goddes? nor bowe youre selues to the golden ymage, that I haue set vp? wel, beredy hereafter, when ye heare the noyse of the tropettes, blowne with the harpes, shawmes, psalteries, symphonies and all ỹ other melodies: that ye fall downe, and worshipe the ymage which I haue made. But yff ye worshipe it not, ye shal be cast immediatly in to an hote burnynge ouen. Let se, what god is there, ỹ maye delyuer you out of my hondes?

Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago answered the kynge, and sayde: O Nabuchodonosor, we ought not to cõsente vnto ỹ in this matter, for why: oure God whom we serue, is able to kepe vs from the hote burnynge ouen (O kynge) and can right wel delyuer vs out off thy hondes. And though he wil not, yet shalt thou knowe (o kynge) that we will not serue thy goddes, ner do reuerẽce to the ymage, which thou hast set vp. Then was Nabuchodonosor full off indignacion, so that ỹ countenaunce of his face chaunged vpõ Sidrac, Misac ⁊ Abdenago. Therfore he charched and commaunded, that the ouen shulde be made seuen tymes hoter, then it was wõte to be: and spake vnto the strongest worthies that were in his hooste, for to bynde Sidrac, Misac and Abdenago, and to cast them in to the hote burnynge ouen.

So these men were bounde in their cotes, hosen, shues with their other garmentes, ād cast in to the hote burnynge ouen: for the kinges commaundement was so strate, and the ouen was exceadynge hote. As for the men that put in Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, the flame off the fyre destroyed them. And these thre men Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago fell downe in ỹ hote burnynge ouen, beinge fast bounde.

Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge marueled, and stode vp in all haist: he spake vnto his councel and sayde: dyd not ye cast these thre men bounde in to the fyre? They answered, and sayde vnto the kynge: Yee o kynge. He answered and sayde: lo, for all that, yet do I se foure men goinge lowse in the myddest off the fyre, and nothinge corrupte: and the fourth is like an angel to loke vpon. Vpon this wẽte Nabuchodonosor vnto the mouth of the hote burnynge ouen: he speake also, ⁊ sayde: O Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, ye seruauntes of the hye God: go forth, and come hither. And so Sydrac, Misac, and Abdenago wente out of the fyre. Then the dukes, lordes and nobles, and the kynges councell came together to se these men, vpon whom the fyre had no maner of power in their bodies: In so moch that the very hayre of their heade was not burnt, and their clothes vnchaunged: Nee there was no smell of fyre vpon them.

Then spake Nabuchodonosor, and sayde: Blessed be the God of Sidrac, Misac ⁊ Abdenago: which hath sent his angel, and defended his seruaũtes, that put their trust in him: ỹ haue altered the kynges commaundement, and ioperde their bodies therupon, ther then they wolde serue or worshipe any other god, excepte their owne God only. Therfore I wil and commaũde, that all people, kynreddes ⁊ tunges, which speake any blasphemy agaynst the God of Sydrac, Misac and Abdenago, shal dye, and their houses shalbe pryfed: Because, there is no God, ỹ maye saue, as this. So the kynge promoted Sidrac, Misac and Abdenago, in the londe of Babylon.

Nabuchodonosor kynge, vnto all people, kynreddes and tunges that dwell vpon the whole earth: peace be multiplied amõge you. I thought it good to shewe the tokes ⁊ marueluous workes, ỹ ỹ hye God hath wrought vpon me. O how greate are his tokes, ⁊ how mighteie are his wonders? His kyngdome is an euerlastinge kyngdome, and his power lasteth for ever and ever.

The IIII. Chapter.

I Nabuchodonosor be ynge at rest in myne house, ād florishinge in my palace, sawe a dreame, which made me afrayed: ād the thoughtes that I had vpon my bed, with the visions of myne heade, troubled me. Then sent I out a commission, that all they which were of wisdome at Babel shulde be brought before me, to tell me the interpretacion of the dreame. So there came the soythsayers, charmers, Caldees and coniurers of deuels: to whom I tolde the dreame, but what it betokened, they coude not shewe me: till at the last, there came one Daniel (otherwyse called Balthasar, acordinge to the name of my God) which hath the sprete of the holy goddes in him: to whom I tolde the dreame, sayenge: O Balthasar, thou prynce of sayth sayers: For so moch as I knowe, that thou hast the sprete of the holy goddes, and no secrete is hyd from the: tel me therfore, what ỹ visiõ of my dreame ỹ I haue sene) maye signifie. I sawe a vision in my heade vpon my bed: and beholde, there stode a tre vpon the grounde, which was very hye, greate and mighty: ỹ heyth reached vnto the heauẽ, and the bredth extended all the endes of the earth: his leaues were fayre, he had very moch frute, so ỹ euery mā had ynough to eate therin.

The beastes of the felde had shadowes vnder it, and the foules off the ayre dwelt in the bowes therof. Shortly, all creatures fed of it. I sawe in my heade a vision vpon my bed: & beholde, a watcher (euē an holy angel) came downe from heauen, and cryed mightely, sayenge: Hew downe the tre, breake off his braunches, shake of his leaues, and scatre his frute abrode: that all the beestes maye get them awaye from vnder him, and the foules from his braunches. Neuertheles leaue the grounde of his rote still in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde, with cheynes of yron and stele. With the dew of heauen shall he be wet, and he shall haue his parte in the herbes of the grounde with other wylde beastes.

B That mans herte off his shall be taken from him, and a beastes herte shall be geuen him, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him.

This erande of the watcher, is a cōmaundemēt grounded and sought out in the councel off him, that is most holy: to lerne men for to vnderstonde, that the hyest hath power ouer the kyngdomes off men, ād geueth them, to whom it liketh him, and bryngeth the very outcastes off men ouer them. This is the dreame, ỹ I kynge Nabuchodonosor haue sene.

Therfore o Balthasar, tell thou me what it signifieth: for so moch as all the wyse men off my kyngdome are not able to shewe me, what it meaneth. But thou canst do it, for ỹ sprete of the holy Goddes is in the.

C Then Daniel (whose name was Balthasar) helde his peace by the space of an houre ād his thoughtes troubled him. So the kynge spake, and sayde: O Balthasar, let nether the dreame ner the interpretacion therof feare the. Balthasar answered, sayenge: O my LORDE, this dreame happen to thyne enemies, and the interpretacion to thyne aduersaries. As for the tre that thou sawest which was so greate & mightie, whose heyth reached vnto the heauen, and his bredth into all the worlde: whose leaues were fayre, ād the frute moch: vnder the which the beastes of the felde had their habitacion, and vpon whose braunches the foules of the ayre dyd syt:

Euen thou (o kynge) art the tre, greate & strōge. Thy greatnesse increaseth, & reacheth vnto the heauen, so doth thy power to the endes of the earth. But where as the kynge sawe a watcher euen an holy angel, that came downe from heauen, and sayde: hew downe the tre, and destroye it: yet leaue the grounde of the rote in the earth, and bynde him vpon the playne felde with cheynes off yron and stele: he shall be wet with the dew off heauen, and his parte shalbe with the beestes of the felde, till seuen yeares be come and gone vpon him: This (o kynge) is ỹ interpretacīō, yee it is the very deuyce of him, ỹ is hyest of all, & it toucheth my LORDE the kynge.

. Thou shalt be cast out fro men, and thy dwellinge shalbe with the beestes of the felde: with grasse shalt thou be fed like an oxe. Thou must be wet with the dew of the heauen: yee seuen yeares shall come and go vpon the, till thou knowe, that the hyest hath power vpon the kyngdomes of men, & geueth them, to whom he lyst. Moreouer, where as it was sayde, that the rote of the tre shulde be be left still in the grounde: it betokeneth, ỹ thy kyngdome shall remayne whole vnto ỹ, after thou hast lerned to knowe, that the power commeth from heauen. Wherfore (o kinge) be contēt with my councel, that thou mayest lowse thy synnes with righteousnesse, ād thyne offences with mercy to poore people: for soch thinges shall prolonge thy peace. All these thynges touch the kynge Nabuchodonosor.

D Dan. 2. c Iere. 27. a

So after xij. monethes, the kynge walked vp and downe in the paalace off the kyngdome off Babilon, and sayde: This is the greate cite off Babilō, which I myself (with my power & strength) haue made a kynges courte, for the honoure off my magesty. Whyle these wordes were yet in the kynges mouth, there fell a voyce from heauē, sayenge: O kinge Nabuchodonosor, to the be it spokē: Thy kyngdome shall departe from the, thou shalt be cast out of mens company: thy dwellinge shalbe with the beestes off the felde, so that thou shalt eate grasse like as an oxe, till seuen yeares be come and gone ouer the: euen vntill thou knowest, that the hyest hath power vpon the kyngdomes off men, and that he maye geue them, vnto whom it pleaseth him.

The very same houre was this matter fulfylled vpō Nabuchodonosor: so that he was cast out off mēs cōpany, & ate grasse like an oxe. His body was wet with the dew of heauen, till his hayres were as greate as Aegles fethers, and his nales like byrdes clawes.

When this tyme was past, I Nabucho-

E donosor lift vp myne eyes vnto heauen, and myne vnderstondinge was restored vnto me agayne. Then gaue I thankes vnto the hy est. I magnified and prayse him that lyueth for euermore, whose power endureth all waye, and his kyngdome from one generacion to another: in comparyson off whom, all they that dwell vpon the earth, are to be reputed as nothinge.

Dan. 3. f

He handleth acordinge to his will, amonge ỹ powers of heauen ⁊ amonge the inhabitours of the earth: and there is none that

maye resiſte his honde, or saye: what doest thou?

Iob. 42. b

At the same tyme was myne vnderstondynge geuen me agayne, and I was restored to the honoure of my kingdome, to my dignite, and to myne owne shappe agayne. My greatestates and prynces sought vnto me, and I was set in my kyngdome agayne, so that I had yet greater worshipe.

Thē dyd I Nabuchodonosor, loaue, magnifie, and prayse the kynge of heauen: for all his workes are true, and his wayes right. As for those that go on proudly, he is able to brīnge them downe.

The V. Chapter.

A Balthasar the kynge made a greate bancket to his thousande lordes: withall these thousande he made greate cheare, and when he was dronken w wyne, he commaunded to brynge him ỹ golden and syluer vessel, which his father Nabuchodonosor had taken out of the temple at Jerusalem: that the kynge and his lordes (with his quene and concubynes) might drīke therout.

4. Par. 36. c

So they brought the golden vessel, that was takē out of the temple of the LORDES house at Jerusalem. Then the kynge and his lordes with his quene and concubines dronke out of them. They dronke wyne, and praysed their Idols of golde, syluer, copper, yron, wodde and stone.

In the very same houre there appeared fyngers, as it had bene of a mans honde writynge, right ouer agaynst the candelsticke vpon the playne wall in the kynges palace: and the kynge sawe the palme of ỹ honde ỹ wrote. Then chaunged the kynge his countenaunce, and his thoughtes troubled him: so that the ioyntes off his body shoke, and his knees smote one agaynst the other. Wherfore the kynge cryed mightely, that they shulde brynge him the charmers,

Dan. 2. a

B Caldees and coniurers of deuels. The kynge spake also to the wysemen of Babilon, and sayde: Who so can rede this writynge, and shewe me the playne meanynge therоff: shall be clothed with purple, haue a cheyne off golde about his necke, and rule the thirde parte off my kyngdome.

Vpon this, came all the kynges wysemen: but they coude nether rede the writynge, nor shewe the kynge what it signified. Then was the kynge sore afrayed, in so moch, that his coloure chaunged, and his lordes were sore vexed. So by reason off this matter, ỹ had happened to the kynge ⁊ his lordes, the quene went vp herself in to the bancket house, and spake vnto the kynge, sayenge: O kynge God saue thy life for euer: Let not ỹ thoughtes trouble the, and let not thy countenaunce be chaunged. For why: there is a man in thy kyngdome, that hath the spirite off the holy goddes within him, as it was sene in thy fathers dayes. He hath vnderstondinge and wysdome like the goddes. Yee the kynge Nabuchodonosor thy father made this man chefe of the sōythsayers, charmers, Caldees and deuelconiurers: because that soch an abundaunt spirite, knowlege ⁊ wisdome (to expownde dreames, to open secretes, and to declare harde dowtes) was founde in him: yee euen in Daniel, whom the kynge named Balthasar. Let this same Daniel be sente for, and he shall tell, what it meaneth.

Then was Daniel brought before the kynge. So the kynge spake vnto Daniel, and sayde: Art thou that Daniel, one off the prisoners of Juda, whom my father the kynge brought out of Jewry? I haue herde speake of the, that thou hast the spirite of the holy goddes, experience and vnderstōdinge, and that there hath bene greate wisdome found in the. Now haue there bene brought me, wyse and connynge charmers, to rede this writynge, and to shewe me the meanynge therоff: But they coude not tell me, what this matter signified. Then herde I saye, ỹ thou canst expownde darcke thinges, and declare harde doutes. Well than, ỹ thou canst rede this writinge, and shewe me the meaninge therof: thou shalt be clothed w purple, haue a cheyne of golde aboute thy necke, ⁊ rule the thirde parte of my kyngdome.

Daniel answered, and sayde before ỹ kynge: As for thy rewardes, kepe them to thyself, or geue ỹ rych giftes to another: yet nether theles, I wil rede the writynge vnto ỹ kynge, and shewe him the interpretacion therof. O kinge, God the hyest gaue vnto Nabuchodonosor thy father, ỹ dignite of a kynge, w worshipe ⁊ honō: so ỹ all people, kynredes ⁊ tunges stode in awe ⁊ feare of him, he son off the hye estate, that he had lent him. For why: he slewe, whom he wolde: he smote, whom it pleased him. Agayne: whom he wolde, he set vp: and whom he list, he put downe. But because his herte was so proude, and his stomack set fast vnto wylfulnesse: he was deposed from his kyngly trone, and his mageste was taken from him. He was shot out from amonge men, his herte was like a beestes herte, and his dwellynge was with the wylde Asses: he was fayne to eate grasse like an oxe, and his body was wet with the dew off the heauen: till he knewe, that the hyest had power vpon the kyngdomes of men, and setteth ouer them, whom he list.

And thou his sonne (o Balthasar) for all this, hast not submitted thine hert, though thou knewest all these thinges: but hast magnified thy self abone the LORDE off heauen, so that the vessels off his house were brought before the: that thou, and thy lordes, with thy quene and concubynes, might drynke wyne therout: And hast praysed the Idols of syluer and golde, copper and yron, off wodde & stone: As for the God, in whose honde consisteth thy breth ād all thy wayes: thou hast not loaued him.

Therfore is the palme off this honde sent hither from him, to token vp this wrytinge. And this is the scripture, that is written vp: Mane, Thetel, Phares. Now the interpretacion off the thynge is this: Mane, God hath nombred thy kyngdome, and brought it to an ende: Thetel, Thou art weyed in the balaunce, and art founde to lighe: phares, Thy kyngdome is delt in partes, and geuen to the Medes and Perses.

Then commaunded Balthasar, to cloth Daniel with purple, to hange a cheyne off golde aboute his necke, and to make a proclamacion concernynge him: that he shulde be the ruler off the thirde parte off his kyngdome. The very same night was Balthasar the kynge off the Caldees slayne, and Darius out of Media toke in the kyngdome, beynge lxij. yeare off age.

The VI. Chapter.

IT pleased Darius to set ouer his kingdome an C and xx. lordes, which shulde be in all his kingdome aboute. Abone these he set thre princes (off whom Daniel was one) that the lordes might geue accomptes vnto them, and the kynge to be vnbiseged.

But Daniel exceaded all these princes ād lordes, for the spirite off God was plenteous in him: so that the kynge was mynded to set him ouer the whole realme. Wherfore the princes and lordes soughe, to pyke out in Daniel some quarel agaynst the kyngdome: yet coude they fynde none occasion ner fawte vpon him. For why: he was so faythful, that there was no blame ner dishonesty founde in him.

Then sayde these men: we will get no quarell agaynst this Daniel, excepte it be in the lawe off his God. Vpon this, wente the princes and lordes together vnto the kynge, and sayde thus vnto him: kynge Darius, God saue thy life for euer.

All the great estates off the realme: as princes, dukes, senatours and iudges, are determed to put out a commaundement off the kynge, and to make a sure statute: namely, that who so desyreth eny petition, ether of eny god or man (with in this xxx. dayes) excepte it be only off the, O kynge: the same person maye be cast into the Lyons denne. Wherfore, o kynge, confirme thou this statute, and make a writynge: that the thynge which the Medes and Perses haue ordened be not altered ner broken.

So Darius made the writynge, and confirmed it. Now when Daniel vnderstode that the writynge was made, he wente into his house: and the wyndowes of his hall towarde Jerusalem stode open. There kneled he downe vpon his knees, thre tymes a daye: there he made his petition, and prayed his God, like as his maner was to do afore tyme.

Then these men made searche, and founde Daniel makynge his petition, and prayenge vnto his God. So they came to the kynge, and spake before him concernynge his commaundement, sayenge: O kynge, hast thou not subscribed the statute, that within xxx. dayes who so requyreth his petition off eny god or man, but only of thy self, o kynge: he shalbe cast into the denne of the Lyons? The kynge answered, ād sayde: yee, it is true. It must be as a lawe of the Medes and Perses, that maye not be broken.

Then answered they, and sayde vnto the kynge: Daniel one of the presoners of Juda (O kynge) regardeth nether the ner thy statute, that thou hast made, but maketh his petition thre tymes a daye. When the kynge herde these wordes, he was sore grieued, and wolde haue excused Daniel, to delyuer him, and put off the matter, vnto the Sonne wete downe, to the intent that he might saue him.

These men perceauynge the kynges mynde, sayde vnto him: knowe this (o kynge) that the lawe off the Medes and Perses is, that the commaundement and statute which the kynge maketh, maye not be altered. Then the kynge bad them brynge Daniel, and they cast him into the Lyons denne.

Dani.14.c

The kynge also spake vnto Daniel, and sayde: Thy God, whom thou allwaye seruest, euen he shall defende the. And there was brought a stone, and layed vpon the hole of the denne: this the kynge sealed with his owne rynge, and with ỹ signet of his princes: that the kynges commaundement concernynge Daniel, shulde not be broken.

D

So the kynge wente in to his palace, and kepte him sober all night, so that there was no table spred before him, nether coude he take eny slepe. But betymes in the mornynge at the breake off the daye, the kynge arose, and wente in all haist vnto the denne off the Lyons.

Now as he came nye vnto ỹ dēne, he cried wt a piteous voyce vnto Daniel: Nee ỹ kinge spake, and sayde vnto Daniel: O Daniel, thou seruaunt off the lyuynge God, Is not thy God (whom thou allwaye seruest) able to delyuer the from the lyons? Daniel sayde vnto the kynge: O kynge, God saue thy life for ever:

E

Then was the kynge exceadinge glad, and commaunded to take Daniel out off the denne. So Daniel was brought out of the dēne, and no maner of hurte was founde vpō him For he put his trust in his God. And as for those men which had accused Daniel, the kinge commaunded to brynge them, and to cast them in the lyons denne: them, their children and their wyues. So the lyons had the mastry of them, and brake all their bones a sonder, or ever they came at the grounde.

The VII. Chapter.

In the first yeare off Balthasar kynge off Babilon, sawe Daniel a dreame, and a vision was in his heade vpon his bedde. Which dreame he wrote, and the summe of the matter is this: Daniel spake, and sayde: I sawe in my vision by nyght, and beholde: the foure wyndes of ỹ heauen stroue vpon the see, and foure greate beestes came vp from the see, one vnlike nother.

The first was as a lyon, and yet had ỹ Aegles wynges. I sawe, that his wynges were plucte from him, and he taken awaye from the earth: that he stode vpon his fete as a man, and that there was geuen him a mans herte.

Beholde, the seconde beest was like a Beer, and stode vpon the one syde. Amonge his teeth in his mouth he had iij greate lōge teeth: and it was sayde vnto him: Arise, eate vp moch flesh.

Then I loked, & beholde, there was another like vnto a Leoparde: this had wynges as a foule, euen foure vpon the backe. The beest had foure heades, and there was power geuen him. After this I sawe in a vision by nyght, & beholde: the fourth beest was grym me and horrible, and marueles stronge. It had greate yron teeth, it deuoured, and destroyed, and stamped the residue vnder fete. It was farre vnlike the other beestes that were before it: for it had ten hornes, wherof I toke good hede.

And beholde, there came vp amonge them another like horne, before whom there were thre of the first hornes pluckte awaye. Beholde, this horne had eyes like a mā, & a mouth speakynge presumptuous thinges. I loked till the seates were prepared, and till the auncaged sat him downe. His clothinge was as white as snowe, and the hayres of his heade like the pure woll.

His trone was like the firie flame, and his wheles as the burnynge fyre. There came forth a firie streame, & wente out from him. A thousand tymes a thousande serued him, & x.M. tymes ten thousande stode before him. The iudgmēt was set, and the bokes opened. Then toke I hede there vnto, because of the voyce of the proude wordes, which that horne spake.

I behelde, till the beest was slayne, and his body destroyed, & geuen ouer to be brent in the fyre.

As for the power of the other beestes also, it was taken awaye, but their lyues were prolonged for a tyme and season. I sawe in a vision by myght, and beholde: there came one in the cloudes of heauen like the sonne of a man, which wente vnto the olde aged, before whom they brought him: Then gaue he him power ād dignite regall, that all people, trybes and tunges shulde serue him. His power is an euerlastinge power, which shal never be put downe: & his kyngdome endureth vncorrupte. My herte was vexed, & I Daniel had a troubled spirite within me, ād the visions off my heade made me afrayed: till I gat me vnto one off them that stode by, to knowe the treuth, concerninge all these thinges. So he tolde me, and made me vnderstōde the interpretaciō of these thinges.

These foure greate beastes, are foure kinges which shal aryse out of the earth. These shal take in the kyngdome off the sayntes of the most hyest, and possesse it still more & more for a longe season. After this I requyred diligently to knowe the treuth, concerninge the fourth beest, which was so farre vnlike the other beestes, and so horrible: whose teth were of yron, and his nales off brasse: which deuoured and destroied, and stamped the residue vnder his fete. I desyred also to knowe the treuth, as touchinge the ten hornes that he had vpon his heade, and this other which came vp afterwarde, before whose face three fell downe thre: which horne had eyes and a mouth that spake presumptuous thinges, and loked with a grimmer visage then his felowes.

I behelde, and the same horne made battail agaynst the sayntes, yee ād gat the victory off them: vntill the tyme, that the olde aged came, that the iudgment was geuē to the chefest sayntes: and till the tyme, that ỹ sayntes had the kyngdome in possession.

He gaue me this answere: That fourth beest shalbe the fourth kingdome vpō earth: it shalbe more then all other kyngdomes, it shall deuoure, treade downe ād destroye all other londes.

The ten hornes, are ten kynges that shal aryse out of that kyngdome, after whō there shall stonde vp another, which shall be greater then the first.

He shall subdue thre kynges, and shall speake wordes agaynst the hyest off all: he shall destroye the sayntes of the most hyest and thynke, that he maye chaunge tymes and lawes. They shall be geuen vnder his power, vntill a tyme, two tymes, and halff a tyme. Dan.2.c Apoc.13.c

But the iudgment shalbe kepte, so that his power shalbe taken from him, for he shal be destroyed, and perish at the last. As for the kyngdome, power and all might that is vnder the heauen: it shal be geuen to the holy people off the most hyest, whose kyngdome is euerlastinge, yee all powers shall serue and obeye him. Thus farre extēde ỹ wordes. Luc.1.c Dan.14

Neuertheless, I Daniel was so vexed in my thoughtes, that my countenaunce chaunged, but the wordes I kepte still in myherte. Luc.2.c

The VIII. Chapter.

IN the thirde yeare off the raigne of kinge Balthasar, there apeared a visiō vnto me Daniel, after that I had sene the first. I sawe in a vision, (and when I sawe it, I was at Susis in the chefe cite, which lyeth in the londe off Elam) and in ỹ vision, me thought I was by the ryuer off Vlai. A Dan.3.a

Then I loked vp, and sawe: and beholde there stode before the ryuer, a ramme, which had hornes: and these hornes were hye, but one was hyer then another, and the hyest came vp last. I sawe that this ramme pusshed with his hornes, agaynst the west, agaynst the north, and agaynst the south: so that no beestes might stonde before him, ner defende them from his power: but he dyd as him listed, and waxed greatly. I toke hede vnto this, and then came there an hegoate from the west, ouer the whole earth, and touched not the grounde.

This goate had a maruelous goodly horne betwixte his eyes, and came vnto the ramme, that had the two hornes (whom I had sene afore by the ryuer syde) and ranne fearcely vpon him with his myght. I sawe him drawe nye vnto the ramme, beynge very feirce vpon him: yee he gaue him soch a stroke, that he brake his two hornes:

Neither had the ramme so moch strength as to stonde before him: but he cast him downe, trodde him vnder his fete: and no man was able to delyuer the ramme out of his power.

The goate waxed exceadinge greate, and when he was at the strongest, his greate horne was broken also. Then grewe there eyther foure soch like in the stede, towarde the fou- B

Dan. 7. a 11. a Mac. 1. a re wyndes off the heauen. Yee out of one of the leest off these hornes, there came vp yet another horne, which waxed maruelous greate: towarde the south, towarde the east, and towarde the fayre pleasaunt londe. It grewe vp to the hoost off heauen, wherof it dyd cast some downe to the grounde, and off the starres also, and trode them vnder fote.

Yee it grewe vp vnto the prynce off the hoost, from whom the daylie offeringe was taken, and the place off his Sanctuary casten downe. And a certayne season was geuen vnto it, agaynst the daylie offeringe (because of wickednesse) that it might cast downe the verite to the grounde, and so to prospere in all thinges, that it went aboute.

Vpon this I herde one off the sayntes speakynge, which sayntе sayde vnto one that axed this question:

How longe shall this vision off the daylie sacrifice and of the waistinge abhominacion endure: that the Sanctuary and the power shall so be troden vnder fote? And he answered him: Vnto the euenynge & the morninge, euen two thousande and thre hundreth dayes: then shall the Sanctuary be clensed agayne.

¶ Now when I Daniel had sene this vision, and sought for the vnderstondinge of it: beholde, there stode before me a thinge like vnto a man. And I herde a mans voyce in the ryuer off Vlai, which cryed, and sayde: O Gabriel, make this man vnderstonde the vision. So he came, and stode by me. But I was afrayed at his cōminge, and fell downe vpon my face.

Then sayde he vnto me: O thou sonne of man, marcke well, for in the last tyme shall this vision be fulfylled. Now as he was speakynge vnto me, I waxed saynte, so that I sunck downe to the grounde. But he toke holde vpon me, and set me vp agayne, sayenge: Beholde, I will shewe the, what shall happen in the last wrath: for in the tyme appoynted it shal be fulfilled.

The rawme which thou sawest with the two hornes, is the kynge off the Medes ād Perses: but the goote is the kynge of Greke londe: the greate horne that stode betwixte his eyes, that is the prynципall kynge. But whereas it brake, and foure other rose vp in the steade: it signifieth, that out of this people shall stonde vp foure kyngdomes, but not so mightie as it.

¶ After these kyngdomes (whyle vngodnesse is a growinge) there shall arise a kynge off an vnshamefast face, which shall be wyse in darcke speakinges.

He shalbe mightie and stronge, but not in his owne strength. He shall destroye aboue measure, and all that he goeth about, shall prospere: he shall slaye the stronge and holy people. And thorow his craftynesse falsede shall prospere in his honde, he hym self shall be proude, and many one shall he put to death in his welthynesse. He shal stonde vp agaynst the prynce off prynces, but he shalbe destroyed without honde. And the vision that is shewed vnto the, is as sure as the euenynge and the morninge. Therfore wryte thou vp this sight, for it wylbe longe or it come to passe.

Vpon this was I Daniel very sayntе, so that I laye sicke certayne dayes: but when I rose vp, I wente about the kynges busynesse, and marueled at the vision, neuertheless no man knewe of it.

The IX. Chapter.

IN the first yeare off Darius the sonne off Ahasuerus, which was of the sede off the Medes, & was made kynge ouer the realme of the Caldees: Yee euen in the first yeare off his raigne, I Daniel desyred to knowe the yearly nombre out of the bokes, wherof the LORDE spake vnto Jeremy the prophet: that Jerusalem shulde lie waist lxx. yeares: ād I turned me vnto God the LORDE, for to praye and make myne intercessiō, with fastinge, sackcloth ād ashes. I prayed before the LORDE my God, and knowleged, sayenge:

O LORDE, thou greate & fearfull God, thou that kepest couenaunt and mercy with them, which loue the, and do thy commaundementes: We haue synned, we haue offended, we haue bene disobedient and gone backe: yee we haue departed from all thy preceptes and indgmentes.

We wolde neuer folowe thy seruauntes the prophetes, that spake in thy name to oure kynges and prynces to oure forefathers, and to all the people off the londe. O LORDE, righteousnesse belongeth vnto the, vnto vs pertayneth nothynge but open shame: as it is come to passe this daye vnto euery man of Juda, and to them that dwell at Jerusalem:

Yee vnto all Israel, whether they be farre or nye: thorow out all londes, wherin thou hast strowed them, because of the offences that they had done agaynst the.

Yee o LORDE, vnto vs, to oure kinges & prynces, to oure forefathers: euen to vs all, that haue offended the, belongeth open shame. But vnto the o LORDE oure God, pertayneth mercy and forgeueneſſe. As for vs, we are gone backe from him, and haue not obeyed the voyce of the LORDE oure God, to walke in his lawes, which he layed before vs by his seruaūtes the prophetes: yee all Israel haue transgressed, and gone backe from thy lawe, so that they haue not herkened vnto thy voyce.

Wherfore the curse and ooth, that is written in the law of Moses the seruaūt of God (against whom we haue offended) is poured vpon vs. And he hath performed his wordes, which he spake agaynst vs, & agaynst our reiudges that iudged vs: to bringe vpon vs soch a greate plage, as neuer was vnder heauen, like as it is now come to passe in Jerusalem. Yee all this plage, as it is written in the lawe of Moses, is come vpon vs. Yet made we not oure prayer before the LORDE oure God, that we might turne agayne from oure wickednesse, and to be lerned in thy verite. Therfore hath & LORDE made haist, to bringe this plage vpon vs: for the LORDE oure God is righteous, in all his workes which he doth: for why, we wolde not harken vnto his voyce.

And now, o LORDE oure God, thou that with a mighty honde hast brought thy people out of Egipte, to get thy self a name, which remayneth this daye: we haue synned (o LORDE) & done wickedly agaynst all thy righteousnes: yet let thy wroth full displeasure be turned awaye (I beseke the) from thy cite Jerusalem thy holy hill. And why? for oure synnes sake and for the wickednesse of oure forefathers: is Jerusalem and thy people abhoned, of all them that are aboute vs. Now therfore (O oure God) heare the prayer of thy seruaunt, and his intercessiō: O let thy face shyne ouer thy sanctuary, that lieth waist.

O my God, enclyne thine eare, and herken (at the leest for thine owne sake) open thine eyes: beholde how we be desolated, yee and the cite alsō, which is called after thy name: For we do not cast oure prayers before the in oure owne righteousnesse, nō: but only in thy greate mercies. O LORDE, heare: O forgeue LORDE: O LORDE considre, tary not ouerlonge: but for thine owne sake do it, O my God: for thy cite and thy people is called after thy name.

As I was yet speakinge at my prayers, knowleginge myne owne synnes and & synnes of my people, makinge so myne intercession before the LORDE my God, for the holy hils sake of my God: yee whyle I was yet speakinge in my prayer, beholde, the mā Gabriel (whom I had sene afore in the vision) came flyenge to me, and touched me aboute & offeringe tyme in the euenynge. He informed me, and spake vnto me: O Daniel (sayde he) I am now come, to make the vnderstonde it: For as soone as thou begannest to make thy prayer, it was so diuysed, and therfore am I come to shewe the. And why? for thou art a man greatly beloued. Dan. 9. c. d.

Wherfore, ponder the matter wel, that thou mayest lerne, to vnderstonde the vision. Lxx. wekes are determed ouer thy people, & ouer thy holy cite: that the wickednesse maye be consumed, that the synne maye haue an ende, that the offence maye be reconciled, and to bringe in euerlastinge righteousnesse, to fulfill & visions and the prophetes, and to anoynte the most holy one. Vnderstode this then, and marcke it well: that from the tyme it shalbe concluded, to go and repayre Jerusalem agayne, vnto Christ (or the anoynted) prynce: there shalbe seuen wekes. Then shall the stretes & walles be buylded agayne lxij. wekes, but with harde troublous tyme. After these lxij. wekes, shal Christ be slayne, & they shal haue no pleasure in him. Then shal there come a people with the prynce, and destroye the cite and the sanctuary: and his ende shal come as the water floude. But the desolacion shall continue till the ende of the batell. 1. Par. 26. c. 1. Esd. 1. a.

He shall make a stronge bonde with many, for the space of a weke: and when the weke is half gone, he shal put downe the slayne and meat offringe. And in the temple there shalbe an abhominable desolacīō, till it haue destroyed all. And it is concluded, & this waistinge shal continue vnto the ende. Matt. 24. 15. Mar. 13. b.

The X. Chapter.

In the thirde yeare of kinge Cirus of Persia, there was shewed vnto Daniel (otherwise called Balthasar) a matter, yee a true matter, but it is yet a longe tyme vnto it.

He vnderstode the matter well, and perceaued what the vision was. At the same tyme, I Daniel mourned for the space of thre wekes, so that I had no lust to eate bred: as for flesh and wyne, there came none within my mouth: No, I oyld not ones anoynte my self, till the whole thre wekes were out.

Vpon the xxiiij. daye of the first moneth, I was by the greate floude, called Tigris: I lift vp myne eyes, and loked: and beholde, a man clothed in lynnynge, whose loynes were gyrded vp with fyne golde of Araby: his body was like the Chrisolite stone, his face (to loke vpon) was like lightenynge, his eyes as the flame of fyre, his armes and fete were like fayre glisteringe metall, but the voyce of his wordes was like ỹ voyce of a multitude.

Dan.3.e
Act.9.a

I Daniel alone sawe this vision, the men that were with me, sawe it not: but a greate fearfulnesse fell vpon them, so that they fled awaye, and hyd them selues. I was left there my self alone, and sawe this greate vision, so longe til there remayned nomore strength within me: Yee I lost my coloure clene, I waisted awaye, and my strength was gone. Yet herde I the voyce of his wordes: & assoone as I herde it, sayntnesse came vpon me, and I fell downe flat to the grounde vpon my face. And beholde, an hande touched me, which set me vp vpon my knees & vpon the palmes of my hondes, sayenge vnto me: O Daniel, thou well beloued man: take good hede of the wordes, that I shal saye vnto ỹ, & stode right vp, for vnto ỹ am I now sent.

Dan.9.b

And when he had sayde these wordes, I stode vp tremblinge. Then saide he vnto me: feare not Daniel: for why, sence the fust daye that thou set thine herte to vnderstonde, and dideste chasten thy self before thy God: thy wordes haue bene herde. And I had come vnto the whē thou begannest to speake, had not the prynce ouer the kingdome of the Perses wᵗ stonde me xxj. dayes. But lo, Michael one of the chefe prynces, came to helpe me, him haue I left by the kinge of Persia, & am come to shewe the, what shal happen vnto thy people in the latter dayes: for it wilbe lōge yet or the vision be fulfilled.

Osee.4.d
Dan.12.a

C Now when he had spoken these wordes vnto me, I kest downe my heade to ỹ grounde, and helde my tunge. Beholde, there touched my lippes one, very like vnto a man. Then opened I my mouth, and sayde vnto him, that stode before me: O my lorde, my ioyntes are lowsed in the vision, and there is no more strēgth within me: How maye my lordes seruaunt then talke with my lorde: seinge there is no strength in me, so that I cannot take my breth? Vpon this there touched me agayne, one moch like a man, & confor-ted me, sayenge: O thou man so wel beloued, feare not: be content, take a good herte vnto the, and be stronge. So when he had spoken vnto me, I recouered, & sayde: Speake on my lorde, for thou hast refresshed me. Thē sayde he: knowest thou wherfore I am come vnto ỹ? now wil I go agayne to fight with the prynce of the Perses. As soone as I go forth, lo, the prynce of Grekelonde shal come. Neuertheles, I wil shewe the the thinge, ỹ is fast noted in the scripture of truth. And as for all yonder matters, there is none that helpeth me in them, but Michael your prynce.

Dan.9.b

The XI. Chapter.

AND in the first yeare of Darius of Media, I stode by him, to confort him, & to strength him, and now wil I shewe the the treuth. Beholde, there shal stonde vp yet thre kinges in Persia, but ỹ fourth shal be farre richer then they all. And when he is in the chefest power of his riches, he shal prouoke euery man agaynst the realme of Grekelonde. Then shal there arise yet a mightie kinge, that shal rule with greate dominion, and do what him list. And assoone as his kingdome commeth vp, it shalbe destroyed, & deuyded towarde ỹ foure wyndes of the heauen. They ỹ come after him, shall not haue soch power & dominion as he: but his kingdome shalbe scatred, yee euen amonge other thē those. And the kynge of ỹ south shalbe mightier, then his other prynces. Agaynst him there shal one make himself strōge, & shal rule his dominiō wᵗ greate power.

But after certayne yeares they shalbe ioyned together, & the kynges doughter of the south shall come to the kynge of the north, for to make frēdshipe, but she shal not optayne the power of that arme, nether shall she be able to endure thorow his might: but she & soch as brought her (yee & he ỹ begat her, & confor-ted her for his tyme) shalbe delyuered vp. Out of ỹ braunches of hirrote, there shal one stonde vp in his steade: which with power of armes shal go thorow the kynges londe of the north, & handle him accordinge to his strength. As for their Idols & prynces with their costly Jewels of golde & syluer, he shal cary them awaye captynes into Egipte, and he shal prenayle agaynst the kynge of the north certayne yeares. And when he is come into ỹ kynges realme of ỹ south, he shal be fayne to turne agayne in to his owne londe. Wherfore his sonnes shalbe displeased, and shal gather together a mightie greate hoost of people: and one of them shal come, and go thorow like a waterflode: then shal he returne, and go forth with displeasynge and boostinge vnto his owne londe.

Thē the kinge of ỹ south shalbe angrie, and shal come forth to fight agaynst the kinge of the north: Yee he shall bringe a greate multitude of people together, and a greate heape shalbe geuē in to his honde: these shal he cary awaye w greate pryde, for so moch as he hath cast downe so many thousandes, neuertheles he shall not preuayle. For y kinge of y north shal gather (of the new) a greater heape of people then afore, & come forth (after a certayne tyme and yeares) with a mighty hoost & exceadinge greate good.

C At the same tyme there shall many stonde vp agaynst the kinge of the south, so that y wicked children of thy people also shal exalte them selues (to fulfill the vision) and then fall. So the kinge of the north shall come to laye sege, and to take the strōge fensed cities: And the power of thē of y south shal not be able to abyde him, & the best men of the people shall not be so stronge, as to resist him. Shortly, when he commeth, he shall handle him as he list, & no man shalbe so hardy as to stonde agaynst him. He shal stōde in the pleasaunt countre, which thorow him shalbe destroyed. He shal set his face w all his power to optayne his kingdome, & to be like it. Yee that shal he do, & geue him vnto the doughters amōge women, to destroye him. But he shal fayle, nether shal he optayne his purpose. After this, shall he set his face vnto the Iles, & take many of thē. A prynce shal stoppe him, to do him a shame, besyde the confucion that els shal come vnto him. Thus shal he turne agayne to his owne londe, stomble, & fall, and be nomore founde: so he that came vpon him & dyd him violence, shal stonde in his place, & haue a pleasaunt kingdome: and after few dayes he shal be destroyed, & that
D nether in wrath ner in batell. In his steade there shal aryse a vyle person not holdē worthy of a kinges dignite: this shall come in craftely, & optayne the kingdome with fayre wordes: he shal fight agaynst the armes of the mighty (& destroye them,) yee & agaynst the prynce of the couenaunt.

So after y he hath taken truce with him, he shal hādle disceatfully: that he maye get vp, & ouercome him with a small flocke: & so with craftynesse to get him to y fattest place of the londe, and to deale otherwise, then ether his fathers or grāndfathers dyd. For he shal destroye the thinge, y they had robbed & spoyled, yee & all their substaunce: ymaginynge thoughtes agaynst the strōge holdes, & that for a tyme. His power and herte shalbe sterred vp w a greate armye agaynst the kinge of the south: where thorow the kinge of the south shalbe moued then vnto batell, with a greate & mighty hoost also. Neuertheless, he shal not be able to stonde, for they shall conspyre agaynst him. Yee they y eate of his meate, shal hurte him: so that his hoost shal fall, & many be slayne downe.

These two kinges shalbe mynded to do myschefe, & talke of disceate at one table: but they shal not prospere: for why, the ende shal not come yet, vnto the tyme appointed. Thē shall he go home agayne in to his owne londe with greate good, & set his herte agaynst the holy couenaunt, he shalbe busy agaynst it, & then returne home. At the tyme appoynted he shal come agayne, & go toward the south: So shall it happen otherwise then at the first, yet ones agayne. And why, the shippes of Cythim shal come vpon him, that he maye be smytten & turne agayne: y he maye take indignacion agaynst the couenaunt of holynes, to medle agaynst it. Yee he shal turne him, & drawe soch vnto him, as leaue the holy couenaunt. 2.Mac.5. Nu.24.d

He shal set mighty men to vnhalowe the E sanctuary of strēgth, to put downe the dayly offeringe, & to set vp the abhominable desolacion. And soch as breake the couenaunt, shal he flatre with fayre wordes. But y people that wil knowe their God, shal haue the ouerhāde and prospere. Those also that haue vnderstondinge amonge the people, shal enfourme the multitude: & for a longe season, they shalbe persecuted with swearde, with fyre, with captyuyte & with the takynge awaye of their goodes. Now whē they fall, they shalbe set vp with a litle helpe: but many shal cleue vnto them faynedly.

Yee some of those which haue vnderstondynge shal be persecuted also: y they maye be tryed, purified & clēsed, till the tyme be out: for there is yet another tyme appoynted. The kinge shal do what him list, he shal exalte and magnifie himself agaynst all, that is God. Yee he shall speake marueylous thinges 2.The.2. agaynst the God of all goddes, wherin he shal prospere, so longe till the wrath be fulfilled, Apoc.15 for the conclusion is deuysed alredy. He shal not regarde the God of his fathers, but his lust shall be vpon wemē: Yee he shal not care for eny God, for he shal magnifie himself aboue all. In his place shal he worshipe the mighty Idols: & the god whom his fathers knewe not, shal he honoure with golde and syluer, with precious stones and pleasaunt Jewels.

This shal he do, & kinge helpe and succoure at the mighty Idols and straunge god- G

des. Soch as wil receaue him, and take him for God, he shal geue them greate worshipe and power: yee and make them lordes of the multitude, and geue them the londe with rewardes. In the latter tyme, shal the kinge of the south stryue with him: and the kinge of the north in like maner shall come agaynst him with charettes, horsmen & with a greate nauy of shippes. He shal come in to the londes, destroye and go thorow: he shal entre also in to the fayre pleasaunt londe. Many cities & countrees shal decaye, excepte Edom, Moab & the best of the children of Ammon, which shal escape from his honde. He shall stretch forth his hõdes vpon the countrees, & the londe of Egipte shal not escape him. For thorow his goinge in, he shal haue dominion ouer the treasures of syluer & golde, & ouer all the precious Jewels of Egipte, Lybia and Ethiopia. Neuerthelesse the tydinges out of the east and the north shall trouble him, for the which cause he shal go forth to destroye & curse a greate multitude. The tentes of his palace shall he pytch betwixte the two sees, vpon the hill of the noble sanctuary, for he shal come to the ende of it, and then shal no man helpe him.

The XII. Chapter.

THe tyme wil come also, that the greate prynce Michael, which stondeth on thy peoples syde, shal aryse vp, for there shal come a tyme of trouble, soch as neuer was, sens there begãne to be eny people, vnto that same tyme. Then shal thy people be delyuered, yee all those that be foũde written in the boke. Many of them that slepe in the dust of the earth, shal awake: some to euerlastinge life, some to perpetuall shame & reprofe. The wyse (soch as haue taught other) shal glister, as the shyninge of heauen: and those that haue instructe the multitude vnto godlynesse, shalbe as the starres, worlde without ende.

And thou o Daniel, shut vp these wordes, & seale the boke, till the last tyme. Many shal go about here and there, and thẽ shal knowlege increase. So I Daniel loked, and beholde, there stode other two: one vpon this shore of the water, the other vpon yonder syde. And one of thẽ sayde vnto him, which was clothed in lynnynge, and stode aboue vpon the waters of the floude: How longe shall it be to the ende of these wonderous workes? Then herde I the man with the lynnynge clothes, which stode aboue vpon the waters of the floude: when he helde vp his right and left honde vnto heauen, & swore by him which lyueth for euer: that it shal tary for a tyme, two tymes & half a tyme: & when the power of the holy people is clene scatred abrode, thẽ shal all these thinges be fulfilled.

o. 12. a

I herde it well, but I vnderstode it not. Then sayde I: O my lorde, what shal happen after that? He answered: Go thy way Daniel, for these wordes shal be closed vp & sealed, till the last tyme: & many shalbe purified, clensed & tried. But the vngodly shall lyue wickedly, and those wicked (as many of thẽ as they be) shal haue no vnderstondinge. As for soch as haue vnderstondinge, they shal regarde it. And from ỹ tyme forthwith the daylie offerynge shalbe put downe & the abhominable desolacion set vp, there shalbe a thousande two hũdreth & xc. dayes. O well is him, that waiteth, & commeth to the thousande iij. C. & xxxv. dayes. Go thou thy way now, till it be ended: take thy rest, and byde in thy lot, till the dayes haue an ende.

This is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Oseas the sonne of Beeri, in the dayes of Osias, Joathan, Achas & Ezechias kinges of Juda: and in the tyme of Jeroboam the sonne of Joas kynge of Israel.

The first Chapter.

A FIrst, when the LORDE spake vnto Oseas, he saide vnto him: Go thy waye, take an harlot to thy wife, and get childrē by her: for the lode hath cōmitted greate whordome agaynst the LORDE. So he wente, and toke Gomer ỹ doughter of Deblaim: which conceaued, and brought forth a sonne. And the LORDE sayde vnto him: call his name Jesrael, for I wil shortly auenge the bloude of Jesrael vpon the house of Jehu, and will bringe the kingdome of the house of Israel to an ende. Then will I breake the bowe of Israel, in the valley of Jesrael.

B She conceaued yet agayne, and bare a doughter. And he sayde vnto him: Call hir name Loruhama (that is, not opteyninge mercy) of: I wil haue no pyte vpon the house of Israel, but forget them, and put them clene out of remembraunce. Neuertheless I wil haue mercy vpon the house of Juda, & wil saue them, euen thorow the LORDE their God. But I wil not delyuer them thorow eny bow, swearde, batel, horses or horsmen.

Now when she had weened Loruhama, she conceaued agayne, & bare a sonne. Then sayde he: call his name Lo Ami (that is to saye, not my people.) For why? ye are not my people, therfore will not I be yours. And though the nombre of the children of Israel be as the sonde of the see, which can nether be measured ner tolde: Yet in the place where it is sayde vnto them, ye be not my people: euen there shall it be thus reported of them: they be ỹ childrē of the lyuynge God. Then shal the children of Juda and the childrē of Israel be gathered together agayne, & chose them selues one heade, and then departe out of the londe: for greate shalbe the daye of Jesrael.

The II. Chapter.

TEll youre brethren, that they are my people: and youre sisteren, that they haue optayned mercy. A
As for youre mother, ye shal chyde with her, and reproue her: for she is not my wife, nether am I hir husbōde: vnlesse she put awaye hir whordome out of my sight, and hir aduoutry from hir brestes. Yf no, I shal strype her naked, & set her, euen as she came in to ỹ worlde: Yee I shall laye hir waist, and make her like a wilderneſſe, and slaye her for thyrste. I shal haue no pite also vpon hir children, for they be the children of fornicacion. Jere.3.a Eze.16.a Ioh.8.d

Their mother hath broken hir wedlocke, and she that bare them, is come to cōfucion. For she sayde: I wil go after my louers, that geue me my water and my bred, my woll & my flax, my oyle and my drynke. But I will hedge hir waye with thornes, and stoppe it, that she shal not fynde hir foteſtoppes: and though she runne after hir louers, yet shall she not get them: she shal seke them, but not fynde them. Then shal she saye: well, I will go turne agayne to my first husbonde, for at ỹ tyme was I better at eaſe, then now. But B this wolde she not knowe, where as I yet gaue her corne, wyne, oyle, syluer and golde, which she hath hanged vpon Baal. 4.Re.17. Leui.15.c

Wherfore now will I go take my corne & wyne agayne in their season, and set agayne my woll and my flax, which I gaue her, to couer hir shame. And now will I dyscouer hir foolishneſſe, euen in the sight of hir louers, and no man shal delyuer her out of my hondes. Moreouer, I wil take awaye all hir myrth, hir holy dayes, hir newmoones, hir Sabbathes and all hir solempne feaſtes: I will destroye hir vynyardes and fyge trees, though she saieth: lo, here are my rewardes, that my louers haue geuen me. I wil make it a wodde, and the wylde beestes shall eate it vp: I will punysh her also for the dayes of Baal, wherin she censed him, deckynge him with hir earynges and cheynes: when she folowed hir louers, and forgat me, saieth the LORDE. Eze.16.b Ier.13.c Deu.16.c Iud.2.b 10.b Wherfore beholde, I wil call her againe, bringe her in to a wildernes, and speake frendly vnto her: there wil I geue her hir vynyardes agayne, yee and the valley of Achor also, to shewe hir hope & comforte. Then shal she synge there as in the tyme of hir youth, & Iosu.7.d

Iudic.5.a Exo.15.a like as in the daye when she came out of the londe of Egipte. Then (saieth the LORDE)
C she shal saye vnto me: O my housbande, & shal call me nomore Baal: for I wil take awaye those names of Baal from hir mouth, Leui.26.a yee she shal never remembre their names eny more. Then will I make a couenaunt with them, with the wylde beastes, with the foules of the ayre, & with euerythinge that crepeth vpon the earth.

Esa.2.a As for bowe, swerde and batel, I will destroye soch out of the londe, & wil make them Eze.16.b to slepe safely. Thus wil I mary the vnto myne owne self for euermore: yee euen to my self wil I mary the, in rightuousnesse, in equyte, in louynge kyndnesse and mercy. In faith also will I mary the vnto my self, & thou shalt knowe the LORDE. At the same tyme wil I shewe my self frendly and gracious vnto ỹ heauens, saieth the LORDE: & the heauens shal helpe the earth, and the earth shal helpe the corne, wyne and oyle, and they shal helpe Jesrael. I wil sowe them vpō earth, for a sede to myne owne self, & wil haue mercy vpon her, ỹ was without mercy. And to thē which Ro.9.c 1.Pet.2.b were not my people, I wil saye: thou art my people. And he shal saye: thou art my God.

The III. Chapter.

A Then sayde ỹ LORDE to me: Go yet ỹ waye & wowe an aduouterous womā, whō thy neghboure loueth, as ỹ LORDE
Eze.44.d doth the childrē of Jsrael: how be it they haue respecte to straunge goddes, and loue the wyne kannes. So I gat her for xv. syluerlinges, and for an Homer and an half of barlye, & sayde vnto her: Thou shalt byde with me a longe season, but se that thou playest not the harlot, and loke thou medle with none other man, & then wil I kepe my self for the.

B Thus the childrē of Jsrael shal syt a great whyle without kinge and prynce, without 2 Par.15.a Dan.3.d offeryng and aulter, without preest and reuelacion. But after warde shal the children of Jsrael conuerte, and seke the LORDE their Eze.34.d God, and Dauid their kinge: and in ỹ latter dayes they shal worshipe the LORDE, and his louynge kyndnesse.

The IIII. Chapter.

A Heare ỹ worde of the LORDE, o ye children of Jsrael: For the LORDE must punysh thē, ỹ dwel in the londe. And why: There is no faithfulnesse, there is no mercy, there is no knowlege of God in the lōde: but swearinge, lyēge, māslaughter, theft and aduoutry haue gotten the ouerhande, & one bloudgultynesse foloweth another. Therfore shal the londe be in a miserable case, and all they that dwell therin, shal mourne. The beastes in the felde, the foules in ỹ ayre, and the fishes in the see shall dye. Yet is there none, that wil chastē nor reproue another. The preestes which shulde reforme other, are become like the people.

Therfore stomblest thou in ỹ daye time, the prophet with the in the night. I will lose thy mother to sylence, & why: my people perish, because they haue no knowlege. Forgete then that thou hast refused vnderstondinge, therfore wil I refuse ỹ also: so that thou shalt nemore be my preest. And for so much as thou hast forgotten the lawe of thy God, I wil also forget thy childrē. The more they encreased in multitude, the more they synned agaynst me, therfore wil I chaunge their honoure in to shame. They eate vp the synnes of my people, & corage them in their wickednesse. Thus the preest is become like the people. Wherfore I will punysh them for their wicked wayes, & reward them according to their owne ymaginacions. They shal eate & not haue ynough: They haue vsed whordome, therfore shall they not prospere: for why they haue forsaken the LORDE, & not regarded him.

Whordome, wyne and dronckennesse take the herte awaye. My people axe counsel at their stockes, their staffe must tell them. For an whorish mynde hath disceaued them, so ỹ they cōmitte formeracion agaynst their God. They make sacrifice vpon the hie mountaynes, & burne their incense vpon the hilles, and amonge the okes, groues & bushes, for there are good shadowes. Therfore ỹ doughters are become harlottes, and youre spouses haue brokē their wedlocke. I wil not punysh ỹ doughters for beinge defyled, & ỹ brides that became whores: seinge the fathers themselues haue medled with harlottes, and offered with vnthriftes: but the people that wil not vnderstonde, must be punyshed.

Though thou Jsrael art disposed to playe ỹ harlot, yet shuldest not thou haue offended, o Juda: thou shuldest not haue runne to Galgala, ner haue gone vp to Bethaue, ner haue sworne: the LORDE lyueth. For Jsrael is gone backe, like a wāton cowe. The LORDE therfore shal make hir fede, as ỹ lābe feadeth a straye. And where as Ephraim is become partaker of Idols, wel, let him go. Their dronckēnesse hath put thē backe, & brought them to whordome. Their rulers loue shrowdes, bringe (saye they,) to their owne shame. A wynde shall take holde of their feete, & they shal be cōfounded in their offeringe

The V. Chapter.

A HEare this, o ye prestes: take hede, o thou housholde of Israel: gene eare, o thou kingly house: for this punyshment wil come vpon you, that are become a snare vnto Myspa, and a spred net vnto the mount of Thabor. They kyll sacrifices by heapes, to begyle the people therwith: therfore wil I punysh them all. I knowe Ephraim well ynough, & Israel is not hyd fro me: for Ephraim is become an harlot, and Israel is defyled. They are not mynded to turne vnto their God, for they haue an whorish herte, so y they can not knowe the LORDE.

But the pryde of Israel wil be rewarded him in his face, yee both Israel and Ephraim shal fall for their wickednesse, and Juda with them also. They shall come with their shepe & bullockes to seke y LORDE, but they shal not fynde him, for he is gone from them. As for the LORDE, they haue refused him, and brought vp bastarde children: a moneth therfore shall deuoure them with their portions.

B Blowe with the shawmes at Gabea, and with the trumpet in Rama, crie out at Bethauen vpon the yonside of Ben Jamin. In the tyme of y plage shal Ephraim be layed waist, therfore dyd I faithfully warne the trybes of Israel. Yet are the prynces of Juda become like them, that remoue the londemarckes, therfore wil I poure out my wrath vpon them like water. Ephraim is oppressed, and can haue no right of the lawe: for why they folowe y doctrynes of men. Therfore will I be vnto Ephraim as a moth, & to the house of Juda as a caterpiller.

When Ephraim sawe his sickenesse, and Juda his disease: Ephraim went vnto Assur, and sent vnto kinge Jareb: yet coude not he helpe you, ner ease you of youre payne. I am vnto Ephraim as a lyon, and as a lyons whelpe to the house of Juda. Euen I, I wil spoyle them, & go my waye. I wil take them with me, and no man shal rescue them. I wil go, and returne to my place, till they waxe fayne, and seke me.

The VI. Chapter.

A IN their aduersite they shall seke me, and saye: come, let vs turne agayne to the LORDE: for he hath smytten vs, and he shal heale vs: he hath wounded vs, & he shal bynde vs vp agayne: after two dayes shal he quycken vs, in the thirde daye he shal rise vs vp, so that we shal lyue in his sighte. Then shal we haue vnderstondinge, & endeuoure oure selues to knowe the LORDE. He shal go forth as the spryng of the daye, and come vnto vs as the euenynge and morninge rayne vpon the earth. Pro.16.

O Ephraim, what shal I do vnto the? O Juda, how shal I intreate the? seynge youre lone is like a morninge cloude, & like a dew y goeth early awaye. Therfore haue I cut B downe the prophetes, & letten them be slayne for my wordes sake: so that thy punyshment shal come to light. For I haue pleasure in louynge kyndnesse, and not in offerynge: yee Matt.9. in the knowlege of God, more then in burnt 12.a sacrifice. But euen like as Adam dyd, so haue they broken my couenaunt, and set me at naught. Galaad is a cite of wicked doers, of malicious people and bloudshedders. The multitude of the prestes is like an heape of theues, murtherers & bloudthurstie: for they haue wrought abhominacion. Horrible thin- Iere.18.b ges haue I sene in the house of Israel, there playeth Ephraim the harlot, and Israel is defyled: but Juda shall haue an harnest for himself, when I returne the captinyte of my people.

The VII. Chapter.

WHen I vndertake to make Israel A whole, then the vngraciousnesse of Ephraim and the wickednes of Samaria commeth to light: then go they about e with lyes. At home, they be theues: and without, they fall to robbynge. They cõsidre not in their hertes, that I remẽbre all their wickednes. They go aboute w their owne ynuencions, but I se them wel ynough. They make the kinge and the princes, to haue pleasure in their wickednes & lyes. All these burne in aduoutry, as it were an ouen y the baker heateth, whẽ he hath lefte kneadinge, till the dowe be leuended. Euen so goeth it this daye with oure kinges and prynces, for they begynne to be woode droncken thorow wyne: they vse familiarite with soch as discaue thẽ. They with the ymagination of their B herte are like an ouẽ, their slepe is all y nyght like the slepe of a baker, in the morninge is he as hote as the flame of fyre: they are altogether as hote as an ouen.

They haue deuoured their owne iudges, all their kinges are fallẽ: yet is there none of thẽ y calleth vpon me. Therfore must Ephraim be mixte amonge y heithen. Ephraim is become like a cake, y no man turneth: straungers haue deuoured his strength, yet he regardeth it not: he wareth ful of gray haires, yet wil he not knowe it: & y pride of Israel is cast downe before their face, yet wil they not Osee.3.a turne to the LORDE their God, ner seke him, for all this.

Iudic.5.a Exo.15.a like as in the daye when she came out of the londe of Egipte. Then (saieth the LORDE)
C she shal saye vnto me: O my houßbande, & shal call me nomore Baal: for I wil take awaye those names of Baal from hir mouth, Leui.26.a yee she shal neuer remembre their names eny more. Then will I make a couenaunt with them, with the wylde beastes, with the foules of the ayre, & with euerythinge that crepeth vpon the earth.

knewe the LORDE. At the same tyme wil I shewe my self friendly and gracious vnto ỹ heauens, saieth the LORDE: & the heauens shal helpe the earth, and the earth shal helpe the corne, wyne and oyle, and they shal helpe Jesrael. .Re.12.c the enemye folowe vpon him. They haue ordened kinges, but not thorow me: they haue made prynces, and I must not knowe of it.
Zec.7.d Of their syluer and golde haue they made them ymages, to bringe them selues to destruccion.
.Re.12.d Thy calfe (O Samaria) shalbe taken awaye. for my wrothfull indignacion is gone forth agaynst the. How longe wil it be, or they can be clensed? For the calfe came from Israel, the worke man made it, therfore can it be no God, but euen to a spyders webbe shal ỹ calfe of Samaria be turned. They ha ue sowne wynde, therfore shal they reepe a storme.

B Their sede shal beare no corne, there shal
no meel be made of their increase: though ỹ re be, yet shall straungers deuoure it vp. Israel shall perish, the Gentiles shall entreate him as a foule vessel. Sens they went vp to the Assirians, they are become like a wylde
asse in the deserte.
1.Re.17.a Ephraim geueth rewardes to get louers, Zec.10.b therfore are they scatred amōge the Heithē, there wil I gather them vp. They shal soone be weery of the burthen of kinges & pryn-ces. Ephraim hath made many aulters to do wickednes, therfore shal the aulters turne to his synne. Though I shewe thē my lawe never so moch, they counte it but straunge doctrine. Where as they do sacrifice, offeringe the flesh and eatinge it: the LORDE will haue no pleasure therin: but will remembre their wickednes, and punysh their synnes.
Israel turneth agayne into Egipte, they ha Deu.
ue forgotten him that made them, they buyl de churches, and Juda maketh many stronge cities: therfore wil I sende a fyre into their cities, and it shal consume their places.

The IX. Chapter.

O not thou triumphe (O Israel) make no boostinge more then the Heithen, for thou hast cōmitted adoul-trey agaynst ỹ God: straunge rewardes hast thou loued, more thē all corne floores. Therfore shall they nomore enioye the cornefloores and wynepresses, and their swete wyne shal fayle thē. They wil not dwel in the LOR DES londe, but Ephraim turneth agayne in to Egipte, & eateth vncleane thinges amon ge the Assirians. They poure out no wyne for a drinkofferinge vnto the LORDE, nether geue they him their slayne offeringes:
but they be vnto them as mourners meates,
wherin all they that eate them, are defyled.
For the bred that they haue soch lust vnto,
shal not come in the house of the LORDE.
What wil ye do then in the solempne dayes, and in the feast of the LORDE? lo, they shall get them awaye for the destruccion, Egypte
shal receaue them, & Noph shal bury them.
The nettles shall ouergrowe their pleasaunt goodes, and burres shalbe in their tabernacles. Be ye sure (O Israel) the tyme of visitacion is come, the dayes of recompen-cinge are at honde. As for the prophet, ye holde him for a foole: and him that is rich in the sprete, for a mad man: so greate is your wickednes and malice. Ephraim hath made himself a watchman of my God, a prophet ỹ is become a snare to do hurte in every strete, and abhominacion in the house of his God. They be gone to farre, & haue destroied thē selues, like as they dyd a fore tyme at Ga-baa. Therfore their wickednes shal be rembred, and their synnes punyshed.
I fande Israel like grapes in the wildernes, & sawe their fathers as the first fyges in ỹ toppe of ỹ fygetre. But they are gone to Baal Peor, & runne awaie fro me to ỹ shame full Idoll, & are become as abhominable as their louers. Ephraim flieth like a byrde, so shal their glory also: In so moch, ỹ they shal nether begette, cōceaue ner beare children.

C And though they bringe vp eny, yet will I make them childlesse amonge men. Yee wo shall come to them, when I departe from them. Ephraim (as me thinke) is planted in wilthynesse, like as Tyrus, but now must she bringe hir owne children forth to the man slayer.

O LORDE thou shalt geue them: what shalt thou geue them? geue them an vnfrutefull wombe and drye brestes. All their wickednesse is done at Galgal, there do I abhorre them. For the vngraciousnes of their owne inuencions, I wil dryue them out of my house. I will loue them nomore, for all their princes are vnfaithfull. Ephraim is hewen downe, their rote is dryed vp, so y they shal bringe nomore frute: yee and though they bringe forth eny, yet wil I slaye euen the best beloued frute of their body. My God shall cast them awaye, for they haue not bene obedient vnto him, therfore shal they go astraye amonge the heithen.

The X. Chapter.

ISrael was a goodly vyne, but he hath brought forth vnprofitable frute: yet the more frute he had, the mo aulters he made: y more good I dyd to their londe, the more frendshipe shewed they to their ymages. Their herte is deuyded, therfore wil they be destroyed. The LORDE shall breake downe their ymages, he shal destroye their aulters. Then shal they saye: we haue no kinge, for why? we haue not feared the LORDE. And what shal then the kinge do to vs? They comon together, and sweare vayne oothes: they be cõfederate together, therfore groweth their punyshment, as the wedes in the forowes of the londe.

They that dwell in Samaria haue worshipped the calfe of Bethauẽ: therfore shall the people mourne ouer them, yee and the prestes also, that in their welthynesse reioysed with them: and why? it shal passe awaye from them. It shalbe brought to the Assirian, for a present vnto kinge Jareb. Ephraim shal receaue full punishment: Israel shal be confounded for his owne ymaginacions; Samaria w̃ his kinge shall vanish awaye, as the scomme vpon the water. The hye places of Auen where Israel do synne, shal be cast downe: thistles and thornes shal growe vpon their aulters. Then shal they saye to y mountaynes: couer vs, and to the hilles: fall vpon vs.

O Israel, thou hast synned as Gabaa dyd afore tyme, where they remayned: shulde not the batel then come vpon the wicked children, as wel as vpon the Gabaonites? I wil chasten them, euen after myne owne desyre, the people shal be gathered together ouer them, whẽ I punysh them for their greate wickednesse. Ephraim was vnto me, as a cow that is vsed to go to plowe, therfore I loued him, and fell vpon his fayre neck. I drue Ephraim, Juda plowed, & Jacob pluyed the hußbõdeman: that they might sowe vnto righteousnes, and reape the frutes of weldoynge: y they might plowe vp their fresh londe, and seke the LORDE, till he came, and lerned them righteousnes. C Matt.11.e

But now they haue plowed them wickednesse, therfore shal they reepe synne, and eate the frute of lyes. Seinge thou puttest thy cõfidence in thine owne wayes, and leanest to y multitude of thy worthies: there shal growe a sedicion amonge thy people. All y stroge cities shalbe layed waist, euen as Salmana was destroyed with his familiers, thorow him that was auenged of Baal, in the daye of batel, where y mother perished with hir childrẽ. Euen so shal it go with you (o Bethel) because of youre malicious wickednes. Like as the mornynge goeth awaye, so shal the kinge of Israel passe. Iud.9.c

The XI. Chapter.

WHen Israel was yõge, I loued him: and called my sonne out of the londe of Egipte. But y more they were called, the more they wente backe: offeryng vnto Idols, and censynge ymages. I lerned Ephraim to go, and bare them in myne armes, but they regarded not me, that wolde haue helped them. I led them with coardes of frendshipe, & with bondes of loue. I was euen he, that layed the yocke vpon their neckes. I gaue them their fodder myself, y they shulde not go agayne into Egipte: And now is Assur their kinge: For they wolde not turne vnto me. Therfore shal y swearde begynne in their cities, the stoare that they haue lickened vnto, shall be destroyed and eaten vp: and that because of their owne ymaginacions. My people hath no lust to turne vnto me, their prophetes laye the yocke vpon thẽ, but they ease them not of their burthen. A Exo.3.b 6.b Matt.2.c Exo.32.b 3.Re.12.c 4.Re.16.c Exo.16.c B Esa.10.a 28.b Matt.23.i Luc.11.d

What greate thinges haue I geuen the, o Ephraim? how faithfully haue I defended the, o Israel? haue I dealt with the as with Adama? or haue I intreated the like Seboim? No, my hert is otherwise mynded. Yee my mercy is to fervent: therfore haue I not turned me to destroye Ephraim in my wrothful displeasure. For I am God and no man, I am euen that holy one in the myddest Gen.19.e Deu.29.d of the, though I came not within the cite.

The LORDE roareth like a lyon, that they
o.5.a maye folowe him: Yee as a lyon roareth he,
that they maye be afrayed, like the children of the see: that they maye be scarred awaye
from Egipte, as men scarre byrdes: & frayed awaye (as doues vse to be) from the Assirias londe: and that becawse I wolde haue them
tary at home, saieth the LORDE. But Ephra im goeth aboute me with lies, and the house of Israel dyssembleth. Only Juda holdeth him with God, and with the true holy thin-ges.

The XII. Chapter.

A Ephraim kepeth the ayre, and foloweth after the east wynde: he is euer increasinge lyes & destruction. They be confederate with the Assirians, their oyle
.re.15.b is caried in to Egipte. The LORDE hath a a.57.b courte to holde with Juda, and wil punysh Jacob: After their owne waies and accordin ge to their owne inuencions, shal he recompence them. He toke his brother by the hele, en.25.a when he was yet in his mothers wombe:
en.32.d and in his strength he wrestled with God.
en.35.b He stroue with the Angel, and gat the victo ry: so that he prayde and desyred him. He fan de him at Bethel, & there he talked w^t vs.

Yee the LORDE God of hoostes, euen y^e LORDE him self remembred him: Then turn-ne to thy God, kepe mercy and equyte, and hope still in thy God. But the marchaunt
B hath a false weight in his honde, he hath a po.3.c pleasure to occupie extorcion. Ephraim thin keth thus: Tush, I am rich, I haue good ynough: In all my workes shal not one fawte be founde, that I haue offended. Yet am I the LORDE thy God, euē as when I brought the out of the londe of Egipte, and set the in thy tentes, and as in the hye feast dayes.

I haue spokē thorow the prophetes, and shewed dyuerse visions, and declared my self by the ministracion of y^e prophetes. But at Galaad is the abhominacion, they are fallen to vanyte. At Galgal they haue slayn-Deu.12.a ne oxen: and as many heapes of stones as 4.b they had in their lōde forowes, so many aulters haue they made. Jacob fled into the lon Gen.28.a de of Siria, and Israel serued for a wife, and for a wife he kepte shepe.

By a prophet the LORDE brought them out of Egipte, and by a prophet he preserued thē. But Ephraim hath prouoked him to displeasure thorow his abhominacions:
therfore shal his blonde be ponred vpon him self, and the LORDE his God shal rewarde him his blasphemies.

The XIII. Chapter.

The abhominacion of Ephraim is co me also in to Israel. He is gone backe to Baal, therfore must he dye. And now they synne more and more: of their siluer, they make them molten ymages, like the Idols of the heithen, and yet all is nothin-ge but the worke of the crafte sman. Not withstōdinge they preach of the same: who so wil kysse the calues, offreth to men. Ther fore they shalbe as the mornynge clonde, and as the dew that early passeth awaye: and like as dust that y^e wynde taketh awaye from the flooze, and as smoke that goeth out of y^e chymney.

I am the LORDE thy God, which brought the out of the londe of Egipte: that thou shuldest knowe no God but me only, & that thou shuldest haue no Sauioure but only me. I toke diligent hede of the in the wildernesse that drye londe. But when they were wel fedde and had ynough, they waxed proū de, and forgat me. Therfore will I be vnto them as a lyon, and as a leoparde in y^e waye to the Assirians. I wil come vpon them as a shebeer, that is robbed of hir welpes, and I wil breake that stubburne herte of theirs.
There wil I deuoure them as a lyon: yee the wylde beastes shal teare them.

O Israel, thou doest but destroye thy self.
In me only is thy helpe. Where are thy kinges now, that shulde helpe the in all thy cities? Yee and thy iudges, of whom thou sey dest: geue me a kinge and princes? well, I gaue the a kinge in my wrath, and in my displeasure will I take him from the agayne.
The wickednesse of Ephraim is bounde together, & his synne lieth hyd. Therfore shall sorowes come vpon him, as vpon a woman that trauaileth. An vndiscrete sonne is he: for he considreth not, that he shulde not haue bene able to haue endured in the tyme of his byrth, had not I defended him from the gra ue, and delyuered him from death.

O death, I wil be thy death: o hell, I wil be thy stynge. Yet can I se no comforth, for when he is now the goodliest amonge the brethren, the east wynde (euen the wynde of the LORDE) shal come downe from the wilderneße, and drye vp his condytes, and drye vp his welles: he shal spoyle the treasure of all pleasaunt vessels.

As for Samaria, they shalbe made waist,
& why? they are disobedient vnto their God.
They shal perish with the sweard, their chil dren shalbe slayne, and their wemen hyg with childe shalbe rypte vp.

The XIIII. Chapter.

Vyne the now (o Israel) vnto ỹ LORDE thy God, for thou hast taken a greate fall thorow thy wickednesse. Take these wordes with you, when ye turne to the LORDE, & saye vnto him: O forgeue vs all oure synnes, receaue vs graciously, & then wil we offre ỹ bullockes of oure lyppes vnto the. Assur shalbe no more oure helper, neither will we ryde vpon horses eny more. As for the workes of oure hondes, we wil nomore call vpon them: For it is thou that art oure God, thou shewest euer mercy vnto the fatherlesse.

O (yf they wolde do this) I shulde heale their sores: yee with all my herte wolde I louethem: so ỹ my wrath shulde clene be turned awaye from them. Yee I wolde be vnto Israel as the dewe, and he shulde growe as flylie, & his rote shulde breake out as Libanus. His braunches shulde spredeout abrode, & be as fayre as the olyue tre, & smel as Libanus. They that dwel vnder his shadowe, shulde come agayne, & growe vp as the corne, & flouish as the vyne: he shulde haue as good a name, as the wyne of Libanus.

O Ephraim, what haue I to do with Idols eny more? I wil graciously heare him, & lede him forth. I wil be vnto the as a grene fyre tre, vpon me shalt thou fynde thy frute. Who so is wyse, shal vnderstonde this: & he ỹ is right enstructe, wil regarde it. For ỹ wayes of the LORDE are righteous, soch as be godly wil walke in them: As for the wicked, they wil stomble therin.

The ende of the prophet Oseas.

The Prophet Joel.

What Joel conteyneth.

Chap. I. He sheweth Israel, that all their glory and outwarde ceremonies, shal be put downe and ceasse.

Chap. II. The plages are greate, wherfore he wolde haue them to mourne: yet yf they will amende, they maye hope for grace.

Chap. III. How the people are brought agayne, and their enemies punished.

The first Chapter.

THis is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Joel the sonne of Phatuel: Heare o ye elders: pōder this wel, all ye that dwell in the lōde: yf euer there happened soch a thinge in youre dayes, or in ỹ dayes of youre fathers. Tell youre children of it, & let them shewe it vnto their children, & so they to certifie their posterite therof. Loke what the caterpiller hath lefte, ỹ hath the gresshopper eaten vp: what the gresshopper lefte, that hath the locuste eaten vp: & what the locuste hath lefte, that hath the blastinge consumed. Wake vp ye dronckardes, & wepe: mourne all ye wyne suppers, because of youre swete wyne, for it shal be taken awaye from youre mouth. Yee a mightie & an innumerable people shall come vp into my londe: these haue teth like the teth of lyons, & chaftbones like the lyoneses. They shal make my vinyarde waist, they shal pyll of the barckes of my fygetrees, stripe them bare, cast them awaye, and make the braunches whyte. Exo. 10. Deu. 32.

Make ỹ mone as a virgin doth, ỹ gyrdeth her selfe with sacke, because of hir bryde grome. For the meate & drynkofferynge shalbe taken awaye from the house of the LORDE: & the prestes ỹ LORDES ministers shal mourne. The felde shalbe waisted, the londe shalbe in a miserable case: for the corne shalbe destroyed, the swete wyne shal come to confucion, & the oyle vtterly desolate. The hußbōdemen & the wyne gardeners shal loke piteously & make lamentacion, for the wheate & barley, & because the harueste vpon the felde is so clene destroyed. The grapegatherers shal make greate mone, when the vynyarde & fygetrees be so vtterly waisted. Yee all the pomgarnettes, palmtrees, apletrees, & the other trees of the felde shall wyther awaye. Thus the mery cheare of the children of men, shal come to confucion. B

Gyrde you, & make yo mone, o ye prestes: mourne ye ministres of the aulter: go youre waye in, & slepe in sackcloth, o ye officers of my God: for the meat & drynkofferynge shal be taken awaye from the house of yo God. Proclame a fastynge, call the cōgregacion, gather the elders & all the inhabiters of the londe together into the house of the LORDE yo God, & crie vnto the LORDE: alas, alas for this daye. And why? the daye of the LORDE is at honde, and commeth as a destroyer from the Allmightie. Shal not ỹ meates be taken awaye before oure eyes, the myrth also & ioye from the house of oure God? The sede shal perish in the grounde, the garners shall lye waist, the floores shalbe broken downe, for the corne shalbe destroied. O what a sighinge make the catell: the bullockes are very euel likynge, because they haue no pasture: C Ioel. 2. C 3. Re. 18.

and the shepe are fameß shed awaye.

O LORDE, to the will I crie: for the fyre hath consumed the goodly pastures of the wylderneße, and the flame hath brent vp all the trees of the felde. Yee the wylde beestes crie also vnto the: for the water ryuers are dryed vp, and the fyre hath consumed the pastures of the wylderneße.

The II. Chapter.

A BLowe out ỹ trompet in Sion, & crie vpō my holy hill, ỹ all soch as dwel in the londe, maye trēble at it: for ỹ daie of the LORDE commeth, & is harde at honde: a darcke daye, a gloomynge daye, a cloudy daye, yee & a stormy daye, like as the mornynge spredeth out vpō the hilles: Namely, a great & mightie people: soch as haue not bene sens ỹ beg ynninge, nether shal be after them for euermore. Before him shal be a consumynge fyre, & behynde him a burnynge flame. The londe shal be as a garden of pleasure before him, but behinde him shal it be a very waist wilderneße, & there is no man, that shal escape him. They are to loke vpon like bayrded horses, & runne like horsemen. They skyppe vp vpon ỹ hilles, as it were the sounde of charettes: as the flame of fyre that consumeth the strawe, and as a mightie people redy to the batell.

B The folke shalbe afrayed of him, all faces shal be as blacke as a pot. These shal rūne like giauntes, & leape ouer the walles like men of warre. Euery mā in his goinge shal kepe his araie, & not go out of his path. There shal not one dryue another, but ech shal kepe his owne waye. They shal breake in at the wyndowes, & not be hurte: They shal come into the cite, & runne vpon the walles: They shal clymme vp vpon the houses, & skyppe in at the wyndowes like a thefe. The earth shal quake before him, yee the heauens shalbe moued: the Sonne & Moone shal be darckened, and the starres shal withdrawe their shyne. The LORDE shal shewe his voyce before his hooste, for his hooste is greate, stronge & mighty to fulfill his commaundement. This is ỹ greate and maruelous fearfull daye of the LORDE: And who is able to abyde it?

C Now therfore saieth the LORDE: Turne you vnto me with all youre hertes, with fastinge, wepynge and mournynge: rente youre hertes, & not youre clothes. Turne you vnto the LORDE youre God, for he is gracious & mercifull, longe sufferynge & of greate compassion: & redy to pardone wickednes. Then (no doute) he also shal turne, & forgeue: & after his chastenynge, he shal let youre increase remayne, for meat & drynck offerynges vnto the LORDE youre God? Blowe out with the trōpet in Sion, proclame a fastynge, call the congregacion, & gather the people together: warne the congregacion, gather the elders, bringe the children & suclynges together. Let ỹ brydegrome go forth of his chābre, & the bryde out of her closet. Let the prestes serue the LORDE betwixte the porch & ỹ aulter, wepinge & sayenge: be fauourable (o LORDE) be fauourable vnto thy people: let not thine heretage be brought to soch confucion, leste the Heithen be lordes therof. Wherfore shulde they saye amonge the Heithen, where is now their God?

Then shal the LORDE be gelous ouer his londe, & spare his people: yee ỹ LORDE shal answere, & saye vnto his people: Behold, I wil sende you corne, wyne & oyle, so that ye shal haue plenty of them: & I wil nomore geue you ouer to be a reprose amonge the Heithen. Agayne, as for him of the north, I shal dryue him farre from you: & shute him out into a drye and waist londe, his face towarde the east see, and his hynder parres towarde the vttemost see. The stynke of him shall go vp, and his fylthy corrupcion shal fall vpon himself, because he hath dealte so proudly. Feare not (o londe) but be glad and reioyse, for the LORDE wil do greate thinges. Be not ye afrayed nether (o ye beastes of the felde) for the pastures shal be grene, and the trees shal beare their frute: the fygetrees & vynardes shal geue their increase.

Be glad then (o ye children of Sion) and reioyse in the LORDE youre God, for he hath geuen you the teacher of rightwousnes: & he it is ỹ shal sende you downe shuwers of rayne, early and late in the first moneth: so that ỹ garners shal be full of corne, and the pisses plenteous in wyne and oyle. And as for the yeares that ỹ greß shopper, locuste, blastinge & caterpiller (my greate hooste, which I sent amonge you) haue eaten vp, I shal restore them to you agayne: so that ye shal haue ynough to eate, and be satisfied: and praise the name of the LORDE youre God, that so maruelously hath dealte with you.

And my people shall neuer be confounded eny more: Ye shall well knowe, that I am in the myddest of Israel, and that I am youre God: yee and that there is none other, and my people shall nomore be brought to confucion.

After this, will I poure out my spirite vpon all flesly: & yo sonnes & yo doughters shal prophecy: yo olde mē shal dreame dre-mes & youre yonge men shal se visions: Yee in those dayes I will poure out my spirete vpon seruauntes and maydens. I will shewe wonders in heauen aboue, and tokes in the earth beneth: bloude and fyre, and the vapoure off smoke. The Sonne shalbe turned into darcknesse, & y Moone in to bloude: before y greate & notable daye off the LORDE come. And then yme shal come: y who so euer calleth on the name of the LORDE, shalbe saued. For vpon the mount Sion & at Jerusalem, there shalbe a saluacion, like as the LORDE hath promised: yee & amonge the other remnaunt, whom the LORDE shall call.

The III. Chapter.

FOr take hede: In those dayes & at y same tyme, when I turne agayne the captyuite of Juda & Jerusalē: I shal gather all people together, & bringe thē into the valley of Josaphat: and there wil I reason with thē, because of my people & herytage of Israel: whō they haue scatred about emong the nacions, & parted my lōde: yee they haue cast lottes for my people, the yonge mē haue they set in the brodel house, & solde the damsels for wyne, y they might haue to drīke. Thou Tirus and Sidō and all ye borders of the Philistynes: what haue ye to do with me? Will ye defye me? well: yf ye will nedes defye me, I shall recōpence you, euen vpon youre heade, & y right shortly: for ye haue take awaye my syluer & golde, my fayre & goodly Jewels, & brought them in to youre goddes houses. The children also of Juda and Jerusalem haue ye solde vnto the Grekes, that ye might bringe thē farre frō y borders of the rowne countrees.

Beholde therfore: I will rayse them out of the place, where ye haue solde them, & will reward you euen vpon youre heade. Youre sonnes & youre doughters will I sell thorow the hondes of the children of Juda, & so they shal gene them forth to sell, vnto thē of Saba, a people of a farre cōtre: for the LORDE himself hath sayde it. Crie out these thinges amonge the Gentiles, proclame warre, wake vp the giauntes, let them drawe nye, let thē come vp all the lusty warryours of thē. Make you swerdes of youre plowe shares, and speares of youre sycles & sythes. Let y weake man saye: I am stronge. Muster you, and come, all ye heithē rōnde aboute: gather you together, there shall the LORDE laye all thy giauntes to the grounde. Let the people aryse, and get them to the valley of Josaphat: for there wil I syt, and iudge all heithē rōnde aboute.

Laye to youre sythes, for the harueste is ripe: come, get you downe: the wynepresse is full, yee the wynepresses runne ouer, for their wickednesse is waren greate. In the valley appoynted, there shalbe many, many people: for the daye of the LORDE is nye in y valley appoynted. The Sonne and Mone shall be darckened, & the starres shal withdrawe their light. The LORDE shal roare out of Sion, & crie out of Jerusalē, that the heauens & the earth shal quake withall. But the LORDE shal be a defence vnto his owne people, and a refuge for the childrē of Israel. Thus shal ye knowe, y I the LORDE youre God dwell vpō my holy mount of Sion. Then shal Jerusalē be holy, & there shal no straungers go thorow her eny more. Then shal the moūtaynes droppe swete wyne, & the hylles shall flowe with mylcke, All the ryuers of Juda shal haue water ynough, & out of the LORDES house, there shal flowe a sprynge, to water y brooke of Sitim: but Egipte shalbe layed waist, & Edō shal be desolate: because they haue dealte so cruelly with the childrē of Juda, and shed innocent bloude in their londe. Agayne, Juda shalbe inhabited for euermore, & Jerusalē from generacion to generacio: for I wil not leaue their bloude vnauenged. And the LORDE shal dwell in Sion.

Chap. VII. The punyshment off the people shewed by dyuerse visions.

Chap. VIII. A vision agaynst the coueitous people and false waighters. The hunger of Gods worde.

Chap. IX. Plages vpon Juda. The power off God. The receauynge off the Geithen. Conuersion off the Jewes.

The first. Chapter.

THese are the sermons, that were shewed vnto Amos (which was one of the shepherdes at Thecua) vpon Israel, in the tyme of Osias kynge of Juda, & in the tyme of Jeroboā ỹ sonne of Joas kynge of Israel, two yeare before ỹ earthquake. 4.Re.15.a 4.Re.14.c And he sayde: The LORDE shal roare out off Sion, & shewe his voyce frō Jerusalē: so that ỹ pastures of the shepherdes shal be in a miserable case, & ỹ toppe of Charmel dryed vp. Ier.25.d Ioel.3.c

Thus sayeth the LORDE: for thre & foure wickednesses of Damascus, I will not spare her: because they haue throßhed Galaad wyth flales: But I wil sende a fyre in to ỹ house of Hazael, the same shal consume the palaces of Benadab. Thus wil I breake the barres off Damascus, & rote out the inhabiter frō the felde of Auen, and him ỹ holdeth the scepter, out of ỹ pleasunt house: so ỹ the people shalbe dryuen out of fayre Siria, sayeth the LORDE. Esa.17.a Iere.49.d

Thus saieth the LORDE: For thre & foure wickednesses of Gaza, I wil not spare her: because they make the presoners yet more captyue, & haue dryuen thē in to the lōde of Edom. Therfore wil I sende a fyre in to ỹ walles of Gaza, which shal deuoure hir houses. I wil rote out thē ỹ dwell at Asdod & him ỹ holdeth the scepter of Ascalon, and stretch out myne honde ouer Accaron, that the remnaunt of the Philistines shal perish saieth the LORDE. Zach.9.c

Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses off the cite off Tyre, I will not spare her: because they haue increased ỹ captiuyte of the Edomites, and haue not remembred the brotherly couenaunt. Therfore will I sende a fyre in to the walles off Tyre, that shal consume hir palaces. Ioel.3.a 3.Re.5.a Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses of Edom I wil not spare him, because he persecuted his brother with the swerde, destroyed his mothers wombe, bare hatred very longe, and so kepte indignacion all waye by him. Therfore will I sende a fyre in to Themā, which shal deuoure the pallaces of Bosra.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre āde foure wickednesses of the children off Ammon, I will not spare them: because they rypte vp thē womē greate with childe in Galaad, to make the borders of their londes the wyder. Therfore I wil kyndle a fyre in the walles of Rabbath, that shall consume hir palaces: with a greate crie, in the daye of batel, in tempest and in the daye off stomme: so that their kynge shal go in to captiuyte, he and his princes together, sayeth the LORDE. Abd.1.a Iere.49.b Gen.27.g Iere.49.a Eze.21.d 25.a

The II. Chapter.

THus sayeth the LORDE: For thre and foure wickednesses off Moab, I will not spare him: because he brent the bones off the kynge of Edom to asshes. Therfore will I sende a fyre in to Moab, which shal cōsume ỹ pallaces of Carioth: soỹ Moab shal perish with a noyse, and the sounde of a shawme. I will rote out the iudge from amōge them, and slaye all his princes with him, sayeth the LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE: for thre āde foure wickednesses of Juda, I wil not spare him: because he hath cast asyde the lawe of the LORDE, and not kepte his commaundementes: for why, they wolde nedes be disceaued with the lyes, that their forefathers folowed. Therfore will I sende a fyre in to Juda, which shal consume the palaces of Jerusalem.

Thus sayeth the LORDE: For thre & foure wickednesses of Israel, I wil not spare him: because he hath solde the righteous for money, and the poore for shues. They treade vpon poore mens heades in the dust of the earth, & croke the wayes off the mete. The sonne and the father go to the harlot, to dishonoure my holy name: they lye besyde euery aulter vpon clothes taken to pledge, and in the house of their goddes they drynke the wyne of the oppressed. Yet destroyed I the Amorite before them, that was as hie as the Cedre trees, and as stronge as the okes: notwithstōdinge I destroyed his frute frō aboue, and his rote from vnder.

Agayne: I brought you out of the londe of Egipte, and led you xl. yeares thorow the wylderneße, that ye might haue the Amorites londe in possession. I rayßed vp prophetes amonge youre children, and absteyners amonge youre yōge men. Is it not so, o ye children of Israel, sayeth the LORDE? But ye gaue the absteyners wyne to drynke, yee ye cōmaunded the prophetes, sayenge: Prophecy not. Beholde, I wil crasshe you in sonder, like as a wayne crasheth, ỹ is full of sheaues: so that ỹ swifte shall not escape, neither the stronge be able to do eny thynge: no, the giaunte shal not saue his owne life. The archer shall not abyde, and the swifte off fote shall not escape. The horsmā shal not saue his life, & he that is as māly of stomack as a giaunte, shall in that daye be fayne to runne his waye naked, sayeth the LORDE.

The III. Chapter.

A HEare, what the LORDE speaketh vnto you (o ye children of Israel) namely, vnto all ye trybes, whō I brought out of Egipte, and sayde: You only haue I accepted from all the generacions off the earth: therfore will I vyset you in all youre wickednesses. Maye twaine walke together excepte they be agreed amonge them selues? Doth a lyon roare in the wodde, excepte he haue a pray? Or crieth a lyons whelpe out of his denne, excepte he haue gotten sōmthīge? Doth a byrde fall in a snare vpō ye earth where no fouler is? Taketh a man his snare vp from the grounde, afore he catche sōmwhat? Crie they out Alarum with the trompet in the cite, and the people not afrayed? Commeth there eny plage in a cite, without it be the LORDES doinge? Now doth the B LORDE God no maner of thinge, but he telleth his secrete before vnto his seruauntes ye prophetes. When a lyon roareth, who will not be afrayed? Seynge then that the LORDE God himself speaketh, who will not prophecy?

Preach in the palaces at Asdod, and in the palaces off the londe off Egipte, and saye: gather you together vpon the mountaynes off Samaria, so shall ye se greate murthur and violent oppression amonge them: for why, they regarde not the thinge that is right, sayeth the LORDE: they gather together euell gotten goodes, and laye vp robbery in their houses.

Therfore, thus sayeth the LORDE God:
C This londe shalbe troubled and besēged roūde aboute, thy strength shalbe plucte from the, and thy palaces robbed. Thus saieth the LORDE: like as an hyrdeman taketh two legges or a pece off an eare out off the Lyons mouth: Euen so the children of Israel (that dwell in Samaria, haunynge their couches in the comer, and their beddes at Damascus) shalbe plucte awaye. Heare, and beare recorde in the house of Jacob (sayeth the LORDE God of hoostes) that when I begynne to vyset the wickednesse of Israel, I will vyset ye aulters at Bethel also: so that the hornes of the aulter shalbe broken of, and fall to the grouīde.

As for the wynter house and sommer house, I will smyte them downe: and the houses of yuery, yee and many other houses shal perish, and be destroyed, sayeth the LORDE.

The IIII. Chapter.

A HEare this worde, o ye fat kyne, that be vpon the hill of Samaria: ye that do poore mē wronge, and oppresse the nedy: ye that saye to youre lordes: bringe hyther, let vs drynke. Therfore the LORDE hath swoorne by his holynesse: The dayes shall come vpon you, that ye shalbe lift vp vpō speares, and youre posterite caried awaye in fysshers pannes. Ye shall get you out at the gappes one after another, and in Armon shal ye be cast awaye, sayeth the LORDE.

B Ye came to Bethel for to worke vngraciousnes, and haue increased youre synnes at Galgal. Ye brought youre sacrifices in the mornynge, and youre tythes vnto the thirde daye. Ye made a thākofferinge off leuen, ye promised frewillofferinges, and proclamed them. Soch lust had ye, o ye children of Israel, sayeth the LORDE God. Therfore haue I geuen you ydle teth in all youre cities, and scarcenesse off bred in all youre places: yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE.

Wherfore two (yee thre) cities came vnto one, to drynke water: but they were not satisfied, yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth ye LORDE.

C I haue smyten you with drouth and blastinge: and loke how many orchardes, vinyardes, fygetrees and olyue trees ye had: ye caterpiller hath eaten them vp. But yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE. Pestilence haue I sent amōge you, as I dyd in Egipte: youre yonge men haue I slayen wt ye swerde, and caused youre horses be taken captyue: I made the stynckinge sauoure of youre tentes to come vp in to youre nostrels: Yet wil ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE.

Exo. 9. b

Some off you haue I ouerthrowen: as I ouerthrewe Sodome and Gomorre: so that ye were as a brande plucte out of the fyre. Yet will ye not turne vnto me, sayeth the LORDE.

Gen. 19. b
2. Pet. 2. b

Therfore, thus will I handle the agayne (O Israel) ye euen thus will I handle the. Make the ready then to mete thy God, o Israel. For lo, he maketh the mountaynes, he ordeneth the wynde, he sheweth man what he is aboute to do: he maketh the mornynge and the darcknesse, he treadeth vpō the hye places off the earth: ye LORDE God of hoostes is his name.

The V. Chapter.

A HEare this worde (o ye house of Israel) and why? I must make this mone for you: The virgin Israel shall fall, & neuer ryse vp agayne: she shall be cast downe vpon hir owne grounde, and no man shal helpe hir vp. For thus sayeth the LORDE God: Where as there dwelt a M. in one cite, there shalbe left scarce an C. therin: and where ye dwelt an C. there shal scarce ten be left for the house off Israel. Neuertheles, thus sayeth the LORDE vnto the house of Israel: Seke after me, and ye shal lyue, but seke not after Bethel. Come not at Galgal, and go not to Bersaba: for Galgal shall be caried awaye captyue, and Bethel shal come to naught. Seke the LORDE, that ye maye lyue: lest the house of Joseph be brent with fyre and cōsumed, and lest there be none to quench Bethel.

Returne the lawe to wormwod, and caste downe righteousnes vnto the grounde. The LORDE maketh the vij. starres and the Oryons, he turneth the night into daye, and off the daye he maketh darcknesse. He calleth the waters of the see, and poureth them out vpon the playne grounde: the LORDE is his name. He rayseth destruccion vpon the mighty people, & bryngeth downe the stronge holde: but they owe him euel will, that reproueth them openly: and who so telleth thē the playne treuth, they abhorre him. For so moch thē as ye oppresse the poore, and robbe him of his best sustenaunce: therfore, wherein ye have buylded houses off square stone, ye shall not dwell in them. Marueles pleasaunt vynyardes shall ye plante, but the wyne of thē shal ye not drynke: and why? as for the multitude of youre wickednesses and youre stoute synnes, I knowe them right well. Enemies are ye off the righteous, ye take rewardes, ye oppresse the poore in iudgment. Therfore the wyse must now be fayne to holde his tūge, so wicked a tyme is it.

Seke after the thinge that is good, & not euell, so shall ye lyue: yee the LORDE God off hooستes shal be with you, accordinge to youre owne desyre. Hate the euell, and loue the good: set vp right agayne in the porte: & (no doute) the LORDE God of hooستes shall be mercifull vnto the remnaunt of Joseph. Off no sayeth the LORDE God, the God of hooستes) there shal be mourninge in all stretes, yee they shal saye ī every strete: alas, alas. They shall call the housbonde man to lamentacio, and soch as can mourne, to mournynge. In all vynyardes there shal be heuynesse, for I will come amonge you, sayeth the LORDE.

Wo be vnto them that desyre the daye off the LORDE: Wherfore wolde ye have it? As for that daye of the LORDE, it shalbe darcke & not cleare: Yee like as when a man rūneth fro a lyon, and a Beer meeteth with him: or whe he commeth into the house, and leeneth his honde vpon the wall, a serpent byteth him. Shall not the daye of the LORDE be darcke, and not cleare? shal it not be cloudy, and no shyne in it?

I hate and abhorre youre holy dayes, & where as ye censē me when ye come together I will not accepte it. And though ye offre me brent offeringes and meat offeringes, yet have I no pleasure therin: As for youre fatt offerynges, I wil not loke vpon them. Awaye with that noyse of thy songes, I will not heare thy playes of musick: but se that equyte flowe as the water, and righteousnesse as a mightie streame. O ye house of Israel, gaue ye me offeringes and sacrifices thyrty. yeares longe in the wylderneſſe? Yet have ye set vp tabernacles to youre Moloch, and ymages of youre Idols, Yee & the starre of youre god Rempha, figures which ye made to worshipe them. Therfore wil I cause you be caried awaye beyonde Damascus, sayeth the LORDE, whose name is the God off hooستes.

The VI. Chapter.

WO be to the prowde welthy in Sion, & to soch as thinke thē so sure vpon the mount of Samaria: which holde them selues for the best of the worlde, and rule the house of Israel, euē as they lust. Go vnto Calne, and se: and from thence get you to Hemath the greate cite, and so go downe to Gath of the Philistines: be they better ares se then these kyngdomes, or the border of their londe wyder then yours? Ye are taken out for the euel daye, euen ye that syt in the stole of wylfulnesse: Ye that lye vpon beddes off yuery, and vse youre wantonnesse vpon youre couches: ye that eate the best lambes off the flocke, and the fattest calues off the droue: ye that synge to the lute, and in playenge off instrumentes compare youre selues vnto Dauid: ye that drynke wyne out of gobletes, & anoynte youre selues with the best oyle, but no man is sory for Joseps hurte. Therfore now shall ye be the first of them, that shal be led awaye captyue, and the lusty cheer of the wylfull shall come to an ende.

The LORDE God hath swoorne euenby himself (sayeth the LORDE God of hooستes): I hate the pryde of Jacob, and I abhorre his palaces: and I wil geue ouer the cite, with all that is therin: so that though there were

ne ten men in one house, they shal dye. So their nerre kynsfolckes and the deed buriers shall take them, and cary awaye their bones, and saye vnto him, that is in the ynnermer house: is there yet eny mo by ý? And he shal answere: they are all gone, holde thy tunge (shall he saye) for they wolde not remembre the name of the LORDE.

Beholde, the LORDE is mynded to smyte the greate houses, so that they shall decaye: and the litle houses, that they shall cleve a sunder. Who can runne with horses, or plowe vpon the harde rockes off stone? For why, ye haue turned true iudgment into bytternesse, and the frute of righteousnesse into wormwod: Yee euen ye, that reioyse in vayne thynges: ye that saye: haue not we optayned homes in oure owne strength? Well, take hede, o ye house off Israel, sayeth the LORDE God of hooستes: I will bringe a people vpō you, which shall trouble you, from the waye that goeth towarde Hemath, vnto the brooke in the medowe.

The VII. Chapter.

THe LORDE God shewed me soch a vision: beholde, there stode one that made greßhoppers, euen when the corne was shutynge forth, after the kynge had clipte his shepe. Now when they vnderoke to eate vp all the grene thinges in ý lōde, I sayde: O LORDE God, be mercifull, I beseke the: who shulde els helpe vp Jacob, that is brought so lowe? So the LORDE was gracious therin, and the LORDE sayde: well, it shall not be. Agayne, ý LORDE shewed me this vision: beholde, the LORDE God called the fyre to punysh withall, and it devoured the greate depe: yee it consumed a parte allredy. Then sayde I: O LORDE God, holde thy ne honde: for who shulde els helpe vp Jacob that is brought so lowe? So the LORDE was merciful therin, and the LORDE God sayde: well, it shal not be.

Moreover, he shewed me this vision: beholde, the LORDE stode vpon a plastered wall, & a masons trowell in his hōde. And the LORDE sayde vnto me: Amos, what seist thou? I answered: a masons trowell. Then sayde the LORDE: beholde, I will laye the trowell amōge my people of Israel, and will nomore ouersee them: but the hye hilchapels off Isaac must be layed waist, and the churches off Israel made desolate: and as for the house of Jeroboam, I will stonde vp agaynst it with the swerde. Vpon this sent Amasias the prest to Bethel vnto Jeroboam the kinge of Israel, sayenge: Amos maketh the house off Israel to rebell agaynst the, the londe cā not awaye with his wordes. For Amos sayeth: Jeroboam shall dye with the swerde, and Israel shall be led awaye captyue out of their owne londe. And Amasias sayde vnto Amos: Get the hence (thou that cāst se so well) and fle in to the londe of Juda: get the there thy lyuynge, and prophecy there: and prophecy nomore at Bethel, for it is the kynges chapel, and the kynges courte. Esa.30.b

Amos answered, and sayde to Amasias: As for me, I am nether prophet, ner prophetes sonne: but a keper of catell. Now as I was breakynge downe molberies, and goynge after the catell, the LORDE toke me, & sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and prophecy vnto my people of Israel. And therfore, heare thou now the worde off the LORDE: Thou saiest: prophecy not agaynst Israel, and speake nothinge agaynst the house off Isaac. Wherfore thus sayeth the LORDE: Thy wife shalbe defyled in ý cite, ý sonnes and doughters shalbe slayne with the swerde, and thy londe shalbe measured out with the lyne: Thou thy self shalt dye in an vnclene londe, and Israel shalbe dryuen out off his owne countre. Zach.13.a

The VIII. Chapter.

THe LORDE God shewed me me this vision: and beholde, there was a maūde with sommer frute. And he sayde: Amos, what seist thou? I answered: a maūde with sommer frute. Then sayde the LORDE vnto me: the ende commeth vpon my people of Israel, I wil nomore ouersee them. In that daye shall the songes off the temple be turned in to sorow, sayeth the LORDE God. Many deed bodyes shall lye in euery place, & be cast forth secretly. Heare this, O ye ý oppresse the poore, and destroye the nedy in ý londe, sayenge: Whan will the new moneth be gone, that we maye sell vytale, and ý Sabbath, that we maye haue scarcenesse of corne: to make the bußshel lesse, and the Sycle greater: We shall set vp false waightes, ý we maye get the poore vnder vs with their money, and the nedy also for shues: yee let vs sell the chaffe for corne. A

The LORDE hath swore agaynst the pryde of Jacob: these workes of theirs will I neuer forget. Shal not the londe tremble, and all they that dwell therin, mourne for this? Shal not their destruccion come vpon them like a water streame, & flowe ouer the, as the floude of Egipte? At the same tyme (sayeth the LORDE God) I shall cause ý Sōne to go downe at noone, and the londe to be Esa.5.b Am.8.b B Iere.15.b

darcke in the cleare daye. Youre hye feastes Tob.2.a will I turne to sorow, and youre songes to mournynge: I wil brynge sackcloth vpō all backes, & baldnes vpō euery heade: yee soch Iere.6.d a mournynge wil I sende them, as is made vpon an only begotten sonne, and they shall haue a miserable ende.

Beholde, the tyme commeth (sayeth the LORDE God) yͭ I shal sende an hūger in to yͤ earth: not the hunger of bred, ner the thyrst
of water: but an hunger to heare the worde off the LORDE: so that they shal go from the one see to the other, yee from yͤ north vnto yͤ east, runnynge aboute to seke the worde of yͤ LORDE, and shal not fynde it. In that tyme, shal the fayre virgins and the yonge men pe rish for thyrst, yee euen they that sweare in the offence off Samaria, and saye: as truly
as thy God lyueth at Dan, and as truly as yͤ God lyueth at Bersaba. These shal fall, and neuer ryse vp agayne.

The IX. Chapter.

A I Sawe the LORDE stondinge vpon
the aulter, and he sayde: smyte the do re cheke, that the postes maye shake withall. For their couetousnesse shal fall vpon all their heades, and their posterite shal be slayne with the swerde. They shall not fle awaye, there shall not one off them escape, ner be delyuered. Though they were buryed in the hell, my honde shal fetch them from Psal.138.a thence: though they clymme vp to heauen, Abd.1.a yet shal I caste them downe: though they hy de them selues vpō the toppe of Carmel, yet shal I seke them out, and brynge them from thence: Though they crepe downe from my sight in to the depe of the see, I shal cōmaū de the serpente, euen there to byte them. Yff they go awaye before their enemies i to cap
tyuyte, then shall I commaunde the swerde,
there to slaye them.

Thus wil I set myne eyes vpon them, for their harme and not for their wealth. For B when the LORDE God of hoostes toucheth a londe, it cōsumeth awaye, and all they that Am.8.a dwell therin, must nedes mourne: And why:
8.Re.8.g their destruccion shal aryse as euery streame and runne ouer them, as the floude in Egip te. He that hath his dwellinge in heauen, & groundeth his tabernacle in the earth:
Amos.5.b he that calleth the waters of the see, and poureth them out vpon the playne grounde: his name is the LORDE. O ye children off Israel, & are ye not vntome, euen as the Morians, sayeth the LORDE: haue not I brought Israel Genes.10.b out off the londe off Egipte, the philisty-nes from Capthor, and the Sirians frō Cyr:

Beholde, the eyes of the LORDE are vpon
the realme that symeth, to rote it clene out of the earth: Neuertheles, I will not vtterly destroye the house of Jacob, saieth the LOR-DE.

For lo, this I promyse: though I sifte yͤ house of Israel amonge all nacions (like as they vse to sifte in a syue) yet shall not yͤ smal lest grauel stone fall vpō the earth: But all the wicked doers of my people, that saye:
Tush, the plage is not so nye, to come so hastely vpon vs: those shal perish with the swer
de. At that tyme wil I buylde agayne the tabernacle off Dauid, that is fallen dow-ne, and hedge vp his gappes: and loke what is brokē, I shal repayre it: Yee I shal buylde it agayne, as it was afore tyme, yͭ they may e possesse the remnaunt of Edom, yee and all soch people as call vpon my name w-ᵗ-saieth the LORDE, which doth these thinges.

Beholde, the tyme commeth (saieth the LORDE) that the plowman shal ouertake yͤ mower, and yͤ treader off grapes, him that soweth sede. The mountaynes shal droppe swete wyne, and the hilles shal be fruteful, and I wil turne the captyuyte of my people
of Israel: they shal repayre the waist cities, & haue thē in possessiō: they shal plante vnyardes, ād drynke the wyne therof: they shal make gardens, and enioye the frutes off the.
And I wil plāte them vpō their owne grou-
de, so that I will neuer rote them out agayne from their londe, which I haue geuen the,
sayeth the LORDE thy God.

The ende of the prophet Amos.

The Prophet Abdy.

What Abdy conteyneth.

Chap. 1 He prophecyeth agaynst the proude ſtōmackes of the Edomites, that vexed the Iſrelites in their aduersite. He sheweth what plages shal come vpon them.

The first Chapter.

This is the vision that was she wed vnto Abdy: Thus hath yͤ
LORDE God spokē vpō Edō:
We haue herde of the LORDE
yͭ there is an embassage sent amonge the Heithen: Vp, let vs aryse, and fight agaynst them. Beholde, I will make yͤ small amōge the Heithen, so that thou shalt be veterly despised. The pryde of thine herte hath lift the vp, thou that dwellest in ỹ strõge holdes off stone, and hast made the an hye seate: Thou sayest in thyne herte: who shal cast me downe to the grounde? But though thou wentest vp as hye as the Aegle, and maydest thy nest aboue amonge the starres: yet wolde I plucke the downe from thece. Yf ỹ theues & robbers came to ỹ^e bynight, thou takinge thy rest: shulde they not steale, till they had ynough? yf the grape gatherers came vpon the, wolde they not leaue the some grapes? But how shall they rype Esau, and seke out his treasures?

Yet the men that were sworne vnto the, shal dryue the out off the borders off thyne owne londe. They that be now at one with the, shal disceaue the, and ouercome ỹ: Euẽ they that eate thy bred, shall betraye the, or euer thou perceaue it. Shal not I at the same tyme destroye the wyse men of Edom, ad those that haue vnderstondinge, from the mount of Esau? Thy giauntes (o Theman) shalbe afrayed, for thorow the slaughter they shalbe all ouer throwne vpon the mount of Esau. Shame shal come vpon the, for ỹ malice that thou shewedest to thy brother Jacob: yee for euermore shalt thou perish, & that becausẽ of the tyme, when thou dydest set thyself agaynst him, euen when the enemies caried awaye his hoost, and when the aleauntes came in at his portes, and caste lottes vpon Jerusalem, and thou thyself wast as one of them.

Thou shalt nomore se the daye of thy brother, thou shalt nomore beholde the tyme of his captiuyte: thou shalt nomore reioyse ouer the children of Juda, in the daye of their destruccion, thou shalt tryumphe nomore in the tyme of their trouble. Thou shalt nomore come in at the gates off my people, in the tyme of their decaye: thou shalt not se their mysery in the daye of their fall.

Thou shalt sende out no man agaynst their hoost, in the daye of their aduersite: nether shalt thou stode waytinge enymore at ỹ corners of the stretes, to murther soch as are fled, or to take them presoners, that remayne in the daye of their trouble. For the daye off the LORDE is harde by vpon all Heithen. Like as thou hast done, so shalt thou be dealt withall, yee thou shalt be rewarded euen vpon thine heade. For like wyse as ye haue dronken vpon myne holy hill, so shal all heithen dryncke continually: yee dryncke shall they, and swalowe vp, so that ye shall be, as though ye had neuer bene.

But vpon the mount Sion, there shall a remnaunt escape: these shalbe holy, and the house of Jacob shal possesse euen those, that had them selues afore in possessiõ. Moreuer, the house of Jacob shalbe a fyre, the house of Joseph a flame, & the house of Esau shalbe the strawe: which they shal kyndle and cõsume, so that nothinge shalbe left of the house of Esau, for the LORDE himself hath sayde it. They of the south shal haue the mount of Esau in possession: and loke what lieth vpon the grounde, that shal the Philistynes haue: the playne feldes shal Ephraim and Samaria possesse: and the mountaynes of Galaad shal Ben Jamin haue. And this hoost shalbe the childrẽ of Israels presoners: Now what so lieth from Canaan vnto Sarphad, and in Sepharad, that shal be vnder the subiecciõ of Jerusalem: and the cities of the south shall enheret it. Thus they that escape vpon the hill off Sion, shall go vp to punysh the mount off Esau, and the kyngdome shalbe the LORDES.

The Prophet Jonas.

What Jonas conteyneth.

Chap. I. God sendeth Jonas vnto Ninive, he fleyth, and is cast in to the see.

Chap. II. A fysh swaloweth vp Jonas, which crieth vnto God, and prayseth hym, and the fysh casteth him out agayne vpon the londe.

Chap. III. God sendeth him agayne to Ninive, to shewe them the punyshment for to come, yf they wil not repent: they amende, and God is mercifull to them.

Chap. IIII. Jonas is angrie, and complayneth of God, which refourmeth him.

The first Chapter.

A 4. Re. 14 Ione 1 a Gen. 10. Gen. 18.

The worde of the LORDE came vnto Jonas the sonne of Amithai, sayenge: Aryse, and get the to Ninive that greate cite: and preach vnto them, how ỹ their wickednesses come vp before me. And Jonas made him ready to fle vnto Tharsis from the presence of the LORDE, and gat him downe to Joppa: where he founde a shippe ready for to go vnto Tharsis. So he payde his fare, and went aborde, that he might go with them vnto Tharsis from the presence of the LORDE. But the LORDE hurled a greate wynde in to the see, and there was a mighty tempest in the see: so that the shippe was in ioperdy of goinge in peces. Then the maryners were afrayde, and cried every man vnto his god: and the goodes that were in the shippe, they cast in to the see, to lightē it off them. But Jonas gat him vnder ỹ hatches, where he layed him downe and slombred.

B So the master of the shippe came to him and sayde vnto him: why slomberest thou? Vp, call vpon thy God: ỹ God (happly) wil thynke vpon vs, that we perysshe not. And they sayde one to another: come, let vs cast lottes: that we maye knowe, for whose cause we are thus troubled. And so they cast lottes, and the lot fell vpon Jonas.

Iosu. 7. c

Thē sayde they vnto him: tell vs, for whose cause are we thus troubled? what is thine occupacion? whence commest thou? what countreman art thou, and of what nacion? He answered them: I am an Ebrue, and I feare the LORDE God of heaven, which made both the see and drie londe. Then were ỹ men exceadingly afrayed, & sayde vnto him: why dideste thou so? (for they knewe, that he was fled from the presence of the LORDE, because he had tolde them) and sayde moreover vnto him: What shall we do vnto the, that the see maye ceasse from troublinge vs? (for the see wroughte and was troublous) he answered them: Take me, and cast me in to the see, so shal it let you be in rest: for I wote, it is for my sake, that this greate tempest is come vpon you.

Neuertheles, the men assayed with rowinge, to bringe the shippe to lōde: but it wolde not be, because the see wrought so, & was so troublous agaynst them. Wherfore they cried vnto the LORDE, and sayde: O LORDE, let vs not perisshe for this mans death, neither laye thou innocent bloude vnto oure charge: for thou (o LORDE) hast done, euen as thy pleasure was.

Deu. 21. b

So they toke Jonas, and cast him in to the see, and the see lefte ragynge. And the men feared the LORDE exceadingly, doynge sacrifices & makynge vowes vnto the LORDE.

The II. Chapter.

A BVt the LORDE prepared a greate fysshe, to swalow vp Jonas. So was Jonas in the bely of the fysh, thre dayes and thre nightes. And Jonas prayed vn-

Matt. 12. d

to the LORDE his God, out of the fysshes bely, and sayed: In my trouble I called vnto ỹ LORDE, and he herde me: out off the bely off hell I cried, and thou herdest my voyce. Thou haddest cast me downe depe in ỹ middest off the see, and the flowde compased me about: yee all thy wawes and rowles of water went ouer me, I thought that I had bene cast awaye out of thy sight: but I wil yet agayne loke towarde thy holy temple.

The waters compased me, euen to the very soule: the depe laye about me, and the weedes were wrapte about myne heade. I wente downe to the botome of the hilles, & was barred in with earth for euer. But thou (o LORDE my God) hast brought vp my lyfe agayne out of corrupcion. When my soule fainted within me, I thought vpon the LORDE: and my prayer came in vnto the, euen into thy holy temple. They that holde of vayne vanyties, wil forsake his mercy. But I wil do the sacrifice with the voyce of thanksgynynge, and wil paye that I haue vowed: for why: saluacion commeth of the LORDE. And ỹ LORDE spake vnto ỹ fysh, and it cast out Jonas agayne vpon the drye londe.

B

The III. Chapter.

THen came the worde of the LORDE vnto Jonas agayne, sayenge: vp, and get the to Niniue that greate cite, & preach vnto them the preachinge, which I bade the. So Jonas arose, and wente to Niniue at the LORDES commaundement. Niniue was a greate cite vnto God, namely, off thre dayes iourney.

And Jonas wente to, and entred in to ỹ cite: euen a dayes iourney, and cried, sayenge: There are yet xl. dayes, and then shal Niniue be ouerthrowen. And the people of Niniue beleued God, and proclamed fastinge, and arayed them selues in sackcloth, as well the greate as the small of them. And the tydinges came vnto ỹ kinge of Niniue, which arose out off his seate, and dyd his apparell off, and put on sackcloth, and sate him downe in asshes.

And it was cried and commaunded in Niniue, by the auctorite of the kinge and his lordes, sayenge: se that nether man or beest, oxe or shepe taiste ought at all: and that they nether fede ner drincke water: but put on sackcloth both man and beest, and crye mightely vnto God: yee se that euery man turne fro his euell waye, and from the wickednesse ỹ he hath in honde.

Who can tell? God maye turne, and repēte, and ceasse from his fearce wrath, that we perish not. And when God sawe their workes, how they turned from their wicked wayes: he repented on the euell, which he sayde he wolde do vnto them, and dyd it not.

The IIII. Chapter.

WHerfore Jonas was sore discontēt, and angrie. And he prayed vnto the LORDE, and sayde: O LORDE, was not this my sayenge (I praye the) when I was yet in my countre? therfore I haisted rather to flee vnto Tharsis, for I knowe well ynough that thou art a mercifull God, full of compassion, lōge sufferinge, and of greate kyndnesse, and repentest when thou shuldest take punyshment. And nowo LORDE, take my life from me (I beseke the) for I had rather dye then lyue. Then sayde the LORDE: art thou so angrie? And Jonas gat him out of the cite, and sat downe on ỹ east syde therof: and there made him a bothe, and sat vnder it in the shadow, till he might se, what shulde chaunce vnto the cite.

And the LORDE God prepared a wylde vyne, which sprange vp ouer Jonas, that he might haue shadowe aboue his heade, to delyuer him out of his payne. And Jonas was exceadinge glad of the wylde vyne. But vpō the nexte morow agaynst the springe of the daye, the LORDE ordened a worme, which smote the wylde vyne, so that it wethered awaye. And when the Sōne was vp God prepared a feruent east wynde: and the Sonne bete ouer the heade of Jonas, that he faynted agayne, and wyßhed vnto his soule, that he might dye, and sayde: It is better for me to dye, thē to lyue. And God sayd vnto Jonas: Art thou so angrie for the wylde vyne? And he sayde: yee very angrie am I euen vnto the deeth. And the LORDE sayde: thou hast compassion vpon a wylde vyne, wherō thou bestowdest no laboure, ner maydest it growe: which sprange vp in one night and perished in another: And shulde not I then haue compassion vpon Ninive that greate cite, wherin there are aboue an C. and xx. thousande personnes, ỹ knowe not their right hōde frō the left, besydes moch catell?

Chap. II. He rehearseth their abhominacions.
Chap. III. He reproueth the rulers and the prophetes, as cause of the peoples misery.
Chap. IIII. V. He prophecyeth of the saluacion off Gods people in Christ, of his kyngdome, and power of his gospel.
Chap. VI. Another reprofe. Outwarde offeringes are excluded, and here is declared what God requyreth off man.
Chap. VII. The summe off the thinges before sayde The litle flocke of the faithfull.

The first Chapter.

THis is the worde of the LORDE, that came vnto Micheas the Morastite, in the dayes of Joathan, Achas and Ezechias kīges of Juda: which was shewed him vpon Samaria and Jerusalem. A 4.Re.15. 2.Pa.27. 4.Re.16. 4.Re.18. and.19.

Heare all ye people, marcke this well o earth, and all that therin is: Yee the LORDE God himself be witnesse amonge you, euen ỹ LORDE from his holy temple. For why? beholde, the LORDE shal go out of his place, ? come downe, and treade vpon the hie thinges of the earth. The moūtaynes shall consume vnder him, ? the valleys shal cleue asunder: like as wax cōsumeth at the fyre, ? as ỹ waters runne downwarde. And all this shal be for the wickednesse of Jacob, and the synnes of the house of Israel. Deu.32.1 Esa.1.a

But what is the wickednesse of Jacob? Is not Samaria? Which are the hye places of Juda? Is not Jerusalē? Therfore I shall make Samaria an heape of stones in the felde, to laye aboute the vnyarde: hir stones shal I cast in to the valley, ? discouer hir foūdaciōs. All hir ymages shalbe brokē downe ? all hir wynnynges shal be brent in the fyre: yee all hir Idols will I destroye: for why, they are gathered out of the hyre of an whore, ? in to an whores hyre shal they be turned agayne. Wherfore I wil mourne ? make lamentacion, bare ? naked will I go: I must mourne like ỹ dragōs, ? take sorow as ỹ Estriches: for their woūde is past remedy: And why? it is come in to Juda, ? hath touched ỹ porte of my people at Jerusalē allredy. Wepe not, lest they ät Geth perceaue it. B 3.Re.12. 3.Re.11. 4.Re.16. 21.a Esa.38.c Deu.33. 2.Re.1.

C Thou at Betaphra, welter thy self in the dust and asshes. Thou that dwellest at Sephir, get the hence with shame. The proude shall boost nomore for very sorowe: & why? hir neighboure shall take from her what she hath. The rebellious cite hopeth, that it shal not be so euell: but for all that, the plage shal come from the LORDE, euen into the porte of Jerusalem. The greate noyse off the charettes shall feare them, that dwell at Lachis, which is an occasion of ỹ synne of ỹ doughter of Sion, for in the came vp the wickednesses of Israel. Nee she sent hir coursers into the londe of Geth.

4.Re.18.c

The houses of lies will disceaue the kynges of Israel. And as for the (o thou that dwellest at Morassa) I shal bringe a possessioner vpon the, ād the plage of Israel shal reach vnto Odolla. Make the balde, and shaue the, because of thy tender children: Make the cleane balde as an Aegle, for they shalbe caried awaye captyue from the.

The II. Chapter.

A WOo vnto them, that ymagyn to do harme, and deuyse vngraciousnesse vpon their beddes, to perfourme it in ỹ clere daye: for their power is agaynst God. When they covet to haue londe, they take it by violence, they robbe men off their houses.

1.Re.21.a

Thus they oppresse a mā for his house, & euery man for his heretage. Therfore thus sayeth the LORDE: Behold, agaynst this housholde haue I deuysed a plage, wherout ye shal not plucke youre neckes: Ye shal nomore go so proudly, for it will be a perlous tyme. In that daye shall this terme be vsed, and a mournynge shal be made ouer you on this maner: We be vtterly desolate, the porcion off my people is translated. Whan wil he parte vnto vs the londe, that he hath taken from vs?

Am.5.b

B Nevertheless there shalbe noman to deuyde the thy porcion, in the congregacion off the LORDE. Tush, holde youre tunge (saye they) It shall not fall vpon this people, we shall not come so to confucion, sayeth the house off Jacob. Is the sprete off the LORDE so clene awaye? or is he so mynded? Treuth it is, my wordes are frendly vnto them that lyue right: but my people doth the contrary, therfore must I take parte agaynst them: for they take awaye both cote and cloke from the symple.

Nu.33.f

Ye haue turned youre selues to fight, the women off my people haue ye shot ouer fro their good houses, and taken awaye my excellent giftes from their children Vp, get you hence, for here shall ye haue no rest.

Because off their Idolatry they are corrupte, and shall myserably perish. Iff I were a fleshly felowe, and a preacher of lyes and tolde them that they myghe syt bebbinge and bollynge, and be droncken: O that were a prophet for this people.

But I will gather the in dede (o Jacob) and dryue the remnaunt off Israel all together. I shall cary them one with another, as a flocke in the folde, and as the catell in their stalles, that they maye be disquieted of other men.

Who so breaketh the gappe, he shall go before. They shall breake vp the porte, and go in and out at it. Their kynge shall go before them, and the LORDE shalbe vpon the heade of them.

The III. Chapter.

HEare, o ye heades of the house of Jacob, and ye leders of the house of Israel: Shulde not ye knowe, what were lawfull and right? But ye hate the good, and loue the euell: ye plucke of mens synnes, and the flesh from their bones: Ye eate the flesh of my people, ād flay of their synne: ye breake their bones, ye choppe them in peces as it were in to a cauldron, ād as flesh into a pot. Now the tyme shall come, that when they call vnto the LORDE, he shall not heare them, but hyde his face from them: because that thorow their owne ymaginacios, they haue dealte so wickedly.

Deu.12.a

And as concernynge the prophetes that disceaue my people, thus the LORDE sayeth agaynst them: When they haue eny thinge to byte vpon, then they preach that all shalbe well: but yf a man put not some thinge in to their mouthes, they preach of warre agaynst him.

Esa.41.b Esa.65.d

Therfore youre vision shalbe turned to night, & youre prophecyenge to darcknesse. The Sonne shall go downe ouer those prophetes, & the daye shalbe darcke vnto them. Then shall the vision seers be ashamed, & ỹ sayth sayers confounded: yee they shalbe sayne (all the packe of thē) to stoppe their mouthes, for they haue not Gods worde. As for me, I am full of strength, & of ỹ sprete of ỹ LORDE, full of iudgment & boldnesse: to shewe the house of Jacob their wickednesse, & the house of Israel their synne.

C O heare this ye rulers of the house of Jacob, and ye iudges of the house off Israel: ye that abhorre the thinge that is lawfull, and waist a syde the thinge that is straight: Ye that buylde vp Sion with bloude, and Jerusalem with doynge wronge. O ye iudges, ye gene sentence for giftes: O ye preastes, ye teach for lucre: O ye prophetes, ye prophecy for money. Yet wil they be take as those that holde vpon God, and saye: Is not the LORDE amonge vs? Tusly, there can no misfortune happen vs. Therfore shal Sion (for youre sakes) be plowed like a felde: Jerusale shall become an heape of stones, and the hill of ỹ temple shal be turned to an hye wodde.

The IIII. Chapter.

A BVt in the latter dayes it wil come to passe, that the hill off the LORDES house shalbe set vp hyer the eny moũtaynes or hilles: Yee the people shall preese vnto it, and the multitude off the Gentiles shal haist them thither, sayẽge: Come, let vs go vp to the hill of the LORDE, & to the house of the God of Jacob: that he maye teach vs his waye, and that we maye walke in his pathes.

For the lawe shall come out off Sion, ād the worde of God from Jerusalem, and shall gene sentence amonge the multitude off the heithen, and refourme the people off farre coũtrees: so that of their swerdes they shal make plowshares, and sythes off their speares.

B One people shall not lift vp a swerde agaynst another, yee they shall nomore lerne to fight: but euery man shal syt vnder his vin yarde and vnder his fyge tre, and no man to fraye him awaye: for the mouth off ỹ LORDE of hooستes hath spoken it. Therfore, where as all people haue walked euery man in ỹ name of his owne god, we will walke in the name of oure God for euer and euer. At the same tyme (sayeth the LORDE) will I gather vp the lame and the outcastes, and soch as I haue chastened: and will gene yssue vnto the lame, and make of ỹ outcastes a greate people: and the LORDE himself shal be their kynge vpon the mount Sion, frõ this tyme forth for euermore. And vnto the (O thou tower of Eder, thou stronge holde off the doughter Sion) vnto the shal it come: euẽ the first lordshipe and kyngdome of the doughter Jerusale. Why thẽ art thou now so heuy? is there no kynge in the? are thy councelers awaye that thou art so payned, as a woman in hir trauayle?

And now (o thou doughter Sion) be sory, let it greue the as a wise laboringe with childe: for now must thou get the out off the cite, and dwell vpon the playne felde: yee vnto Babilõ shalt thou go, there shalt thou be delyuered, and there the LORDE shal lowse the from the honde off thine enemies. C Mich.5.

Now also are there many people gathered together agaynst the, sayenge: what, Sion is cursed, we shall se oure lust vpon her. But they knowe not the thoughtes off the LORDE, they vnderstonde not his councell, that shall gather them together as the shewes in the barne. Therfore get the vp (o thou doughter Sion) and thresshe out the corne: For I wil make thy horne yron, and thy clawes brasse, that thou mayest grynde many people: their goodes shalt thou appropriate vnto the LORDE, and their substaunce vnto the ruler off the whole worlde. Esa.14.c

The V. Chapter.

A AFter that shalt thou be robbed thy selff, o thou robbers doughter: they shal laye sege agaynst vs, and smyte the iudge off Israel with a rodde vpon the cheke. And thou Bethleem Ephrata, art litle amonge the thousandes off Juda, Out off the shal come one vnto me, which shall be ỹ gouernoure i Israel: whose outgoinge hath bene from the begynnynge, and from euerlastinge. In the meane whyle he plageth them for a season, vntill the tyme that she (which shall beare) haue borne: then shall the remnaunt of his brethren be conuerted vnto ỹ children of Israel. He shal stonde fast, and gene fode in the strength of the LORDE, and in the victory of the name of ỹ LORDE his God: and when they be conuerted, he shall be magnified vnto the fartheste partes of the worlde. Therfore fede thy people with thy rodde, the flocke of thine heretage which dwell desolate in the wodde: that they maye be fedde vpon the mount of Charmel, Basan & Galaad as afore tyme. Marueloꝰ thinges will I shewe them, like as when they came out of Egipte. This shal the heithen se, and be ashamed for all their power: so that they shall laye their honde vpon their mouth, and stoppe their eares. They shal licke the dust like a serpent, & as the wormes of the earth, & tremble in their holes. They shalbe afrayed of the LORDE oure God, & they shal feare for.

Where is there soch a God as thou? that pardonest wickednes, and forgeuest the offences of the remnaunt of thine heretage? He kepeth not his wrath for euer. And why? his delyte is to haue compassion: he shal turne agayne, & be mercyfull to vs: he shal put downe oure wickednesses, & cast all oure synnes in to the botome of the see. Thou shalt kepe thy trust with Jacob, and thy mercy for Abraham, like as thou hast swore vnto our fathers longe agoo.

What Naum conteyneth.

Chap. I. He prayseth the power and goodnesse of God: he reproueth the Niniuites, because they despysed the councell and punyshment of God.

Chap. II. He describeth vnto them the terryblenesse of the plage.

Chap. III. He reproueth the abhominacions of the malicious cite, and shewerth them of their punyshment.

This is the heuy burthen of Niniue, which Naum of Elchos dyd wryte, as he sawe it.

The first Chapter.

THe LORDE is a gelous God, and a taker of vengeaunce: yee a taker of vengeaunce is ỹ LORDE, and wroth full. The LORDE taketh vengeaunce of his enemies, and reserueth displeasure for his aduersaries. The LORDE suffreth longe, he is of greate power, & so innocent, that he leaueth no man faultlesse before him. The LORDE goeth forth in tempest and stormy wether, the cloudes are the dust of his fete. Whē he reproueth the see, he dryeth it vp, & turneth all the floudes to drye londe. Basan is desolate, Charmel and the pleasure of Libanus waisteth awaye. The mountaynes tremble for him, the hilles consume. At the sight of him, the earth quaketh: yee the whole worlde, and all that dwell therin. Who maye endure before his wrath? Or who is able to abyde his grymme displeasure? His anger taketh on like fyre, and the harde rockes burst in sunder before him. Deu. 5. b Ro. 2. a Exo. 34. a Iere. 30. b Iere. 10. b Esa. 34. a Abac. 3. a Soph. 3. b

Ful gracious is the LORDE, and a stronge holde in tyme of trouble, he knoweth thē that put their trust in him: when the floude renneth ouer, and destroyeth the place, and when the darcknesse foloweth still vpon his enemies. What do ye ymagin then agaynst the LORDE on this maner? (Tush, when he hath once made an ende, there shal come no more trouble.) For like as the thornes that sticke together, and as the drye strawe, so shal the dronckardes be consumed together, euen when they be full. There come out of ỹ soch as ymagin myschefe, and geue vngracious councell agaynst the LORDE. B

Therfore thus saieth the LORDE: Let thē be as wel prepared, yee and as many as they can, yet shal they be hewen downe, and passe awaye. And as for the, I wil vexe the, but not vtterly destroie the. And now wil I breake his rodde from thy backe, and burst thy bondes in sonder. But the LORDE hath genen a commaundement cōcernynge the, that there shall come nomore sede of thy name. The carued and casten ymages will I rote out of the house of thy god. Thy graue shal I prepare for the, and thou shalt be confounded. Mich. 5. a

The II. Chapter.

BEholde, vpon the mountaynes come the fete of him, that bryngeth good tydinges, & preacheth peace. O Juda, kepe thy holy dayes, perfourme thy promyses: for Belial shal come nomore in the, he is vtterly rooted out. A Esa. 52. b Ro. 10. a

The scaterer shal come vp agaynst the, & laye sege to the castell. Loke thou wel to the stretes, make thy loynes stronge, arme thy self with all thy myght: for the LORDE shal restore agayne the glory of Jacob, like as ỹ glory of Jsrael. The destroyers haue broken them downe, & marred the wyne braunches. The shylde of his giauntes glistereth, his men of warre are clothed in purple. His charettes are as fyre, when he maketh him forwarde, his archers are wel deckte & trimmed. The charettes rolle vpon the stretes, & welter in the hye wayes. They are to loke vpon like cressettes of fyre, and go swyftly, as the lightenynge.

B When he doth but warne his giauntes, they fall in their araye, & haistely they clymme vp the walles: yee the engyns of the warre are prepared all ready. The water portes shal be opened, and the kinges palace shall fall. The quene hir self shal be led awaye captyue, and hir gentilwomen shal mourne as the doues, & grone within their hertes. Nineue is like a pole full of water, but then shal they be fayne to fle. Stonde, stõde, (shal they crie) & there shal not one turne backe. Awaye with the syluer, awaye with the golde: for here is no ende of treasure. There shalbe a multitude of all maner costly ornamentes. Thus must she be spoyled, emptied & clene striped out: that their hertes maye be melted awaye, their knees trẽble, all their loynes be weake, and their faces blacke as a pot.

Where is now the dwellinge of the lyõs, and the pasture of the lyons whelpes: where the lyon and the lyonesse wente with the whelpes, and no man fraied them awaye: But the lyon spoyled ynough for his yonge ones, and deuoured for his lyonesse: he fylled his dennes with his pray, & his dwellinge place with that he had rauyshed. Beholde, I wil vpon the (saieth the LORDE of hoostes) and wil set fyre vpon thy charettes, that they shal smoke withall, and the swerde shal deuoure thy yonge lyons. I wil make an ende of thy spoylinge from out of the earth, & the voyce of thy messaungers shall nomore be herde.

WO to that bloudthursty cite, which is all full of lyes and robbery, & wil not leaue of from rauyshinge. There a man maye heare scourginge, rushinge, the noyse of the wheles, the crienge of the horses, & the rollinge of the charettes. There the horse men get vp with naked swerdes, and glisterynge speares: There lyeth a multitude slayne, and a greate heape of deed bodies: There is no ende of deed coarses, yee men fall vpon their bodies: And that for the greate and manyfolde whordome, of the fayre and beutifull harlot: which is a maistresse of wychcraft, yee and selleth the people thorow hir whordome, and the nacions thorow hir wichcraft.

Beholde, I wil vpon the (saieth the LORDE of hoostes) and wil pull thy clothes ouer thy heade: that I maye shewe thy nakednes amonge the heithen, and thy shame amonge the kingdomes. I wil cast dyrte vpon ỹ, to make the be abhorred, and a gasynge stocke: yee all they that loke vpon the, shal starte backe, & saye: Nineue is destroyed. Ezai. 51. a

Who wil haue pyte vpõ the: where shal I seke one to conforte the: Art thou better then the greate cite of Alexãdria: that laye in the waters, and had the waters rounde aboute it: which was strongly fenced & walled with the see: Ethiopia and Egipte were hir strẽgth, & that exceadinge greate aboue measure. Aphrica and Lybia were hir helpers, yet was she dryuen awaye, & brought in to captiuyte: hir yonge children were smyten downe at the heade of euery strete, the lottes were cast for the most auncient men in her, and all hir mightie men were bounde in chaynes. Euen so shalt thou also be dronken, and hyde thy self, and seke some helpe agaynst thine enemy. All thy stronge cities shal be like fyge trees wt rype fyges: which whẽ a mã shaketh, they fall in to the mouth of the eater. B

Beholde, thy people with in the are but wemen: the portes of thy londe shal be opened vnto thine enemies, and the fyre shal deuoure ỹ barres. Drawe water now agaynst thou be beseged, make vp thy strõge holdes, go in to the claye, tempre the morter, make stronge bricke: yet the fyre shal consume the, the swerde shal destroye the, yee as ỹ locuste doth, so shal it eate the vp. Jt shal fall heuely vpon the as the locustes, yee right heuely shal it fall vpon the, euen as the greshoppers. Thy marchauntes haue bene more then the starres of heauẽ: but now shal they sprede abrode as the locustes, and fle their waye: Thy lordes are as the greshoppers, & thy captaynes as the multitude of greshoppers: which whẽ they be colde, remayne in ỹ hedges: but when the Sonne is vp, they fle awaye, and no mã can tell where they are become. Thy shepherdes are aslepe (o kinge of Assur) thy worthies are layed downe: ỹ people is scatred abrode vpon the mountayns, and no man gathereth them together agayne. Thy wounde can not be hyd, thy plage is so sore. All they that heare this of the, shall clappe their handes ouer the. For what is he, to whō thou hast not allwaye bene doynge hurte?

Chap. I. He complayneth vnto God of the wickednes of the people, and threateneth them with the plage of God.

Chap. II. He reproueth the couetous and vnrighteous men.

Chap. III. A prayer of the prophet.

The first Chapter.

A THis is the heuy burthē, which the prophet Abacuc dyd se. O LORDE, how longe shal I crie, & thou wilt not heare? How longe shall I complayne vnto the, suffrynge wronge, and thou wilt not helpe? Why letteſt thou me se weerynesse and laboure? Tyrāny and violence are before me, power ouergoeth right: for the lawe is tome in peces, and there can no right iudgment go forth. And why? the vngodly is more set by then the righteous: this is the cause, that wronge iudgment procedeth.

B Beholde amonge the heithen, and loke wel: wondre at it, and be abaßshed: for I wil do a thinge in youre tyme, which though it be told you, ye shal not beleue.

C For lo, I wil raise vp the Caldees, that bytter and swifte people: which shal go as wyde as the londe is, to take possession of dwellinge places, that be not their owne. A grymme & boysteous people is it, these shal syt in iudgment & punyshe. Their horses are swifter then the cattes of the mountayne, & bete sorer then the wolues in the euenynge. Their horsmen come by greate heapes from farre, they fle hastely to deus as the Aegle. They come all to spoyle: out of them commeth an east wynde, which bloweth and gathereth their captyues, like as the sonde. They shall mocke the kinges, and laugh the princes to scorne. They shal not set by eny stronge holde, for they shal laye ordinaunce agaynst it, and take it. Then shal they take a fresh corage vnto them, to go forth & to do more euell, & ascrybe that power vnto their God.

But thou o LORDE my God, my holy one, C thou art from the begynnynge, therfore shal we not dye. O LORDE, thou hast ordened them for a punyshmēt, and set them to reproue the mightie. Thine eyes are clene, thou mayest not se euell, thou canst not beholde the thinge that is wicked. Wherfore then dost Iere.12.a thou loke vpon the vngodly, and holdest thy tunge, when the wicked deuoureth the man Psal.36.a that is better thē himself? Thou makest men as the fish in the see, and like as the crepinge beestes, that haue no gyde. They take vp all with their angle, they catch it in their net, & gather it in their yarne: wherof they reioyce and are glad. Therfore offre they vnto their net, and do sacrifice vnto their yarne: because that thorow it their porcion is become so fat, and their meate so pleteous. Wherfore they cast out their net agayne, & neuer ceasse to slaye the people.

The II. Chapter.

I Stode vpon my watch, and set me A vpon my bulworke, to loke & se what he wolde saye vnto me, and what answere I shulde geue him that reproueth me. But the LORDE answered me, and sayde: Wryte the vision planely vpon thy tables, that who so commeth by, maye rede it: for the visiō is yet farre of for a tyme, but at the last it Dan.9.d shal come to passe, & not fayle. And though he tary, yet wait thou for him, for in very dede he wil come, and not be slacke. Beholde, Heb.10.d who so wil not beleue, his soule shal not prospere: but the iust shal lyue by his faith. Like Ro.1.b as the wyne disceaueth the dronckarde, euen so the proude shal fayle & not endure. He openeth his desyre wyde vp as the hell, & is as vnsaciable as death. All heithen gathereth Pro.30.b he to him, & heapeth vnto him all people.

But shall not all these take vp a prouerbe B agaynst him, and mocke him with a byworde, and saye: Wo vnto him that heapeth vp other mens goodes? How longe wil he lade himself with thicke claye? O how sodenly wil they stonde vp, that shal byte the, & awake, that shal teare the in peces? yee thou shalt be their pray. Seinge thou hast spoyled many Abdi.1.c heithen, therfore shall the remnaunt of the people spoyle the: because of mens blonde, & for the wronge done in the londe, in the cite & vnto all them that dwel therin.

Wo vnto him, that couetously gathereth Esa.5.b euell gotten goodes in to his house: that he maye set his nest an hye, to escape from the Abdi.1.a power of myssortune. Thou hast deuysed the shame of thine owne house, for thou hast slayne to moch people, and hast wilfully of-

Wo vnto him, ỹ buyldeth the towne with bloude, and mayntaineth ỹ cite with vnrighteousnes. Shal not the LORDE of hooستes bringe this to passe, that the laboures of the people shal be brent with a greate fyre, and that the thinge wher vpon the people haue weeried them selues, shall be lost? Exo. 9. c Nu. 14. c Esa. 11. b For the earth shalbe full of knowlege of the LORDES honoure, like as the waters that couer the see.

Therfore with shame shalt thou be fylled, in steade of honoure. Dryncke thou also, till thou slombre withall: for the cuppe of the LORDES right hōde shall compasse the aboute, and shamefull spewinge in stead of thy worshipe. For the wrōge that thou hast done in Libanus, shal ouerwhelme the, and the wilde beastes shal make the afrayed: because of mens bloude, and for the wronge done in the londe, in the cite, and vnto all soch as dwel therin. But the LORDE in his holy tēple is he, whom all the worlde shulde feare. Psal. 10. a

The III. Chapter.

A prayer of the prophet Abacuc for the ignoraunt.

A LORDE, when I herde speake of ỹ, I was afrayed. The worke ỹ thou hast taken in honde, shalt thou perfourme in his tyme, O LORDE: and when thy tyme commeth, thou shalt declare it. In thy very wrath thou thinkest vpon mercy. God commeth from Theman, and the holy one from the mount of Pharan. Sela.

His glory coureth the heauens, and the earth is full of his prayse. His shyne is as ỹ sonne, & beames of light go out of his hondes, there is his power hid. Destrucciō goeth before him, and burnynge cressettes go from his fete. He stondeth, & measureth the earth: he loketh, & the people consume awaye, the moūtaynes of ỹ worlde fall downe to ponder, and the hilles are fayne to bowe them selues, for his goinges are euerlastinge and sure.

I sawe, that the paulions of the Morians and the tentes of the londe of Madian were vexed for weeryneſſe. Wast thou not angrie (o LORDE) in the waters? was not thy wrath in the floudes, and thy displeasure in the see? yes, whē thou satteſt vpon thine horse, and when thy charettes had the victory. Thou shewdeſt thy bowe openly, like as thou haddeſt promised with an ooth vnto the tribes. Sela.

Thou dideſt deuyde the waters of the earth. When the mountaynes sawe the, they were afrayed, ỹ water streame wēte awaye, the depe made a noyse at the liftinge vp of thine honde. The Sonne and Mone remayned still in their habitacion. Thine arowes wente out glisteringe, and thy speares as thy shyne of the lightenynge. Thou trodeſt downe the londe in thine anger, and dideſt threshe the Heithen in thy displeasure. Thou camest forth to helpe thy people, to helpe thine anoynted. Thou smoteſt downe the head in the house of the vngodly, & discouereddeſt his foundacions, euē vnto ỹ necke of him. Sela.

Thou curseſt his septers, the captayne of his men of warre: which come as a storme wynde to scatre me abrode, & are glad when they maye eat vp ỹ poore secretly. Thou makeſt a waye for thine horses in the see, and in the mudde of greate waters. Whē I here this, my body is vexed, my lippes tremble at ỹ voyce therof, my bones corruppe, I am afrayed where I stonde. O that I might rest in the daye of trouble, that I might go vp vnto oure people, which are alredy prepared.

For the fyge trees shal not be grene, & the vynes shal beare no frute. The labeure of ỹ olyue shalbe but lest, and the londe shall bringe no come: the shepe shalbe taken out of ỹ folde, and there shalbe no catell in ỹ stalles. But as for me, I wil be glad in the LORDE, and will reioyce in God my Sauioure. The LORDE God is my strength, he shall make my fete as the fete of hertes: & he which geueth ỹ victory, shal bringe me to my hyeplaces, synginge vpon my psalmes.

Chap. iii. Punyshment because of the wickednesse of the Jewes: whom God therfore refused, and chose the Heithen.

The first Chapter.

THis is the worde of the LORDE, which came vnto Sophony the sonne of Chusi, the sonne of Gedolias, the sonne of Amarias the sonne of Hezechias: in the tyme of Josias the sonne of Amon kinge of Juda. I will gather vp all thinges in the londe (saieth the LORDE) I wil gather vp man and beest: I wil gather vp the foules in the ayre, and the fysh in the see, & the greate decaye of the wicked: & wil vtterly destroye the men out of the londe, saieth the LORDE. I wil stretch out myne honde vpon Juda, and vpon all soch as dwel at Jerusalem. Thus wil I rote out the remnaunt of Baal from this place, and the names of the Kemuryns and prestes: yee & soch as vpon their house toppes worshipe & bowe them selues vnto the hoost of heauen: which sweare by the LORDE, and by their Malchom also: which starte a backe from the LORDE, and nether seke after the LORDE, nor regarde him.

Be still at the presence of the LORDE God, for the daye of the LORDE is at honde: yee the LORDE hath prepared a slayne offerynge, and called his gestes therto. And thus shall it happen in the daye of the LORDES slayne offerynge: I will vyset the princes, the kinges children, & all soch as weere straūge clothinge. In the same daye also wil I vysit all those, that treade ouer the threshold so proudly, which fyll their lordes house w robbery and falsede. At the same tyme (saieth the LORDE) there shall be herde a greate crie from the fysshporte, and an howlinge from the other porte, and a greate murthur from the hilles. Howle ye that dwel in the myll, for all the marchaunt people are gone, and all they that were laden with syluer, are roted out.

At the same tyme wil I seke thorow Jerusalem with lanternes, and vyset them that continue in their dregges, and saye in their hertes: Tush, the LORDE wil do nether good ner euell. Their goodes shalbe spoyled, and their houses layed waist. They shall buylde houses, and not dwel in them: they shal plante vynyardes, but not drynke the wyne ther of. For the greate daye of the LORDE is at honde, it is harde by, & cōmeth on a pace. Horrible is the tydinges of the LORDES daye, then shall the giaunte crie out: for that daye is a daye of wrath, a daye of trouble & heynesse, a daye of vtter destruccion & mysery, a darcke & glomynge daye, a cloudy & stormy daye, a daye of the noyse of trompettes and shawmes, agaynst the stronge cities and hie towres. I wil bringe the people into soch veracion, that they shal go aboute like blinde mē, because they haue synned agaynst the LORDE. Their bloude shalbe shed as the dust, & their bodies as the myre. Nether their syluer ner their golde shalbe able to delyuer thē in that wrothfull daye of the LORDE, but the whole londe shalbe cōsumed thorow the fyre of his gelousy: for he shall soone make clene ryddaunce of all them that dwell in the londe.

A WO to the abhominable, fylthie and cruel cite: which wil not heare, ner be reformed. Hir trust is not in the Eze.22.d Mich.3.c Abac.1.b LORDE, nether wil she holde her to hir God. Hir rulers within her are as roaringe lyons: hir iudges are as wolues in the euenynge, which leaue nothinge behynde them till the morow. Hir prophetes are light personnes and vnfaithfull men: hir prestes vnhalowe the Sanctuary, and do wronge vnder the pretence of the lawe. But the iust LORDE that doth no vnright, was amonge them, euery mornynge shewinge them his lawe clearly, and ceassed not. But the vngodly will not lerne to be ashamed. Therfore wil I rote out this people, and destroye their towres: yee and make their stretes so voyde, that no man shall go therin. Their cities shall be broke downe, so that no body shal be left, ner dwel there eny more.

B I sayde vnto them: O feare me, and be content to be reformed. That their dwellinge shulde not be destroyed, and that there shulde happen vnto them none of these thinges, wherwith I shal vyset the. But neuertheles they stonde vp early, to folowe the filthynes of their owne ymaginacions. Therfore ye shal waite vpon me (saieth the LORDE) vntil the tyme that I stonde vp: for I am determined, to gather the people and to bringe the kingdomes together, that I may poure out myne anger, yee all my wrothfull displeasure vpon them. For all the worlde shalbe consumed with the fyre of my gelousy. And then wil I clense the lippes of the people, that they may call vpon the name of the LORDE, and serue him with one shulder. So shal as I haue subdued, and my children also whom I haue scatred abrode, shal brynge me presentes beyonde the waters of Ethiopia.

In that tyme shalt thou nomore be confounded, because of all thy ymaginacions wherthorow thou haddest offended me. For I wil take awaye the proude boosters of thine honoure from the, so that thou shalt nomore trymphe because of my holy hil. But the also wil I leaue a final poore symple people, which shal trust in the name of the LORDE. The remnaunt of Israel shal do no wickednes, ner speake lyes: nether shal there any disceatful tunge be founde in their mouthes. For they shal be fed, and take their rest and no man shal make them afrayed. Geue thankes o doughter Sion, be ioyful o Israel: reioyce and be glad from thy whole herte, o doughter Jerusalem, for the LORDE hath taken awaye thy punysshment, and turned backe thine enemies. The kinge of Israel, euen the LORDE himself is with the: so that thou shalt nomore to feare eny myshap.

In that tyme it shall be sayed to Jerusalem: feare not, and to Sion: let not thine handes be slacke, for the LORDE thy God is with the, it is he that hath power to saue: he hath a special pleasure in the, and a mariuelous loue towarde the: yee he reioyseth ouer the in gladnesse. Such as haue bene in heuynesse wil I gather together, and take out of the congregacion: as for the shame and reproche that hath bene layed vpon the, it shal be no more from the. And lo, in y tyme wil I ouerlooke all those that vexe the: I wil helpe the lame and gather vp the cast awaye: yee I wil geue them honoure and prayse in all londes, where they haue bene put to shame. At y same tyme wil I bringe you in, and at the same tyme wil I gather you. I wil get you a name and a good reporte, amonge all people of the earth, when I turne backe your captiuyte before your eyes, saieth the LORDE.

Chap. I. He exorteth the people to buylde vp the temple and rebuketh their lāge tariēge.

Chap. II. He geueth the rulers a corage. Of the ornamēts and glory of the seconde temple, whereby is vnderstōde the church of the faith full.

The first Chapter.

A

In the seconde yeare of kynge Darius, in the vj. moneth the first daye of the moneth, came the worde of the LORDE (by the prophet Aggeus) vnto Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel ỹ prynce of Juda, and to Jesua the sonne of Josedec the hye preist, sayenge: Thus speaketh the LORDE of hooستes, and saieth: This people doth saye: The tyme is not yet come to buylde vp the LORDES house. Then spake the LORDE by the prophet Aggeus ꝛ sayed: Ye yͤ selues can fynde tyme to dwell in syled houses, and shal this house lye waist? Consydre now youre owne wayes in youre hertes (saieth ỹ LORDE of hooستes) ye sowe moch, but ye brīge litle in: Ye eate, but ye haue not ynough: ye drinke, but ye are not fylled: ye decke youre selues, but ye are not warme: ꝛ he ỹ earneth eny wage, puttyeth it in a broken purse.

Thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes: Cōsydre youre owne wayes in youre hertes, get you vp to the mountayne, fetch wod, ꝛ buylde vp the house: that it maye be acceptable vnto me, and that I maye shewe myne honoure, saieth the LORDE. Ye loked for moch, and lo it is come to litle: ꝛ though ye brynge it home, yet do I blowe it awaye. And why so, saieth the LORDE of hooستes? Euē because that my house lyeth so waist, and ye renne eueryman vnto his owne house. Wherfore the heauen is forbydde to geue you eny dew, and the earth is forbydden to geue you encrese. I haue called for a dronth, both vpō the londe ꝛ vpon the mountaynes, vpon corne, vpon wyne ꝛ vpon oyle, vpon euery thinge that the grounde bryngeth forth, vpon men and vpon catell, yee and vpon all handy labour.

Now when Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel, ꝛ Jesua the sonne of Josedec the hye preist with the remnaunt of the people, herde the voyce of the LORDE their God, ꝛ the wordes of the prophet Aggeus (like as the LORDE their God had sent him) the people dyd feare the LORDE, Then Aggeus the LORDES angel sayed in the LORDES message vnto the people: I am with you, saieth the LORDE. So the LORDE waked vp the spirete of Zorobabel the prynce of Juda, and the spirete of Jesua the sonne of Josedec the hye preist, and the spirete of the remnaunt of all the people: ỹ they came ꝛ laboured in the house of the LORDE of hooستes their God. The ij. Chapter.

A

Upon the xxiiij. daye of the fyrre moneth, in the seconde yeare of kynge Darius, the xxi. daye of the seuenth moneth, came the worde of the LORDE by the prophet Aggeus, sayenge: speake to Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel prynce of Juda, and to Jesua the sonne of Josedec the hye preist, and to the residue of ỹ people, ꝛ saye: Who is left emōge you, that sawe this house in hir first beuty? But what thinke ye now by it? Is it not in youre eyes, eue as though it were nothinge? Neuertheles be of good chere, o Zorobabel (saieth the LORDE) be of good comforte, o Jesua thou sonne of Josedec, hye preist: take good hartes vnto you also, all ye people of the londe, saieth the LORDE of hooستes, and do accordinge to the worde (for I am with you, saieth the LORDE of hooستes) like as I agreed with you, when ye came out of the londe of Egypte: ꝛ my spirete shalbe amonge you, feare ye not. 1. Esd. 3. d Deu. 31. Iosu. 1. Agg. 1.

For thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes: Yet once more will I shake heauē and earth, the see and the drye lōde: Yee I will moue all heithen, ꝛ the comforte of all heithen shall come, ꝛ so wil I fyll this house with honoure, saieth the LORDE of hooستes. The sylver is myne, ꝛ the golde is myne, saieth the LORDE of hooستes. Thus ỹ glory of the last house shalbe greater thē the first, saieth the LORDE of hooستes: ꝛ in this place wil I geue peace, saieth the LORDE of hooستes. Heb. 12. Deut. 8.

The xxiiij. daye of the ix moneth in the seconde yeare of kynge Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto the prophet Aggeus sayenge: Thus saieth ỹ LORDE God of hooستes: Axe the prestes concernynge the lawe, ꝛ saye: Yf one beare holy flesh in his cote lappe, ꝛ with his lappe do touch the bred, potage, wyne, oyle or eny other meate: shall he be holy also? The prestes answered, ꝛ saide: No. Then sayde Aggeus: Now yf one beynge defyled with a deed carcase, touch eny of these: shall it also be vnclene? The prestes gaue answere ꝛ sayed: yee, it shall be vnclene. Thē Aggeus answered, and sayde: Euen so is this people ꝛ this nacion before me, saieth ỹ LOR Iere. 11. Leui. 5. 11. d Nu. 19.

DE: and so are all the workes of their hōdes, yee and all that they offre, is vnclene.

¶ And now (I praye you) cōsidre from this daye forth, and how it hath gone with you afore: or euer there was layed one stone vpō another in the temple of the LORDE: that when ye came to a corne heape of xx. bus-
Agg. 1. a shels, there were scarce ten: and that when ye came to the wyne presse for to poure out L. pottes of wyne, there were scarce xx. For I smote you with heate, blastinge & hale stones in all the labours of youre hondes: yet was there none of you, that wolde turne vnto me, saieth the LORDE. Considre then from this daye forth and afore, namely, from the xxiiij. daye of their moneth, vnto the daye that the foundacion of the LORDES tem-
ch. 8. b ple was layed: Marck it well, Is not the sede yet in the barne? haue not the vynes, the fyge trees, the pomgranates and olyue trees bene yet vnfrutefull: but frō this daye forth, I shal make them to prospere.

¶ Moreouer the xxiiij. daye of the moneth came the worde of the LORDE vnto Aggeus agayne, sayenge: Speake to Zorobabel the prynce of Juda, and saye: I will shake both heauen and earth, and ouerthrowe the seate of the kingdomes, yee & destroye the mightie kingdome of the heithē. I wil ouerthrowe the charettes, and those that syt vpon them, so that both horse and man shal fall downe, euery man thorow his neghbours swerde. And as for the, o Zorobabel (saieth the LORDE of hooستes) thou sonne of Salathiel, my seruaunt: I wil take the (saieth the LORDE) at the same tyme, and make the as a seale: for I haue chosen the, saieth the LORDE of hooستes.

The first Chapter.

IN the eight moneth of the secōde yeare of kinge Darius, came the worde of the LORDE vnto Zachary the sonne of Barachias, the sonne of Addo, the prophet, sayenge: The LORDE hath bene sore displeased at youre forefathers. And saye thou vnto them: thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes. Turne you vnto me (saieth the LOR-Iere. DE of hooستes) and I wil turne me vnto you, saieth the LORDE of hooستes. Be not ye like youre forefathers, vnto whom the prophetes cried afore tyme, sayēge: Thus saieth the LORDE God of hooستes: Turne you from youre euell wayes, & from youre wicked ymaginacions. But they wolde not heare, ner regarde me, saieth the LORDE. What is now become of youre forefathers and the prophetes? are they yet still alyue? But dyd not my wordes & statutes (which I cōmaunded by my seruauntes ye prophetes) touch yo' forefathers? Vpō this, they gaue answere & sayde: like as ye LORDE of hooستes deuysed to do vnto vs, acordinge to o' owne wayes & ymaginacions, euen so hath he dealte with vs.

¶ Vpon the xxiiij. daye of the xj. moneth (which is the moneth Sebat) in the seconde yeare of Darius, came the worde of the LOR-DE vnto Zachary the sonne of Barachias, the sonne of Addo the prophete, sayenge: I sawe by night, and lo, there sat one vpon a reade horse, and stode still amonge the Myr-te trees, that were beneth vpon the grounde: and behynde him were there reade, speckled and whyte horses.

Then sayde I: O my LORDE, what are these? And the angel that talked with me, sayed vnto me: I will shewe the what these be. And the man that stode amōge the Myrtetrees, answered & sayde: These are they, whom the LORDE hath sent to go thorow the worlde. And they answered the angel of the LORDE, that stode amonge the Myrte trees, and sayde: We haue gone thorow the worlde: and beholde, all the worlde dwell at ease, and are careles.

Then the LORDES angel gaue answere and sayde: O LORDE of hoostes, how longe wilt thou be vnmercifull to Jerusalē and to the cities of Juda, with whom thou hast bene displeased now these lxx. yeares? So the LORDE gaue a louynge and a comfortable answere, vnto the angel that talked with me. And the angel that commoned with me, sayde vnto me: Crie thou, and speake, thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: I am exceadynge gelous ouer Jerusalem and Sion, and sore displeased at the careles Heithen: for whereas I was but a litle angrie, they dyd their best that I might destroye them. Therfore thus saieth the LORDE: I wil turne me agayne in mercy toward Jerusalem, so that my house shalbe buylded in it, saieth the LORDE of hoostes: yee and the plommet shal be layed abrode in Jerusalem, saieth the LORDE of hoostes.

Crie also, and speake: thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: My cities shall be in good prosperite agayne, the LORDE shall yet comforte Sion, and chose Jerusalem. Then lift I vp myne eyes and sawe, and beholde, foure homes. And I sayde vnto the angel, that talked with me: what be these? he answered me: These are ye homes, which haue scatred Juda, Israel and Jerusalem abrode. And ye LORDE shewed me iiij. carpenters. Then sayde I: what wil these do? He answered, & sayde: Those are the homes, which haue so strowed Juda abrode, that no man durst lift vp his heade: But these are come to fraye them awaye, and to cast out ye homes of the Gentiles, which lift vp their horne ouer the londe of Juda, to scatre it abrode.

The II. Chapter.

I Lift vp myne eyes agayne, & loked: and beholde, a man with a measure lyne in his honde. Then saide I: whether goest thou? And he sayde vnto me: To measure Jerusalem, that I maye se how longe and how brode it is. And beholde, the angel that talked w̄ me, wente his waye forth. Then wēte there out another angel to mete him, & sayde vnto him: Rwne, speake to this yonge man, & saye: Jerusalem shal be inhabited without eny wal, for ye very multitude of people & catell, ye shal be therin. Yee I myself (saieth the LORDE) wil be vnto her a wall of fyre rounde aboute, & wilbe honoured in her. Deut. 4 Zach. 2

O get you forth, O flie from the londe of ye north (saieth the LORDE) ye, whom I haue scatred in to the foure wyndes vnder heauē, saieth the LORDE. Saue thy self, o Sion: thou that dwellest with ye doughter of Babilon, for thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: With a glorious power hath he sent me out to the Heithē, which spoyled you: for who so toucheth you, shal touche the aple of his owne eye. Beholde, I will lift vp myne honde ouer them: so that they shal be spoyled of those, which afore serued them: & ye shal knowe, that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me. Iere. 51. B

Be glad, & reioyce, o doughter of Sion: for lo, I am come to dwell in the myddest of the, saieth the LORDE. At the same tyme there shal many Heithen cleue to the LORDE, & shal be my people. Thus wil I dwel in the myddest of the, & thou shalt knowe, that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto the. The LORDE shall haue Juda in possession for his parte in the holy grounde, & shal chose Jerusalem yet agayne. Let all flesh be still before the LORDE, for he is rysen out of his holy place. Exo. 25 Matt. 21 Soph.

The III. Chapter.

AND he shewed me Jesua ye hye prest, stondinge before the angel of the LORDE, and Satan stode at his right honde to resiste him. And the LORDE sayde vnto Satan: The LORDE repreue the (thou Satan) yee the LORDE that hath chosen Jerusalem, repreue the. Is not this a brande take out of the fyre? Now Jesua was clothed in vnclene rayment, and stode before the angel: which answered & sayde vnto those, ye stode before him: take awaye ye foule clothes from him. And vnto him he sayde: Beholde, I haue take awaye thy synne from the, & wil decke the with chaunge of raymēt. He sayde moreouer: set a fayre myter vpon his heade. So they set a fayre myter vpon his heade, & put on clothes vpon him, and the angel of ye LORDE stode there. Then the angel of the LORDE testified vnto Jesua, & spake, thus sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: Yf thou wilt walke in my wayes, & kepe my watch, thou shalt rule my house, & kepe my courtes, & I wil geue the place amōge these that stonde here. Heare o Jesua thou hye prest, thou & thy frendes that dwell before the, for they are wōderous A Pfal. 10 Matt. Iude 1. B people. Beholde, I will bringe forth the braunch of my seruaunt: for lo, the stone that I haue layed before Jesua: vpon one stone shalbe vij. eyes. Beholde, I will hewe him out (saieth the LORDE of hoostes) and take awaye the synne of that londe in one daye. Then shall euery man call for his neghboure, vnder the vyne & vnder y fygetre, saieth the LORDE of hoostes. The IIII. Chap.

AND y angel that talked with me, came agayne, & waked me vp (as a man that is raysed out of his slepe) & sayde vnto me: What seist thou? And I sayde: I haue loked, and beholde: a candelsticke all of golde, with a boll vpon it & his vij. lampes therin, & vpon euery lampe vij. stalkes: And ij. olyue trees therby, one vpon the right syde of the boll, & the other vpon the left syde. So I answered, & spake to the angel y talked with me, sayenge: O my lorde what are these? The angel that talked with me, answered & sayde vnto me: knowest thou not what these be? And I sayde: No, my lorde. He answered, & sayde vnto me: This is the worde of the LORDE vnto Zorobabel, sayenge: Nether thorow an hooste of men, ner thorow strēgth, but thorow my sprete, saieth y LORDE of hoostes. What art thou (thou greate mountayne) before Zorobabel? thou must be made eaven. And he shal bringe vp the first stone, so that men shall crie vnto him: good lucke, good lucke.

Moreouer, the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: The hondes of Zorobabel haue layed y foundacion of this house, his hondes also shal fynishe it: that ye maye knowe, how that the LORDE of hoostes hath sent me vnto you. For he that hath bene despysed a litle season, shal reioyce, whē he seyth the tynne weight in Zorobabels honde. The vij. eyes are the LORDES, which go thorow the hole worlde. Then answered I, & sayde vnto him: What are these two olyue trees vpon the right and left syde of the candilstick? I spake moreouer, & sayde vnto him: what be these ij. olyue braunches which (thorow y two golden pipes) emptie them selues into the golde? He answered me, & sayde: knowest thou not, what these be? And I sayde: No, my lorde. Then sayde he: These are the two olyue braunches, that stonde before the ruler of the whole earth.

The V. Chapter.

SO I turned me lifte vnge vp myne eyes, & loked, & beholde, a flyenge boke. And he sayde vnto me: what seist thou? I answered: I se a flyenge boke of xx. cubites longe & x. cubites brode. Then sayde he vnto me: This is the curse, y goeth forth ouer the whole earth: For all theues shalbe iudged after this boke, & all swearers shalbe iudged accordinge to the same. I wil bringe it forth (saieth the LORDE of hoostes) so y it shal come to the house of the theefe, & to the house of him, that falsely sweareth by myne name: & shal remayne in his house, & cōsume it, with the tymbre & stones therof. Then the angel that talked with me, wente forth, & sayde vnto me: lift vp thine eyes & se, what this is y goeth forth. And I sayde: what is it? He answered: this is a measure goinge out. He sayde moreouer: Euen thus are they (y dwell vpon the whole earth) to loke vpon. And beholde, there was lift vp a talent of leade: & lo, a woman sat in the myddest of the measure. And he sayde: This is vngodlynesse. So he cast her in to the myddest of the measure, & threwe y lompe of leade vp in to an hole.

Then lift I vp myne eyes, & loked: & beholde, there came out ij. women, & the wynde was in their wynges (for they had wynges like the wynges of a Storke) & they lift vp the measure betwixte the earth & the heuen. Then spake I to the angel, y talked with me: whyther wil these beare the measure? And he sayde vnto me: in to the londe of Synear, to buylde them an house: which when it is prepared, the measure shall be set there in his place.

The VI. Chapter.

MOreouer I turned me, liftynge vp myne eyes, & loked: & beholde, there came iiij. charettes out frō betwixte two hilles, which hilles were of brasse: In the first charet were reade horse, In the seconde charet were blacke horse, In y third charet were whyte horse, In y fourth charet were horses of dyuerse colours, & stronge. Then spake I, and sayde vnto the angel that talked with me: O lorde, what are these? The angel answered, & sayde vnto me: These are the iiij. wyndes of the heauen, which be come forth to stōde before the ruler of all y earth. That with the blacke horse wente into the londe of the north, & the whyte folowed thē, and the sprekled horses wente forth towarde the south. These horses were very stronge, & wente out: and sought to go and take their iourney ouer the whole earth. And he sayde: get you hence, and go thorow the worlde. So they wēte thorow out the worlde. Then cried he vpon me, and spake vnto me, sayenge: Beholde, these that go towarde y north, shal still my wrath in the north countre.

B And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Take of the presoners that are come from Babilon: namely, Heldai, Tobias and Idaia: & come thou the same daye, and go in to the house of Josias the sonne of Sophony. Then take golde and syluer, and make crownes therof, and set them vpon the heade of Jesua the sonne of Josedec, the hie preist, and speake vnto him: Thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes: Beholde, the man who se name is the braunch: & he that shall springe vp after him, shal buylde vp the temple of the LORDE: yee euen he shall buylde vp the temple of the LORDE. He shal beare the praye & he shall sytte vpon the LORDES trone, and haue the dominacion.

A preist shall he be also vpon his trone, & a peaceable counsell shalbe betwixte them both. And the crownes shal be in the temple of the LORDE, for a remembraunce vnto Helem, Tobias, Idaia and Hen the sonne of Sophony. And soch as be farre of, shal come and buylde the temple of the LORDE: that ye maye knowe, how that the LORDE of hooستes hath sent me vnto you. And this shal come to passe, yf ye wil herken diligently vnto the voyce of the LORDE youre God.

The VII. Chapter.

A IT happened also in the fourth yeare of kynge Darius, that the worde of the LORDE came vnto Zachary in the fourth daye of the ix. moneth, which is calleth Caslen: what tyme as Sarasar and Rogomelech and the men that were with them, sent vnto Bethel for to praye before the LORDE: and that they shulde saye vnto the prestes, which were in the house of the LORDE of hooستes, and to the prophetes: Shulde I wepe in the fyfte moneth, and abstayne, as I haue done now certayne yeares? Then came the worde of the LORDE of hooستes vnto me, sayenge: Speake vnto all the people of the londe, and to the prestes, and saye: when ye fasted and mourned in the v & vij. moneth (now this lxx. yeares) dyd ye fast vnto me? When ye ate also and dronke, dyd ye not eate and drinke for youre owne selues? Are not these the wordes, which the LORDE spake by his prophetes afore tyme, when Jerusalem was yet inhabited and welthy, she and the cities rounde aboute her: when there dwelt me, both towarde the south and in the playne countrees?

B And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Zachary, sayenge: Thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes: Execute true iudgment: shewe mercy and louynge kyndnesse, euery man to his brother: Do the wydowe, the fatherlesse, the straunger, and poore no wronge: and let no man ymagen euell agaynst his brother in his hert. Neuertheles they wolde not take hede, but turned their backes, and stopped their eares, that they shulde not heare. yee they made their hertes as an Adamant stone, lest they shulde heare the lawe & wordes, which the LORDE of hooستes sent in his hely sprete by the prophetes afore tyme. Zach. 8 Exo. 22 Leui. 19 Iob 24 Iere. 7.a 3. Pet. 1.a

Wherfore the LORDE of hooستes was very wroth at them. And thus is it come to passe, that like as he spake and they wolde not heare: euen so they cried, and I wolde not heare (saieth the LORDE of hooستes) but scattered them amonge all Gentiles, whom they knewe not. Thus the londe was made so desolate, y there traualed no man in it nether to ner fro, for that pleasaunt londe was veterly layed waist. Iere. 11.b

The VIII. Chapter.

A SO the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes: I was in a greate gelousy ouer Sion, yee I haue bene very gelous ouer her in a greate displeasure. thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes: I wil turne me agayne vnto Sion, and wil dwel in the mydest of Jerusalem: so that Jerusalem shalbe called a faithfull and true cite, the hill of the LORDE of hooستes, yee an holy hill. Esa. 4.d

Thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes: There shall yet olde men and women dwel agayne in the stretes of Jerusalem: yee and soch as go with staues in their hondes for very age. The stretes of the cite also shalbe full of yonge boyes and damselles, playnge vpon the stretes.

Thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes: yf the residue of this people thynke it to be vnpossible in these dayes, shulde it therfore be vnpossible in my sight, sayeth the LORDE of hooستes? Thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes: Beholde, I wil delyuer my people from the londe of the east and west, and wil bringe them agayne: that they maye dwel at Jerusalem. They shalbe my people, and I will be their God, in trewth and righteousnesse. Mat. 1.

B Thus saieth the LORDE of hooستes: let youre hondes be stronge, ye that now heare these wordes by the mouth of the prophetes, which be in these dayes that the foundacion is layed vpon the LORDE of hooستes house, that the temple maye be buylded. For why: before these dayes nether men ner catel cou- Iere. 3.f Heb. 8.c Apo. 21 Agg. 1.a

be wynne eny thinge, nether might eny man come in and out in rest, for trouble: but I let euery man go agaynst his neghboure.

Neuertheles̄e I wil now intreate the resi due of this people nomore, as afore tyme (saieth the LORDE of hoostes) but they shalbe a sede of peace. The vynyarde shal geue hir frute, the grounde shal geue hir increase, and the heauens shal geue their dew: and I shal cause the remnaunt of this people, to haue all these in possession. And it shall come to passe, that like as ye were a curse amonge the heithen (O ye house of Juda and ye house of Israel) Euen so wil I delyuer you, that ye shalbe a blessynge: feare not, but let youre hōdes be stronge.

For thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: like as I deuysed to punysh you, what tyme as youre fathers prouoked me vnto wrath (sayeth the LORDE of hoostes) and spared not: Euen so am I determed now in these dayes, for to do wel vnto the house of Juda and Jerusalem, therfore feare ye not. Now the thinges that ye shal do, are these: Speake euery man the treuth vnto his neghboure, execute iudgment truly and peaceably within youre portes, none of you ymagyne euell in his hert agaynst his neghboure, and loue no false oothes: for all these are the thinges that I hate, sayeth the LORDE. And the worde of the LORDE of hoostes came vnto me, sayenge: thus sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: The fast of the fourth moneth, the fast of the fifth, the fast of the seuenth, and the fast of the tenth, shal be ioye and gladnesse, & prosperous hye feastes vnto the house of Juda: Only, loue the treuth and peace.

Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: There shall yet come people, and the inhabiters of many cities: and they that dwell in one cite, shal go to another, sayenge: Up, let vs go, and praye before the LORDE, & seke vs seke the LORDE of hoostes, I wil go with you. Yee mocht people and mightie heithen shal come and seke the LORDE of hoostes at Jerusalem, and to praye before the LORDE. Thus saieth the LORDE of hoostes: In that tyme shal ten men (out of all maner of languages of the Gentiles) take one Jewe by the hemme of his garment, and saye: we wil go with you, for we haue herde, that God is amonge you.

The IX. Chapter.

The worde of the LORDE shalbe receaued at Adrach, & Damascus shal be his offerynge: for the eyes of all me & of the trybes of Israel shall loke vp vnto the LORDE. The borders of Hemath shal be harde therby, Tyrus also & Sidon, for they are very wise. Tyrus shal make hir self stronge, heape vp syluer as the sonde, and golde as the claye of the stretes. Beholde, the LORDE shal take her in, and haue her in possession: he shal smyte downe hir power into the see, and she shalbe consumed with fyre. This shal Ascalon se, and be afrayed. Gaza shalbe very sory, so shal Accaron also, because hir hope is come to confucion. For the kinge of Gaza shall perish, and at Ascalon shal no man dwel.

Straūgers shall dwel at Asdod, & as for y pryde of y Philistynes, I shal rote it out. Their blonde will I take awaye from their mouth, and their abhominacions from amonge their teth. Thus they shal be left for our God, yee they shalbe as a prynce in Juda, & Accaron like as Jebusi. And so will I compase my house rounde aboute with myne of warre, goinge to and fro: that no oppressoure come vpon them eny more. For now haue I sene now with myne eyes.

Reioyce thou greatly, o doughter Sion be glad, o doughter Jerusalem. For lo, thy kinge commeth vnto the, euen the righteous and Sauioure: Lowly and symple is he, he rydeth vpon an asse, and vpō the foale of an asse. I wil rote out the charettes frō Ephraim, & the horse from Jerusalem, the bated bowes shal be destroyed. He shall geue the doctryne of peace vnto the heithen, and his dominion shalbe from the one see to the other, & from the floudes to the endes of the worlde.

Thou also thorow the blonde of thy couenaunt: shalt let thy presoners out of the pytte, wherin is no water. Turne you nowe to the stronge holde, ye that be in presōn, & longe sore to be delyuered: And this daye I bidde the worde, that I wil rewarde the dubble agayne. For Juda haue I bent out as a bowe for me, and Ephraim haue I fylled.

Thy sonnes (o Sion) wil I rayse vp agaynst the Grekes, and make the as a giauntes swearde: the LORDE God shalbe sene aboue the, and his dartes shall go forth as the lightenynge. The LORDE God shall blowe the trompet, and shal come forth as a stoume out of the south.

The LORDE of hoostes shall defende the, they shall consume and deuoure, and subdue them with slynge stones. They shal drynke rage, as it were thorow wyne. They shalbe fylled like y basens, & as y hornes of y aulter. The LORDE their God shal delyuer them y daye, as the flock off his people: for the ſtones off his Sanctuary ſhalbe ſet vp in his lande. O how proſperous and goodly a thynge ſhall that be? The corne ſhall make the yonge men cheare full, and the new wyne the maydens.

The X. Chapter.

Aske the LORDE then by tymes to geue you the latter rayne, ſo ſhall the LORDE make cloudes, and geue you rayne ynough for all the increace off the felde. For vayne is the aunſwere of Idols. The ſoythſayers ſe lyes, and tell but vayne dreames: the comforth that they geue, is nothynge worth. Therfore go they aſtraye like a flocke of ſhepe, ad are troubled, becauſe they haue no ſhepherde. My wrothfull diſpleaſure is moued at the ſhepherdes, and I will vyſet the goates. For the LORDE of hooſtes wil graciouſly vyſet his flocke (the houſe of Juda) and holde them as a goodly fayre horſe in the batell. Out of Juda ſhal come the helmet, the nale, the batelbowe, and all the princes together. They ſhalbe as the giauntes, which in the batell treade downe the myre vpon ẏ ſtretes. They ſhal fight, for ẏ LORDE ſhalbe with them, ſo that the horſmen ſhalbe confounded.

I wil cõforte the houſe of Juda, and preſerue the houſe of Joſeph. I wil turne them alſo, for I pytie them: and they ſhal be like as they were, when I had not caſt them of. For I the LORDE am their God, and wil heare them. Ephraim ſhalbe as a giaunt, and their herte ſhalbe cherefull as thorow wyne: Yee their children ſhal ſe it, and be glad, and their herte ſhal reioyce in the LORDE. I wil blowe for them ẏ gather them together, for I wil rẏdeme them. They ſhall increace, as they increaſed afore. I wil ſowe thẽ amonge the people, ẏ they maye thinke vpõ me in farre countrees: they ſhal lyue w̃ their childrẽ, and turne agayne. I wil bringe them agayne alſo from the londe of Egipte, and gather them out of Aſſiria. I wil carye them into ẏ londe of Galaad and to Libanus, and they ſhal wante nothynge. He ſhall go vpon the ſee of trouble, and ſmyte the ſee wawes: ſo ẏ all the depe floudes ſhalbe dryed vp. The proude booſtinge of Aſſur ſhalbe caſt downe, and the ſcepter off Egipte ſhall be taken awaye. I will comforte them in the LORDE, that they maye walke in his name, ſaieth the LORDE.

The XI. Chapter.

Open thy dores (o Libanus) that the fyre maye conſume thy Cedre trees. Howle ye Fyre trees, for the Cedre is fallẽ, yee all ẏ proude are waiſted awaye. Howle (o ye oke trees of Baaſan) for ẏ mighty ſtronge wod is cut downe. Men maye heare the ſhepherdes mourne, for their glory is deſtroyed. Mẽ maye heare the lyons whelpes roare, for the pryde off Jordane is waiſted awaye. A

Thus ſayeth the LORDE my God: Fede the ſhepe of ẏ ſlaughter, which ſhalbe ſlayne of thoſe that poſſeſſe them: yet they take it for no ſynne, but they ẏ ſell thẽ, ſaye: The LORDE be thanked, I am rich: Yee their owne ſhepherdes ſpare them not. Therfore wil I nomore ſpare thoſe that dwell in the londe (ſayeth the LORDE) but lo, I will delyuer the people, euery man in to his neghbours honde, and in to the hõde of his kynge: that they maye ſmyte the londe, and out off their hondes wil not I delyuer them.

I myſelf fedde ẏ ſlaughter ſhepe (a poore flocke verely) ad toke vnto me two ſtaues: the one I called louynge mekeneſſe, the other I called wo, and ſo I kepte the ſhepe. Thre ſhepherdes deſtroyed I in one moneth, for I might not awaye w̃ them, nether had they eny delyte in me. Then ſayde I: I will fede you nomore, the thinge that dyeth, let it dye: and that wil periſhe, let it periſh, ẏ let the rẽnaunt eate, euery one the fleſh of his neghboure. I toke alſo my louynge meke ſtaff, ad brake it, that I might diſannull the conuenaunt, which I made with all people. And ſo it was broken in that daye. B

Apo. 22. c

Then the poore ſymple ſhepe that had a reſpecte vnto me, knewe therby, that it was the worde of the LORDE. And I ſayde vnto them: yff ye thynke it good, bringe hither my pryce: yf no, then leaue. So they wayed downe xxx. ſyluer pens, ẏ value that I was pryſed at. And the LORDE ſayde vnto me: caſt it vnto the potter (a goodly pryce for me to be valued at of them) and I toke the xxx. ſyluers pens, and caſt them to the potter in the houſe of the LORDE. C

Matt. 27.

Then brake I my other ſtaff alſo (namely wo) that I might lowſe the brotherheade betwixte Juda and Iſrael. And the LORDE ſayde vnto me: Take to the alſo the ſtaff off a fooliſh ſhepherde: for lo, I will rayſe vp a ſhepherde in the londe, which ſhall not ſeke after the thinges that be loſt, ner care for ſoch as go aſtraye: he ſhall not heale the wounded, he shal not nouish the thinge that is whole: but he shall eate the flesh off soch as be fat, and teare their clawes in peces.

O Idols shepherde, that leaueth the flocke. The swerde shal come vpon his arme and vpon his right eye. His arme shalbe clene dried vp, and his right eye shalbe sore blynded.

The XII. Chapter.

The heuy burthen which ye LORDE hath deuysed for Israel.

A Esa.40.c 4.e.45.b Gen.2.b THus saieth the LORDE, which spred the heanes abrode, layde the foundacion of the earth, and geueth man ye breath of life: Beholde, I will make Jerusalem a cuppe of surfet, vnto all the people ye are rounde aboute her: Yee Juda himself also shalbe in the sege agaynst Jerusalem. At the same tyme will I make Jerusalem an heuy stone for all people, so that all soch as lift it vp, shalbe toarne and rēte, and all the people of the earth shalbe gathered together agaynst it. zac.14.c

In that daye (sayeth ye LORDE) I wil make all horses abasshed, and those that ryde vpon them, to be out of their wyttes. I will open myne eyes vpon the house of Juda, ād smyte all the horses of the people with blyndnesse. And the princes of Juda shall saye in their hertes: The inhabiters off Jerusalem shall geue me consolacion in the LORDE off hoostes their God. In that tyme will I make the princes of Juda like an hote burnynge ouen with wodd, and like a cresset off fyre amonge the strawe: so that they shal cōsume all the people rounde aboute them, both vpon the right honde and the left. Jerusalē also shalbe inhabited agayne: namely, in the same place where Jerusalem stondeth. B Abd.1.d mor.1.a

The LORDE shall preserue the tentes off Juda like as a fore tyme: so that the glory of the house of Dauid and the glory of the cytesyns of Jerusalem, shalbe but litle regarded, in comparison off the glory off Juda. In that daye shall the LORDE defende the citesyns of Jerusalem: so that the weakest then amonge them shalbe as Dauid: and the house of Dauid shalbe like as Gods house, and as the angell off the LORDE before them. Re.17.f

At the same tyme will I go aboute to destroye all soch people as come agaynst Jerusalem. Moreuer, vpon the house off Dauid and vpon the citesyns off Jerusalem, will I C zc.12.d Ioel.2.f Act.2.b poure out the spirite of grace and prayer: so that they shal loke vpon me, whom they haue pearsed: and they shall bewepe him, as men mourne for their only begotten sonne: Yee and be sory for him, as men are sory for their first childe.

Then shall there be a greate mournynge at Jerusalem, like vnto the lamentacion at Adremmon in the felde off Maggadon. And the londe shall bewayle, euery kynred by them selues: The kynred off the house of Dauid them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: The kynred off the house of Nathan them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: The kynred off the house of Leui them selues alone, and their wiues by themselues: The kynred of the house of Semei them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues: In like maner, all the other generacions, euerychone by them selues alone, and their wyues by them selues.

The XIII. Chapter.

IN that tyme shall the house off Dauid and the citesyns off Jerusalem haue an open well, to wash off synne and vnclennesse. And then (sayeth the LORDE off hoostes) I will destroye the names of Idols out off the londe: so that they shal nomore be put in remembraunce.

As for the false prophetes also and the vnclene sprete, I shall take them out of the londe: So that yf eny off them prophecy eny more, his owne father and mother that begat him, shall saye vnto him: Thou shalt dye, for thou speakest lyes vnder the name off the LORDE: Yee his owne father and mother that begat him, shall wounde him, when he prophecyeth. And then shall those prophetes be confounded, euery one off his vision when he prophecieth: nether shall they were sack clothes eny more, to disceaue me with all. But he shall be fayne to saye: I am no prophet: I am an husbonde man, for so am I taught by Adam fro my youth vp. And yff it be sayde vnto him: How came these woundes then in thine hondes? he shall answere: Thus am I wounded in the house off myne owne frendes.

Arise (o thou swearde) vpon my shepherde, and vpon the prynce of my people, sayeth the LORDE of hoostes: Smyte the shepherde and the shepe shalbe scatred abrode, and so will I turne myne honde to the litle ones. And it shal come to passe (sayeth the LORDE) that in all the londe two partes shalbe rooted one, but the thirde parte shal remayne therin.

And the same thirde parte wil I bringe thorow the fyre, and will clense them, as the syluer is clensed: yee and trye them, like as golde is tryed.

Then shall they call vpon my name, and I wil heare them: I will saye: it is my people. And they shal saye: LORDE, my God.

The XIIII. Chapter.

BEholde, the daye of the LORDE cõmeth, that thou shalt be spoyled and robbed: for I wil gather together all the heithen, to fighte agaynst Jerusalem: so that the cite shalbe wonne, the houses spoyled, and the women defyled. The half of the cite shal go awaye in to captiuyte, and the residue of the people shal not be caried out of the cite.

After that shall the LORDE go forth to fighte agaynst those heithen, as men vse to fighte in the daye of batell. Thē shal his fete stode vpõ the mount oliuete, that lieth vpon the east syde of Jerusalē. And ỹ mount olyuete shal cleve in two, eastwarde, & westwarde so ỹ there shal be a greate valley: & the halff mount shal remoue towarde the north, and the other half towarde the south.

And ye shall fle vnto the valley of my hilles, for the valley off the hylles shal reach vnto Asal. Yee fle shall ye, like as ye fled for the earthquake in the dayes off Osias kynge of Juda. And the LORDE my God shal come, and all sanctes with him. In that daye shal it not be light, but colde and frost. This shalbe that specyall daye, which is knowne vnto the LORDE: nether daye ner night, but aboute the euenynge tyme it shal be light. In that tyme shall there waters of life runne out from Jerusalem: the half parte of them towarde the east see, ād the other half towarde the vttemost see, and shall continue both somer and wynter. And the LORDE himself shalbe kynge ouer all the earth.

At that tyme shal there be one LORDE only, and his name shalbe but one. Men shal go aboute the whole earth, as vpon a felde: from Gibea to Remmon, and from ỹ south to Jerusalem. She shalbe set vp, and inhabited in hir place: From Ben Jamins porte, vnto the place of the first porte, and vnto ỹ corner porte: and from the tower of Hanael, vnto the kynges wyne presses. There shall men dwell, and there shal be nomore cursinge, but Jerusalem shalbe safely inhabited.

This shalbe the plage, wherwith ỹ LORDE wil smyte all people that haue fought agaynst Jerusalem: C Namely, their flesh shall consume awaye, though they stonde vpon their fete: their eyes shall corruppe in their holes, and their tunge shal consume in their mouth.

In that daye shall the LORDE make a greate sedicion amõge them, so that one mā shal take another by the honde, and laye his hondes vpon the hondes of his neghboure. Juda shal fight also agaynst Jerusalem, ād the goodes of all the heithen shalbe gathered together rounde aboute: golde and syluer and a very greate multitude off clothes. And so shal this plage go ouer horses, mules camels, asses and all the beastes that shall be in the hooste, like as yonder plage was. zach.11. a

Euery one that remayneth then of all ỹ people, which came agaynst Jerusalem, shal go vp yearly, to worshipe the kynge (euen ỹ LORDE of hooستes) and to kepe the feast off tabernacles. And loke what generacion vpon earth goeth not vp to Jerusalem, for to worshipe the kynge (euen the LORDE of hooستes) vpon the same shal come no rayne. Nu.29. b Leui.23. f 3.Esd.5. c 2.Mac.1. b D

Yff the kynred of Egipte go not vp & come not, it shall not rayne vpon them nether.

This shalbe the plage wherwith ỹ LORDE wil smyte all heithen, that come not vp to kepe the feast of tabernacles: Yee this shalbe the synneplage of Egipte and the synneplage of all people, that go not vp to kepe the feast of tabernacles.

At that tyme shal the rydinge geer of ỹ horses be holy vnto the LORDE, and the kettels in the LORDES house shal be like the basens before the aulter: yee all the kettels in Jerusalem and Juda, shalbe holy vnto the LORDE of hooستes: and all they that slaye offeringes, shall come and take of them, and dight them therin. And at that tyme there shal be no moCananites in the house of the LORDE.

The ende off the prophet Zachary.

The Prophet Malachy.

What Malachy conteyneth.

Chap. I. The benefites of God, shewed specially vnto Israel before all other: Agayne, the punyshment of the vnthanfulnesse, vnfaithfulnesse and coveitousnesse of the prestes and the people.

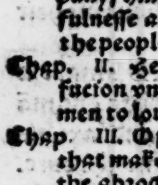
Chap. II. He threatneth punyshment and confucion vnto the prestes, and commaundeth men to loue their wyues.

Chap. III. Of Christes commynge, and of him that maketh redy his waye before him. Off the abrogacion of the olde leuiticall presthead. Of the power of the iudge for to come and of that fearfull daye.

The first Chapter.

The heuy burthen which the LORDE sheweth agaynst Israel by Malachy.

A



Haue loued you, sayeth ỹ LORDE: and yet ye saye: wherin hast thou loued vs? Was not Esau Jacobs brother, sayeth the LORDE: yet haue I loued Jacob, and hated Esau: Yee I haue made his hilles waist, and his heretage a wylderneſſe for dragõs. And though Edom saye: well, we are destroyed, we wil go buylde vp agayne the places that be waisted: yet (sayeth ỹ LORDE of hooſtes) what they buylded, that brake I downe: so that it was called a cursed londe, and a people, whom the LORDE hath euer bene angrie withall.

Gen.25.c
Ro 9 b
Iosu.24.a
Gen.36.a
Abd.1.a

Youre eyes haue sene it, and ye youre selues must confesse, that ỹ LORDE hath brought the londe of Israel to greate honoure. Shuld de not a sonne honoure his father, and a seruaũt his master? Yf I be now a father, where is myne honoure? yf I be the LORDE, where am I feared? sayeth the LORDE of hooſtes.

Exo.20.a

B

Now to you prestes, that despise my name. And yf ye saye: wherin haue we despised thy name? In this, that ye offre vnclene bred vpõ myne aulter. And yf ye wil saye: wherin haue we offred eny vnclene thynge vnto the? In this that ye saye: the aulter of the LORDE is not to be regarded. Yf ye offre ỹ blynde, is not ỹ euell? And yf ye offre the lame and sick, is not that euell? Yee offre it vnto thy prynce, shal he be cõtent with the, or accepte thy persõne, sayeth the LORDE of hooſtes?

Leu.22.c
Eze.43.c

And now make youre prayer before God, that he maye haue mercy vpon vs: for such thinges haue ye done. Shal he regarde youre persõnes (thynke ye) sayeth the LORDE of hooſtes? Yee what is he amonge you, that wil do so moch as to shut ỹ doores, or to buyle ỹ fyre vpõ myne aulter for nought? I haue no pleasure in you, sayeth the LORDE of hooſtes: and as for the meat offeringe, I will not accepte it at youre honde. For from the ryſinge vp of ỹ sonne vnto ỹ goinge downe of the same, my name is greate amonge the Gentiles: Yee in euery place shal there sacrifice be done, and a clene meat offeringe offred vp vnto my name: for my name is greate amonge the Heithẽ, sayeth the LORDE of hooſtes. But ye haue vnhalowed it, in that ye saye, the aulter of ỹ LORDE is not to be regarded, and the thinge that is set therupon, is not worthy to be eaten.

Now saye ye: It is but laboure and trauayle, and thus haue ye thought scorne of it, (sayeth the LORDE off hooſtes) offeringe robbery, yee the lame and the sicke. Ye haue brought me in a meat offerynge, shuld I accepte it of youre honde, sayeth the LORDE? Cursed be the dyſſembler, which hath in his flocke one that is male, and when he maketh a vowe, offereth a spotted one vnto the LORDE. For I am a greate kynge (sayeth the LORDE of hooſtes) and my name is fearfull amonge the Heithen.

The II. Chapter.

AND now (o ye prestes) this commaundement toucheth you: yf ye will not heare it, ner regarde it, to geue the glory vnto my name (sayeth the LORDE of hooſtes) I wil sende a curse vpon you, and curse youre blessinges: yee curse them wil I, yf ye do not take hede. Beholde, I shal ouerruppe youre sede, and cast donge in youre faces: euen the donge of youre solempne feastes, and it shal cleue fast vpon you. And ye shal knowe, that I haue sent this commaundement vnto you: that my couenaunt which I made with Leui, might stonde, sayeth ỹ LORDE of hooſtes.

I made a couenaunt of life and peace with him: this I gaue him, that he might stonde in awe of me: and so he dyd feare me, and hold my name in reuerence. The lawe of truth was in his mouth, and there was no wickednesse founde in his lippes. He walked with me in peace and equyte, and dyd turne many one awaye from their synnes. For the prestes lippes shulde be sure knowlege, that man maye seke the lawe at his mouth, for he is a messaunger of the LORDE of hooستes.

But as for you, ye are gone clene out off the waye, and haue caused the multitude to be offended at the lawe: ye haue broken the couenaunt of Leui, sayeth the LORDE of hooستes.
Therfore wil I also make you to be despised, and to be of no reputacion amonge all y people: because ye haue not kepte my wayes, but bene parciall in the lawe.

Haue we not all one father? Hath not one God made vs? why doth euery one off vs then despyse his owne brother, and so breake the couenaunt of oure fathers? Now hath Juda offended: yee the abhominacion is done in Israel and in Jerusalē, for Juda hath defyled the Sāctuary of the LORDE, which he loued, and hath kepte the doughter of a straunge God. But the LORDE shal destroye the mā that doth this (yee both the master & the scolar) out off the tabernacle of Jacob, with him that offreth vp meatofferynge vnto the LORDE off hooستes. Now haue ye brought it to this poynte agayne, that the aulter of the LORDE is couered with teares wepynge and mournynge: so that I will no more regarde the meatofferynge, nether wil I receaue or accepte eny thinge at youre hōdes.

And yet ye saye: wherfore? Euen because that where as the LORDE made a couenaūt betwixte y and the wife off thy youth, thou hast despysed her: Yet is she thyne owne cōpanyon and maried wife.

So dyd not * the one, & yet had he an excellent spirete. What dyd then the one? He sought the sede promised of God. Therfore loke well to youre spirete, & let no man despyse y wife of his youth. Yf thou hatest her, put her awaye, sayeth the LORDE God of Israel and geue her a clothinge for the scome, sayth the LORDE of hooستes. Loke well then to youre spirete, and despyse her not. Ye greue the LORDE with youre wordes, and yet ye saye: wherwithall haue we greued him? In this, that ye saye: All that do euell are good in the sight of God, and soch please him. Or els where is the God that punysheth?

The III. Chapter.

Beholde, I wil sende my messaunger, which shal prepare the waye before me: and the LORDE whom ye wolde haue, shal sodenly come to his temple, yee euen the messaunger of the couenaunt whom ye longe for.

Beholde, he commeth, sayeth the LORDE of hooستes. But who maye abyde the daye of his commynge? Who shalbe able to endure, when he appeareth? For he is like a goldsmythes fyre, & like wasshers sope. He shall syt him downe to trye and to clense y syluer, he shal pourge the children of Leui, and purifie them like as golde and syluer: that they maye brynge meatofferinges vnto the LORDE in righteousnes. Then shall the offeringe of Juda and Jerusalem be acceptable vnto the LORDE, like as from the begynninge & in the yeares afore tyme. I will come & punysh you, & I my self wil be a swift wytnes agaynst the witches, agaynst the aduouterers, agaynst false swearers: yee & agaynst those, that wrōgeously kepe backe the hyre lynges dewty: which vexe the wyddowes & the fatherlesse, & oppresse the straunger, and feare not me, sayeth the LORDE of hooستes.

For I am the LORDE y chaunge not, & ye (o children of Jacob) wil not leaue of: ye are gone awaye fro myne ordinaūces, & sens y tyme of youre forefathers haue ye not kepte them. B Deu.31.f 4.Re.17.d

Turne you now vntome, and I wil turne me vnto you, sayeth the LORDE of hooستes. Ye saye: Wherin shal we turne? Shulde a man vse falsede and disceate with God, as ye vse falsede and disceate with me? Yet ye saye: wherin vse we disceate with the? In Tythes and heaue offerynges. Therfore are ye cursed with penury, because ye dyssemble with me, all the sorte of you. Zach.1.a Leui.27.d Agg.1.a b

Brynge euery Tythe in to my barne, y there maye be meate in myne house: and proue me withall (sayeth the LORDE of hooستes) yf I wil not open the wyndowes of heauen vnto you, and poure you out a blessinge with plenteousnesse. Nee I shal reprouue the consumer for youre sakes, so that he shall not eate vp the frute of youre grounde, nether shal y vynyarde be baren in the felde, sayeth y LORDE of hooستes: In so moch that all people shal saye, that ye be blessed, for ye shall be a pleasaunt lōde, sayeth the LORDE off hooستes.

Ye speake hard wordes agaynst me, sayeth the LORDE. And yet ye saye: What haue we spoken agaynst the? Ye haue sayed: It is but lost laboure, to serue God: What profit haue we for kepynge his commaundementes, and for walkinge humbly before the LORDE off hooستes? Therfore maye we saye, that the proude are happie, and that they which deale with vngodlynesse, are set vp: for they tempte God, and yet escape. C Iob.21.b Psal.73.b Iob.21.a Ier.12.a

But they that feare God, saye thys one to another: The LORDE cõsydereth and heareth it. Yee it is before him a memoriall boke written for soch as feare the LORDE, and remembre his name. And in the daye that I wil make (saieth ỹ LORDE of hooſtes) they ſhalbe myne owne poſſeſſion: and I will fauour them, like as a man fauoureth his owne ſonne, that doth him ſeruyce. Turne you therfore, and conſidre what differences is betwixte the righteous and vngodly: betwixte him that ſerueth God, ād him that ſerueth him not.

Pſal. 17. a For marck, the daye commeth that ſhall burne as an ouē: and all the proude, yee and all ſoch as do wickednesſe, ſhalbe ſtraw: and the daye that is for to come, ſhall burne thē vp (ſayeth the LORDE of hooſtes) ſo that it ſhal leaue them nether rote ner braunch.

But vnto you that feare my name, ſhall the Sōne of righteouſneſſe aryſe, & health ſhal be vnder his winges. Ye ſhal go forth, and triplie as ỹ fat calues. Ye ſhal treade vnder ỹ vngodly: for they ſhalbe aſhes vnder the ſoles of youre fete, in the daye that I ſhal make, ſayeth the LORDE of hooſtes.

Remembre the lawe of Moſes my ſeruaunt, which I commaūded vnto him in Oreb for all Iſrael, with the ſtatutes and ordinaunces. Beholde, I will ſende you the prophet: before the cōming of the great and fearfull LORDE. And he ſhall turne the hertes of the fathers to the children, and the hertes of the children to their fathers, that I come not, and ſmyte the earth with curſynge.

Vnto these also belongeth Baruc, whom we haue set amōge the prophetes next vnto Jeremy, because he was his scrybe, and in his tyme.

The tranßlatoure vnto the reader.

Theſe bokes (good reader) which be called Apocrypha, are not iudged amonge the doctours to be of like reputacion with the other ſcripture, as thou mayſt perceaue by S. Jerome in epiſtola ad Paulinum. And the cheſe cauſe therof is this: there be many places in them, that ſeme to be repugnaunt vnto the open and manyfeſt trueth in the other bokes of the byble. Neuertheles I haue not gathered them togeither to the intent that I wolde haue them deſpyſed, or litle ſett by, or that I ſhulde thinke them falſe, for I am not able to proue it: Nee I doute not verely, yf they were equally conferred with the other open ſcripture (tyme, place, and circumſtaunce in all thinges conſidered) they ſhulde nether ſeme contrary, ner be vntruly & perverſly aledged. Truth it is: A mās face can not be ſene ſo wel in a water, as in a fayre glaſſe: nether cā it be ſhewed ſo clearly in a water that is ſtered or moued, as in a ſtyll water. Theſe & many other darck places of ſcripture haue bene ſore ſtered and myrte with blynde and cuvetous opynions of men, which haue caſt ſoch a myſt afore the eyes of ỹ ſymple, that as longe as they be not conferred with the other places of ſcripture, they ſhall not ſeme other wyſe to be vnderſtonde, then as cuvetouſnes expoundeth them. But who ſo euer thou be that readeſt ſcripture, let the holy gooſt be thy teacher, and let one text expounde another vnto the: As for ſoch dreames, viſions and darck ſentences as be hyd from thy vnderſtondinge, commytte them vnto God, and make no articles of them: But let the playne text be thy gyde, and the ſpirit of God (which is the author therof) ſhal lede the in all trueth.

As for the prayer of Salomō (which thou findeſt not herin) ỹ prayer of Azarias, and the ſwete ſonge that he and his two felowes ſonge in the fyre: the firſt (namely the prayer of Salomon) readeſt thou in the eight chapter of the thirde boke of the kynges, ſo that it appeareth not to be Apocryphum: The other prayer and ſonge (namely of the thre children) haue I not founde amonge eny of the interpreters, but onely in the olde latyn texte, which reporteth it to be of Theodotios tranſlacion. Neuertheles, both becauſe of thoſe ỹ be weake and ſcrupulous, and for their ſakes alſo that loue ſoch ſwete ſonges of thankeſgeuinge: I haue not left them out: to the intent that the one ſhulde haue no cauſe to complayne, and that the other alſo might haue the more occaſion to geue thankes vnto God in aduerſite, as the thre children dyd in the fyre. Grace be with the. Amen.

The thirde boke of Eſdras.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I. The vertuous kynge Oſias renueth the ſeruyce of God, ſetteth the prieſtes in their ordre, and holdeth the feaſt of Eaſter. Of his death. Of Jechonias his ſonne. Of kynge Joachim and Sedechias.

Chap. II. God moueth kinge Cyrus to delyuer the priſoners, like as he promyſed by the prophet Jeremy. Of kynge Artaxerſes, by whoſe auctorite the Jewes are forbydden to buylde vp Jeruſalem.

Chap. III. Of the feaſt that kinge Darius made, and of the thre yonge men that wrote euery one his ſentence, to proue who might ſaye the beſt. The firſt ſheweth his mynde.

Chap. IIII. The ſeconde goeth aboute to proue his ſentence the wiſeſt, but Zorobabel getteth the victory, for the trueth beareth euer the bell. Darius cōmaundeth to buylde vp Jeruſalem agayne.

Chap. V. What they be & how many, that came agayne to Jeruſalem out of the captyuite of Babilon. The temple and the altare are buylded agayne. The Sethen withſtonde them.

Chap. VI. The officers in Syria labour vnto kynge Darius, to forbyd the buyldinge of the temple at Jeruſalem: but he commaundeth to kepe the ordinaunce that kynge Cyrus made before.

Chap. VII. The aduerſaries myndes are ſatisfied, the buyldinge is fynished, and the paſſeouer holden.

Chap. VIII. How Eſdras and the other (beinge diſcharged by the letters and commaundement of kinge Artaxerſes) go vp to Jeruſalem. The complaynte concernynge thoſe, that were defyled and vncleane.

Chap. IX. Of the councell that was taken, as touchinge the vncleane mariage.

The firſt Chapter.

AND Joſias helde the feaſt of Eaſter in Jeruſalem vnto the LORDE, and ſlewe ẏ paſſeouer the xiiij. daye of the firſt moneth. He ſet ẏ prieſtes alſo in ordre (acordinge to their daylie courſes) beynge arayed in longe garmētes in the tēple of the LORDE. And he ſpake vnto the Leuites the holy miniſters of Iſrael, that they ſhulde hallowe them ſelues vnto the LORDE, to ſet the holy arke of the LORDE, in the houſe that kynge Salomō the ſonne of Dauid had buylded and ſayde: Ye ſhal nomore beare the Arke vpon yō ſhulders. Now ſerue yō LORDE, & take the charge of his people of Iſrael, after youre vyllagies and youre trybes: acordinge as kynge Dauid the kynge of Iſrael hath ordened, & acordinge as Salomon his ſonne hath honorably prepared: Yee loke ẏ ye all do ſeruyce in the temple, acordinge to the ordinge and diſtribucion of the pryncipall mē which are appoynted out of the trybes, to do ſeruyce for the childrē of Iſrael. Kyll ẏ paſſeouer, & prepare offeringes for yō brethren, and do acordinge to the commaundemēt of ẏ LORDE, which he gaue vnto Moſes. And vnto ẏ people ẏ was fōude, Joſias gaue xxx. thouſande of ſhepe, lambes, kyddes and goates, & thre thouſande oxē. Theſe the kynge (of his kyngly liberalite) gaue vnto the people, acordinge as he had promyſed: & to the prieſtes (for the Paſſeouer) he gaue two thouſande ſhepe & an hundreth oxē. Moreouer Jechonias & Semeias and Nathanael brethren, & Haſabias, Jehiel and Joſabad, gaue them to the Paſſeouer, fyue thouſande ſhepe and fyue hundreth bullockes.

And whan theſe thinges were brought to paſſe, the prieſtes and the Leuites ſtode goodly in their ordre, and had the vnleuended bred thorow out ẏ trybes. And after the ordinge of the pryncipall men in the trybes, they offred vnto the LORDE in the ſight of the people, acordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moſes, & ſo they roſted the Eaſter lambe as acordinge was. As for the hāl offeringes & the other, they dight thē in kettels & pottes, & ſett them before the people wt good will, and afterwarde before them ſelues and the prieſtes. For the prieſtes offred the fatt, vntyll the tyme was expyred, but the Leuites prepared for them ſelues & for their brethren the childrē of Aaron. The ſyngers alſo ẏ childrē of Aſaph ſtode in their ordre, acordinge as Dauid had deuyſed. So dyd Aſaph, Zacharyas & Jedithū, which were appoynted by the kynge. Moreouer the porters & dorekepers ſtode by the dores & ẏ diligently, ſo ẏ none wente out of his ſtondinge & ſeruyce: for their brethren (the Leuites) prepared for them. Thus were all thinges perfourmed, that belonged to the offringe of the LORDE. In that daye they helde the Paſſeouer, & offred thankofferinges beſyde ẏ ſacrifice of ẏ LORDE, acordinge to ẏ cōmaundement of kynge Joſias.

Exo. 12.

So the childrē of Iſrael which were thē preſent helde an honorable Paſſeouer, & the feaſt of ſwete bred vij. dayes lōge. Yee ſoch a Paſſeouer was not kepte in Iſrael, from ẏ tyme of the prophet Samuel. And all the kynges of Iſrael helde not ſoch an Eaſter, as this which kynge Joſias helde, & ẏ prieſtes, ẏ leuites, ẏ Jewes & all Iſrael, of all thē ẏ were at Jeruſalē. In ẏ xviij. yeare of ẏ raigne of Joſias was this Paſſeouer kepte. And wt a parfecte hert dyd kynge Joſias ordre all his workes (before ẏ LORDE) & ẏ thinges ẏ were wryttē of hī in tymes paſt, cōcernynge thoſe ẏ ſynned & were vngodly agaynſt ẏ LORDE before all people, & ẏ ſought not the worde of ẏ LORDE vpon Iſrael. After all theſe actes of kynge Joſias, Pharao ẏ kynge of Egipte wēte vp, & came towarde Carcamis by Euphrates, & Joſias wēte to mete hī. Then ſent the kynge of Egipte vnto Joſias, ſayenge: what haue I to do wt ẏ, o kynge of Juda? I am not ſent of ẏ LORDE to fight agaynſt ẏ, for my warre is vpō Euphrates, go thou ẏ waye home agayne in all ẏ haiſt. And Joſias

4. Re. 23. 2. Par. 35.

wolde not turne agayne vpon his charet, but vndertoke to fight agaynst him, & herke ned not vnto ỳ worde of ỳ prophet, which he tolde him out of the mouth of God, but pitched a battaill agaynst him in ỳ felde of Mageddo. And the prynces preasſed to kynge Josias. Then sayde the kynge vnto his
c.22.f seruauntes: Cary me awaye out of the battayll, for I am sore wounded. And immediatly his seruauntes toke him awaye out of the front of the battayll. Then satt he vp vpon the secõde charett, came to Jerusalẽ, dyed, & was buried in his fathers sepulcre. And in all Jewry they mourned for Josias, yee the rulers also wt their wyues made lamẽtacion for him vnto this daye: And this was done euer still in Israel.

D These thinges are written in the boke of of the stories of ỳ kynges of Juda: namely, all the actes & workes of kynge Josias, his kyngly power & maiesty, his vnderstandinge in the lawe of God, & what he dyd, yee thinges which are not wrytẽ in the boke of c.23.f the kynges of Israel & Juda. And ỳ people ar.36.a toke Jechonias the sonne of Josias, & made him kynge in ỳ steade of Josias his father, whan he was xxiij. yeare olde. And he raigned ouer Israel thre monethes. And the kinge of Egipte put him downe, ỳ he shulde not raigne in Jerusalẽ, & rayſed vp a taxinge of the people: namely, an C. talentes of syluer & one talẽt of golde. The kinge of Egipte also made Joachim his brother kynge of Juda & Jerusalẽ. As for thẽ of the kinges counsell wt the kynge himself and Zaraceles his brother, he toke thẽ, & caried thẽ awaye prisoners in to Egipte. Fyue & twentie yeare olde was Joachim, whan he was made kynge in the londe of Juda and Jerusalem, and he dyd euell before the LORDE. After this, Na
Reg. buchodonosor ỳ kynge of Babylõ came vp, c bounde him wt bandes of yron, & caried him vnto Babilõ. Nabuchodonosor also toke all ỳ vessell ỳ were halowed in the tẽple of the LORDE, & all ỳ Jewels, & caried thẽ vnto Babilon, & brought thẽ in to his owne tẽple at Babilon. Of his vnciennes & vngodlynes, it is writtẽ in ỳ boke of the actes of ỳ kynges. And Joachim his sonne raigned in his steade: ye was made kynge beinge xviij. yeare olde, & raigned but thre monethes & x. dayes in Jerusalẽ, & dyd euell before the LORDE. So after a yeare, Nabuchodonosor sent & caused him be brought vnto Babilon wt ỳ holy vessels of ỳ LORDE, & made Sedechias his brother kynge of Juda and Jerusalẽ, whan he was xxj. yeare olde: and he raigned xj. yeare.

And he dyd euell also in ỳ sight of ỳ LORDE, & cared not for ỳ wordes ỳ were spokẽ vnto hi by ỳ prophet Jeremy at ỳ mouth of the LORDE. And where as he had made ỳ oth vnto kynge Nabuchodonosor, he mansworne himself, & fell frõ him hauynge a stiff neck & hert, & trãsgressed all ỳ statutes & ordinaunces of the LORDE God of Israel. The rulers also & heades of ỳ peoplẽ of the LORDE dyd moch euell, & became vngodly, more thẽ the Heithen, beynge defyled in all maner of abhominaciõs: Yee & defyled ỳ holy tẽple of the LORDE at Jerusalẽ. And the God of their fathers sent his messaungers vnto thẽ, to turne them backe & to call thẽ agayne frõ their synnes: for he wolde fayne haue spared thẽ for his holy tabernacles sake. Nevertheles, they had his messaungers in derision: & lete what God spake vnto thẽ by his propheres, they made but a sporte of it. This drew on so longe, tyll the LORDE was wroth wt his people for their vngodlynes, & tyll he caused the kinges of ỳ Caldees to come vp, which slew their yonge men wt the swerde, yee euen in the compasse of their holy tẽple, & spared no body, nether yonge ner olde, nether mayden ner yonge man: but they were all delyuered into the power of the kynges of ỳ Caldees, & all the holy vessels of the LORDE and the kynges treasures toke they, & caried them vnto Babilon. As for the house of the LORDE, they brent it, & brake downe the walles of Jerusalẽ, set fyre vpon hir towres, destroyed all hir noble buyldinges and brought them to naught, and the people that were not slayne with the swerde, they caried vnto Babilon.

Thus became they ỳ presoners & bõdemẽ of ỳ kynge of Babilon, tyll they were delyuered & raygned for them selues, when the wordes of the LORDE were fulfilled, which he promysed them by the mouth of the prophet Jeremy, and tyll the londe had hir restname ly, all the tyme ỳ it laye waye, had it rest & quyetnes lxxvij. yeares.

The II. Chapter.

NOw whã kynge Cyrus raigned ouer the Persians, & whã the LORDE wolde perfourme the worde ỳ he had promysed by the mouth of the prophet Jeremy: the LORDE rayſed vp the sprete of Cyrus, the kynge of the Persiãs, so ỳ he caused this writinge to be proclamed thorow out his whole realme, sayenge: Thus sayeth the kynge of ỳ Persians: The LORDE of Israel that hye LORDE hath made me kynge of the lõde, and commaunded me to buylde him an house at Jerusalem in Jewry. Yf there be eny nowe of youre people, ỹ LORDE be with him, and go vp with him to Jeruſalem. And all they that dwell rounde aboute ỹ place, ſhal helpe thē, whether it be with golde, with ſyluer, with giftes, with horſes and neceſſary catell, and all other thinges that are brought wt a fre wyll to the houſe of the LORDE at Jeruſalē.

B Then the pryncipall mē out of the trybes and vyllages of Juda and Ben Jamin ſtode vp: ſo dyd the preſtes alſo & the lenites (whō the LORDE had moued) to go vp, and to buyl de the houſe of the LORDE at Jeruſalē. And they that were aboute them, helped them wt all maner of golde, and ſyluer, and catell alſo and with many liberall giftes, and this dyd many one, whoſe mynde was ſtered vp ther to. Kynge Cyrus alſo brought forth the veſ ſels and ornamentes, that were halowed vn to the LORDE (which Nabuchodonoſor the kynge of Babilon had caried awaye from Je ruſalem, and conſecrated them to his Idoll and ymage) and delyuered them to Mithri datus his treaſurer, and by him they were de lyuered to Salmanaſar ỹ debyte in Jewry. And this was the nōbre of them: Two thou ſande and iiij.C. ſyluer boules, xxx. ſyluer ba ſens, xxx. baſens of golde, ij.M. and iiij.C. veſ ſels of ſyluer, and a thouſande beſyde. All the veſſels of golde and ſyluer were v.M. viij.C. and lx. Theſe were nombred vnto Salmana ſar, and them that were come agayne with him to Jeruſalē out of the captiuyte of Ba bilon. Now in the tyme of kynge Artaxerſes the kynge of Perſia, theſe men: Balemus and Mithridatus, Sabellius, Rathimus, Bal themus, Semelius ỹ ſcrybe, and other that dwelt in Samaria & in other places vnder ỹ dominion therof, Wrote a letter vnto kynge Artaxerſes, wherin they complayned vnto the kynge of them in Jewry and Jeruſalem. The letter was made after this maner:

C Syr, thy ſeruauntes Rathimus the ſtory wryter, Sabellius the Scrybe, & other iudges of thy courte in Celoſyria and Phenices. Be it knowne and manifeſt to ō lorde the kyn that the Jewes which are come vp frō you vnto vs into the rebellious and wicked cite, begynne to buylde it agayne, and the walles aboute it, and to ſet vp the tēple of the new. Now yf this cite and the walles therof be ſett vp agayne, they ſhal not only refuſe to ge ne trybutes and taxinges, but alſo rebell vt terly agaynſt the kynge. And for ſo moch as they take this in hande now aboute the tem ple, we thought it reaſon, to thinke no ſcorne of it, but to ſhewe it vnto ō lorde the kynge, & to certifie him therof: to the intent ỹ yf it plea ſe the kinge, he maye cauſe it be ſought in the bokes of olde: and thou ſhalt fynde ſoch war nynge wrytten, and ſhalt vnderſtonde, that this cite hath allwaye bene rebellious and diſobedient, that it hath ſubdued kynges and cities, and that the Jewes which dwell ther in, haue euer bene a rebellious, obſtinate, vn faithfull and fightinge people, for the which cauſe this cite is wayſted. Wherfore now we certifie oure lorde the kynge, that yf this cite be buylded and occupied agayne, & the wal les therof ſet vp a new, thou canſt haue no paſſage in to Celoſyria and Phenices.

D Then wrote the kynge to Rathimus the ſtory wryter, to Balthemus, to Sabellius ỹ ſcrybe, and to the other officers and dwellers in Syria and Phenices, after this maner: I haue red the epiſtle which thou ſenteſt vnto me, and haue commaunded to make diligent ſearch, and haue founde, that the cite hath e uer reſiſted kynges, that the ſame people are diſhobedient, and haue cauſed moch warre, & that mightie kynges haue raigned in Jeruſa lem, which alſo haue rayſed vp taxinges of Syria and Phenices. Wherfore, I haue com maūded thoſe people, that they ſhal not buyl de the cite, that they make no more in it, and that they procede no further with the buyl dinge: for ſo moch as it might be the cauſe of warre, and diſpleaſure vnto kynges.

Now whan Rathymus and Sabellius the ſcrybe and the rulers in the londe had red the wrytinge of kynge Artaxerſes, they gatt them together, and came in all the haiſt to Je ruſalem with an hooſt of horſemen, and with moch people offote, and forbad them to buyl de. And ſo they left off from buyldinge of the temple, vnto the ſeconde yeare of kynge Da rius.

The III. Chapter.

A Kynge Darius made a greate feaſt vn to his ſeruaūtes, vnto all his courte, & to all the officers of Media and Per ſia, yee and to all the debytes & rulers that we re vnder him, from India vnto Ethiopia, an hundreth & xxvij. countrees. So whan they had eaten, and dronken beinge ſatiſſied, and were gone home agayne, Darius the kynge wente in to his chambre, layed him downe to ſlepe, and ſo awaked.

Then the thre yonge men, that kepte the kynges perſonne, and watched his body, com moned amonge them ſelues, and ſpake one to another: Let every one of vs ſaye ſome thin ge, and loke whoſe ſentence is wyſer and more excellent then the other, vnto him ſhal kinge Darius geue greate giftes, and clothe him with purple. He ſhal geue him veſſels of golde to drynke in, clothes of golde and coueringes: he ſhall make him a coſtly charett & a brydle of golde, he ſhall geue him a bonet of whyte ſylke and a chayne of golde aboute his neck: yee he ſhal be the ſeconde & prynci-

B pall nexte vnto kynge Darius, & that becauſe of his wyſdome, and ſhalbe called ỹ kynges kynſman.

So euery one wrote his meaninge, ſealed it and layed it vnder the kinges pelowe, and ſayde: whan the kynge aryſeth, we will geue him oure wrytinges: and loke whoſe worde the kynge and his cheſe lordes iudge to be the moſt wyſely ſpoken, the ſame ſhall haue the victory. One wrote: wyne is a ſtronge thinge. The ſecõde wrote: The kynge is ſtrõger. The thirde wrote: wemen haue yet more ſtrength, but aboue all thinges ỹ trueth beareth awaye the victory. Now whan the kynge was ryſen vp, they toke their wrytinges and delyuered them vnto him, and ſo he red them. Then ſent he forth to call all his cheſe lordes, all the debytes & rulers of the countrees of Media and Perſia. And whan they were ſett downe in the councell, the wrytinges were red before them. And he commaunded to call for ỹ yonge mẽ, ỹ they might declare their meanynges thẽ ſelues by mouth. So when they were ſent for, and came in, ỹ kynge ſayde vnto them: ſhew vs and make vs to vnderſtõde, what the thinges are that ye haue wrytten.

C Then beganne the firſt (which had ſpokẽ of the ſtrength of wyne) & ſayde: O ye men, ro. 20 a wyne is marueloꝰ ſtrõge, and ouercõmeth them ỹ drynke it: it diſceaueth the mynde, & bryngeth both the poore man & ỹ kynge to dotage and vanite. Thus doth it alſo wt the bondman and with the fre, with the poore & rych: it taketh awaye their vnderſtondinge, and maketh them careles and mery, ſo that none of them remembreth eny heuynes, dett or dewtie: It cauſeth a man to thinke alſo that ỹ thinge which he doth, is honeſt and good: and remembreth not that he is a kynge, nor ỹ he is in auctorite, & ỹ he ought not to do ſoch thinges. Moreouer, whan men are dryncking, they forgett all frendſhipe, all brotherly faithfulnes & loue: but as ſoone as they are dronckẽ, they drawe out the ſwerde & wil fight: & whã they are layed downe frõ the wyne, & ſo ryſen vp agayne, they can not tell what they dyd. Iudge ye now, Is not wyne the ſtrongeſt? For who wolde els take in hande, to do ſoch thinges? And whan he had ſpoken this, he helde his tonge.

The iiij. Chapter.

When the ſeconde (which had ſayde, ỹ A the kynge was ſtronger) begañe to ſpeake, ſayẽge: O ye men, are not they the ſtrongeſt & moſt excellent, ỹ cõquere the lõde & the ſee, & all ỹ is in ỹ ſee & in the earth? Now is the kynge lorde of all theſe thinges, & hath dominion of thẽ all: & loke what he cõmaũdeth, it is done. Yf he ſende his mẽ forth a warfare, they go and breake downe hilles, walles & towres. They are ſlayne, & ſlaye (other men) them ſelues, & ouer paſſe not ỹ kynges worde. Yf they get the victory, they bringe the kynge all the ſpoyle. Likewyſe, the other ỹ medle not wt warres & fightinge, but tyll the grounde: whan they reape, they bringe trybute vnto ỹ kynge. And yf ỹ kynge alone do but cõmaunde to kyll, they kyll: yf he cõmaunde to forgeue, they forgeue: yf he cõmaunde to ſmyte, they ſmyte: yf he byd dryue awaye, they dryue awaye: yf he cõmaunded buylde, they buylde: yf he cõmaũde to breake downe, they breake downe: yf he cõmaunde to plante, they plãte. The comon people & rulers are obedient vnto him. And ỹ kynge in the meane ſeaſon ſytteth hi downe, eateth and drynketh, & taketh his reſt: thẽ kepe they watch roũde aboute ỹ kinge, & not one of thẽ darre gett him out of ỹ waye, to do his owne buſynes, but muſt be obediẽt vnto ỹ kinge at a worde. Iudge ye now o ye men, how ſhulde not he go farre aboue, vnto whom men are thus obediẽt? And whan he had ſpokẽ this, he helde his tonge. The thirde (whoſe name B was Zorobabel, which had ſpokẽ of wemen & of ỹ trueth) begãne to ſaye after this maner: O ye mẽ, it is not ỹ greate kynge, it is not the multitude of mẽ, nether is it wine ỹ excelleth: Who is it thẽ, ỹ hath ỹ lordſhipe ouer thẽ? Haue not wemen borne the kynge, & all ỹ people ỹ rule theſe thinges? Haue not wemẽ borne thẽ, & brought thẽ vp, ỹ plante the vynes, wherout ỹ wyne cõmeth? They make garmẽtes for all mẽ, they geue honõ vnto all men: & wt out wemen can not men lyue. Yf they gather golde & ſyluer & all precious thinges, & ſe a fayre & wel ſauoured womã, they leaue all together, and turne their eyes onely vnto the woman, & gape vpon her, & haue more deſire vnto her, then vnto the ſyluer & golde, or eny maner of precious thinge. A mã leaueth his father ỹ brought him vp, he leaueth his owne naturall coũtre, and cleueth vnto the woman: yee he ioperdeth his life with the woman, and remembreth nether father, ner mother, ner countre. By this then yemuſt nedes knowe, ỹ wemen haue ỹ domynion ouer yu.

Doth it greue you? A mā taketh his ſwerde & goeth his waye to ſteale, to kyll, to murther, to ſayle vpon the ſee, & ſeyth a lyon, and goeth in the darcknes: and when he hath ſtollen, diſceaued & robbed, he bringeth it vnto his loue. Agayne, a man loueth his wyfe better then father and mother: yee many one there be, that renne out of their wyttes & become bondmen for their wyues ſakes: many one alſo haue periſhed, & haue bene ſlayne, & haue ſynned because of wemen.

C And now beleue me, I knowe a kynge which is greate in his power, & all lōdes ſtō dein awe of him, & no man darre laye hande vpon him: yet dyd I ſe, ẏ Apame (ẏ daughter of the greate kynge Barracus) the kynges cōcubine, ſatt beſyde the kynge vpō the righte hāde, and toke of his crowne from his heade, and ſet it vpon hir owne heade, and ſmote the kynge with hir left hande. Moreouer, the kynge loked vpō her w̄ open mouth: yf ſhe laughed vpon him, he laughed alſo: but yf ſhe toke eny diſpleaſure with him, the kynge was fayne to flater her, & to geue her good wordes, till he had gotten hir fauoure agayne.

O ye men, are not wemen then ſtronger? Greate is the earth, and hie is the heauen that do theſe thinges. Then the kynge & the prynces loked one vpon another. So he beganne to ſpeake of the trueth: O ye men, are not wemē ſtronger? Greate is the earth, hye is the heauen, ſwyft is the courſe of the Sonne, he compaſeth the heauen rounde a-
ch. 1. a boute, and fetcheth his courſe againe to his owne place in one daye. Is he not excellent that doth this? yee greate is the trueth, and ſtronger then all thinges. All the earth calleth vpon the trueth, the heauen prayſeth it, all workes ſhake and tremble at it, and with it is no vnrighteous thinge. Wine is vnrighteous, the kynge is vnrighteous, wemen are vnrighteous: all the children of men are vnrighteous, yee all their workes are vnrighteous, and there is no trueth in them, in their vnrighteouſnes alſo ſhall they be deſtroyed
4. o. a and periſh. As for ẏ trueth, it endureth, and
11. m. a is allwaye ſtronge: it lyueth, and cōquereth for euermore worlde without ende.

D The trueth acceypteth no perſonnes, it putteth no difference betwixte ryche or poore, betwixte ẏ mightie or ſymple, but doth right vnto euery mā, whether they be euel or good, & all men are louyngly dealt withall in the workes of it. In the iudgment of it there is no vnrighteous thinge, but ſtrength, kingdome & power and maieſty for euermore. Bleſſed be the God of trueth.

And with that he helde his tōge, and all ẏ people cried & ſayde: Greate is the trueth, and aboue all. Then ſayde the kynge vnto him: Aſke what thou wilt, more then is appoynted in the wrytinge, and I ſhal geue it the, for thou art founde wyſer then thy companyons: thou ſhalt ſytt nexte me, and be my kynſman. Then ſayde he vnto the kynge: Remembre thy promyſe and vowe, which thou haſt vowed and promyſed (in the daye whan thou cameſt to the kyngdome) to buylde vp Jeruſalem, and to ſende againe all the veſſels and Jewels, that were taken awaye out of Jeruſalem: which Cyrus ſeparated, whan he offred in Babilon, and wolde ſende them agayne. And thy minde was to buylde vp the temple, which the Edomites brēt, whan Jeruſalem was deſtroyed by the Caldees. This onely (O kynge) is the thinge that I requyre, this is ẏ maieſty, which, I deſyre & aſke of the: that thou perfourme the vowe, which thou with thine owne mouth haſt made vnto the kynge of heauen.

Then Darius the kynge ſtode vp, and kyſſed him, and wrote a letter vnto all the debytes and ſhreues, to all ẏ lordes and nobles, ẏ they ſhulde conveye him forth, & all them ẏ wolde go vp with him. He wrote a letter alſo vnto all ẏ ſhreues ẏ were in Celoſyria & Phenices, & vnto Libanus, ẏ they ſhulde harle cedre trees from Libanus vnto Jeruſalem, to buylde ẏ cite withall. Moreouer he wrote vnto all ẏ Jewes that were gone out of his realme in to Jewry becauſe of the fredome, ẏ no officer, no ruler ner ſhreue ſhulde come to their dores: and that all their londe which they had conquered, ſhulde be fre and not tributary: And that the Edomytes ſhulde geue ouer the cities and vyllagies of the Jewes, which they had taken in: yee & that they ſhulde yearly geue xx. talētes to ẏ buylding of the temple, vntill the tyme that it were fynyſhed: and to the daylie halowinge of the brentofferinges (as it is commaunded) ten talentes yearly alſo: And ẏ all they which come from Babilon to buylde the cite, ſhulde haue fre lybertie, they & their children, and all the preſtes. E 1. Eſd. 2. 2. Eſd. 6.

He wrote the greatneſſe alſo, & commaunded that the holy garment ſhulde be geuen thē, wherin they miniſtred: and wrote that commaundementes ſhulde be geuen to the Lenites, vntill the daye, that the houſe were fynyſhed and Jeruſalem buylded vp: and cō maunded that all they that watched the cite, ſhulde haue their porcions and wagies. F

He gaue ouer also all the vessell ẏ Cyrus had separated from Babilon: & all ẏ Cyrus had geuē in cōmaundement, ẏ same charged he also, ẏt shulde be done, & sent vnto Jerusalem. Now whan this yonge mā was gone forth, he turned his face towarde Jerusalē, & praysed ẏ kinge of heauē, & sayde: Of ẏ ccli.1.a cōmeth victory, of the cōmeth wyßdome & clearnesse, & I am thy seruaunt. Blessed art thou, which hast geuen me wyßdome: the wyll I prayse, O LORDE, thou God of owre fathers.

And so he toke the letters, & wente vnto Babilon: And whan he came there, he tolde this vnto all his brethrē ẏ were at Babilō, & they praysed ẏ God of their fathers, ẏ he had geuē them refreßshinge & lyberte to go vp, & to buylde Jerusalē & the temple (which is there called after the name of the LORDE) and they reioysed with instrumentes & gladnesse, seuen dayes longe.

The V. Chapter.

A Fter this, were the pryncialle mē of all ẏ vyllagies chosen in the trybes & kinreddes, that they shulde go vp with their wiues and childrē, with their seruaun att.1.b tes and maydens, with all their catell & substaunce. And Darius the kynge sent with them a thousande horsmen, to conveye them safely vnto Jerusalem: and their brethrē were glad, playenge vpon instrumētes, and synginge.

And these are the names of the mē, which wente vp out of the vyllagies acordinge to the trybes. Of the prestes, the sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Aaron: Jesus the sonne of Josedec, Joachim the sonne of Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel (of the kynred of Esd.4.b David, out of the kynred of Phares, of the trybe of Juda) which spake wonderfull thinges vnder Darius the kynge of Persia, in ẏ seconde yeare of his raigne in the first moneth of Nisan.

These also are they of Jewry, which came vp and turned Agayne vnto Jerusalem, out of the captiuyte that Nabuchodonosor ẏ kynge of Babilon had brought vnto Babilon. And euery man sought his porcion agayne in Jewry, his cite, they that came wt Zorobabel, and with Jesus, Nehemias, Saraias, Raelaias, Elimeus, Emmanius, Mardocheus, Beelserus, Mechpsa, Rochor, Oliorus, Emonias, one of their prynces.

B And the nōbre of thē, acordinge to their kynreddes & rulers, was. The childrē of Phares, two thousande, an hundreth & lxxij. The childrē of Ares, iij. M. an C. and lvij. The childrē of Semo, an C. and xlij. In the sonnes of Jesus and Joabes, a M. ij. C. and two. The sonnes of Benin, ij. M. iij. C. and lxx. The sonnes of Choroba, ij. C. and v. The sonnes of Sepholemon, an C. and xxiij. The sonnes of Nepopas, lv. The sonnes of Hechanatus, an C. and lviij. The sonnes of Zebethanus, an C. and xxij. The sonnes of Crearpatros, (which is called also Enohadies and Modias) iiij. C. and xxij. Of them of Gramos and Gabea, an C. and xxj. Of them of Besselon and Cragge, lxv. Of them of Bastharus, an C. and xxij. Of them of Bechenobes, lv. Of the sonnes of Liptis, there were an C. and lv. Of the sonnes of Labonnus, iij. C. and lvij. Of the sonnes of Sichem, iij. C. and lxx. Of the sonnes of Suadon and Elimon, iij. C. and lxxviij. Of the sonnes of Ericus, ij. M. an C. and xlv. The sonnes of Anaas, thre hundreth and lxx.

The prestes: The sonnes of Jeddus: The sonnes of Euther: The sonnes of El Jasib, iij. C. and lxxij. The sonnes of Emerus, ij. C. and lij. The sonnes of Fasurius, iij. C. & lxij. The sonnes of Carea, ij. C. & xxvij. The Leuites: The sonnes of Jesus in Caduhel and Banus, and Serebias, and Edeas, seuentie and foure.

The whole nombre of these from xij. yares, was iij. M. iiij. C. and lxij. Of the sonnes, daughters and wyues, the whole summe was iiij. M. ij. C. and xlij. The sonnes of the prestes that praysed God in the temple: The sonnes of Asaph, of whom there were an C. and xxviij. But the dore kepers were: The childrē of Esmenus: The childrē of Aser: The childrē of Amon: The childrē of Acuba, Topa: The childrē of Tobi: an C. and xxxix. in all.

The prestes that serued in the temple: The sonnes of Sel, the sonnes of Gaspha, the sonnes of Tobloch, the sonnes of Carie, the sonnes of Sub, the sonnes of Helin, the sonnes of Labana, ẏ sonnes of Armacha, ẏ sonnes of Acub, the sonnes of Vtha, the sonnes of Cetha, the sonnes of Aggab, the sonnes of Obay, the sonnes of Anani, the sonnes of Canna, ỳ sonnes of Geddu, ỳ sonnes of An, ỳ sonnes of Radin, ỳ sonnes of Desanon, the sonnes of Nechoda, the sonnes of Caseba, the sonnes of Goza, the sonnes of Ozul, the sonnes of Sinona, the sonnes of Acra, ỳ sonnes of Hasthem, ỳ sonnes of Asiana, ỳ sonnes of Manei, ỳ sonnes of Nasisin, ỳ sonnes of Accusa, ỳ sonnes of Agista, ỳ sonnes of Azui, ỳ sonnes of Fauon, the sonnes of Phasalon, the sonnes of Meeda, the sonnes of Susa, the sonnes of Cared, ỳ sonnes of Barcus, the sonnes of Sarea, ỳ sonnes of Coesi, ỳ sonnes of Nasit, ỳ sonnes of Agista, the sonnes of Pedon: Salomon his sonnes, the sonnes of Asophot, the sonnes of Phazida, the sonnes of Celi, ỳ sonnes of Dedon, the sonnes of Gaddahel, the sonnes of Zapheus, ỳ sonnes of Aggia, the sonnes of Sacharet, ỳ sonnes of Sabathē, the sonnes of Saroneth, ỳ sonnes of Nalsit, ỳ sonnes of Ania, ỳ sonnes of Sasus, ỳ sonnes of Addus, ỳ sonnes of Suba, ỳ sonnes of Eura, ỳ sonnes of Rahotis, the sonnes of Phasphat, ỳ sonnes of Nalmon. All these mynistred in the Sanctuary, & were seruauntes of Salomonenen iiij.C. and lxxxij.

D These folowinge are they, ỳ wēte vp frō Chelmellat Thelarsa (whose prynces were Cornelā & Careth) & might not shewe forth their cities & kynredes, how they were of Israel: The sonnes of Dalarus, ỳ sonnes of Tubē, ỳ sonnes of Nechodaicus. Of ỳ prestes ỳ executed ỳ office of ỳ presthode, & were not founde: The sonnes of Obia, ỳ sonnes of Achisos, the sonnes of Addin, which maried one of ỳ daughters of Phargeleu, & were named, after him. The writinge of ỳ same kynred was sought in ỳ register of their generacion, but it was not foūde: & therfore were they forbyddē to execute ỳ office of ỳ presthode. Vnto these sayde Nehemias and Astharas, ỳ they shulde haue no porcion in ỳ Sanctuary, tyll there rose vp an hie preest, ỳ were well instructe in the playne clearnes & trueth. Of all Israel (besyde seruauntes & maydens) there were xlij.M.iij.C.& xl. Now were there of seruauntes & maydens, vij.M. iij.C.& xxxvj. Of syngynge mē & synginge women there were ij.C.& lxv. Foure hundreth & xxxv. Camels. Seuen thousande & xxxvj. horses. Two hundreth thousande & xlv. Mooles. Fyue thousande and xxxv. Asses.

Their heades also and the rulers in the tribes, whan they came to Jerusalem, & wolde buylde & sett vp ỳ tēple of God againe in his place, they gaue (after their abylite) vnto the tēple, to ỳ treasure & to ỳ seruyce of the Sāctuary, xij.M. poundes of golde, v. thousande of syluer, & an hundreth prestes garmētes. And so dwelt the prestes & the Leuites, & the people ỳ wente out to Jerusalē & in the countre there aboute, the syngers also & the porters, euery one of Israel in his owne lande.

So whan the seuenth moneth came, and whan the childrē of Israel were euery man at his busines, they came all with one cōsent in to the courte, which was before ỳ east dore. And there stode Jesua the sonne of Josedec and his brethren ỳ prestes, & Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel and his brethren, settinge vp an aulter, to offre brent sacrifices vpon it, as it is written in ỳ lawe of Moses. E 1.Esd.5.a

There came people also of other countres, and the heithen out of all londes set vp the aulter in his place, and offred sacrifices & brentofferynges vnto the LORDE in the mornynge. And so they helde the feast of tabernacles, as it is commaunded in the lawe. Leui.23.f And daylie offred they as acordinge was, and made the sacrifices appoynted, the offeringes also of the Sabbathes and of the new Moones, and all holy feastes. And all they that vowed offerynges vnto the LORDE, beganne at the new Moone of ỳ seuēth moneth to offre vnto God, for the temple of the LORDE was not yet buylded. And they gaue vnto the Masons and Carpēters, money, meate & drynke with cheatfulnesse. Vnto them of Sydon also and Tyre they gaue cartes, ỳ they shulde cary Cedre trees from Libanus to beeastes and beames, and that they shulde make shippes in the hauen of Joppa, acordinge as it was appoynted and ordeyned, by Cyrus kynge of the Persians. 1.Esd.3.b

And in the seconde yeare they came in to the temple of God at Jerusalem. In the seconde moneth beganne Zorobabel the sonne of Salathiel, and Jesua the sonne of Josedec, and their brethren the prestes and Lenites, and all they that were come vnto Jerusalem out of the captiuyte of Babilon, & layed the foundacion of the temple, in the new Moone of the seconde moneth in the seconde yeare ỳ they were come in to Jewry and Jerusalem. And they appoynted the Leuites (that were aboue xx. yeare olde) vnto the seruyce of the LORDE: so Jesua and his sonnes and his brethren all the Leuites stode together, and performed the lawe & ordinaunce in the house of the LORDE. Ezech.43. ande F

And the preſtes ſtode and had their garmentes & trompettes, & the Lewites, the ſonnes of Aſaph had Cymbals, geuynge thankes, and prayſes vnto the LORDE, acordinge as Dauid the kynge of Iſrael had ordeyned. And the ſonge that they dyd ſynge vnto the LORDE, was after this maner: O ſynge vnto the LORDE, for he is gracious, and his goodnes vpon Iſrael endureth for euer. And all the people blew out with trompettes, and ſunge with loude voyce, pray ſynge the LORDE together in the rearinge vp of the houſe of the LORDE. There came alſo from amonge the preſtes and Lewites the rulers and elders, acordinge to the trybes and kynreds (ſoch as had ſene the houſe afore) to the buyldinge of this temple with greate crye and greate mournynge, many alſo with trompettes and greate ioye: In ſo moch, that the trompettes might not wel be herde for the wepynge and mournynge. For the comon people blew goodly vpō the trompettes.

1.Par.17.b

Pſal.135.a

G Then came the enemies of the trybes of 1.Eſd.4.a Juda and Ben Jamin, to knowe what that trōpettynge and noyſe of ſhawmes might be. And they perceaued yt it was they which were come agayne out of captiuyte, & wolde buylde the temple a new vnto the LORDE God of Iſrael. So they wente to Zorobabel and Jeſua and to the rulers of the vyllages, & ſayde vnto them: Shal we buylde wt you alſo? for we like wyſe haue herde youre LORDE, & we walke after the ſame maner, from the dayes of Aßbazareth the kinge of Aſſiria, which brought vs hither. Then Zorobabel and Jeſua and the rulers of the villages of Iſrael ſayde vnto them: It is not mete, that ye ſhulde buylde the temple of oure God wt vs: we oure ſelues alone wil buylde vnto the LORDE, like as Cyrus the kynge of the Perſians hath commaūded vs,

1.Eſd.3.a

But the heithen in the londe layed them ſelues againſt thoſe that were in Jewry, held vp the buyldinge from them, layed wayte vpō them preuely, ſtopped ſoch as brought eny thinge to them, forbad them to buylde, & hyndered thoſe that made thē paſſage, that the buyldinge ſhulde not be fynyſhed: & this contynued ſo longe as kynge Cyrus lyued: & ſo they put of the buyldinge for the ſpace of two yeare, vntill ỹ raigne of kynge Darius.

The VI. Chapter.

Eſ.5.a NOt wtſtondinge, in the ſeconde yeare of the raigne of Darius, Aggeus & Zachary the ſonne of Addo prophecied vpon them in Jewry and Jeruſalem, in the name of the God of Iſrael. Then Zorobabel the ſonne of Salathiel and Jeſua the ſonne of Joſedec ſtode vp, and began to buylde the houſe of the LORDE at Jeruſalem, when the prophetes of the LORDE helped them.

At the ſame tyme came Syſennes the vnder ſhreue in Syria and Phenices, with the landlordes and his companyons, and ſayde vnto them: Who hath bydden & commaunded you to buylde the houſe: to make there ſe and all other thinges agayne: And who are the worke men, that buylde them: Neuertheles the elders of the Jewes had ſoch grace of the LORDE, that they wolde not be lett (though they were prouoked there to) but buylded on ſtill, vntill the tyme that kynge Darius were certified therof, and an anſwere receaued from him. The letter that theſe men ſent vnto kynge Darius, was after this maner:

Syſennes the vnder ſhreue in Syria and Phenices, and the landlordes with their cōpaniōs, which are head rulers in Syria and Phenices, ſende their ſalutacion vnto Darius the kynge. We certifie oure lorde the kynge, that we came in to the londe of Jewry, & wente to Jeruſalem: where we founde them buyldinge the greate houſe of God and the tēple, with greate coſtly freſtone and with goodly tymbre for the walles: yee they make greate haiſt with the worke, & helpe one another, and it goeth forth proſperouſly in their handes, and with greate diligence & worſhipe is it made. Then axed we the elders, who had cōmaunded them to make vp the houſe and the buyldinge: and this we dyd, to yͤ intēt that we might certifie the perſectly, and wryte vnto the, the names of thoſe yͤ were yͤ rulers of the worke. So they gaue vs this anſwere: we are the ſeruauntes of the LORDE, which made heauen and earth: & as for this houſe, it hath bene buylded and ſet vp afore tyme by the greate and mighty kyng of Iſrael. But whan oure fathers prouoked God vnto wrath, & ſynned agaynſt the God of Iſrael, he gaue thē ouer in to the power of Nabuchodonoſor kynge of Babilon the kynge of the Caldees, which brake downe yͤ houſe and brēt it, and caried awaye the people preſoners vnto Babilon.

Neuertheles, in the firſt yeare that kynge Cyrus reigned at Babilon, Cyrus the kynge wrote and commaunded to buylde vp this houſe agayne: and all the ornamentes that Nabuchodonoſor caried awaye from Jeruſalem vnto Babilon, and appropriated vnto his owne temple: thoſe brought Cyrus forth agayne, and delyuered them to Zorobabel & to Salmanaſar the vnderſhreue, commaundynge them, ỹ they ſhulde bringe thoſe ſame ornamentes agayne to Jeruſalē into ỹ tēple, & to begynne from ỹ tyme forth, to buylde the tēple agayne in his owne place. Thē Salmanaſar layed the foundacion of ỹ LORDES houſe at Jeruſalem, and euer ſence haue they buylded, & yet is it not ended. And therfore (O kynge) yf thou thynkeſt it good, let it be ſought in the Lybraries & rolles of kynge Cyrus: yf it be founde thē, that it is done wt the councell and cōſent of kynge Cyrus, and yf oure lorde ỹ kynge be ſo mynded, let him wryte vnto vs therof.

Then cōmaunded kinge Darius, to ſeke in the Lybraries: and ſo at Egbathanis in a litle cite in Media there was founde ſoch a wrytinge: In the firſt yeare of the raigne of Cyrus, the ſame kynge Cyrus cōmaunded, ỹ the houſe of the LORDE at Jeruſalem ſhulde be buylded agayne (& odoures to be made there contynually vnto the LORDE) whoſe heyth ſhalbe ten cubites, ỹ bredth lx. cubites & iiij. ſquare wt thre hewen ſtones, wt a loſte of tymbre of the ſame countre, yee wt a new loſt, & the expenſes therof to be geuen of ỹ houſe of kynge Cyrus. And the ornamētes of golde & ſyluer, ỹ Nabuchodonoſor toke out of the houſe of the LORDE at Jeruſalem, ſhalbe ſet agayne in the temple at Jeruſalē, where they were afore. Syſennes alſo the vnderſhreue in Syria and Phenices, ỹ prynces and their companyons, and the other ỹ behead rulers in Syria and Phenices, ſhall not medle ner haue eny thinge to do with that place.

I Cyrus haue cōmaunded alſo, that they ſhal buylde the houſe of the LORDE whole vp: & haue ordeyned them, to helpe thoſe ỹ be come out of captiuyte, tyll the houſe of the LORDE be fynſhed: & out of the trybute and taxinge that is yearly rayſed vp in Syria and Phenices, diligently to geue them a certayne ſumme, to the offerynge of the LORDE: and the ſame to be delyuered vnto Zorobabel the officer: that he therwithall maye ordeyne oxen, rammes, lambes, & corne, ſalt, wyne and oyle, and that contynually euery yeare: after the expences which the prieſtes that be at Jeruſalem, ſhew to be made daylie: this ſhalbe geuen vnto them without delaye, that they maye offer ſacrifices daylie to the hyeſt God, for the kynge and for his ſeruauntes, and to praye for their lyues. Let the proclamed alſo on euery ſyde, that who ſoeuer breaketh or deſpyſeth this cōmaundement of ỹ kynge, ſhalbe hanged vpon a galow (made of his owne good) & all his goodes ſhalbe ſeaſoned vnto ỹ kynge. The LORDE therfore (whoſe name is there called vpon) rote out and deſtroye all ỹ kynges and people, that vndertake by violence to hynder the ſame, or to deale vncurteouſly wt the houſe of the LORDE at Jeruſalem. I Darius the kinge haue ordeyned, that theſe thinges ſhalbe done with all diligence.

The VII. Chapter.

A Then Syſennes ỹ vnderſhreue in Celoſyria and Phenices, and the other landlordes with their companyons, obeyed the thinges that kynge Darius had ordened, were diligent in the holy workes, & were felow helpers with the olde rulers of the Jewes. And ſo the worke of the Sanctuary wente forth and proſpered, whan Aggeus and Zachary prophecied. And they performed all thinges therow the commaundement of the LORDE God of Iſrael, and after the deuyce of Cyrus, Darius, and Artaxerſes kynges of Perſia.

B And thus was oure houſe fynſhed, vnto the xxiij. daye of the moneth Addar in ỹ vj. yeare of kynge Darius. And the children of Iſrael the prieſtes & the Leuites, & the other that were come out of captiuyte, & ſoch as were ioyned vnto them, dyd accordinge as it is wrytten in the boke of Moſes. And in the dedicacion of the temple they offred an hundreth oxen, an C. rammes, iiij. C. lambes, & xij. goates for the ſynnes of all the people of Iſrael, after ỹ nombre of the trybes of Iſrael. The prieſtes alſo & the Leuites ſtode arayed in the prieſtly garmētes, after ỹ trybes, ouer all ỹ workes of the LORDE God of Iſrael, accordinge to ỹ boke of Moſes, and the porters by all the dores.

C And the children of Iſrael (wt thoſe ỹ were come out of captiuyte) helde the Paſſouer the xiiij. daye of the firſt moneth, whan the prieſtes and the Leuites were ſanctified,

They that came out of captiuyte, were not all ſanctified together: but the Leuites were all ſanctified together. And ſo all they that came out of captiuyte, kylled the eaſter lambe, for their brethre, for the prieſtes & for themſelues. And the chyldre of Iſrael yͤ came out of captiuyte, & eſcaped frō all yͤ abhominacions of the heithē, ſought the LORDE, and kepte the feaſt of vnleuended bred vij. daies longe, eatinge & drynkynge & were mery before the LORDE: yͤ the LORDE had turned the deuyce of the kynge of Aſſiria, & comforted their handes to the workes of yͤ LORDE God of Iſrael.

The VIII. Chapter.

A 1.Eſd.7.a AND after him, whan Artaxerſes the kynge of yͤ Perſias raigned, there wēte vnto him Eſdras the ſonne of Saraias, the ſonne of Azarias, the ſonne of Helchia, yͤ ſonne of Sallū, the ſonne of Sadoc, yͤ ſonne of Achitob, the ſonne of Amarias, yͤ ſonne of Azarias, the ſonne of Boccus, yͤ ſonne of Abiſu, yͤ ſonne of Phineas, the ſonne of Eleazar, yͤ ſonne of Aaron yͤ firſt preſt. This Eſdras wēte vp from Babilon (for he had good vnderſtondinge in yͤ lawe of Moſes, yͤ was geuē of the LORDE God of Iſrael, to be taught & done in dede.) And yͤ kinge fauoured him, & dyd him greate worſhipe and honoure, after all his deſyres. There wente vp with him alſo certayne of yͤ children of Iſrael, of the prieſtes, of yͤ Leuites, of the ſyngers, porters, and mynyſters of yͤ temple at Jeruſalem.

In the vij. yeare of the raigne of kynge Artaxerſes, in the v. moneth, yͤ is in the vij. yeare of the raigne, they wente from Babilon in the newmoone of the v. moneth, & came the hye waye to Jeruſalē after his commaundement, like as the LORDE had proſpered their iourney. For in theſe Eſdras gat greate inſtruccion, yͤ he ſhulde leaue none of yͤ thinges behynde, which were in yͤ lawe & cōmaundementes of God. And he taught whole Iſrael all righteouſnes & iudgment.

Then came the Secretaries of kynge Artaxerſes, & delyuered yͤ wrytinges (yͤ were come frō Artaxerſes the kynge) to Eſdras the preſt & reder of the lawe of the LORDE: And this is yͤ copye of yͤ letter: Kynge Artaxerſes ſendeth his gretinge vnto Eſdras the preſt & reder of the lawe of yͤ LORDE: Of frendſhipe & good will I haue ordeyned and charged, yf there be eny of the Jewes, of yͤ prieſtes & Leuites in my realme, which deſyreth & is contēt to go wͤ the vnto Jeruſalē, yͤ he maye do it. Therfore yf eny be mynded to beare the cōpany, let thē come together & go wͤ the (like as I am contēt & my vij. frendes my cōſeilers:) to ſe what they do at Jeruſalē & in Jewry, & kepe yͤ thinges accordinge as thou haſt in yͤ lawe of the LORDE: to bringe the giftes vnto God the LORDE of Iſrael, yͤ I & my frendes haue promyſed to Jeruſalē, & all the ſylver & golde yͤ is in the countre of Babilon, vnto yͤ LORDE to Jeruſalē, wͤ the thinge yͤ is geuē for the people in the LORDES temple at Jeruſalem: ſo that the ſame ſylver & golde maye be gadered, and oxen, rammes, ſhepe & goates and other that belōge to theſe thinges: and that they maye offer ſacrifices vnto the LORDE vpon the aulter of their LORDE, which is at Jeruſalem.

And what ſo euer thou & thy brethre wyll do wͤ the ſylver & golde, yͤ do after yͤ mynde & after the cōmaundement of the LORDE thy God: & like wyſe wͤ all the holy veſſels, ſo geuē the for the ſeruyce of the houſe of the LORDE thy God: & other thinges what ſoeuer is neceſſary for the to the worke of the temple, yͤ ſhalbe geuē the of the kynges treſure: & loke what thou with thy brethre wilt do with the golde and ſylver, that do after yͤ wil of the LORDE. And I kynge Artaxerſes haue commaunded the kepers of yͤ treſures in Syria and Phenices, that what ſoeuer Eſdras the preſt and reder of the lawe of the LORDE doth wryte, it ſhalbe geuē him: tyll an C. talentes of ſylver, and of golde in lyke maner: Of corne alſo an C. meaſures, and tyll an hūdreth veſſels of wyne, and other plenteous thinges without nombre. Let all thinges be done after the lawe of yͤ hyeſt God, that the wrath of God aryſe not in the realme of the kynge and of his ſonnes. I commaunde you alſo, that ye require no taxinge ner tribute of the prieſtes, Leuites, ſyngers, and mynyſters of the temple, ner of the wryters: and that no man haue auctorite to medle eny thinge againſt them. As for the (O Eſdras) ſet thou iudges and arbitrers in the whole lande of Syria and Phenices, after the wyſdome of God: and lerne all ſoch as are ignorannt in the lawe of God thy LORDE, and let all them that offende agaynſt the lawe, be punyſhed: wether it be with death, with payne, to be condemned in money, or to be banyſhed.

Then ſayde Eſdras yͤ wryter: Bleſſed be yͤ God of oure fathers, that hath geuen ſo good a mynde and wyll in to the herte of the kynge, to magnifie his houſe yͤ is at Jeruſalem, and hath made me to be accepted in hys

ſight of ỹ kynge, of his councell, of his frē des and of his nobles. And so I was ſted-faſt in my mynde, acordinge as the LORDE my God helped me, and I chose out men of C Israel, to go vp with me. And these are the viij.a.a heades (after their kynreds & houses of their fathers) that wente vp with me from Babi lon, out of the kyngdome of Artaxerses: Of the sonnes of Phares, Gersonius. Of ỹ son nes of Siemarith, Amenus. Of the sonnes of David, Accus, the sonne of Cecilia.

Of the sonnes of Phares, Zachary: and with him there turned agayne an hundreth and fiftie men. Of the sonnes of the captay ne of Moabilon, Zaraei, and with him ij. C.
and l. men. Of the sonnes of Zachnes, Jechonias Zecholi, and with him ij. C. and l. men.
Of the sonnes of Salamaasias, Gotholie, and lxx. with him. Of the sonnes of Zapha-cia, Zarias Miheli, and with him lxxx. Of the sonnes of Job, Abdias Jeheli, and with him ij. C. and xij. men. Of the sonnes of Ba-nia, Salimoth the sonne of Josaphia, and with him an C. and lx. men. Of the sonnes of Beer, Zachary Bebei, and with him ij. C. and viij. men. Of the sonnes of Esead, Johannes Ezechan, and with him Cx. men. Of the sonnes of Adonicā those that were the last,
and these are their names: Eliphalam ỹ son
ne of Gebel and Semeias, & with him lxx.
men. All these called I together by the water Thia, where we pitched oure tentes thre
viij.a.b dayes, and there I mustered them.

As for the sonnes of the prestes and Leui tes, I founde none there. Then sent I vnto Eleazar, & Eccelom, and Masiman, & Malo bam, and Enaathan, and Samea, and Joribimathan, Eunagan, Zachary, Mosollamū
(these were the leders and men of experiēce)
& I sent them worde, that they shulde come vnto Loddeus, which was by the place of the treasury, & commaunded them that they shulde speake vnto Loddeus and to his brethren & to those that were in the treasury, to sende vs soch mē, as might execute the pres-tes office in the house of the LORDE oure
God. And w̄ the mightie hāde of oure LOR
DE God, they brought vnto vs mē of good experience, from amōge the sonnes of Mool-lus, the sonne of Leui, ỹ sonne of Jsrael, Se bebeiam & the sonnes & his brethrē Aßbin & Anim, of whom there were xviij. From amō ge the children of the sonnes of Cananeus, & their sonnes were xx. men. And of them ỹ serued in the temple, whom David had or-deyned, and the pryncipall men that ministred for the worke vnto the Leuites in the temple, ij. C. and xx. men: whose names are all tokened vp in wrytinge.

Then commaunded I a fastynge vnto D
ỹ yonge men before the LORDE, ỹ I might 1.Esd.8.
desyre of him a prosperous iourney & a good waye for vs, yee for vs, for oure children and for the catell, because of the layenges away te: & I durst not require of the kynge men of horse & of fote, to conveye vs safely agaynst
oure enemies, for we had sayde vnto the kyn ge, that ỹ power of the LORDE oure God shulde be with them, that seke him w̄ their whole hert. And therfore we besoughte God oure LORDE earnestly because of these thin ges, and he was mercifull vnto vs, and her-de oure prayer. And I separated from amon ge ỹ rulers of the people, & from ỹ prestes of ỹ temple xij. men, & Sebeia & Asania, & ten men of their brethren with them. And I weied thē the golde & the sylver & all ỹ prest ly ornamētes of the house of ỹ God, which the kynge & his coūcell, & his prynces & who le Jsrael had geuē. And whan I had weyed it, I gaue thē an Cl. talētes in sylver, an C. ta lentes of sylver vessell, an C. talentes of gol de, & of goldē vessell seuē tymes twentie, and vessels of other metall (yee of good metall)
xij. glisteringe as the golde, & saide vnto thē:
ye also are holy vnto the LORDE, & the vessels are holy, & the golde & the sylver is promi sed vnto the LORDE the God of ỹ fathers.
Be diligent now & kepe it, vntill the tyme ỹ
ye delyuer it to the rulers of the people, to ỹ prestes, to the Leuites & to ỹ pryncipall mē of the cities of Jsrael in Jerusalem, & in the chambre of the house of oure God.

So ỹ prestes & the Leuites which recea E
ued of me the golde, the sylver & the vessell, 1.Esd.8.d
brought it to Jerusalē into the tēple of the LORDE. And from Thia we brake vp the xij.
daye of the first moneth, tyll we came to Jerusalē. And whan the thirde daye was past, the weyed golde & sylver was delyuered in ỹ
house of the LORDE the fourth daye, vnto Marimoth the sonne of Jor the prest, & w̄ him was Eleazar ỹ sonne of Phineas, and with thē were Josabdus ỹ sonne of Jesnet, Medias & the sonne of Banns, & certayne of the Leuites to the nombre & to the waighte:
& the waight of them was writtē vp the same tyme. As for those that were come out of captivyte, they offred sacrifice vnto the LORDE the God of Jsrael: euē xij. oxen for all Jsrael, lxxxvj. rammes, lxxij. shepe, xij. goa tes for synne, xij. kyne for a thankofferinge, all to the sacrifice of the LORDE. And ỹ kin
ges cōmission delyuered they vnto ỹ stewar

des and debytes of the kynge, and to the vnderſhrewes in Celoſyria and Phenices.
1.Eſd.9.a Now whan theſe thinges were done, the rulers came vnto me, and ſayde: The generacion of Iſrael, the prynces, ỹ preſtes and Le-uites, the ſtraunge people and indwellers of the londe, haue not put awaye their vnclen-neſſe, from the Cananites, Hethites, Phereſites, from the Moabites, Egipcians & Edomites. For both they and their ſonnes haue mengled them ſelues with the daughters of them, & the holy ſede is mixte with the out landiſh Heithen, & ſens the begynnynge of their raigne haue the rulers and heades bene partakers of their wickednesse.

As ſoone as I had herde theſe thinges, immediatly I rent my holy garmentes, and pulled out ỹ hayre of my heade & my beerd, & ſat me downe ſorouſull & heuy. So all they that were moued thorow the worde of the God of Iſrael, came vnto me: and I ſat ſtill full of heuines vntill the euenynge ſacrifice.
Then ſtode I vp frō faſtinge, hauynge ren-te clothes & the holy garmēt, kneled downe
vpon my knees, helde out my hādes vnto ỹ
F LORDE, & ſayde: O LORDE, I am confounded & aſhamed before thy face, for oure ſynnes are becomemany vpon oure heades, & o⁹ wickednesſes are exalted vnto the heauē: for ſens ỹ tyme of o⁹ fathers we are in greate ſin
ne vnto this daye. And for the ſynnes of vs & o⁹ fathers, we w⁹ oure brethren & w⁹ oure preſtes haue bene delinered vnto the kinges of the earth, in to the ſwerde, & in to captini
te, & became a ſpoyle with confucion & ſha-me vnto this daie. And now O LORDE God, how greate is the mercy ỹ we haue gottē of the⁹ in ỹ thou haſt left vs a rote & a name in the place of thy Sanctuary, to diſcouer
oure light in the houſe of ỹ LORDE o⁹ God, & genē vs meate at all tymes of o⁹ miniſtracion. And whan we were in captiuyte, we were not forſaken of the LORDE oure God:
but he made the kynges of Perſia gracious & fauourable vnto vs, ſo ỹ they gaue vs vytayles & meate, yee & leue to buylde vp the tē ple of oure LORDE God agayne, to repayre
the waiſted places of Sion, and to dwell in Jewry & Jeruſalem. And now O LORDE, what ſhall we ſaye, hauynge all theſe thin-ges in poſſeſſion? For we haue broken thy cō maundementes, which thou gaueſt vnto vs
by the handes of thy ſeruauntes the prophe tes, ſayenge: The londe ỹ ye go vnto, & ỹ is geuen you for an heretage to haue in poſſeſſion, is defyled with the vnclennes & fylthynes of the Heithen, & with their abhominacion haue they poluted it altogether. Therfore ſhal ye not ioyne youre daughters vnto Deu.
their ſonnes, ner mary yo⁹ ſonnes vnto their vii.
daughters: Moreoner, ye ſhall neuer ſeke to make peace w⁹ them, ỹ ye maye increaſe & ea te the beſt in the lande, & ỹ ye maye denyde ỹ inheritaunce of the lande vnto yo⁹ children for euermore. As for the thinge ỹ now happeneth vnto vs, it commeth all for o⁹ wicked
workes & greate ſynnes. yet haſt thou geuen vs ſoch a rote, ỹ we are come againe in to o⁹
owne londe: and we are ſo wicked, ỹ we haue brokē thy ſtatutes & cōmaundementes agay ne, & mengled o⁹ ſelues w⁹ the vnclēnes of the outlandiſh Heithen. O LORDE, art thou an grie with vs? wilt thou rote vs cleane out?
ỹ oure rote & name remayne nomore? O LOR DE God of Iſrael, thou art true, for oure rote endureth yet vnto this preſent daye. And be-holde, now are we before ỹ in o⁹ ſynnes, now can we not ſtonde before the in them.

And whan Eßdras with this prayer had G
knowleged the ſynne, wepinge, & lyege ſtart 1.Eſd.
vpon the grounde before the tēple, there gathered vnto him from Jeruſalem a greate multitude of men & wemen, of yonge men & maydens, for there was a very greate wepin ge and mournynge in the cōgregacion. So whan Jechonias the ſonne Jeheli one of the children of Iſrael cried, he ſayde vnto Eß-dras: we haue ſynned agaynſt the LORDE, becauſe we haue maried outlandiſh women of the Heithē. Now art thou ouer all Iſrael.
We wil ſweare an ooth ther fore vnto ỹ LOR DE, ỹ we ſhal put awaye all o⁹ wyues which we haue takē of the Heithē, w⁹ their childrē:
like as it is appoynted the by ỏ forefelders.
Stonde vp then, open thou it and declare it playnely vnto vs accordige to the lawe of ỹ LORDE: for the matter belongeth vnto ỹ, &
we wyll helpe the, quyte thy ſelf manly. So Eßdras aroſe, and toke an ooth of the rulers of ỹ preſtes & of ỹ Leuites & of all Iſrael,
to do after theſe thinges, and they ſware.

The IX. Chapter.

Then Eßdras ſtode vp from the cour I te of the tēple without, & went in to vii.
the chāber of Jonathas the ſonne of Naſabus, & remayned there, & ate no meate ner dronke drynke, for the multitude of the wickednes of the people. And there was ma de a proclamacion in all Jewry & at Jeruſa lem, for all ſoch as were gathered at Jeruſa lē out of captiuyte, ỹ who ſo ouer came not to Jeruſalē within two or three dayes (acor-dinge to the iudgment of the olde lordes of councell) his goodes ſhulde be taken from him, & he excluded from the cõgregacion of the captiuyte. And in thre dayes were all they of the trybe of Juda & Ben Jamin gathered together at Jeruſalem, the xx. daye of ỹ ix. moneth. And ỹ whole multitude ſat trẽblinge in the courte of the temple, for it was wynter. So Eſdras aroſe vp, & ſayde vnto them: ye haue done vnrighteouſly, in that ye haue taken outlandiſh wyues to mariage, & ſo to increaſe the ſynnes of Iſrael. And now knowlege the ſame, & geue prayſe vnto the LORDE God of oure fathers, & perfourme his wil, departinge from the Heithen of the londe, & from the outlandiſh wyues. Then cried the whole multitude with loude voyce, & ſayde: like as thou haſt ſpokẽ, ſo wil we

B do: But for ſo moch as the people are many, & ỹ wynter here, we maie not ſtõde without ỹ houſe: agayne, this worke is not a thinge, ỹ can be fynyſhed in a daye or two, for we be many ỹ haue ſynned in theſe thinges: Ordener therfore, ỹ the rulers of the multitude and all they that dwell with vs, and as many as haue outlandiſh wyues, the preſtes alſo and iudges of euery place, maye ſtonde in the tyme appoynted, tyll they lowſe vp the wrath of the LORDE in this buſynes.

Then Jonathas the ſonne of Ezeli, & Ozias and Thecam receaued ỹ charge of this matter, & Bozoramus, & Leius and Sabatheus helped thẽ therto. After this, all they ſtode vp ỹ were come out of captiuyte. And Eſdras the preſt choſe vnto him the prynci pall men from amonge the fathers acordinge to their names, & in the new moone of the tenth moneth they ſat together, to examen this matter. And ſo the matter was a determynge (concernynge the men ỹ had outlandiſh wyues) vntill the new moone of the firſt moneth. And of the preſtes ỹ had mixte thẽ ſelues wt outlandiſh wyues, there were found: Of the ſonnes of Jeſu the ſonne of Joſedec & his brethren, Mazeas, Eleazer, Joribus & Joadeus, which offred them ſelues to put awaye their wyues, & to offre a ramme for their ignoraunce. And of the ſonnes of Semmeri, Maſſeas, & Eſſes & Jeelech Azarias. Of ỹ ſonnes of Joſera, Limoſias, Ziſmaen, Nathanea, Juſſio, Jeddus, & Talſas. And of the Leuites, Joſabdus, Semeis and Colnis, Caletas, Jacteas, Colnas and Elio
C nas. Of the ſyngers of the Sãctuary, Eliaſib, Zackarus. Of the porters, Sallumus & Tolbanes. And of Iſrael, of the children of Joro, Oſi & Remias, & Geddias, & Melchias, Michelus, Eleazarus, Jẽmebias & Bannas. And of the childrẽ of Jolaman, Chanias, Zachary, Jezrelus, Joddius, Erimoth & Elias. And of ỹ ſonnes of Jathoim. Eliadas, Liaſamus, & Zochias, Larimoth, Sabdis & Tebedias. And of ỹ ſonnes of Zebes, Johãnes Amanias, Zabdias, & Emeus. And of the ſonnes of Bannus, Olammus, Maluchus, Jeddus, Jaſub, Aſabus & Jerimoth. And of ỹ ſonnes of Addin, Naatus & Mooſias & Caleus & Raanas Maaſias, Mathathias, Beſel, Bannus, and Manaſſes.

And of the ſonnes of Naue, Nones, Aſeas, Melchias, Sameas, Simõ, Ben Jamin, Malchus & Marras. And of the ſonnes of Aſom, Carianeus, Mathathias, Bannus, Eliphalach, Manaſſes, Semei. Of the ſonnes of Bannus, Jeremy, Moodias, Abramas, Johel, Baneas, peliaas, Jona, Marimoth, Eliaſib, Mathaneus, Eliaſis, Ozizas, Dielus, Semedius. Zambris & Joſeph. Of ỹ ſonnes of Nobeus, Jdelus, Mathathias, Sabadus, Zecheda, Sedmi, Jeſſeus, & Baneas. All theſe had takẽ outlãdiſh wemẽ to mariage, & they put thẽ awaye wt their childrẽ.

The preſtes & Leuites, & all they ỹ were of Iſrael, dwelt at Jeruſalem & thorow out all ỹ londe, in the new moone of the ſeuenth moneth, & the childrẽ of Iſrael were in their dwellynges. And ỹ whole multitude came D together vpon ỹ floore at ỹ eaſt ſyde of the 2.Eſd.8.a holy porte of ỹ tẽple. And they ſpake vnto Eſdras ỹ hie preſt & reder, ỹ he wolde brynge ỹ lawe of Moſes, which was genẽ of ỹ LORDE God of Iſrael. So Eſdras the hie preſt brought the lawe vnto the whole multitude, to man and woman, & to all preſtes, ỹ they might heare the lawe, in the new moone of the ſeuenth moneth. And he red in ỹ floore ỹ is before ỹ holy porte of ỹ tẽple, from the mornynge early vntill the euenynge, before men & wemen. And they applied their mynde all vnto the lawe.

And Eſdras the preſt & reder of ỹ lawe ſtode vp vpon a ſcaffolde of wodd, which was made therfore: & vpon his right hande there ſtode by him Mathathias, Samus, Ananias, Azarias, Urias, Ozechias, & Balſamus: Vpon his leſte hãde ſtode Faldeus, Miſael, Malachias, Abuſchas, Sabus, Nabadias, & Zachary. Then toke Eſdras ỹ boke before the whole multitude, for he was ỹ pryncipall and had in moſt honꝰ of thẽ all. And whã he had red out ỹ lawe, they ſtode all ſtraight vp vpon their fete. So Eſdras prayſed the LORDE the moſt hye God, the Allmightie God of hooſtes. And all ỹ peo E
ple anſwered, Amen: & helde vp their hãdes, fell downe flat vpon the earth, & prayſed ỹ

LORDE: Jeſus, Beneas, Sarebias, Jaddimus, Accubus, Sabbathens, Calithes, Azarias, Joradus, Ananias, & Philias the Lenites which taught the lawe of the LORDE, & red the lawe of the LORDE in the cõgregacion, & euery man sett thoſe before ỹ vnderstode the lawe. Then spake Atharathes vnto Eſdras the hye preſt & reder, & to the Lenites ỹ taught the multitude, sayenge: This daye is holy vnto the LORDE: & all they ỹ had herde the lawe, wepte. So Eſdras sayde: Departe yo^r waye then, & eate the beſt, & drynke the sweteſt, & sende giftes vnto them ỹ haue nothinge: for this daye is holy vnto the LORDE, and be not ye sory. Then wente they their waye euerychone, ate and dronke and were mery, & sent rewardes vnto thẽ ỹ had nothinge, ỹ they also might eate with gladneſſe: for they were exceadingly reioyſed, thoro the wordes that were red vnto them in the lawe: And so they were all gathered together at Jeruſalem to holde the feaſt, accordinge to the couenaunt of ỹ LORDE God of Iſrael. .Eſd.9.c

The ende of the thirde boke of Eſdras.

The IIII boke of Eſdras.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. XVI. Punyshment vpon the Heithen, and how the people of God shal behaue them selues therin.

The first Chapter.

THe seconde boke of ỹ prophet Eſdras: (ỹ sonne of Sarias, the sonne of Azarias, ỹ sonne of Helchia, ỹ sonne of Sallũ, the sonne of Sadoc, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Amerias, the sonne of Azarias, the sonne of Maraioth, the sonne of Sarahias, the sonne of Vzi, the sonne of Boccus, the sonne of Abiſu, the sonne of Phineas, the sonne of Eleazar, the sonne of Aaron, of the trybe of Leui) which was puſoner in the lande of the Meedes, in the raigne of Artaxerſes kynge of Perſia.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto me, sayenge: Go thy waye & shew my people their synfull dedes, & their children their wickednesſes, which they haue done against me, that they maye tell their childers childre the same: for the synnes of their fathers are increaſed in them. And why? they haue forgotten me, & haue offred vnto straunge goddes. Am not I euen he, that brought them out of the lande of Egipte, from the houſe of bondage? But they haue prouoked me vnto wrath, & deſpyſed my councels. Pull thou out then the hayre of thy heade, and cast all euell ouer them, for they haue not bene obedient vnto my lawe.

It is a people without lernynge & nourtoure. How longe shal I forbeare them, vnto whom I haue done so moch good? Many kynges haue I deſtroyed for their sake: Pharao wt his seruauntes and all his power haue I smytten downe and slayne; All ỹ nacions haue I deſtroyed and roted out before them, and in ỹ eaſt haue I brought two landes and people to naught, euen Tyre & Sydon, and haue slayne all their enemies. Speke thou therfore vnto them, sayenge: Thus sayeth the LORDE: I led you thoro the see, and haue geuen you sure stretes sence the begynnynge. I gaue you Moſes to be your captayne, and Aaron to be the preſt: I gaue you light in a piler of fyre, & greate wõders haue I done amõge you: yet haue ye forgotten me, sayeth the LORDE.

C Thus ſayeth the allmightie LORDE: I Exo.16.c gaue you quales to eate, and tentes for youre ſuccoure: Neuertheles ye murmured, and aſcrybed not ẏ victory of youre enemies vnto my name: yee this ſame daie do ye yet murmoure. Where are the benefites, that I haue done for you: Whan ye were hongrie in

E Thus ſayeth the Allmightie LORDE: haue I not prayed you, as a father his ſonnes, as a mother hir daughters, and as a norſſe hir yonge babes, that ye wolde be my people, and I ſhulde be youre God: that ye wolde be my children, and I ſhulde be youre owne father: I gathered you together, as an

Whan ye offre vntō me, I ſhal turne my face from you: for youre ſolempne feaſt dayes, youre newmoones and youre circumciſions haue I forſaken. I ſent vnto you my ſeruauntes the prophetes, whom ye haue taken and ſlayne, and rente their bodies in peces, whoſe bloude I

Thus ſayeth the Allmightie LORDE: S
youre houſe muſt be deſolate. I wil caſt you out as the wynde doth ẏ ſtraw: youre children ſhal not be fruteful, for they haue deſpyſed my commaundement, and done ẏ thinge ẏ is euell before me. Youre houſes wil I geue vnto a people ẏ ſhal come, and they ẏ neuer Eſa.65.2

The II. Chapter.

Thus ſayeth the LORDE: I brought A
this people out of bondage, I gaue thē my cōmaundementes by my ſeruauntes ẏ prophetes, whom they wolde not heare, but deſpyſed my coūcels. The mother that bare them, ſayeth vnto them: Go youre waye ye children, for I am a wyddow & forſaken: I brought you vp with gladneſſe, but with ſorow and heurynes haue I loſt you: for ye haue ſynned before the LORDE yor God, and done ẏ thinge that is euell before him. But what ſhall I now do vnto you: I am a wyddow and forſakē: go youre waye (o my children) and aske mercy of the LORDE. As for me O father, I call vpon the for a wytneſſe ouer the mother of theſe childrē, which wolde not kepe my couenaunt: ẏ thou bringe them to cōfucion, and their mother to a ſpoyle, that ſhe beare no more. Let their names be ſcatred abrode amonge the heithen, let them be put out of the earth, for they haue thought ſcorne of my couenaunt.

Wo be vnto the Aſſur, thou that hydeſt B
the vnrighteous by the. Thou wicked people, remembre what I dyd vnto Sodom Gen.19.c and Gomorre, whoſe land is turned to pitch and aßſhes. Euen ſo alſo wyll I do vnto all them, that heare me not, ſayeth the Allmightie LORDE. Thus ſayeth the LORDE vnto Eßdras: Tell my people, ẏ I will geue them the kyngdome of Jeruſalem, which I wol-de haue geuen vnto Israel. Their glory also wyl I take vnto me, and geue them the euer lastynge tabernacles, which I had prepared for those.

The tre of life shalbe vnto them a swete smellynge oyntment: they shal nether labour ner be weery. Go ye youre waye, & ye shall receaue it. Praye for yo^r selues a few dayes, that they maye dwell therin. Now is the kingdome prepared for you, therfore watch. Take heauē and earth to wytnesse, for I haue broken the euell in peces, and created the good, for I lyue sayeth ỹ LORDE. Mother embrace thy children, and brynge them vp with gladnes: make their fete as fast as a piler, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE.

C And those that be deed wyll I rayse vp agayne from their places, and brynge them out of ỹ graues, for I haue knowne my name in Israel. Feare not thou mother of the children, for I haue chosen the, sayeth the LORDE. And for thy helpe I shal sende the my seruauntes Esay and Jeremy, after whose councell I haue sanctified & prepared for the, xij. trees with dyuerse frutes, and as many welles flowinge with mylck and hony, & seuen mountaynes, wher vpō there growe roses and lilies, wherin I wyl fyll my children with ioye. Execute iustice for the wyddowe, be iudge for the fatherlesse: geue to ỹ poore: defende the cōfortlesse: clothe the naked: heale the wounded and sick: laugh not a lame man to scorne: defende the crepell, and lat the blinde come in to ỹ sight of my clearnes. Kepe the olde & yonge within thy walles: where so euer thou fyndest the deed, tokē them, and burye them, and I shal geue the the first place in my resurreccion. Holde styll (O my people) and take ỹ rest, for thy quyetnes is come. Fede thy children O thou good norisse, stablish their fete: As for the seruauntes whom I haue geuen the, there shal not one of them perishe, for I wyl seke thē from thy nombre, vere not thy selfe.

obi. 1. d

D For whan the daye of trouble and heuynes commeth, other shal wepe and be sorowfull, but thou shalt be mery and plenteous. The Heithen shalbe gelous, but they shalbe able to do nothinge agaynst the, sayeth the LORDE. My handes shal couer the, so that thy children shal not se the fyre euerlastinge. Be ioyfull O thou mother with thy childrē, for I wyll delyuer the, sayeth the LORDE. Remembre thy deed childrē, for I shal brynge them out of the earth, and shew mercy vnto them, for I am mercifull, sayeth the LORDE Allmightie.

Embrace thy childrē, vntyll I come and shew mercy vnto them, for my welles runne ouer, and my grace shal not fayle. I Esdras receaued a charge of the LORDE vpon the mount Oreb, that I shulde go vnto Israel. But whan I came vnto thē, they set me at naught, and despysed the commaundement of ỹ LORDE. And therfore I saye vnto you O ye Heithen, that heare and vnderstonde: Loke for youre shepherde, he shal geue you euerlastinge rest: for he is nye at hande, that shal come in the ende of the worlde. Be redy to the reward of the kyngdome, for the euerlastinge light shall shyne vpon you for euermore. Flee the shadowe of this worlde, receaue the ioyfulnes of youre glory. I testifie my sauioure openly: O receaue the gift ỹ is geuen you, and be glad, geuynge thankes vnto him, that hath called you to the heauenly kyngdome. Arise vp, and stonde fast: beholde the nombre of those that be sealed in the feast of the LORDE, which are departed from the shadowe of the worlde, and haue receaued glorious garmētes of the LORDE. Take thy nombre O Sion, and shut vp thy purified, which haue fulfilled the lawe of the LORDE. The nombre of thy children whom thou longedest for, is fulfilled: beseke the power of the LORDE, that thy people which haue bene called from the begynnynge, maye be halowed.

I Esdras sawe vpon the mount Sion a greate people, whom I coude not nombre, & they all praysed the LORDE with songes of thankesgeuynge. And in the myddest of the there was a yonge mā of an hye stature, more excellent then all they, and vpon euery one of their heades he sett a crowne, and was euer hygher and hygher, which I maueled at greatly. So I axed ỹ angell, & sayde: Syr, what are these? He answered and sayde vnto me: These be they, that haue put of the mortall clothinge and put on the immortall, and haue testified & knowleged the name of God. Now are they crowned, and receaue the rewarde.

Then sayde I vnto the angell: what yonge persōne is it, that crowneth them, & geueth them the palmes in their handes? So he answered and sayde vnto me: It is ỹ sonne of God, whom they haue knowleged in the worlde. Then beganne I greatly to commende them, that stode so stifly for the name of the LORDE. And so the angell sayde vnto me: Go thy waye, and tell my people, what maner of thinges and how greate wonders of the LORDE thy God, thou hast sene

The III. Chapter.

A IN the thirtie yeare of the fall of the cite, I was at Babilon & laye troubled vpō my bed, & my thoughtes came vp ouer my hert: for I sawe ỳ desolacion of Sion, & the plenteous wealth of them ỳ dwelt at Babilon: & my spirite was sore moued, so that I begāne to speake fearfull wordes to the most hyest, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, thou spakest at the begynnynge, whan thou plantedst ỳ earth (and that thy self alone) and gauest commaundement vnto ỳ people, and a body vnto Adam, which was a creature of thy handes, and hast breathed in him the breth of life: and so he lyued before the, and thou leddest him in to paradyse, which gardē of pleasure thy right hande had planted, or euer the earth was made. And vnto him thou gauest commaundemēt to loue ỳ waye, which he transgressed, & immediatly thou appoyntedest death in him, and in his generacions. Of him came nacions, trybes, people & kynreddes out of nombre. And euery people walked after their owne wil, and dyd nyce thinges before the: and as for thy commaundementes, they despysed them.

B But in processe of tyme thou broughtest the water floude, vpon those that dwelt in the worlde, and destroydest them. And like as the death was in Adam, so was the water floude also in these. Neuertheles one of them thou lefte̅st: namely, Noe with his housholde, of whom come all righteous mē. And it happened that, whan they ỳ dwelt vpon the earth, begāne to multiplie, and had gotten many children, and were a greate people, they beganne to be more vngodly then the first.

Now whan they all lyued so wickedly before the, thou dideste chose the a man from amonge them, whose name was Abram. Him thou louedest, and vnto him only thou shewdest thy wyll, and maydest an euerlastinge couenaunt with him, promisinge him, that thou woldest neuer forsake his sede. And vnto him thou gauest Isaac, vnto Isaac also thou gauest Jacob and Esau. As for Jacob thou dideste chose him, and put backe Esau. And so Jacob became a greate multitude.

C And it happened that whā thou leddest his sede out of Egipte, thou broughtest thē vp to the mount Sion, bowinge downe the heauens, settinge fast the earth, mouynge the grounde, makynge the depthes to shake, and troublynge the worlde: And thy glory wente thorow foure portes of fyre, and earth quakes, and wyndes and colde: that thou mightest gene the lawe vnto the sede of Jacob, and diligence vnto the generacio of Israel.

And yet tokest thou not awaye from thē that wicked hert, that thy lawe might brynge forth frute in them. For the first Adam bare a wicked hert, transgressed, and was ouercome, and so be all they ỳ are borne of him. Thus remayned weaknes with the lawe in Rom.5.a the hert of the people, with the wickednesse of the rote: so that the good departed awaye, and the euell abode still. So the tymes passed awaye, and the yeares were broughte to an ende. Then dideste thou rayse the vp a seruaunt called Dauid, whom thou commaundedst to buylde a cite vnto thy name, and to offre vp incense and sacrifice vnto the therin. This was done now many yeares. 1.Re.16.c 2.Reg.5.a

Then the inhabiters of the cite forsoke D the, and in all thinges dyd euē as Adam and all his generacions had done: for they also had a wicked hert. And so thou gauest thy cite ouer in to the handes of thine enemies. Are they of Babilon then better and more righteous then thy people, ỳ they shal therfore haue the domynion of Sion? For whan I came there, and sawe their vngodlynes, and so greate wickednesse, that it coude not be nōbred: yee whan my soule sawe so many euell doers (in ỳ xxx. yeare) my hert fayled me, for I sawe, how thou suffrest them in soch vngodlynes, and spareste ỳ wicked doers: but thine owne people hast thou roted out, and preserued thine enemies, & this hast thou not shewed me.

E I can not perceaue how this happeneth. Do they of Babilon then better, then they of Sion? Or is there eny other people, ỳ knoweth the, sauynge the people of Israel? Or what generacion hath so beleued ỳ couenaūtes, as Jacob? And yet their reward appeareth not, and their labō hath no frute. For I haue gone here and there thorow the heithē, & Ise, ỳ they be rych & wealthy, & thynke not vpon ỳ commaundementes. Weye thou therfore oure wickednesse now in ỳ balaunce, and theirs also that dwell in the worlde, and so shal thy name be nowhere founde but in Israel. Or where is there a people vpon earth, ỳ hath not synned before the? Or what people hath so kepte thy commaundementes? Thou shalt fynde, that Israel by name hath kepte thy preceptes, but not the other people and heithen.

The IIII. Chapter.

2 AND the angell that was sent vnto me (whose name was Vriel) gaue me answere, and sayde: Thy hert hath take to moch vpon it in this worlde, and thou thinkest to comprehende the waye of the Hyest. Then sayde I: yee my lorde. And he answered me, and sayde: I am sent to shewe the three wayes, and to sett forth three symilitudes before the: wherof yf thou canst declare me one, I wil shewe the also the waye, that thou desyrest to se, and I shal shewe the from whence the wicked hert commeth. And I sayde: tell on my LORDE. Then sayde he vnto me: Go thy waye, weye me the weight of the fyre, or measure me the blast of the wynde, or call me agayne the daye that is past. Then answered I and sayde: What man borne is able to do that? Why requyrest thou soch of me? And he sayde vnto me: Yf I shulde axe the, how depe dwellinges are in the see? Or how greate water springes are vpon ỳ firmamẽt? Or how greate water sprynges are in the begynnynge of the depe? Or which are the out goinges of Paradise? Peraduẽture thou wouldest saye vnto me: I never went downe yet in to ỳ depe ner hell, nether dyd I ever clymme vp in to heauen. Neuertheles now haue I axed the but onely of fyre and wynde and of the daye, where thorow thou hast trauayled, and from the which thou canst not be separated: and yet canst thou geue me no answere of them.

B He sayde moreouer vnto me: Thinne owne thinges, and soch as are growne vp with ỳ, canst thou not knowe: how shulde thy vessel then be able to cõprehende the waye of the Hyest, and now outwardly in the corrupte worlde, to vnderstõde the corrupcion ỳ is euy bent in my sight? Thẽ sayde I vnto him: It were better that we were not at all, thẽ that we shulde lyue in wickednesse, and to suffre, and not to knowe wherfore. He answered me, and sayde: I wẽte in a wod, and the trees toke soch a deuyce and sayde: Come let vs go, Iud. 9. b and fight agaynst the see, that it maye departe awaye before vs, and that we maye make vs yet more woddes. Par. 25. c

The floudes of the see also in lyke maner toke this deuyce and sayde: Come, let vs go vp, and fight agaynst the trees of the wodd, that we maye make oure londe the wyder. The thought and deuyce of the wodd was but vayne and nothinge worth, for the fyre came, and consumed the wod: The thought of the floudes of the see came likewyse to naught also, for the sonde stode vp and stopped them.

Yf thou were iudge now betwyxte these two, whom woldest thou iustifie, or whom woldest thou cõdemne? I answered and sayde: Verely it is a foolish thought that they both haue deuysed. For the grounde is geuen vnto the wod, and the see also hath his place to beare his floudes. Then answered he me ỳ sayde: Thou hast geuen a right iudgment, why iudgest thou not thy self also? For like as the grounde is geuen vnto the wod, and the see to his floudes: euen so they that dwell vpon earth, maye vnderstonde nothinge, but that which is vpon earth: and he that dwelleth aboue the heauens, maye onely vnderstonde the thinges, that are aboue the heauens. Then answered I and sayde: I beseke the O LORDE let me haue vnderstondinge: for it was not my mynde to be curious of thy hye thinges, but of soch as we daylie medle with all: namely, wherfore that Israel is blasphemed of the heithen, and for what cause the people (whom thou euer hast loued) is geuen ouer, to be punyshed of vngodly nacions: and why the lawe of oure fathers is brought to naught, and the wrytten couenauntes come to none effecte, and we passe awaye out of the worlde as the greshopers, and oure life is a very feare, and we are not worthy to optayne mercy. What wyl he do then vnto his name, which is called vpon ouervs? Of these thinges haue I axed question.

Then answered he me and sayde: The more thou searchest, the more thou shalt marual, for the worlde hasteth fast to passe awaye, and can not comprehende the thinges, that are promysed for the righteous in tyme to come, for this worlde is full of vnrighteousnes and weaknes.

But as concernynge the thinges whervf thou axest me, I wyl tell the. The euell is sowne, but the destruccion therof is not yet come. Yf the euell now that is sowne, be not turned vpsyde downe, and yf the place where ỳ euell is sowne, passe not awaye, then can not the thinge come ỳ is sowne with ỳ good. For the come of euell sede hath bene sowne in the hert of man from the begynnynge, and how moch vngodlynes hath he brought vp vnto this tyme? and how moch shal he yet bringe forth, vntyll he come in to the barne?

Ponder now by thy self, whã ỳ come of euell sede is cutt downe, how greate a barne shal it fyll? I answered and sayde: How and whã shal these thinges come to passe? Wherfore are ỏ yeares few ỵ euell? And he answered me, sayẽge: Haist not thou to moch vpon the Hyest, for thy haistynes to be aboue him is but in vayne, thou makest to moch a doo. Dyd not ẏ soules also of the righteous are question of these thinges in their holynes, sayenge: How longe shal I hope of this fashion: Whan commeth the frute of my barne, and my reward: And vpō this Jeremiel the archangel gaue them answere, and sayde: Eue whan the nombre of the sedes is fylled in you: for he hath weyed the worlde in the balaunce: in measure and nombre hath he measured the tyme, and moueth it not, vntyll the same measure be fulfylled. Then answered I and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, now are we all full of synne, and for oure sake peraduenture it is not, that the barne of the righteous shall not be fylled, because of the synnes of thē that dwell vpon earth.

So he answered me, & sayde: Go ẏ waye to a woman with childe, and axe her, when she hath fulfilled hir ix. monethes, yf hir childe ẏ bryth eny lōger within her. Thē sayde I: No LORDE, that can she not. And he sayde vnto me: In hell the secrete places of soules are like ẏ preuy chamber of a woman. For like as a woman that trauayleth, maketh haist, whan the tyme & necessite of the byrth is at hande: Eue so doth she haist to delyuer it that is commytted vn to her. Loke what thou desyrest to se, it shalbe shewed the from the begynnynge. Then answered I and sayde: Yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sighte, and yf it be possible, and yf I be mete therfore, shewe me then, whether there be more to come thē is past, or more past then is for to come. What is past, I knowe: but what is for to come, I knowe not.

And he saide vnto me: Stonde vp vpō ẏ right syde, and I shal expounde the symilitude vnto the. So I stode, & beholde, an whote burnynge oue wente ouer before me: & it happened ẏ whan the flamme was gone by, the smoke had the vpper hande. After this there wēte ouer before me a watery cloude, and sent downe moch rayne wt a storme: & whan the stormy rayne was past, the droppes remayned still. Then sayde he vnto me: like as the rayne is more then the droppes, and as the fyre exceadeth the smoke, euen so ẏ measure of the thinges that are past, hath the vpper hande. Then wente the droppes and the smoke aboue: and I prayed and sayde: Maye I lyue (thynkest thou) vntyll that tyme: Or what shall happen in those dayes: he answered me, and sayde: As for the tokes wherof thou axest me, I maye tell the of thē in a parte: but as touchinge * ẏ life, I maye not shewe the, for I am not sent therfore.

The V. Chapter.

Neuertheles, as concernynge the tokens, mark this: Beholde, the dayes shal come, that they which dwell vpon earth, shalbe takē in a greate nombre, & the waye of the trueth shalbe hyd, and the lōde shalbe baren from faith: but iniquyte shal haue the vpper hande, like as thou hast sene now, and as thou hast herde lōge agoo. And the londe that thou seist now to haue rule, shalt thou shortly se waist. But yf God graunte the to lyue, thou shalt se after ẏ thirde trompet, that the Sonne shal sodenly shyne agayne in the night, and the Moone thre tymes in the daye, & bloude shal droppe out of wodd, and the stone shal geue his voyce, and the people shalbe vnquyete: and euen he shal rule, whom they hope not that dwell vpon earth, and the soules shal flye, and the Sodomitysh see shal cast out his fish, and make a noyse in the night, which many shal not knowe, but they shal all heare the voyce therof. A

There shalbe a cōfucion also in many places, and the fyre shal be oft sent agayne, and the wylde beastes shal go their waye, & monstruous wemen shal beare monsters, and salte waters shalbe founde in the swete: one frende shal fight agaynst another: then shal all wyt and vnderstandinge be hyd and put aside in to their secrete places, & shalbe sought of many, and yet not be founde: then shal vnrighteousnes and volupteousnes haue the vpperhande vpon earth. One lande also shal axe another, and saye: Is righteousnes gone thorow the? And it shal saye: No. At the same tyme shal men hope, but nothinge optayne: they shal laboure, but their wayes shall not prospere. B

To shewe the soch tokens I haue leue, and yf thou wylt praye agayne, & wepe as now, and fast seuen dayes, thou shalt heare yet greater thinges. Then I awaked, and a fearfulnes wente thorow all my body, & my mynde was feble and carefull, so that I allmost swowned withall. So the angell that was come to talke with me, helde me, comforted me, and sett me vp vpon my fete.

And in the seconde night it happened, ẏ Salathiel the captayne of the people came vnto me, sayenge: Where hast thou ben? and why is thy countenaunce so heuy? Knowest thou not, ẏ Israel is commytted vnto the, in the londe of their captyuyte? Vp then, and eate, and forsake vs not, as the shepherde C that leaueth his flock in the handes of wicked wolues. Then sayde I vnto him: Go thy waye fro me, and come not nye me: & he herde it, and as I sayde, so wēte he his waye fro me. And so I fasted seuen dayes, mournynge and wepynge, like as Vriell the angell commaunded me. And after seuen dayes it happened, that ỹ thoughtes of my hert were very greuous vnto me agayne, & my soule receaued ỹ spirite of vnderstandynge, & I begāne to talke wt the most hyest agayne, and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, of euery wod of ỹ earth & of all the trees therof, thou hast chosen ỹ one onely vynyarde: and of all londes of the whole worlde thou hast chosen the one pytt: and of all floures of the groūde thou hast chosen the one lylie: and of all the depthes of the see thou hast fylled the one ryuer: and of all buylded cities thou hast halowed Sion vnto thy self: and of all ỹ foules that are created, thou hast named the one doue: and of all the catell ỹ are made, thou hast prouyded ỹ one shepe: & amōge all ỹ multitudes of folkes thou hast gotten the one people, and vnto this people whom thou louedest, thou gauest a lawe, ỹ is proued of all.

D And now O LORDE, why hast thou geuē this one people ouer vnto many? & vpon the one rote thou hast prepared other, and why hast thou scatred ỹ one onely people amonge many? which treade thē downe, yee which haue euer withstonde ỹ promyses, & neuer beleued ỹ couenaūtes? And though thou werest enemye vnto ỹ people, yet shuldest thou punysh thē wt thine owne handes. Now whā I had spokē these wordes, the angell ỹ came to me ỹ night afore, was sēt vnto me, & sayde vnto me: Heare me, & herkē to ỹ thinge ỹ I saye, & I shal tell ỹ more. And I sayed: Speake on my LORDE. Thē sayde he vnto me: Thou art sore vexed & troubled for Israels sake. Louest thou ỹ people better, then him ỹ made them? And I sayde: Nay LORDE, but of very grefe & cōpassion haue I spokē. For my reynes payne me euery houre, because I wolde haue experience of the waye of the most hyest, and to seke out parte of his iudgment. And he sayde vnto me: that thou mayest not. And I sayde: wherfore LORDE? Where vnto was I borne then? Or why was not my mothers childesbed then my graue? So had I not sene the myserye and trouble of Jacob, and the trauayle of my people of Israel.

E And he sayde vnto me: Nōbre me ỹ thinges, ỹ are not yet come: gather me together ỹ droppes, that are scatred abrode: make me ỹ floures grene agayne, ỹ are wythered: opē me the thinge that is closed: and bringe me forth the wyndes, that are shutt vp: Shewe me the ymage of a voyce, and then shal I declare the the thinge, that thou labourest to knowe. And I sayde: O LORDE LORDE, who maye knowe these thinges, but he that hath not his dwellynge wt mē? As for me, I am vnwyse: how maye I thē speake of these thinges, wherof thou arest me? Thē sayde he vnto me: like as thou canst do none of these thinges ỹ I haue spoken of, Euen so canst thou not fynde out my iudgment, or in the ende the loue that I haue promysed vnto my people. And I sayde: Beholde O LORDE, yet art thou nye vnto them that haue no ende: and what shal they do that haue bene before me, or we that be now, or they that shal come after vs? And he sayde vnto me: I wyll lycken my iudgment vnto a rynge. Like as there is no slacknesse of the last, euen so is there no swiftnesse of the first. So I answered & sayde: Coudest thou not make those (that haue bene made, and that be now, and that are for to come) in one, that thou mightest shewe thy iudgment the sooner?

Then answered he me and sayde: The creature maye not haist aboue the maker, neither maye the worlde holde thē at once, that shalbe created.

And I sayde: How hast thou sayde then vnto thy seruaunt, that thou lyuynge maker hast made the creature lyuynge at once, & the creature bare it? euē so might it now also bere them that be present, at once. And he sayde vnto me: Axe the childebed of a womā, and saye vnto her: Yf thou bringest forth childē, why doest thou it not together, but one after another? Praye her therfore, to bringe forth ten children at once. And I sayde: she can not, but must do it one after another.

Then sayde he vnto me: Euen so haue I geuen a childebed vnto the earth, for thoste that be sowne vpon it by processe of tyme. For like as a yonge childe maye not bringe forth the thinges that belonge to the aged, euen so haue I ordened the worlde which I made.

And I ared and sayde: Seynge thou hast now geuē me a waye, I wyl speake before ỹ: for oure mother of whō thou hast tolde me, is yet yonge, & now she draweth nye vnto age. He answered me & sayde: Axe a woman that beareth children, & she shal tell the. Saye vnto her: wherfore are not they (whom thou hast now brought forth) like those that were before the, but lesse of stature? And she shal answere the: They ỹ be borne in the youth of strēgth, are of one fashion: and they that are borne in the tyme of age (whan the childhed sayleth) are other wyse. Cōsidre now thy self, how that ye are lesse of stature, then those that were before you, and so are they that come after you, lesse then ye, as the creatures which now begynne to be olde, and have passed ouer the strength of youth. Then sayde I: LORDE I beseke the, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, shewe thy seruaunt, by whom doest thou vyset thy creature?

The VI. Chapter.

A AND he sayde vnto me: In the begynnynge whan the grounde was made, before the worlde stode, or euer y wyndes blew, before it thondred and lightened, or euer the foundacions of Paradise were layed, before the fayre floures were sene, or euer the moueable powers were stablished, before y̆ immumerable multitudes of angels were gathered together, or euer y̆ highnesses of y̆ ayre were lifted vp, afore y̆ measures of the firmament were named, or euer y̆ chymneys in Sion were hote, and or the presente yeares were sought out, and or euer the invencions of them y̆ now synne, were put aside, before they were sealed that new gather faith for a treasure: then dyd I cōsidre and ponder all these thinges, and they all were made thorow me, and thorow none other: by me also they be ended, and by none other.

Then answered I and sayde: which shal be the partynge asunder of the tymes? Or whan shalbe the ende of the first, and the begynnynge of it that foloweth? And he sayde vnto me: From Abrahā vnto Isaac, whā Jacob & Esau were borne of him, Jacobs hande helde first the hele of Esau: for Esau is the ende of this worlde, and Jacob is the begynnynge of it that foloweth. The hande of man betwixte the hele and the hande. Other question (Esdras) aske thou not.

B I answered then and sayde: O LORDE LORDE, yf I haue founde fauoure in thy sight, I beseke the, shewe thy seruaunt the ende of thy tokēs, wherof thou shewedest me parte the last nyght. So he answered and sayde vnto me: Stōde vp vpon thy fete, and heare the perfecte voyce and sounde. There shal come a greate mocion, but y̆ place where thou stōdest shal not be moued. And therfore whan thou hearest the wordes, be not afrayed: for of the ende shal the worde and foundacion of y̆ earth be vnderstonde. And why? the worde therof trembleth and quaketh, for it knoweth, that it must be chaunged at the ende. And it happened, that whā I had herde it, I stode vp vpon my fete and herkened: and beholde, there was a voyce y̆ spake, and the sounde of it was like the sounde of many waters, and it sayde. Beholde, y̆ dayes come, y̆ I wyl begynne to drawe nye, and to vyset them that dwell vpō earth, and wyl begynne to make inquysicion of them, what they be y̆ haue hurte equyte w̄ vnrighteousnes, and whan the lowe estate of Sion shalbe fulfylled: and whan the worlde, that shal vanish awaye, shalbe ouersealed, then wyl I do these tokens.

C The bokes shalbe opened before the firmament, and they shal se all together, & the children of a yeare olde shal speake w̄ their voyces: the wemē with childe shal brynge forth vntymely children of thre or foure monethes olde, and they shall lyue, and be raysed vp: & sodēly shal the sowne places appeare as the vnsowne, the full store houses shal sodenly be founde emptie, and the trompett shal geue a sounde, which whā euery man heareth, they shalbe haistely afrayed. At that tyme shall frendes fight one agaynst another like enemies, and the earth shal stonde in feare with them. Mat. 10. c Mich. 7. a

The springes of the welles shal stonde styll, and in thre houres they shal not renne. Who so euer remayneth from all these thinges that I haue tolde the, shal escape, and se my saluacion, and the ende of youre worlde. And the men that are receaued, shal se it, they that haue not tasted death frō their byrth: and the hert of the indwellers shalbe chaunged, and turned into another meanynge: for euell shalbe put out, and disceate shal be quenched. As for faith, it shal florish, corrupcion shalbe ouercome: and the trueth, which hath bene so longe without frute, shal be declared.

D And it happened whan he talked w̄ me, that I loked demurely vpō him, before whō I stode, and these wordes sayde he vnto me: I am come to shewe y̆, the tyme of y̆ nyght for to come.

Yf thou wilt praye yet more, and fast seuē dayes agayne, I shal tel the more thinges, & greater then before: for thy voyce is herde before the Hyest: for why? the Mightie hath sene thy righteous dealynge, he hath sene also thy chastite, which thou hast had euer sence thy youth: and therfore hath he sent me to shewe the all these thinges, and to sayde vnto the: Be of good comforte, and feare not, and haist not with y̆ tymes that are passed thynke vayne thinges, and make no haist of the latter tymes.

And it happened after this, ỳ I wepte agayne, and fasted seuen dayes in like maner, that I might fulfill the thre wekes, which he tolde me. In the eight night was my hert vexed within me agayne, and I beganne to speake before the Hyest: for my spirite was greatly set on fyre, and my soule was in distresse, and I sayde: O LORDE, thou spakest vnto thy creature from the begynnynge (euen the first daye) and saydest: Let heauen and earth be made, and thy worde was a perfecte worke. And then was there the spirite, and the darcknesses were yet on euery syde, and sylence: there was no mans voyce as yet from the. Then commaundedst thou a fayre light to come forth out of thy treasures, that thy worke might appeare and be sene. Gen. 1.a

Upon the seconde daye thou maydest the spirite of the firmament, and commaundedst it to parte asunder & to make a deuysion betwixte the waters, that the one parte might remayne aboue, and the other beneth. Upon the thirde daye thou broughtest to passe, ỳ the waters were gathered in the seuenth parte of the earth: Sixe partes hast thou dryed vp, and kepte them, to the intẽt ỳ men might sowe and occupie hußbandrie therin. As soone as thy worde wente forth, the worke was made. For immediatly there was greate innumerable frute, & many dyuerse pleasures & desyres of temptacion, flowres of chaungeable coloure and smell, and this was done the thirde daye.

Upon the fourth daye thou cõmaundedst that the Sonne shulde geue his shyne, and ỳ Moone hir light: the starres dydest thou sett in ordre, and gauest them a charge, to do seruyce euen vnto man, that was for to be made. Deu. 4.c Upõ the fifth daye thou saydest vnto the seuenth parte (where the waters were gathered) that they shulde bringe forth diuerse beastes, foules and fishes. And so it came to passe, that the donme water and without soule, brought forth lyuynge beastes at the commaundement of God, that all people might prayse thy wonderous workes. Then didest thou preserue two soules, ỳ one thou calldest Enoch and the other Leuiathan, and didest separate the one from the other: for the seuenth parte (namely, where the water was gathered together) might not holde them both. Vnto Enoch thou gauest one parte, which was dryed vp the thirde daye, that he shulde dwell in the same parte, wherin are a thousande hilles. But vnto Leuiathã thou gauest the seuenth parte, namely the wet, and hast kepte him to deuoure wher thou wylt, and whan.

Upon the sixte daye thou gauest cõmandement vnto the earth, that before the shulde bringe forth beastes, catell and all ỳ crepe, & (besydes this) Adam also, whom thou made lorde of all thy creatures: Of him come we all, and the people also, whom thou hast chosen specially vnto thy self. All this have I sayde now and spoken before the, that I might shewe, how that the worlde is made for oure sakes. As for the other people which also come of Adam, thou hast sayde that they are nothinge, but be like a spetle, and hast lykened the abundaũce of them vnto a droppe (that falleth) from the rose of the house.

And now (O LORDE) the heithẽ which haue euer bene reputed as nothinge, haue begynne to be lordes ouer vs, and to deuoure vs: but we thy people (whom thou hast called ỳ firstborne, thy only begotten, and thy feruent louer) are geuen in to their handes and power. Yf the worlde now be made for oure sakes, why haue we not the inheritaunce in possession with the worlde? How longe shall this endure?

The VII. Chapter.

And it happened after that I had spoken out these wordes, there was sent vnto me an angell (which had bene with me also the nightes afore) and he sayde vnto me: Up Esdras, and heare the wordes that I am come to tell the. And I sayde: speake my LORDE my God. Then sayde he vnto me: The see is sett in a wyde place, ỳ it might be depe and greate: but the intraũce is narow and small like a ryuer. For who wolde go in to the see, to loke vpon it, and to rule it? Yf he went not thorow the narow, how might he come in to the brode?

Item, another. A cite is buylded and sett vpon a brode felde, and is full of all goodes: the intraunce is narow and sodane, like as ỳ there were a fyre at the right hande, and a depe water at the left, and as it were only one strate path betwixte thẽ both, so small, that there coude but one man go there.

Yf this cite now were geuen to an heyre, he neuer wente thorow this parlous way, how wolde he receaue his inheritaũce? And I sayde: It is so, LORDE. Then sayde he: euen so is Israel also a porcion. And why? for their sakes haue I made the worlde: & when Adam trãsgressed my statutes, then was ỳ thinge iudged that was done. Then were the intraunces of the worlde made narow, ful of sorow and trawayle: They are but few & ewell, full of parels and labour. For the intraunces of the fore worlde were wyde and sure, and broughte immortall frute.

B If they now which are entred in to this worlde, maye not comprehende these strayte and vayne thinges, moch lesse maye they cõprehende and vnderstonde the secrete thinges: Why disquieteste thou thy selfe then, seynge thou art but a corruptible mã? And what woldest thou knowe, where as thou art but mortall: And why hast thou not receaued in to thine hert the thinge that is for to come, but that is present?

Thẽ sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, thou hast ordened in thy lawe, that the righteous shulde inheret these thinges, but that the vnfaithfull and vngodly shulde perishe. Nevertheles the righteous shall suffre strayte thinges, and hope for wyde: for they that have lyued vngodly & suffred strayte thinges, shal not se the wyde.

And he saide vnto me: There is no iudge aboue God, and none that hath vnderstondinge aboue the Hyest. For there be many yͭ perish, because they despyse yͭ lawe of God that is sett before them. For God hath geven strayte commaundement to soch as come, that they knowe what they do, and how they shulde lyue: and yf they kepte this, they shulde not be punyshed.

Neverthels they were not obedient vnto him, but spake agaynst him: ymagined vayne thinges, & purposed to synne, and saydemoreover, that there was no God, & that God regarded it not. His wayes have they not knowne, his lawe have they despysed, & denyed his promyses: in his statutes & ordinaunces have they not bene faithfull & stedfast, and have not performed his workes.

C And therfore Esdras, vnto the full, plenty: and to the emptye, emptynesse. Beholde, the tyme shal come, yͭ these tokens which I have tolde the, shal come to passe, & the bryde shall appeare: & the earth yͭ now passeth awaye, shalbe shewed: & whoso ever is delyuered from yͭ forsayde evels, shal se my wõders. For my sonne Jesus shal be openly declared, wͭ those yͭ be wͭ him: & they yͭ remayne, shal be mery in foure hundreth yeares.

After these same yeares shall my sonne Christ dye, and all men that have life: and yͭ worlde shalbe turned in to the olde sylence seuen dayes, like as in the fore iudgmentes, so that no man shall remayne. And after seuẽ dayes, the worlde that yet awaketh not, shalbe rayssed vp, & shal dye corrupte. And the earth shal restore those that have slepte in her, and so shall the dust those that dwell in slẽce, and the secrete places shal delyuer those that be committed vnto them. And yͭ Hyest hyest shal be openly declared vpon the seate of iudgment, & all misery shal vanysh awaye, and lõge suffringe shalbe gathered together. But the iudgment shall contynue, yͭ trueth shal remayne, and faith shal ware stroge, the worke shal folowe, and the rewarde shall be shewed, the righteousnesses shall watch, and the vnrighteousnesses shall beare no rule.

D Then sayde I: Abraham prayed first for the Sodomites, & Moses for the fathers yͭ synned in the wyldernes, & he yͭ came after him for Israel, in yͭ tyme of Achas and Samuel: and David for yͭ destruccion, and Salomon for them that came in to the Sanctuary, & Helias for those that receaued rayne, and for the deed, that he might lyue: and Ezechias for yͭ people in the tyme of Sennacherib: & dyuerse other in like maner, which have prayed for many. Gen.18. Exo.32. 3.Re.24. 2.Par.6. 3.Re.17. 4.Re.18 and 19.

E Sithẽ so now, seynge yͭ corrupte is growne vp, and wickednes increased, and the righteous have prayed for the vngodly, wherfore shal it not be so now also?

He answered me, and sayde: This present worlde is not yͭ ende, there remayneth moch honoure in it, therfore have they prayed for the weake. But the daye of dome shalbe the ende of this tyme, and yͭ begynninge of the immortalite for to come, wherin all corrupcion vanysheth, all voluptuousnes is lowsed, all myßbeleve taken awaye, righteousnes growne, and the verite sprunge vp. Then shall no man be able to save him that is destroyed, ner to oppresse him yͭ hath gottẽ yͭ victory. I answered thẽ, & sayde: This is my first & last sayenge: yͭ it had bene better, not to have geven the earth vnto Adam: or els whan it was geuẽ him, to kepe him that he shulde not synne. For what profit is it for men now in this present tyme to lyue in heynes, & after death to loke for punyßment? O thou Adã, what hast thou done? For though it was thou yͭ synned, thou art not fallẽ alone, but we all yͭ come of the. For what profit is it vnto vs, yf there be promysed vs an immortall tyme, where as we medle wͭ deadly workes? & that there is promysed vs an euerlastinge hope, where as we oͤ selves are ewell & vayne? & yͭ there are layed vp for vs dwellynges of healthy & fredome, where as we have lyued evell? and that the worshipe of yͭ Hyest is kepte to defende them, which haue led a pacient life, where as we haue walked in ỳ most wicked wayes of all: and that there shalbe shewed a paradyse, whose frute endureth for ever, wherin is fredome and medycyne, where as we shal not go in: for we haue walked in vnpleasaunt places: And that the faces of them which haue abstayned, shal shyne aboue the starres, where as oure faces shalbe black and darcke: For whyle we lyued and dyd vnrighteously, we considered not, that we shulde suffre therfore after death.

§ Thē answered he me, and sayde: This is the consideracion & thought of the battayl, which man hath vpon earth: that yf he be ouercome, he shall suffre as thou hast sayde. But yf he gett the victory, he shall receaue the thinge that I saye. For this is the life, whereof Moses spake vnto the people, whyle he lyued, sayenge: Chose the life, that thou mayest lyue. Nevertheles they beleued him not, nether the prophetes after him, No ner me which haue spoken vnto them, that heuynes shulde not reach vnto them to their destruccion, like as ioye is for to come ouer those, that haue suffred thē selues to be enfourmed in saluacion.

I answered then & sayde: I knowe LORDE, that the hyest is mercyfull, in ỳ he hath mercy vpon them, which are not yet in the worlde, and vpon those also that walke in his lawe: and that he is pacient and longe sufferinge towarde those that haue synned in their workes: and that he is liberall to geue where as it requyreth: and that he is of greate mercy, for he multiplieth his louynge kyndnesses towarde those that are present, and that are past, and to them which are for to come. For yf he multiplie not his mercies, the worlde shal not be made lyuynge, with those that dwell therin: he geueth also, for yf he gaue not of his goodnesse, that they which haue done euell, might be eased, the ten thousande parte of men shulde not be made lyuynge. And yf the iudge forgaue not those ỳ be healed with his worde, and yf he wolde destroye ỳ multitude that stryueth, there shulde be very few left in an innumerable multitude.

The VIII. Chapter.

AND he answered me, sayēge: The most hyest made this worlde for many, but the worlde to come for few. I wyl tell the a symilitude, Eßdras: As whan thou arest the earth, it shal saye vnto the, that it geueth moch moulde, wherof erthen vessels are made, but litle of it ỳ golde cōmeth of.

Euen so is it with the worke of this worlde. There be many created, but few shall be preserued. Then answered I & sayde: Then swalowe vp the witt (thou soule) and drawe the vnderstondinge, for thou art agreed to herken and to geue eare, and wyllinge to prophecie: for thou hast no longer space geuen the, but only to lyue. O LORDE, wilt thou not geue thy seruaunt leue, ỳ we maye praye before the, and that thou mayest gratisede vnto oure hert, and burylde oure vnderstondinge, that there maye come frute of it: and that euery one which is corrupte, and beareth the state and place of a man, maye lyue?

For thou art alone, and we all are one worckmanshipe of thy handes, like as thou hast sayde, and like as the body is fashioned now in the childeßbed, and thou geuest the membres, and thy creature is preserued in fyre and water: & ix. monethes doth thy worke suffre thy creature, which is fashioned in her: but the thinge that preserueth and it ỳ is preserued, shal both be kepte together: whan tyme is, the childeßbedd delyvereth ỳ thinge, that is kepte and growne in her.

For thou hast commaunded the breastes to geue mylck vnto the frute, that the thinge which is created and fashioned, maye be norished for a tyme: and then thou disposest and ordrest it with thy mercy, bryngest it vp with thy righteousnes, nurturest it in thy lawe, and refourmest it with thy vnderstondinge, mortifiest it as thy creature, and makest it lyuynge as thy worke. Seinge then that thou destroyest him, which wt so greate labours is created and fashioned thorow thy commaundement, thou coudest lyghtly ordene also, that the thinge which is made, might be preserued.

And this I speake now of all men in generall, as thou knowest: but of thy people, for whose sake I am sory: and of thy inheritaunce, for whose cause I mourne: and of Israel, for whom I am wofull: and for Jacob, for whose sake I am greued: therfore begynne I to praye before the, for my self and for them, for I se the fall of vs, euen of vs, that dwell vpon earth. But I haue herde the swiftnes of the iudge, which is to come: therfore heare my voyce, and vnderstode my wordes, and I shal speake before the.

This is the begynnynge of the wordes of Eßdras, before he was receaued: O LORDE, thou that dwellest in euerlastynge, whose eyes are lift vp in the ayre, whose stalle is exceadinge hye, whose glory and mais-ny maye not be comprehēded, before whom the hoostes of heauen stonde with tremblinge, whose kepinge is turned in winde and fyre, whose worde is true, whose talkynge is stedfast, whose commaundement is stronge, whose ordynaunce is fearfull, whose lokeduyeth vp the depthes, whose wrath maketh the mountaynes to melt awaye, & whose trueth beareth wytnes: O heare ỳ prayer of thy seruaunt, and marck with thine eares the peticion of thy creature.

For whyle I lyue, I wil speake: and so lōge as I haue vnderstondinge, I will answere. O loke not vpō the synnes of thy people, which serue ỳ in the trueth. Haue no respecte vnto the wicked studies of the Heithen, but to the desyre of those that kepe thy testimonies with sorowes. Thinke not vpon those that haue walked faynedly before the, but vpon them, which with wyll haue knowne thy feare.

Let it not be thy wyll to destroye them, which haue had beastly maners, but to loke vpon them that haue clearly taught thy lawe. Take thou no indignacion at them, which are worse then beastes: but loue them, that allwaye put their trust in ỳ righteousnes and glory: for we and oure fathers haue all the same sicknes and disease, but because of oure synnes thou shalt be called mercifull.

D For yf thou haste mercy vpon vs, thou shalt be called mercifull, where as we haue no workes of righteousnes: for ỳ righteous which haue layed vp many good workes together, shall out of their dedes receaue rewarde. For what is man, that thou shuldest take displeasure at him? Or what is the corruptible mortall generacion, that thou shuldest be so rough towarde him?

For of a trueth there is no man amonge them that be borne, but he hath dealt wickedly: and amonge the faithfull there is none, which hath not done amysse. For in this (O L O R D E) thy righteousnes & thy goodnes shalbe praysed and declared, yf thou be mercifull vnto them, which are not rych in good workes.

Then answered he me and sayde: Some thinges haste thou spoken a right, and acordinge vnto thy wordes it shal be. For I wil not verely cōsidre the worke of them, which haue synned before death, before the iudgment, before destrucciō, but I wyll reioyse ouer the worke and thought of ỳ righteous. I wil remembre also the pilgramege, the hyre and the rewarde. Like as I haue spoken now, so shall it come to passe. For as the husbād man soweth mocke sede vpon the grounde, and planteth many trees, and yet allwaye the thinge that is sowne or plāted is not all kepte safe, nether doth it all take rote: Euen so is it of them that are sowne in the worlde, they shal not all be preserued.

I answered then & sayde: If I haue fonde grace, then let me speake. Like as the husbāde mans sede perisheth, yf it receaue not rayne in due season, or yf there come to mocke rayne vpon it: Euen so perisheth man also, which is created with thy handes, and is like vnto thine owne ymage and to thy self, for whose sake thou haste made all thinges, and lickened him vnto the husbande mans sede. Be not wroth at vs (O LORDE) but spare thy people, and haue mercy vpon thine owne inheritaunce: O be mercifull vnto thy creature.

Then answered he me and sayde: Thinges present are for the present, and thinges to come for soch as be to come. For thou wāteste yet mocke, seynge thou mayest loue my creature aboue me: I haue ofte times drawne nye vnto the, but neuer to the vnrighteous. In this also thou art marueloꝰ before the Hyest, in that thou haste humbled thy self, as it becommeth the, and haste not regarded thine owne self, ỳ thou art had in soch honoure amonge the righteous. Therfore shal greate wrechidnes and mysery come vpon them, that in the latter tyme shal dwell in ỳ worlde, for they haue walked in greate pryde.

But vnderstonde thou for thy self, and seke out glory for soch as be like the: for vnto you is paradyse opened, the tre of life is plāted, the tyme to come is prepared, plenteousnes made ready: a cite is builded for you, and a rest is prepared, yee perfecte goodnes and wyssdome. The rote of euell is marked from you, the weaknes and mothis hyd from you, & into hell flyeth corrupcion in forgetfulnes. Sorowes are vanyshed awaye, and in the ende is shewed the treasure of immortalite. And therfore aske thou no more questions, cōcernynge the multitude of them that perisshe. For they haue taken libertie, despysed the Hyest, thought scorne of his lawe, and forsaken his wayes.

Moreouer, they haue troden downe his righteous, and sayde in their hert, that there is no God, yee and that wittingly, for they dye. For like as the thinge that I haue spoken of, is made ready for you: Euē so is thyrst and payne prepared for them. For it was not his wil that man shulde come to naught: but they which be created, haue defyled the name of him that made them, and are vnthankfull vnto him, which prepared life for them. And therfore is my iudgment now at hande. These thinges haue I not shewed vnto all men, but vnto few: namely, vnto the, and to soch as be like the.

Then answered I and sayde: Beholde O LORDE, now hast thou shewed me the multitude of the tokens, which thou wilt begynne to do at the last: but at what tyme and whan, thou hast not shewed me.

The IX. Chapter.

A HE answered me then and saide: Measure thou the tyme diligenly in itself, whan thou seist that one parte of the tokens come to passe, which I haue tolde the before: so shalt thou vnderstonde, that it is the very same tyme, wherin the Hyest wil begynne to vysit the worlde, which he made. And whā there shalbe sene earthquake and vproure of the people in the worlde, then shalt thou well vnderstonde, that the most Hyest spake of those thinges, from the dayes that were before the, euen from the begynnynge.

For like as all that is made in the worlde, hath a begynnynge and ende, and the ende is manyfest: Euen so the tymes also of the Hyest haue playne begynnynges in wonders and signes, and the ende in worke and in tokens. And euery one that shall be saued, and shall be able to escape by his workes & by faith (wherin ye haue beleued) shall be preserued from the saide perels, and shal se my sauioure in my londe and within my borders, for I haue halowed me from the worlde. Then shall they be in carefulnesse, which now haue abused my waies: and they that haue cast them out despytefully, shall dwell in paynes.

B For soch as in their life haue receaued benefites, and haue not knowne me, and they that haue abhorred my lawe, whyle they had yet fredome, and whan they had yet open rowme of amendemēt and conuersion, & vnderstode not, but despysed it: the same must knowe it after death in payne. And therfore be thou nomore carefull, how the vngodly shalbe punyshed, & how the righteous shalbe saued, and whose the worlde is, and for whom the worlde, and whan it is. Then answered I and sayde: I haue talked before & now I speake, and wyl speake also hereafter, that there be many moo of them which perish, then shal be saued, like as the floude is greater then the droppes.

And he answered me, sayenge: like as the felde is, so is also the sede: as the floures be, so are the colours also: soch as the workman is, soch is also the worke: and as the husbandman is himself, so is his husbandrye also, for it was the tyme of the worlde. And whan I prepared for them that are now, or euer the worlde was made, wher in they shulde dwell, then was there no man that withstode me. Now whan euery one was, and the mater C also in the worlde which is now prepared, and the moneth that ceaseth not, and the lawe which is vnsearcheable, their maners were corrupte. So I considered the worlde, and beholde, there was parell, because of the thoughtes that were come in to it. And I sawe, and spared thē greatly, and haue kepte me a wynebery of the grapes, and a plante from amonge many generacions. Let the multitude perish thē, which are growne vp in vayne, and let my grape & wynebery be kepte: euen my plante: for with greate labore haue I made it vp.

Neuertheles yf thou wilt take vpon the yet seuen dayes mo (but thou shalt not fast in them) go thy waye then in to the felde of floures, where no house is buylded, and eate onely of the floures of the felde, taist not flesh, drinke no wine, but eate floures onely. Praye vnto the Hyest contynually, so will I come, and talke with the.

So I wente my waye and came in to the D felde which is called Ardath (like as he commaunded me) and there I sat amonge the floures, and ate of the herbes of the felde, and the meate of the same satisfied me. After seuen dayes I sat vpon the grasse, & my hert was vexed within me like as afore: and I opened my mouth, and beganne to talke before the Hyest, and saide: O LORDE, thou hast shewed thy self vnto vs, thou hast declared and opened thy self vnto oure fathers in the wylder- Exo. 19. nes, in a place where no man dwelleth, in a Deu. 32. baren place, whan they came out of Egipte, and thou spakest, sayēge: Heare me O Israel, and marke my wordes thou sede of Jacob. Beholde, I sowe my lawe in you, and it shal brynge frute in you, & ye shalbe honored in it for euer. For oure fathers which receaued the lawe, kepte it not, and obserued not thy ordinaunces and statutes, & the frute of the lawe was not declared: for it might not, for why? it was thine. For they that receaued it, perished, because they kepte not the thinge that was sowne in them.

It is a custome whan the grounde receiueth sede, or the see a shipp, or a vessell meate and drynke, that, whan it periſheth or is bro ten wherin a thinge is ſowne, or wherin eny thinge is put: the thinges alſo periſhe & are broken, which are ſowne or putt therin. But vnto vs it hath not happened ſo: for we ỹ haue receaued the lawe, periſh in ſynne, and oure hert alſo which receaued the lawe: not withſtondinge the lawe periſheth not, but remayneth in his labour.

1.40.a And whan I conſidered theſe thinges in Tim.2.a my hert after this maner, I loked aboute me 11.10.d with myne eyes, and vpon the right ſyde I ſawe a woman, which mourned ſore, made greate lamentacion, and wepte with loude voyce: hir clothes were rent in peces, & ſhe had aßſhes vpon hir heade.

¶ Then let I my thoughtes go, ỹ I was in, & turned me vnto her, & ſayde: wherfore wepeſt thou? why art thou ſo ſory & diſcomfor ted? And ſhe ſayde vnto me: Syr, let me be-wayle my ſelf & take yet more ſorowe: for I am ſore vexed in my mynde, & brought very lowe. And I ſaide vnto her: what ayleth ỹ?
Or who hath done eny thinge to ỹ? tell me.
She ſayde: I haue bene vnfrutefull and baren, and haue had an huſßband thirtie yea-
res. And theſe ccc. yeares I do nothinge els daye and nyght and all houres, but make my prayer to ỹ hyeſt. After thirtie yeares God herde me thy handmayden, loked vpon my miſery, conſidred my trouble, and gaue me a ſonne, and I was glad of him, ſo was my huſßbād alſo and all my neyghbours, and we gaue greate honoure vnto ỹ Mightie. And I nouſhed him with greate trauayle. So whan he grewe vp, & came to the tyme, that he ſhulde haue a wife, I made a feaſt.

The X. Chapter.

A ND it happened that whan my ſonne
wente in to his chamber, he fell dowe ne, and dyed: thē ouerthrew we all the lightes, and all my neyghbours roſe vp to cō forte me. Thē toke I my reſt vnto the ſecōde daye at nyght: & whan they had all reſted, ỹ
they might comforte me, I reſted alſo, and ro
ſe vp by nyght, and fled, and am come hither
in to this felde, as thou ſeiſt: and am purpo
ſed not to come in thē cite, but to remayne
here, and nether to eate ner drynke, but conti nually to mourne and to faſt, vntill I dye.

Then let I my meditacions and thought tes fall, that I was in, and ſpake to her in diſpleaſure: Thou fooliſh woman, ſeiſt thou not oure heuynes and mournynge, and what happeneth vnto vs? how Sion ỹ mother is all wo full and ſory, and how ſhe is cleane brought dowme and in miſery? ſeinge we be all now in heuynes, & make oure mone (for we be all ſorou full.) As for the heuynes that thou takeſt, it is but for one ſonne. Demaunde the earth, and ſhe ſhal tell the, that it is ſhe which ought (by reaſon) to mourne, for the fall of ſo many that growe vpon her.
For from the begynnynge all men are borne of her, & other ſhal come: and beholde, they walke allmoſt all into deſtruccion, and many of them ſhalbe roted out.

Who ſhulde then (by reaſon) make more mournynge, then ſhe, that hath loſt ſo greate
a multitude? and not thou, which art ſory
but for one. But yf thou woldeſt ſaye vnto me: My mournynge is not like the mournyn ge of the earth, for I haue loſt the frute of my body, which I bare with heuynes: as for the earth, accordinge to the ordynaunce of ỹ earth onely, ſo that many are gone awaye in her, as it is come to paſſe: Then ſaye I vnto B
the: like as thou haſt borne with trauayle & ſorowe, euen ſo the earth alſo from the begyn nynge geneth hir frute vnto man, for him ỹ made her. And therfore withholde thy ſorowe and heuynes by thy ſelf, and loke what happeneth vnto ỹ, beare it ſtrōgly. For yf thou Heb.12.
iudgeſt the marck & ende of God to be righteous and good, and receaueſt his councell
in tyme, thou ſhalt be commended therin.
Go thy waye then into the cite to thy huſbande.

And ſhe ſayde vnto me: that wyll I not do, I will not go in to the cite, but heare will I dye. So I commoned more with her, and ſayde: Do not ſo, but be cōceled, and folowe me: for how many falles hath Sion? Be of good comforte because of the ſorowe of Jeruſalem. For thou ſeiſt that oure Sanctuary is layed waiſt, oure aulter broken, oure temple deſtroyed, oure playenge of inſtrumen-tes and ſyngynge layed dowme, the thankes-geuynge put to ſylence, & myrth is vaniſhed awaye, the light of oure candelſtick is quen ched, ỹ Arke of the couenaunt is takē from vs, all oure holy thinges are defyled, and the name that is called vpon ouer vs, is diſhonoured, oure children are put to ſhame, oure preſtes are brent, oure Lewites are caried awaye in to captiuyte, oure virgins are defyled, and oure wynes rauyſhed, oure righteous men ſpoyled, and oure childrē deſtroyed, oure yonge men are brought in bōdage, and oure ſtrōge worthies are become weake: and Sion (which ſeale is ỹ greateſt of all) is low ſed vp from hir worſhipe: for ſhe is delivered in to the handes of them that hate vs.

And therfore ſhake of ỹ greate heuynes, C and putt awaye the multitude of ſorowes: that the Mightie maye be mercyfull vnto the, and that the Hyeſt maye geue the reſt from ẏ laboure and trauayle. And it happened, that whan I was talkynge with her, hir face dyd ſhyne & glyſter, ſo that I was afraied of her, and muſed what it might be. And immediatly ſhe caſt out a greate voyce, very fearfull, ſo that ẏ earth ſhoke at the noyſe of the woman: and I loked, and beholde, the woman appeared vnto me nomore: but there was a cite buylded, and a place was ſhewed from the grounde and foundacion.

Then was I afrayed, and cried with lou de voyce, and ſayde: where is Vriel the an-
Eſd. 4. a gell, which came to me at the firſt? For he hath cauſed me to come in many conſideracions and hye thoughtes, and myne ende is turned to corrupcion, and my prayer to rebuke. And as I was ſpeakynge theſe wordes, he came vnto me, and loked vpon me, and I laye as one that had bene deed, and myne vnderſtandinge was altered, and he toke me by the right hande, and comforted me, and ſet me vp vpon my fete, and ſayde vnto me: what ayleth the? and why is thine vnderſtandinge vexed? and the vnderſtondinge of thy hert, and wherfore art thou ſory? And I ſayde: Becauſe thou haſt forſaken me: and
Eſd. 9. a I haue done accordynge vnto thy wordes, I wente in to the felde, and there haue I ſene
D thinges, that I am not able to expreſſe. He ſaide vnto me: Stõde vp and be manly, and I ſhal geue the exortacion.

Then ſayde I: Speake on to me my LORDE, forſake me not, leſt I dye in vayne: for I haue ſene that I knewe not, & herde that I do not knowe. Or ſhall my vnderſtondynge be diſceaued, and my mynde? But now I beſeke the, that thou wilt ſhewe thy ſeruaunt of this wõder. He anſwered me thẽ and ſayde: heare me, and I ſhall enſourme the, and tell the wherfore thou art afrayed, for the Hyeſt hath opened many ſecrete thynges vnto the.

He hath ſene that thy waye is right, and that thou takeſt ſorowe continually for thy people, and makeſt greate lamentacion for Sion: and therfore vnderſtonde the viſion which thou ſaweſt a litle whyle agoo after this maner: Thou ſaweſt a woman mournynge, and thou haſt comforted her: Neuertheles now ſeiſt thou the lickneſs of the woman nomore, but thou thoughteſt there was a cite buylded: and like as ſhe tolde the of the fall of her ſonne, ſo is this the anſwere: The woman whom thou ſaweſt, is Sion: and where as ſhe tolde the, that ſhe hath bene thirtie yeares vnfruteful and baren, thoſe are the xxx. yeares, wherin there was no offeringe made in her.

But after xxx. yeares Salomon buylded her, and offred, and then bare the baren a ſonne. And where as ſhe tolde the, that ſhe norriſhed him with laboure, that was the dwellynge of Jeruſalem. But where as the ſonne dyed in hir chamber, that is the fall of Jeruſalem. And thou ſaweſt hir lickeneſſe, how ſhe mourned for hir ſonne: and whas elſ happened vnto her, I haue ſhewed ẏ. And now God ſeyth, that thou art ſory in thy mynde, and ſuffreſt from ẏ hert for her: and ſo hath he ſhewed the hir clearneſſe, and the fayrnes of hir bewtye.

And therfore I bad the remayne in the felde, where no houſe is buylded. For I knew ẏ the Hyeſt wolde ſhew this vnto the, therfore I commaunded the to go into the felde, where no foundacion ner buyldinge is. For in the place where the Hyeſt wyll ſhewe his cite, there ſhall be no mans buyldinge. And therfore feare not, and let not thine hert be afrayed, but go thy waye in, and ſe the glorious and fayre buyldinge, and how greate it is, and how greate thou thinkeſt it after the meaſure of thine eyes, & then ſhalt thou heare as moch as thine eares maye compreh̃de. For thou art bleſſed aboue many other, and art called with the Hyeſt, as ẏ few. But tomorow at night thou ſhalt remayne here, and ſo ſhal ẏ Hyeſt ſhewe the viſions of hye thinges, which he wyll do vnto them that dwell vpon earth in ẏ laſt dayes. So I ſlepte the ſame night like as he cõmaunded me.

The XI. Chapter.

Then ſawe I a dreame: and beholde, there came vp from ẏ ſee an Aegle, which had xij. wynges and three hedes: And I ſawe, and beholde, he ſpred his wynges ouer all the earth, and all the wyndes of the ayre blew in them, and ſo they were put together agayne. And I beheld, and out of his fethers there grew other litle contrary fethers: the heades reſted, the head in the myddeſt was greater then the other, yet reſted it with the reſidue.

Moroner I ſawe, that the Aegle flew w̃ his wynges, and raigned vpon earth, & ouer all them that dwell vpon the earth: and I ſawe ẏ all thinges vnder heauen were ſubiecte vnto him, and no man ſpake againſt him, no not one creature vpon earth. I ſawe alſo that the Aegle ſtode vp vpon his clawes, &

gaue a ſounde w^t his fethers, & a voyce ſaye̅ geafter this maner: watch not all together, ſlepe every mā in his owne place, & watch for a tyme, but let the heades be preſerued at the laſt. Nevertheles I ſawe, ẏ the voyce wente not out of his heades, but from the myddeſt of his body. And I nombred his cō̄trary fethers, & beholde, there were eight of them. And I loked, & beholde, vpon the right ſyde there aroſe one fether, & raigned ouer all the earth. And it happened, ẏ whan it raigned, the ende of it came, & the place therof appeared no more. So the nexte folowinge ſtode vp, & raigned, & had a greate tyme: & it happened, ẏ whan it raigned, the ende of it came alſo like as the firſt, ſo that it appeared nomore.

Then came there a voyce vnto it, & ſayde: Heare thou ẏ haſt kepte in the earth ſo lōge, this I ſaye vnto the, before thou begynneſt to appeare nomore: There ſhal none after ẏ attreyne vnto thy tyme. Then aroſe the thirde, & raigned as the other afore, & appeared nomore alſo. So wēte it with all the reſidue one after another, ſo ẏ euery one raigned, & thē appeared nomore. Thē I loked, & beholde, in proceſſe of tyme the fethers ẏ folowed were ſet vp vpō the right ſyde, ẏ they might rule alſo: and ſōme of thē ruled, but within a while they appeared nomore: for ſōme of thē were ſet vp, but ruled not. After this I loked, & beholde, ẏ xij. fethers appeared nomore, and the two wynges: & there was nomore vpon the Aegles body, but two heades that reſted, & fire fethers. Then ſawe I alſo, ẏ the fire fethers were parted in two, & remayned vnder the heade, ẏ was vpon the right ſyde, for the foure cōtynued in their place. So I loked, and beholde, they that were vnder the wynges, thought to ſet vp them ſelues, and to haue the rule. Then was there one ſet vp, but ſhortly it appeared nomore, and the ſeconde were ſooner awaye then the firſt. And I behelde, and lo, the two thought alſo by thē ſelues to raigne: & whā they ſo thought, beholde, there waked one of the heades that were at reſt, namely, it that was in the myddeſt, for that was the greater of the two heades. And then I ſawe, that the two heades were fylled with him, and the heade was turned with them ẏ were by him, & ate vp ẏ two vnder wynges, ẏ wolde haue raigned.

But this heade put ẏ whole earth in feare, and bare rule in it, ouer all thoſe ẏ dwelt vpon earth with moch laboure, and he had the gouernaunce of the worlde, ouer all the ſoules that haue bene. After this I loked, and beholde, the heade that was in the middeſt, ſodenly appeared nomore, like as ẏ wynges: then came the two heades, which ruled vpon earth, & ouer thoſe that dwelt therin. And I behelde, & lo, the heade vpon the right ſide, deuoured it that was vpon the left ſyde. And I herde a voyce, which ſayde vnto me: loke before the, and conſidre the thinge that thou ſeiſt. Then I ſawe, and beholde, as it were a lyon that roareth, rennynge haiſtely out of ẏ wod, and he ſent out a mans voyce vnto the Aegle, and ſayde: Heare thou, I wyl talke with the, and the Hyeſt ſhal ſaye vnto the: Is it not thou that haſt the victory of the foure beaſtes, whom I made to raigne vpon earth and in my worlde, and that ẏ ende of their times might come thorow thē? And the fourth came, and ouerwanne all the beaſtes that were paſt, and had power ouer the worlde with greate fearfulnes, and ouer the whole compaſſe of the earth w^t the moſt wicked laboure, and ſo longe time dwelt he vpon the earth with diſceate, & the earth haſt thou iudged not with trueth. For thou haſt troubled the meke, thou haſt hurte the peaceable and quyete, thou haſt loued lyers, and deſtroyed the dwellynges of them that brought forth frute, and haſt caſt downe the walles of ſoch as dyd the no harme. Therfore is thy wrongeous dealynge and blaſphemy come vp vnto the Hyeſt, and thy pryde vnto the Mightie. The Hyeſt alſo hath loked vpō the proude tymes, and beholde, they are ended, and their abhominacions are fulfilled. And therfore appeare nomore thou Aegle, and thy horrible wynges, and thy wicked fethers, and thy vngracious heades, and thy ſynfull clawes, and all thy vayne body: that the earth maye be refreſhed, and come agayne to herſelf, whan ſhe is deliuered from thy violence, and that ſhe maye hope for ẏ iudgment and mercy of him that made her.

The XII. Chapter.

AND it happened whā ẏ Lyō ſpake theſe wordes vnto ẏ Aegle, * ẏ heade ẏ afore had ẏ vpperhāde, appeared nomore: nether dyd ẏ foure wynges appeare eny more, ẏ came to hī, & were ſett vp to raigne, & their kyngdome was ſmall & full of vproure. A rede. I ſawe and beholde.

And I ſawe, & beholde, they appeared no more, & ẏ whole body of ẏ Aegle was brēt, & the earth was in greate feare. Then awaked I out of the traunce of my mynde, and from greate feare, and ſayde vnto my ſprete: Lo, this haſt thou geuen me, in ẏ thou ſearcheſt out the wayes of the Hyeſt: lo, yet am I wery in my minde, and very weake in my ſprete, and litle ſtrēgth is there in me, for the greate feare that I receaued this might. Therfore wil I now beſeke the Hyeſt, ỳ he wyl comforte me vnto the ende, & I ſayde: LORDE LORDE

B yf I haue founde grace before thy ſight, and yf I am iuſtified with ỳ before many other, & yf my prayer be come vp before thy face, cōforte me then, and ſhew me thy ſeruaunt the interpretacion & playne differēce of this horrible ſight, that thou mayeſt perfectly cōforte my ſoule: for thou haſt iudged me worthy, to ſhew me ỳ laſt of tymes.

And he ſayde vnto me: this is the interpretacion of this ſight, The Aegle whom thou ſaweſt come vp from the ſee, is the kingdome which was ſene in the viſion of thy brother Dan 7. Daniel, but it was no expounded vnto him, for now I declare it vnto the.

Beholde, the dayes come, that there ſhal ryſe vp a kyngdome vpō earth, and it ſhal be feared aboue all the kyngdomes ỳ were before it. In the ſame kyngdome ſhal xij. kynges raigne, one after another. For the ſecōde ſhal begynne to raigne, and ſhal haue more tyme thē the other, & this do ỳ xij. wynges ſignifie,
C which thou ſaweſt. As for the voyce that ſpake, and that thou ſaweſt go out from the heades but not from ỳ body, it betoketh, that after the tyme of that kyngdome there ſhall aryſe greate ſtryuynges, and it ſhal ſtonde in parell of fallynge: neuertheles it ſhal not yet fall, but ſhal be ſet in to his beginnynge. And ỳ eight vnder wynges which thou ſaweſt hāge vnto ỳ wynges of hi, betoketh, ỳ in hi there ſhal aryſe eight kynges, whoſe tyme ſhalbe but ſmall, & their yeares ſwift, & two of them ſhal beare. But whan the middeſt tyme commeth, there ſhal be foure kepte in the tyme, whan his tyme begynneth to come that it maye be ended, but two ſhal be kepte vnto ỳ ende.

And where as thou ſaweſt three heades reſtynge, this is the interpretacion: In his laſt ſhal the Hyeſt rayſe vp three kyngdomes, and call many agayne in to thē, & they ſhal haue the dominion of the earth, and of thoſe that dwell therin, with moch labō aboue all thoſe ỳ were before thē. Therfore are they called ỳ heades of the Aegle: for it is they ỳ ſhal bringe forth his wickednes agayne, & ỳ ſhal performe & fynyſh his laſt. And where as thou ſaweſt, that ỳ greate heade appeared nomore, it ſignifieth, that one of them ſhal dye vpō his bed, & yet with payne, for the two that remayne, ſhalbe ſlayne with the ſwerde. For the ſwerde of the one ſhal deuoure the other, but at the laſt ſhal he fall thorow the ſwerde himſelf.

And where as thou ſaweſt two vnderwynges vpon the heade that is on the right ſyde, it ſignifieth, that it is they, whō the Hyeſt hath kepte vnto their ende: this is a ſmall kyngdome, & full of trouble. The Lyon whō thou ſaweſt ryſinge vp out of the wodd and roaringe, and ſpeakinge vnto the Aegle, and rebukynge him for his vnrighteouſneſſe, in the wynde, which the Hyeſt hath kepte for them and for their wickednesſe vnto the ende: he ſhal reproue them, and rente them aſunder before them. For he ſhal ſett them hynge before the iudgment, and ſhal rebuke them: for the reſidue of my people ſhalbe ſaued with trouble, thoſe ỳ be preſerued euermyne endes: and he ſhal make them ioyfull vntyll the commynge of the daye of iudgment, wherof I haue ſpoken vnto the from the begynnynge. This is the dreame that thou ſaweſt, and this is the interpretacion. Thou only haſt bene mete to knowe the ſecrete of the Hyeſt.

Therfore wryte all theſe thinges ỳ thou haſt ſene in a boke, and hyde them, and teach thē the wyſe in the people, whoſe hertes thou knoweſt maye comprehēde and kepe theſe ſecretes. But wayte thou here ỳ ſelf yet ſeuen dayes moo, that it maye be ſhewed the, whatſo euer it pleaſeth the Hyeſt to declare vnto the, and with that he wente his waye.

And whan all the people perceaued, ỳ the ſeuen dayes were paſt, & I not come agayne in to ỳ cite, they gathered them all togither from the leaſt vnto the moſt, & came vnto me, and ſayde: what haue we offended the? and what euell haue we done agaynſt the, ỳ thou forſakeſt vs, & ſytteſt here in this place? In of all people thou only art left vs, as a grape of the vyne, and as a candell in a darck place, and as an hauen & ſhippe preſerued from ỳ tēpeſt. Haue we not els aduerſite ynough but thou muſt forſake vs? Were it not beter for vs, that we had bene brent with Sion? For we are no better, then they ỳ dyed there: and they wepte wt loude voyce. Then anſwered I thē & ſayde: Be of good cōforte O Iſrael, & be not heuy thou houſe of Iacob: for ỳ Hyeſt hath you in remēbraūce, & ỳ Almighty hath not forgottē you in tētaciō. As for me, I haue not forſakē you, nether am I departed from you: but am come in to this place to praye, becauſe of ỳ myſery of Iſrael, that I might ſeke mercy for ỳ lowe eſtate of yō Sanctuary. And now go yō waye home euery man, and after theſe dayes wyl I come vnto you. So the people wēte their waye in to the cite, like as I commaunded them: but I remayned still in the felde seuen dayes, as ỳ angell bad me, and I ate onely of the floures of the felde, and had my meate of the herbes in those dayes.

The XIII. Chapter.

1 AND it happened after the seuẽ dayes, ỳ I dreamed a dreame by nyght. And beholde, there arose a wynde from the see, that it moued all the floudes therof. And I loked, and beholde, the man was stronge and increased with the cloudes of heauen: and whan he turned his countenaunce to cõsider, all the thinges trembled that were sene vnder him: and whan the voyce wente out of his mouth, all they brent that herde him, like as the earth whan it feleth the fyre.

After these I sawe, & beholde, there was gathered together a multitude of mẽ out of nombre from the foure wyndes of the heauẽ, to fyght agaynst ỳ man, that came out from ỳ see. And I loked, & beholde, he grawed him self a greate mõtayne, and flew vp vpon it. But I wolde haue sene the border or place, wherout the hill was grawen, & I coude not.

I sawe after these, ỳ all they which came to fyght agaynst him, were sore afrayed, and yet durst they fyght. Neuertheles whan he sawe the fearsnesse and violence of the people, he nether lift vp his hande ner helde swerde, ner eny weapen: but onely (as I sawe) he sent out of his mouth as it had bene a blast of fyre, and out of his lippes ỳ wynde of the flamme: and out of his tõge he cast out sparkes and stormes, and they were all myxte together: the blast of fyre, the wynde of the flãmes, and ỳ greate storme, & fell with a russhe vpon ỳ people, which was prepared to fyght & dist thẽ vp euerychone: so that of the innumerable multitude there was nothinge sene, but onely dust & smoke. Whan I sawe this, I was afrayed.

2 Afterwarde sawe I the same man come downe from the mountayne, and callinge vnto him another peaceable people: and there came moch people vnto him: some were glad some were sory, some of them were bounde, so that they were caried and brought forth.

Then was I sick thorow greate feare, and I awaked, and sayde: thou hast shewed ỳ seruaunt all ỳ wõders frõ ỳ begynnynge, & hast counted me worthy, ỳ thou mightest receaue my prayer: shewe me now yet the interpretacion of this dreame. For thus I cõsidre in my vnderstandinge: Wo vnto them that shal be left in those dayes, & moch more wo vnto thẽ that are not left behynde: for they that were not left, were in heuynes.

Now vnderstonde I ỳ thinges that are layed vp in the latter dayes, which shal happen vnto them, and to those that are not left behynde. Therfore are they come in to greate parells, and many necessities, like as these dreames declare. Yet is it easier, ỳ he which suffreth hurte, come in these, then to passe awaye as a cloude out of the worlde, and now to se ỳ thinges ỳ shal happen in ỳ last.

Then answered he me, and sayde: The C interpretacion of the sight shall I shewe the, and I will open vnto the, the thinge ỳ thou hast requyred. For thou hast spoken of them that are left behynde, and this is the interpretacion. He that taketh awaye the parell in that tyme, hath kepte himself. They that be fallen in to harme, are soch as haue workes & faith vnto the Most mightie. Knowe this therfore, that they which be left behynde, are more blessed, then they that be deed. This is the meanynge of the vision. Where as thou sawest a man commynge vp from the depe of the see, ỳ same is he whom God the Hyest hath kepte a greate season, which by his owne self shall delyuer his creature, & he shal ordre thẽ that are left behynde. And where as thou sawest, ỳ out of his mouth there came a blast of wynde, fyre & storme, & how ỳ he lift vp nether swerde ner weapen, but ỳ the russhinge in of him destroyed the whole multitude, ỳ came to fyght agaynst him: it signifieth, that the dayes come, whan God wyll delyuer thẽ ỳ are vpon earth, & in a traunce of mynde shall he come vpon thẽ, ỳ dwell in the earth. And one shal vndertake to fight agaynst another, one cite agaynst another, one place agaynst another, one people agaynst another, & one realme agaynst another. Whan this commeth to passe, then D Mat. 24.
shal the tokens come, that I shewed the before: and thẽ shal my sonne be declared, whõ thou sawest clymme vp as a mã. And whan all ỳ people heare his voyce, euery man shal in their owne lõde leaue the battayll, ỳ they haue one agaynst another, and an innumerable multitude shall be gathered together, as they that be willinge to come and to ouercome him by fightinge. But he shal stode vpon the toppe of the mount Sion. Neuertheles Sion shall come, & shall be shewed, beynge prepared & buylded for all men, like as thou sawest the hill grawen forth without eny hãdes. But my sonne shal rebuke the people ỳ are come for their wickednes, with the tempest, and for their euell ymaginacions: and their paynes wherwith they shal be punyshed, are lickened vnto the flamme: and without eny laboure shal he destroye them, euen by the lawe, which is cõpared vnto the fyre.

E And where as thou sawest, that he gathered another peaceable people vnto hi: those are the ten trybes, which were caried awaye presoners out of their owne londe, in the tyme of Oseas the kynge, whom Salmanasar the kinge of Assiria toke presoner, and caried them ouer ỳ water, and so came they in to another londe.

4.Re.17.a

But they gaue them this councell, ỳ they shulde leave the multitude of the heithẽ, and to go forth in to a farther countre, where neuer mankynde dwelt: that they might there kepe their statutes, which they neuer kepte in their owne lande. And so they entred in at the narow passages of the water of Euphrates, and God shewed tokens for thẽ, and helde styll the floude tyll they were passed ouer: for thorow that countre there was a greate waye, namely of a yeare and an halfe iourney, for the same region is called Asareth. Then dwele they there vnto the latter tyme: and when they come forth agayne, ỳ Hyest shall holde styll the sprynges of the streame agayne, that they maye go thorow, therfore sawest thou the multitude with peace. And they that be left behynde of thy people, are those that be founde within my border. Now whan he destroyeth the multitude that is gathered together, he shal defede his people that remayne, and then shal he shew them greate wonders.

S Then sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, shew me this: wherfore haue I sene the man commynge vp from the depe of the see?

And he sayde vnto me: Like as thou cãst nether seke out ner knowe these thinges that are in the depe of the see, euen so maiest thou not se my sonne, or those that be with him, but in the tyme of the daye. This is the interpretacion of the dreame which thou sawest, therfore thou onely art here lightened: for thou hast forsaken thine owne lawe, and applied thy diligence vnto myne, and sought it. Thy life hast thou ordred in wysdome, and hast called vnderstondinge thy mother, and therfore haue I shewed the ỳ treasure of the Hyest. After thre dayes I wil shew the more, and talke with the at more large, yee heuy and wonderous thinges wyl I declare vnto the.

ou.7.a

Then wente I forth in to ỳ felde, geuynge prayse and thankes greatly vnto God, because of his wonders which he dyd in tyme, and because he gouerneth the same, and so as is in tyme, and there I satt thre dayes.

The XIIII. Chapter.

Upon the thirde daye I satt vnder an oke tre, then came there a voyce out of the bush, & sayde: Esdras, Esdras. And I sayde: here I am LORDE and stode vp vpon my fete. Thẽ spake he to me: In the bush dyd I appeare vnto Moses, & talked wt him, whã my people serued in Egipte, and I sent him, and led my people out of Egipte, & brought him vp ỳ mount Sion, where I helde him by me a longe season, and tolde him my wonderous workes, and shewed him ỳ secretes of the tymes, and the ende, and commaunded him, sayeng: These wordes shalt thou declare, & not hyde thẽ. And now I saye vnto the, that thou laye vp in thine hert the dreames that thou hast sene, and the interpretacions which I haue shewed the: for thou shalt be receaued of all, thou shal be turned and remayne wt my counsell, and with soch as be like the, vntyll ỳ tymes be ended. For the worlde hath lost his youth, and the tymes begynne to wexe old. For the tyme is deuyded in to twolue partes, and ten partes of it are gone all ready, and half of the tenth parte: yet remayneth that that, which is after ỳ half of ỳ tenth parte.

Therfore prepare and ordre thy house and reforme thy people: comforte soch of them as be in trouble: and tell now of the destruccion: let go from the mortall thoughtes, cast awaye the burthens of man: put of the weake nature: laye vp in some place ỳ thoughtes that are meest heuy vnto the, and haist the to flyt from these tymes: for soch euell & wickednesse as thou hast now sene happẽ, shal they do yet moch more. For the more feble the worlde and the tymes is, the more shal wickednesse increase, in them that dwell vpon earth. For the trueth is fled farre awaye, & vnryghtwysnesse is hard at hande. For now hast thou visions to come, that thou hast sene.

Then answered I and sayde: Beholde LORDE, I wyl go as thou hast commaunded me, and reforme the people which are presẽt. But they ỳ shal be borne afterwarde, who wyl exhorte or rebuke thẽ? Thus the worlde is set in darcknes, and they ỳ dwel therin are without light: for thy lawe is kyndled, because no man knoweth the thinges that are done of the, or that shalbe done. Wherfore I beseche the grace before the, sende the holy goost to me, and I shall wryte all that hath bene done in the worlde sens the begynnynge which was wrytten in thy lawe, that men maye fynde the path, and that they which wyl lyue in the latter dayes, maye lyue.

And he answered me, sayēge: Go ẏ waye, gather thy people together, & saye vnto thē, that they seke the not fore xl. dayes, but loke thou gather the many bore trees, and take with the Sarea, Dabria, Selemia, Echanus and Asial, these fyue, which are ready to wryte swiftly, and come hither, and I shal light a cādle of vnderstōdinge in thine hert, which shal not be put out, tyll the thinges be performed which thou shalt beginne to wryte. And then shalt thou declare some thinges openly vnto the perfecte, and some thinges shalt thou shew secretly vnto ẏ wyse. Tomorow this houre shalt thou beginne to wryte.

Then wēte I forth (as he commaūded me) and gathered all ẏ people together, and sayde: Heare these wordes o Israel: Oure fathers from the beginninge were straūges in Egipte, from whēce they were delyuered, and receaued the lawe of life, which they kepte not, which ye also haue trāsgressed after thē. Then was this londe and the londe of Sion parted amōge you by the lot to possesse. But yō fathers and ye yō selues also haue done vnrighteousnes, & haue not kepte the wayes which the ẏhest cōmaunded you. And forsomoch as he is a righteous iudge, he toke from you in tyme the thinge that had geuen you. And now are ye here and yō brethren amōge you. Therfore yf so be that ye wil subdue yō owne vnderstandinge, and resourme youre hert, ye shal be kepte aliue, & after death shal ye opteyne mercy. For after death shall the iudgment come, whan we shal lyue agayne: and then shal the names of the righteous be manifest, and ẏ names of the vngodly with their workes shalbe declared. Let no mā therfore come now vnto me, ner axe eny question at me these xl. dayes.

So I toke the fyue men (as he commaunded me) and we rente in to the felde, and remayned there. The nexte daye a voyce called me sayēge: Esdras, Open thy mouth, & drynke that I geue the. Thē opened I my mouth, & beholde, he reached me a full cuppe, which was full of water, but the colō of it was like fyre. And I toke it and dranke. And whā I had dronken it, my hert had vnderstondinge, and wysdome grew in my breast: for my spirite was kepte in remembraunce, and my mouth was opened and shut nomore. The ẏhest gaue vnderstondinge vnto the fyue men, & they wrote ẏ hye thinges of the night, which they vnderstode not. But in the nighte they ate bred: as for me, I spake in the daye, and helde not my tonge by night. In xl. dayes, they wrote two hundreth & foure bokes.

And it happened whā the xl. dayes were fulfilled, that the ẏhest spake, sayenge: The first that thou hast wrytte, speake openly, ẏ the worthy and vnworthy maye rede it. But kepe ẏ lxx. last, ẏ thou mayest shew it onely to soch as be wyse amonge thy people. For in them is the sprynge of vnderstōdinge, the fountayne of wysdome, and the streame of knowlege. And I dyd so.

The XV. Chapter.

A Behelde, speake thou in the eares of my people the wordes of prophecie, which I wyll put in ẏ mouth, saieth the LORDE: and cause them to be wrytten in a letter, for it is the trueth. Feare not the ymaginacions against ẏ, let not ẏ vnfaithfulnes of them trouble the, that speake agaynst the. For all the vnfaithfull shal dye in their vnfaithfulnes. Beholde saieth the LORDE, I wil bringe plages vpon the worlde: ẏ swerde, honger, death and destruccion, for wickednes hath the vpper hande in all ẏ earth, and their shamefull workes are fulfilled.

B Therfore saieth the LORDE: I wil holde my tonge nomore vnto their wickednesse, which they do so vngodly: nether wil I suffre them in the thinges, that they deale with all so wickedly. Beholde, the innocent blonde of the troubled crieth vnto me, and the soules of the righteous complayne cōtynually: and therfore (saieth the LORDE) I wil surely auēge, and receaue vnto me all the innocēt blonde from amonge them. Apo. 6. b and 19. a

Beholde, my people, is led as a flock of shepe to be slayne, I wil not suffre them now to dwel in Egipte, but wyl bringe them eue with a mighty hande and a stretched out arme, and smyte it with plages as afore, and wyl destroye all the londe off it. Egipte shal mourne, and the foundacions of it shalbe smytten with the plage and punyshment, ẏ God shal bringe vpon it. Psal. 43. c Rom. 8. c 1. Co. 4. b

C They that tyll ẏ grounde, shal mourne, for their sedes shal be destroyed thorow the blastinge and hale, and an horrible starre. Woo worth ẏ worlde and them that dwell therin, for ẏ swerde & their destruccio draweth nyer & one people shal stōde vp to fight against another, & swerdes in their hādes. For me shal be vnsted fast, and se me shal do violence vnto other: they shal not regarde their kynge and princes, the wayes of their doinges and hādelinges in their power. A man shal desyre to go in to the cite, & shal not be able. For be their paynes wherwith they shal be punyshed, are lickened vnto the flamme: and with out eny labour shal he destroye them, euen by the lawe, which is cõpared vnto the fyre.

E And where as thou sawest, that he gathered another peaceable people vnto hi: those are the ten trybes, which were caried awaye presoners out of their owne londe, in the tyme of Oseas the kynge, whom Salmanasar the kinge of Assiria toke presoner, and caried them ouer ỳ water, and so came they in to another londe.

4.Re.17.a

But they gaue them this councell, ỳ they shulde leaue the multitude of the heithẽ, and to go forth in to a farther countre, where neuer mankynde dwelt: that they might there kepe their statutes, which they neuer kepte in their owne lande. And so they entred in at the narow passages of the water of Euphrates, and God shewed tokens for thẽ, and helde styll the floude tyll they were passed ouer: for thorow that countre there was a greate waye, namely of a yeare and an half iourney, for the same region is called Asareth. Then dwelt they there vnto the latter tyme: and when they come forth agayne, ỳ hyest shall holde styll the sprynges of the streame agayne, that they maye go thorow, therfore sawest thou the multitude with peace. And they that be left behynde of thy people, are those that be founde within my border. Now whan he destroyeth the multitude that is gathered together, he shal defede his people that remayne, and then shal he shew them greate wonders.

Exo.14.e
Josu.3.d

S Then sayde I: O LORDE LORDE, shew me this: wherfore haue I sene the man commynge vp from the depe of the see?

And he sayde vnto me: Like as thou cãst nether seke out ner knowe these thinges that are in the depe of the see, euen so maiest thou not se my sonne, or those that be with him, but in the tyme of the daye. This is the interpretacion of the dreame which thou sawest, therfore thou onely art here lightened: for thou hast forsaken thine owne lawe, and applied thy diligence vnto myne, and sought it. Thy life hast thou ordred in wysdome, and hast called vnderstondinge thy mother, and therfore haue I shewed the ỳ treasure of the hyest. After thre dayes I wil shew the more, and talke with the at more large, yee heuy and wonderous thinges wyl I declare vnto the.

Reg.3.
Prou.7.a

Then wente I forth in to ỳ felde, geuynge prayse and thankes greatly vnto God, because of his wonders which he dyd in tyme, and

becaũse he gouerneth the same, and what is in tyme, and there I satt thre dayes.

The XIIII. Chapter.

Upon the thirde daye I satt vnder an oke tre, then came there a voyce out of the bush, and sayde: Esdras, Esdras. And I sayde: here I am LORDE, and stode vp vpon my fete. Then spake he to me: In the bush dyd I appeare vnto Moses, and talked with him, whã my people serued in Egipte, and I sent him, and led my people out of Egipte, and brought him vpõ ỳ mount Sion, where I helde him by me a longe season, and tolde him my wonderous workes, and shewed him ỳ secretes of the tymes and the ende, and commaunded him, sayenge: These wordes shalt thou declare, and not hyde them. And now I saye vnto the, that thou lay vp in thine hert the dreames that thou hast sene, and the interpretacions which I haue shewed the: for thou shalt be receaued of all, thou shalt be turned and remayne with my counsell, and with soch as be like the, vntyll ỳ tymes be ended. For the worlde hath lost her youth, and the tymes begynne to wax olde. For the tyme is deuyded in to twolue partes, and ten partes of it are gone all ready, and half of the tenth parte: yet remayneth that that, which is after ỳ half of ỳ tenth parte.

Therfore prepare and ordre thy house, and reforme thy people: comforte soch of them as be in trouble: and tell now of the destruccion: let go from the mortall thoughtes, caste awaye the burthens of man: put of the weake nature: laye vp in some place ỳ thoughtes that are meest heuy vnto the, and haist the flyt from these tymes: for soch euell and wickednesse as thou hast now sene happẽ, shalt thou yet moch more. For as the age of the worlde and the tyme is, the more shal wickednesse increase, in them that dwell vpon earth. For the truth is fled farre awaye: and vnrighteousnesse is hard at hande. For now hast thou sene the visions come, that thou hast sene.

Then answered I and sayde: Behold! O LORDE, I wyl go as thou hast commaunded me, and reforme the people which are present. But they ỳ shal be borne afterwarde, who wyl exhorte or rebuke thẽ? Thus the worlde is set in darcknes, and they ỳ dwel therin are without light: for thy lawe is kyndled, because no man knoweth the thinges that are done of the, or that shalbe done. Yf I haue found grace before the, sende the holy goost in to me, and I shall wryte all that hath bene done in the worlde sens the begynnynge which was wrytten in thy lawe, that men maye fynde the path, and that they which wyl lyue in the latter dayes, maye lyue.

And he answered me, sayinge: Go ỳ waye, gather thy people together, & saye vnto thē, that they seke the not fo̊r xl. dayes, but loke thou gather the many bo̊re trees, and take with the Sarea, Dabria, Selemia, Echanus and Asial, these fyue, which are ready to wryte swiftly, and come hither, and I shal light a cādle of vnderstōdinge in thine hert, which shal not be put out, tyll the thinges be performed which thou shalt begynne to wryte. And then shalt thou declare some thinges openly vnto the perfecte, and some thinges shalt thou shew secretly vnto ỳ wyse. Tomorow this houre shalt thou begynne to wryte.

Then wēte I forth (as he commaūded me) and gathered all ỳ people together, and sayde: Heare these wordes o Israel: Oure fathers from the begynnynge were straūges in Egipte, from whēce they were delyuered, and receaued the lawe of life, which they kepte not, which ye also haue trāsgressed after thē. Then was this londe and the londe of Sion parted amōge you by the lot to possesse. But yo̊ fathers and ye yo̊ selues also haue done vnrighteousnes, & haue not kepte the wayes which the ỳ̄est cōmaunded you. And fo̊r so moch as he is a righteous iudge, he toke from you in tyme the thinge that had geuen you. And now are ye here and yo̊ brethren amōge you. Therfore yf so be that ye wil subdue yo̊ owne vnderstandinge, and reforme youre hert, ye shal be kepte alive, & after death shal ye opteyne mercy. Fo̊r after death shall the iudgment come, whan we shal lyue agayne: and then shal the names of the righteous be manifest, and ỳ names of the vngodly with their workes shalbe declared. Let no mā therfore come now vnto me, ner axe eny question at me these xl. dayes.

So I toke the fyue men (as he commaundede me) and we went in to the felde, and remayned there. The next daye a voyce called me sayinge: Esdras, Open thy mouth, & drynke that I geue the. Thē opened I my mouth, & beholde, he reached me a full cuppe, which was full of water, but the colo̊ of it was like fyre. And I toke it and dranke. And whā I had dronken it, my hert had vnderstondinge, and wyssdome grew in my breast: fo̊r my spirite was kepte in remembraunce, and my mouth was opened and shut nomore. The ỳ̄est gaue vnderstondinge vnto the fyue men, ỳ they wrote ỳ hye thinges of the night, which they vnderstode not. But in the nighe they ate bred: as fo̊r me, I spake in the daye, and helde not my tonge by night. In xl. dayes, they wrote two hundreth & foure bokes.

And it happened whā the xl. dayes were fulfilled, that the ỳ̄est spake, sayenge: The first that thou hast wrytte, speake openly, ỳ the worthy and vnworthy maye rede it. But kepe ỳ lxx. last, ỳ thou mayest shew it onely to soch as be wyse amonge thy people. Fo̊r in them is the spryng of vnderstōdinge, the fountayne of wyssdome, and the streame of knowlege. And I dyd so.

The XV. Chapter.

A Behelde, speake thou in the eares of my people the wordes of prophecie, which I wyll put in ỳ mouth, saieth the LORDE: and cause them to be wrytten in a letter, fo̊r it is the trueth. Feare not the ymaginacio̊s against ỳ, let not ỳ vnfaithfulnes of them trouble the, that speake agaynst the. Fo̊r all the vnfaithfull shal dye in their vnfaithfulnes. Beholde saieth the LORDE, I wil brynge plages vpon the worlde: ỳ swerde, honger, death and destruccion, fo̊r wickednes hath the vpper hande in all ỳ earth, and their shamefull workes are fulfilled.

B Therfore saieth the LORDE: I wil holde my tonge nomore vnto their wickednesse, which they do so vngodly: nether wil I suffre them in the thinges, that they deale with all so wickedly. Beholde, the innocent blonde of the troubled crieth vnto me, and the soules of the righteous complayne cōtynually: and therfore (saieth the LORDE) I wil surely auēge, and receaue vnto me all the innocēt blonde from amonge them. Apo. 6. b and 19. a

Beholde, my people, is led as a flock of shepe to be slayne, I wil not suffre them now to dwel in Egipte, but wyl brynge them ouer with a mightie hande and a stretched out arme, and smyte it with plages as afore, and wyl destroye all the londe off it. Egipte shal mourne, and the foundacions of it shalbe smytten with the plage and punyshment, ỳ God shal brynge vpon it. Psal. 43. c Rom. 8. c 1. Co. 4. b

C They that tyll ỳ groůnde, shal mourne, fo̊r their sedes shal be destroyed thorow the blastinge and hale, and an horrible starre. Woo worth ỳ worlde and them that dwell therin, fo̊r ỳ swerde & their destrucciō drawe̊th nyer & one people shal stōde vp to fight against another, & swerdes in their hādes. Fo̊r me shal be vnsted fast, and some shal do violence vnto other: they shal not regarde their kynge and princes, the wayes of their doinges and hādelinges in their power. A man shal desyre to go in to the cite, & shal not be able. Fo̊r be cause of their pryde ye cities shalbe brought in feare, ye houses shal shake, and men shalbe afrayed. A man shal haue no pitie vpon his neyghboure, but one shal prouoke another vnto battayll, to spoyle their goodes because of the honger of bred, and because of the greate trouble.

D Beholde, I gather & call together all the kynges of ye earth which are from the vpryse, from the south, from the east and Libanus to turne vnto them, and restore the thinges that they haue geuē them. Like as they do yet this daye vnto my chosen, so wil I do also, and recōpense thē in their bosome. Thus sayeth ye LORDE God: My right hande shal not spare ye synners, and my swerde shal not ceasse ouer them, that shed the innocēt blonde vpon earth. The feare is gone out frō his wrath, and hath cōsumed the foundacions of the earth, and the synners like the strawe that is kindled. Wo worth them that synne, and kepe not my commaundementes, saieth the LORDE. I wil not spare them. Go youre waye ye children from violence, defyle not my Sanctuary: for the LORDE knoweth all thē that synne agaynst him, and therfore delyuereth he them vnto death and destrucciō: For now are the plages come vpon the worlde, & ye shal remayne in thē. For God shal not delyuer you, because ye haue synned agaynst him.

E Beholde, an horrible vision commeth frō the east, where generacions of Dragons shal come out, and the people of the Arabes with many charettes, and the multitude of them shalbe as the wynde vpō earth, that all they which heare them ragynge in their wrath, maye feare and be afrayed: and as the wylde bores out of ye wod, so shal they go out, and with greate power shal they come, and stonde fightinge with thē, and shal waist the porcion of the londe of the Assirians.

And then shal the Dragons haue the vpper hande, not remembringe their byrth, and shal turne aboute swearinge together in greate power, to persecute them. But these shalbe afrayed, and kepe sylence at their power, and shal flee: and one out of the londe of the Assirians shal besege thē, and consume one of thē, and in their hoost shal be feare and drede, and strife amonge their kynges.

F Beholde cloudes from the east, and from the north vnto the south, and they are very horrible to loke vpon, full of wrath and storme. They shal smyte one vpon another, and they shal smyte at ye greate starre vpon earth and their starre, and the blonde shalbe from the swerde vnto the bely, and the smoke vnto ye Camels lytter: And there shal be greate fearfulnes and tremblinge vpō earth, and they that se the wrath, shal be afrayed, and tremblinge shal come vpon them.

And then shal there come greate rayne from ye south and from the north, and more from the west, and from the stormy wynde from the east, and shal sturre them vp agayne, & the cloude which hath rayned vpon all, and the starre to cause feare towarde ye east and west wynde, shalbe destroyed, & the greate cloudes shalbe lift vp, and ye mighty cloudes full of wrath, and the starre, that they maye make all the earth afrayed and they dwell therin, and that they maye poure out ouer all places an horrible starre, fyre and hayle and flyenge swerdes, and many waters: that all feldes maye be full, and all ryuers, & they shal breake downe the cities & walles, mountaynes & hylles, all trees, wod, and the grasse of the medowes, and all their frute. And they shal go stedfast vnto Babilon, and make her afrayed, they shal come to her and besege her: the starre and all wrath shal they poure out vpon her.

Then shal the dust and smoke go vp vnto the heaven, and all they that be about her, shal bewayle her: and they that remayne vnder her, shal do seruyce vnto them that haue put her in feare. And thou Asia ye cōsorte of thyself also vpō the hope of Babilon, and of a worshipe of hir personne: Wo be vnto thee thou wretch, because thou hast made thyself like vnto her, & hast decte ye daughters in wedome, that they might tryumphe and please thy lowers, which haue allwaye desyred ye mytte whordome of the: thou hast folowed the abhominable cite in all hir workes and inuencions.

Therfore sayeth God: I wyl sende plages vpon the, wyddowhode, pouerte, hōger, warres, and pestilence, to waist thy houses with destruccion and death, and the glory of thy power shal be dryed vp as a floure, what tyme heate aryseth ye is sent ouer the. Thou shalt be sick as a poore wife that is plaged & barren of wemen: so ye the mightie and lowers shal not be able to receaue the. Wolde I so punysshe the saieth the LORDE: If thou haddest not allwaye slayne my chosen, exaltinge the stroke of thy handes, and sayde ouer their deth, whan thou wast dronke: set forth the beawty of thy countenaunce.

The rewarde of thy whordome shalbe recompensed the in thy bosome, therfore shalt thou receaue * rewarde.

Like as thou hast done vnto my chosen (saieth the LORDE) euen so shal God do vn to the, and shal delyuer the in to the plage.
Thy childre shal dye of honger, & thou shalt fall thorow ỹ swerde. Thy cities shalbe bro ken downe, & all thine shal perish w̄ the swer de in ỹ felde. They ỹ be in ỹ mountaynes shal dye of honger, & eate their owne flesh, & drin
ke their owne blonde for very hōger of bred & thyrst of water. Thou vnhappie shalt come thorow the see, & receaue plages agayne.
In the passage they shall cast downe the slayne cite, & shal rote out one parte of ỹ lon de, & cōsume the porcion of thy glory. They shal treade the downe like stuble, & they shal be thy fyre and shal consume the: thy cities and thy londe, thy wod & thy frutefull trees shal they burne vp with the fyre. Thy children shal they cary awaye captyue, and loke what thou hast, they shal spoyle it, and mar
re the bewcie of thy face.

The XVI. Chapter.

WO vnto the Babilon & Asia, wo vn
to ỹ Egipte & Syria: gyrde yo' sel ues w̄ clothes of sack & hayre, and mourne for youre childre, be sory, for yo' destruccion is at honde. A swerde is sent vpon you, & who wil turne it back? A fyre is kynd led amōge you, & who wil quench it? Plages are sent vnto you, & what is he that wil dry-ue them awaye? Maye eny man dryue awaye an hōgrie lyon in the wod? Or maye eny mā quench the fyre in the stubble, whan it hath begonne to burne? Maye one turne agayne the arowe, ỹ is shot of a stronge archer?
The mighrie LORDE sendeth the plages, & what is he that wil dryue them awaye? The fyre is kyndled & gone forth in his wrath, & what is he that will quench it? He shall cast lightenynges, & who shal not feare? He shal thonder, and who shall not be afrayed? The LORDE shal threaten, & who shal not vtter ly be beaten to poulder at his presence? The earth quaketh, & the foundacions therof: ỹ see aryseth vp w̄ wawes from the depe, and the flondes of it are vnquyete, & the fishes therof also before the LORDE, & before the glory of his power. For stronge is his right hande that holdeth the bowe, his arowes that he shooteth, are sharpe, & shall not mysse, whan they begynne to be shot in to ỹ endes of the worlde.

Beholde, ỹ plages are sent, & shal not tur ne agayne, tyll they come vpon earth. The fyre is kyndled, & shall not be put out, tyll it consume the foundacions of the earth. Like as an arowe which is shot of a mightie archer, returneth not backwarde, euen so ỹ plages ỹ shal be sent vpon earth, shal not turne agayne. Wo is me, wo is me, who wyl dely-uer me in those dayes? The begynnynge of sorowes & greate mourninge: the begynnyn ge of derth & greate death: the begynnynge of warres, & the powers shal stonde in feare:
the begynnynge of euels, & they shal tremble
euery one. What shal I do in these thinges, whan the plages come? Beholde, hōger and plage, trouble & anguysh are sent, as scourges for amendement. But for all these thin-ges they shal not turne frō their wickednesses, ner be allwaye mynde full of ỹ scourges.

Beholde, vitayles shalbe so good cheape vpon earth, ỹ they shal thinke them selues to be in good case: and euen then shal myschefe growe vpō earth, warres, derth & greate disquietnes. For many of them that dwell vpō earth shall perish of hōger, & the other that escape the honger, shal the swerde destroye:
& the deed shalbe cast out as donge, & there shalbe no man to cōforte them. For ỹ earth shalbe waisted, & the cities shalbe cast dow-ne: there shalbe no man left to tyll ỹ earth & to sowe it. The trees shal geue frute, & who shal plucke thē of & gather them? The grapes shal be ripe, & who shal treade thē? For all places shalbe desolate of mē, so that one man shal desyre to se another, or to heare his voyce. For of one whole cite there shalbe ten left, & two in the felde, which shall hyde thē selues in the thicke bußshes, & in the clyf fes of stones: like as whan there remayne thre or foure olynes vpon the olyue tre, or as whan a vynyarde is gathered, there are left some grapes, of them that diligētly sought thorow the vynyarde.

Euen so in those dayes there shalbe thre
or foure left, for thē ỹ search their houses w̄
the swerde. And the earth shalbe left waist, & the feldes therof shall waxe olde: and hir wayes and all hir pathes shal growe full of thornes, because no man shal trauayle there thorow. The daughters shal mourne, hauin ge no brydegromes: the wemen shal make la mentacion, hauynge no hußbandes, their daughters shal mourne, hauinge no helpe of their brydegrome. In the warres shall they be destroyed, & their hußbandes shal perish
of honger. O ye seruauntes of the LORDE, heare these thinges, & marck thē. Beholde, the worde of the LORDE, O receaue it: be-holde, the plages drawe nye, & are not slack in tarienge. Like as a trauaylinge woman, which after ỹ tyme.moneth bringeth forth a son ne, whan the houre of the byrth is come, an

houre two or thre a fore that the paynes come vpō hir body, & whan the childe cōmeth to the byrth, they tary not the twincklynge of an eye: Euē ſo ſhall not ẏ plages be ſlacke to come vpon earth, & the worlde ſhal mourne, & ſorowes ſhal come vpō it on euery ſyde.

E O my people, heare my worde, make you redy to the battayll: & in all euell be euen as pylgrems vpon earth. He ẏ ſelleth, let him be as he that flyeth his waye: & he ẏ byeth, as one that wil leſe. Who ſo occupieth marchaūdies, as he that wynneth not: & he that buyldeth, as he that ſhall not dwell therin: he that ſoweth, as one ẏ ſhal not reape: he that twyſteth the vyneyarde, as he that ſhal not gather the grapes: they that mary, as they that ſhall get no children: & they ẏ mary not, as the wyddowes: & therfore they ẏ labour, labo⁹ in vayne. For ſtraungers ſhall reape their frutes, & ſpoyle their goodes, ouerthrowe their houſes, & take their childrē captyue, for in captiuyte & honger ſhal they get children. And they that occupie their marchaundies w̄ robbery, how longe decke they their cities, their houſes, their poſſeſſions & perſonnes? the more wil I punyſh them for their ſynnes, ſayeth the LORDE. Like as an whore enuyeth an honeſt woman, ſo ſhall righteouſnes hate iniquyte, whan ſhe decketh hir ſelf, and ſhall accuſe her to hir face, whan he cōmeth that defendeth, which ſhal make inquyſiciō for all ſynne vpō earth. And therfore be not ye like there vnto, ner to the workes therof: for or euer it be longe, iniquite ſhalbe taken awaye out of the earth, and righteouſnes ſhal raigne amonge you.

S Let not the ſynner ſaye, that he hath not ſynned: for coles of fyre ſhal burne vpon his heade, which ſaieth before the LORDE God & his glory: I haue not ſynned. Beholde, the LORDE knoweth all ẏ workes of men, their ymaginacions, their thoughtes & their hertes. For he ſpake but the worde: let the earth be made, & it was made: let the heauē be made, & it was made. In his worde were ẏ ſtarres made, & he knoweth the nombre of them. He ſearcheth the grounde of the depe, & the treaſures therof: he hath meaſured the ſee, & what it conteyneth. He hath ſhut the ſee in the myddeſt of the waters, and w̄ his worde hath he hanged the earth vpon the waters. He ſpredeth out the heauen like a vowte, vpon the waters hath he founded it. In the deſerte and drye wyldernes hath he made ſprynges of water, and poles vpō the toppe of the mountaynes, ẏ the floudes might powre downe from ẏ ſtony rockes to water the earth. He made man, and put his hert in the myddeſt of ẏ body, and gaue him breth, life and vnderſtandinge, yee and the ſpirite of ẏ Allmightie God, which made all thinges, and hath ſearched the grounde of all the ſecretes of the earth.

He knoweth youre ymaginacions & inuencions, and what ye thynke whan ye ſynne, & wolde hyde youre ſynnes. Therfore hath ẏ LORDE ſearched and ſoughte out all yo⁹ workes, and he ſhal bewraye you all. And whan yo⁹ ſynnes are brought forth, ye ſhalbe aſhamed before men, and youre owne ſynnes ſhal be youre accuſers in that daye. What wil ye do? Or how will ye hyde youre ſynnes before God and his angels? Beholde, God himſelf is the iudge, feare him, leaue of from youre ſynnes, and forget youre vnrighteouſneſſes, and medle nomore with them: ſo ſhal God lede you forth, and delyuer you from all trouble. For beholde, the heate of a greate multitude is kyndled ouer you, and they ſhal take awaye certayne of you, and ſede the ydle w̄ Idols: and they that cōſent vnto them, ſhal be had in deriſion, laughed to ſcorne, & trodden vnder fote.

For vnto the places there ſhalbe a place, and in the next cities a greate inſurreccion vpon thoſe that feare ẏ LORDE. They ſhal be like mad men, they ſhall ſpare no man: they ſhall ſpoyle and waiſt ſoch as feare the LORDE, their goodes ſhall they take from them, and ſhute them out of their houſes. Then ſhall it be knowne who are my choſen, & they ſhalbe tryed as the golde in the fyre. Heare O ye my beloued, ſaieth the LORDE: beholde, the dayes of trouble are at honde, but I wil delyuer you from the ſame. Be not ye afraied, diſpayre not, for God is youre captayne.

Who ſo kepeth my cōmaundementes and preceptes (ſayeth the LORDE God) let not youre ſynnes weye you downe, & let not youre vnrighteouſneſſes be lift vp. Wo be vnto thē that are ſubdued vnto their ſynnes, and tangled in their wickednes: like as a felde is hedged in with buſſhes, and the path therof couered with thornes, ẏ no man maye trauayle thorow: and ſo is he taken, and caſt in the fyre, and brent.

Chap. XIII. Tobias the elder prayseth God, & exorteth other mẽ, to be thankfull vnto him.

Chap. XIIII. Tobias beynge now olde, prophecieth the destruccio of Niniue, and the prosperous healthy of Israel. The sonne forsaketh the sinfull cite, as his father bad him, & goeth to his father in lawe.

The first Chapter.

TObias was of the trybe and cite of Nephtali, which lyeth in the hye countrees of Galile aboue Naason the waye to warde the west, hauynge the cite of Sephet vpon the left syde.

Though he was taken presonner in the dayes of Salmanasar kynge of the Assirians, neuertheles beynge in captiuyte, he forsoke not ye waye of trueth: In so moch that what so euer he might gett, he parted it dai lie with his felowpresoners & brethren, that were of his kynred. And though he were yonger thẽ all in the trybe of Nephtali, yet dyd not he behaue himself childesshly in his workes. And whan all the other wente to ye golde calues, which Jeroboam the kynge of Israel had made, he himself alone fled all their companies, and gat him to Jerusalem vnto the temple of the LORDE, and there worshipped ye LORDE God of Israel, faithfully offeringe all his first frutes and tithes, so that in the thirde yeare he ministred all the tithes vnto the straungers and conuertes. These and soch like thinges dyd he accordinge to the lawe of God, whan he was yet but yonge. 3.Re. 12.c

But whan he was a man, he toke out of his owne trybe a wyfe called Anna, and of her he begat a sonne, whom he called after his owne name, and taught him from his youth vp, to feare God, and to refraine from all synne. Exo. 22.d and 23.c Deut. 12.e 18.2.26.a B Nu.36.c

Now whan he with his wife, his sonne and with all his kynred was come in captiuite vnto Niniue, what tyme as they all ate of the meates of the heithe, he kepte his soule, and was neuer defyled in their meates. And for so moch as he was myndefull of the LORDE in all his hert, God gaue him fauour in the presence of Salmanasar the kynge, which gaue him power to go where he wolde, and so had he liberte to do what him list. Gen. 43.f Iudit.12.a Iere. 40.a

So wente Tobias vnto all them that were in preson, and comforted them, and gaue them wholsome exortacions. And whan he came to Rages a cite of the Medes, hauynge x. talẽtes of syluer (of ye thinges wher with the kynge had honoured him) and sawe amonge a greate company of people of his kinred, one Gabelus (which was of his owne trybe) beynge in necessite, he gaue him the sayde weight of syluer vnder an hand writinge. C Matt. 25.a Some reade: x. talentes of golde.

After a longe season whan Salmanasar the kynge was deed, and Sennacherib his sonne reigned in his steade, which hated the children of Israel, Tobias wente daylie thorow out all his kynred, and comforted them, and gaue of his goodes to euery one of thẽ, as moch as he might: he fed the hongrie, clothed the naked, and buried the deed and slayne, and that diligently.

And whan Sennacherib the kynge came agayne and fled out of Jewry (what tyme as God punyshed him for his blasphemy) & in his wrath slew many of the children of Is- D 4.Re.19.f

ruel, Tobias buried their bodies. But whan it was tolde the kynge, he commaunded to slaye him, and toke awaye all his goodes. Neuertheles Tobias with his sonne & with his wife fled his waye, and was hyd naked, for there were many that loued him. But after xlv. dayes the kynge was slayne of his owne sonnes. Then came Tobias againe to his house, and all his goodes were restored vnto him.

The II. Chapter.

A

AFter these thinges vpon a solempne daye of the LORDE Tobias made a good feast in his house, & sayde vnto his sonne: Go y waye & bringe hither some of oure trybe, soch as feare God, that they maye make mery with vs. And whā he was gone, he came agayne, and tolde his father, that one of the children of Israel laye slayne vpon the strete. And immediatly he leape from his table, left the feast, came fastinge to the deed coarse, toke him & bare him prevely in to his house, y whan the Sonne was downe, he might safely burye him. And whā he had hyd the coarse, he ate his meate with mournynge and feare, remembringe y wordes, that the LORDE sayeth by the prophet Amos: youre hye feastes shalbe turned to sorowe and heuynes.

Amos 8.b
Mac.1.b

B

But whan y Sonne was downe, he went his waye & buried him. Then all his neghbours reproued him, sayenge: It is not lōge, sens it was commaunded to slaye the because of this matter, and hast scarce escaped the daunger of death, and buriest thou the deed againe? Neuertheles Tobias fearinge God more then the kynge, toke the bodies of the slayne, hyd them in his house, & buried them at mydnight.

C

It happened vpō a daye, that he had buried y deed, & was weery, came home, & layed him downe by the wall & slepte. And whyle he was a slepe, there fell downe vpō his eyes warme donge out of the swalowes nest, so y he was blynde. This tentacion dyd God suffre to happen vnto him, that they which came after, might haue an example of his pacience, like as of holy Job. For in so moch as he euer feared God from his youth vp, & kepte his commaundementes, he was not hevy against God, that the plage of blyndnes chaūsed vnto him, but remayned stedfast in the feare of God, and thanked God all the dayes of his life.

D

For like as blessed Job was had in derision of kynges, euen so was he laughed to scorne of his elders & kynssolkes, which sayde vnto him: where is thy hope, for y which thou hast done allmes and buried the deed? But Tobias rebuked the, & spake: Saye not so, for we are the children of holy men, & loke for the life, which God shal geue vnto them, that neuer turne their beleue from him. Anna his wife wente daylie to the weuynge worke, & loke what lyuinge she coude get with the labor of hir handes, she brought it. And it happened y she toke a kyd and brought it home.

Iob.4

And whan hir husband herd it crie, he sayde: loke y it be not stollen, restore it againe to the owners: for it is not lawfull for vs to eate or to touch eny thinge of theft. Then was his wife angrie, and sayde: Now is thy hope become vayne openly, & thy allmes dedes are manifest. With these & soch like wordes dyd she cast him in the tethe.

Iob.2

The III. Chapter.

THen Tobias toke it heuely, & with teares beganne to make his prayer, sayenge: O LORDE, thou art righteous, & all thy iudgmētes are true, yee all y waye are mercy, faithfulnes & iudgmēt. And now O LORDE be myndefull of me, & take no vengeaunce of my synnes, nether remembre my myssededes ner y myssededes of my elders. For we haue not bene obedient vnto y cōmaundemētes, ther fore are we spoyled, brought into captiuyte, in to death, in to derision & shame vnto all nacions, amōge whō thou hast scattered vs. And now O LORDE, y iudgmentes are greate, for we haue not done accordinge to y cōmaundemētes, nether haue we walked innocētly before y. And now O LORDE, deale with me accordinge to thy wil, & cōmande my spirete to be receaued in peace, for mere expedient were it for me to dye, then to lyue.

Tob.3.a

At the same tyme it happened, that Sara the daughter of Raguel at Rages a cite of y Medes was slaundred of one of hir fathers hand maydes, namely, that she shulde haue had seuen husbandes, which as soone as they were gone in vnto hir, were slayne of the deuell called Asmodeus. Therfore whan she reproued the mayden for hir faute, she answerde her, sayenge: God let vs neuer se sonne ner daughter of the more vpon earth, thou kyller of thy husbandes. Wilt thou slay me also, as thou hast slayne seuen men? At this voyce wēte Sara in to an vpper chamber of hir house, and thre dayes and thre nightes she nether ate ner dranke, but continued in prayer, and besought God with teares, that he wolde delyuer her from this rebuke.

C Vpon the thirde daye it chaunced, that whan she had made an ende of hir prayer, she prayse the LORDE, sayenge: Blessed be thy name O God of ỹ fathers, which whan thou art wroth, shewest mercy, and in the tyme of trouble thou forgevest the synnes of them, that call vpon the. Vnto the O LORDE turne I my face, vnto the lift I vp myne eyes. I beseke ỹ O LORDE, lowse me out of the bondes of this rebuke, or els take me vtterly awaye frō of ỹ earth. Thou knowest LORDE, that I neuer had desyre vnto man, and that I haue kepte my soule cleane from all vnclenly lust. I haue not kepte company with those that passe their tyme in sporte, nether haue I made my self partaker with them that walke in lighte behavoure. Nevertheles an hußbande haue I consented to take, not for my pleasure, but in thy feare.

D Now peraduenture either I haue bene vnworthy of them, or els were they vnmete for me, for thou happly hast kepte me to another hußband. For why? thy councell is not in ỹ power of man. But who so euer loueth the and serueth the a right, is sure, that yf his life be tempted and proued, it stādeth in the tryenge: and yf he endure in pacience, he shal haue a reward and be hylie crowned: and yf he be in trouble, that God (no doute) shal delyuer him: and yf his life be in chastenynge, that he shall haue leue to come vnto thy mercy.

For thou hast no pleasure in oure dampnacion: & why? after a storme thou makest ỹ wether fayre and stille: after wepinge and bewynes thou gevest greate ioye. Thy name O God of Israel, be prayse for euer. At the same tyme were both their prayers herde in the sight of the mageste of the hyest God. And Raphael the holy angel of the LORDE was sent to helpe thē both, whose prayers came together before God.

The III. Chapter.

A SO whā Tobias thought his prayer to be herde, that he might dye, he called vnto him his sonne Tobias, & sayde vnto him: My sonne, heare the wordes of my mouth, and laye thē in thine hert as a foundacion. Whan God taketh awaye my soule, burie thou my body, & holde thy mother in honoure all the dayes of hir life. For thou oughtest to remembre, what and how greate parels she suffred for ỹ in hir wōbe. And whā she also hath fulfilled the tyme of hir life, bury her besyde me. Haue God in thy thought all the dayes of thy life, & bewarre, leste at eny tyme thou cōsent vnto synne, and leste thou let slippe the commaundemētes of the LORDE oure God. Rom. 6.

B Geue allmes of thy goodes, and turne neuer thy face from the poore: and so shal it come to passe, that the face of the LORDE shal not be turned awaye from the. Be merciful after ỹ power. Yf thou hast moch, geue plēteously: yf thou hast litle, do thy diligence, gladly to geue of that litle. For so gatherest thou thy self a good reward in the daye of necessite. For allmes delyvereth * frō death, & suffreth not the soule to come in darcknes. A greate comforte is allmes before the hye God, vnto all them that do it. Some reade: * frō all synne & from death. 1. Tess. 4.

My sonne, kepe the well from all whordome, and (besyde thy wife) se that no faute be knowne of the. Let neuer pryde haue rule in thy mynde ner in thy worde, for in pryde began all destruccion. Gen. 3.

C Who so euer worketh eny thinge for the, immediatly geue him his hyre, and loke that thy hyred seruaunte wagies remayne not by the ouer nyght. Loke that thou neuer do vnto another man, the thinge that thou woldest not another mā shulde do vnto the. Ete thy bred with the hongrie and poore, and cover the naked with thy clothes. Set thy bred and wyne vpon the buryall of the righteous, and do not thou eate and drynke ther of with the synners. Axe euer councell at ỹ wyse. Deu. 24. Matt. 7. Luc. 14.

Be allwaye thankfull vnto God, and beseke him, that he will ordre thy wayes, & that what so euer thou deuysest or takest in hande, it maye remayne in him. I certifie the also my sonne, that (whan thou wast yet but a bab) I delyvered ten talentes of syluer vnto Gabelus, at Rages a cite of the Medes, & his handwritinge haue I by me. And therfore seke some meanes, how thou mayest come by him, & receaue of him ỹ sayde weight of syluer, and geue him his handwrityng agayne. Tobi. 1.

My sonne, be not afrayed: trueth it is, we lede here a poore life: but greate good shall we haue, yf we feare God, and departe from all synne, and do well. Rom. 8.

The V. Chapter.

THen answered Tobias his father, & sayde: father, all that then hast commaunded me, wil I do, and that diligently. But how I shal requyre this money, I can not tell. Nether doth he knowe me, ner I him. What token shal I geue him. And as for the waye thither, I neuer knew it. Then A his father answered him, and sayde: I have his handwritinge by me, which whan thou shewest him, immediatly he shall paye the. But go thy waye now, & get the some faithfull man to go with ỹ for an hyre, that thou mayest receaue ỹ money, whyle I am yet lyuynge.

B Then wente Tobias out, & vpon the strete he founde a fayre yonge man stondinge, gyrded vp, and as it were one ready to take his iourney. And he knew not that it was an angell of God, but saluted him, and sayde: From whence art thou, thou good yonge man? He answered: Of the children of Israel.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: knowest thou the waye, that ledeth vnto the countre of ỹ Medes? He answered: I knowe it well, and all those stretes haue I gone oft tymes, and haue lodged with oure brother Gabelus, that dwelleth in Rages a cite of ỹ Medes, which lyeth vpon the mount Egabthanis. Tobias sayde vnto him: I praye the, tary for me, tyll I have tolde my father these thinges. Then wēte Tobias in, and tolde his father all. At ỹ which his father mareled, & prayed, that he wolde come in vnto him.

C Now whan the angell came in, he saluted him, and sayde: ioye be with the for euermore. And olde Tobias saide: what ioye can I haue, that syt here in darcknes, & se not the light of heauen? The yonge man sayde vnto him: Be of good cheare, God shal helpe the shortly. And Tobias sayde vnto him: Canst thou brynge my sonne to Gabelus, vnto the cite of Rages in Media? And whan thou commest agayne, I shal paye the thy hyre. And the angell sayde vnto him: I shal lede thy sonne, and brynge him to the agayne. Then Tobias answered him: Tell me I praye the, of what house, or of what trybe art thou?

The angell Raphael sayde vnto him: Arest thou after the kynred of an hyrelinge, or seketh thou a gyde for thy sonne to go with him? But that I make the not carefull, I am Azarias the sonne of greate Hananias. And Tobias answered: Thou art come of a greate kynred, but I praye ỹ, be not displeased, that I desyred to knowe thy kynred. The angell sayde vnto him: Thy sonne shal I lede forth safely, and brynge him whole to the agayne.

D Then answered Tobias, and sayde: well, go on youre waie, and God be in youre iourney, and his angell beare you company. So whan they had prepared all thinges, ỹ they wolde take with them in their iourney, Tobias bad his father & his mother fare well, and they wente on their waye both together. Now whan they were gone, his mother beganne to wepe, and sayde: The staff of oure age hast thou taken awaye, and sent him from vs.

Wolde God that money had never bene, for the which thou hast sent him awaye. If we had bene content w' o' powerte, this had bene greate riches vnto vs, that we sawe oure sonne here. Then sayde Tobias vnto her: wepe not, oure sonne shall come to vs agayne safe and sounde, & thine eyes shall se him. For I trust, that ỹ good angell of God shal beare him cōpany, and ordre well all the thinges that he doth: so that he shal come to vs agayne with ioye. At these wordes his mother left of frō wepynge, & helde hir tonge.

The VI. Chapter.

SO Tobias wente on his waye, and a dogg folowed him, and ỹ first nighe they abode by the water of Tigris. Then wente he out to wash his fete, and beholde, there came forth an horrible fysh to deuoure him. Of whom Tobias was afrayed, and cried with a loude voyce, sayenge: LORDE, he commeth vpon me. And the angell sayde vnto him: Take him by the cheke blade, and drawe him to the. And he dyd so, and drew him vpō the londe, and the fysh began ne to leape at his fete.

Thē sayde the angell vnto him: Take out D the bowels of this fysh, and as for the hert, the gall and the lever, kepe them by the. For these thinges are necessary and good for medicyne. Tobias dyd so, and rosted the fysh, and they toke him with them in their iourney: the residue they salted, as moch as was sufficient for them, till they came to Rages. Then Tobias axed the angell, and sayde vnto him: I praye ỹ brother Azarias, tell me, wher to are these thinges good of the fysh, that thou hast bydden me kepe?

The angell answered him and sayde: If thou layest a pece of the hert vpon the coles, the smoke therof dryueth awaye all maner of euell spretes, whether it be from man or from woman, so that frō thence forth ỹ same shal come no more vnto them. The gall is good to anoynte or to strake ỹ eyes with all, where as there is eny blemish in them, so shal they be whole.

And Tobias sayde vnto him: where with C thou that were mayne? The angell answered and saide: Here is a nye kinsman of thine, one Raguel by name, which hath a daughter called Sara, & hath nether sonne ner daughter but her. All his good belōgeth vnto the, and thou must mary his daughter: and therfore desyre her at her father, and he shal geue her the to wife. Then answered Tobias & sayde: As I vnderstonde, she hath bene maried vnto seuen husbandes, and they all are dead: and I haue herde saye, that the deuell slew them. I am afrayed therfore, lest soch thinges happen vnto me also: which yf it came to passe (seinge I am the onely sonne of my father and my mother) I shulde bringe thē in their age wt sorow to their graues.

D Then sayde y angell Raphael vnto him: Heare me, and I will tell the, what they be of whom the deuell hath power. Namely, they that receaue mariage of soch a fashiō, that they shut God out from thē and from their hert, and geue them selues to their owne lust, euen as it were an horse and Moole, which haue no vnderstondinge: vpon soch hath y deuell power. But whan thou takest her, and art come in to the chamber, withholde thy self from her thre dayes, and geue thy diligence vnto nothinge but vnto prayer with her.

And in the first night rost the leuer of the fish, and the deuell shalbe dryuē awaye. The secōde night shalt thou be receaued in to the company of the holy patriarkes. The thirde night shalt thou opteyne the blessinge of God, so that whole children shalbe borne of you. After the thirde night take the mayden in the feare of God, and more for the desyre of children, then for eny fleshly lust: that in the sede of Abraham thou mayest optayne the blessinge in children.

The VII. Chapter.

A When wente they in to Raguel, which receaued them ioyfully. And whan Raguel loked vpon Tobias, he sayde vnto Anna his wife: How like is this yonge man vnto my sisters sonne. And whan he had spoken this, he saide: whence be ye good brethren? They saide: Of the trybe of Nepthali, out of the captiuyte of Niniue. Then sayde Raguel vnto them: knowe ye my brother Tobias? They saide: yee, we knowe him well. And whan he had spoken moch good of him, the angell sayde vnto Raguel: Tobias of whom thou axest, is this yonge mās father. Then Raguel bowed him self downe, and wepte, toke him aboute the neck and kyssed him, and sayde: Gods blessynge haue thou my sonne, for thou art the sonne of a good vertuous man. And Anna his wyfe and Sara his daughter wepte also.

B Now whā they had talked together, Raguel bad kyll a wether, and to make a feast. And whā he prayed thē to sytt downe to dyner, Tobias sayde: I wil nether eate ner drinke here this daye, excepte thou first graunte me my peticion, & promyse me to geue me thy daughter Sara. Whan Raguel herde this, he was astonnyed, for he knew, what had happened vnto the other seuen men, that wēte in vnto her: and he begannne to feare that it shulde chaunce vnto him also in like maner.

And whyle he stode so in doute, and gaue the yonge man no answere, the angell sayde vnto him: Feare not to geue him thy daughter, for vnto this man that feareth God, belōgeth thy daughter to wife, therfore might none other haue her.

C Thē sayde Raguel: I doute not, but God hath accepted my prayers and teares in his sight: and I trust he caused you to come vnto me for the same intent, that this daughter of myne might be maried in hir owne kynred, acordinge to the lawe of Moses. And now dowte thou not, but I wil geue her vnto the: So he toke the righthande of his daughter, and gaue her in to the right hāde of Tobias, and sayde: The God of Abrahā, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob be with you, ioyne you together, and fulfill his blessynge in you. And they toke a letter and made a wrytinge of the mariage. And then made they mery, and praysed God. And Raguel called Anna his wife vnto him, and bad her prepare another chamber, and thither he brought Sara his daughter, and she wepte. Then sayde he vnto her: Be of good chere my daughter, the LORDE of heauen geue the ioye, for the heuynesse that thou hast suffred.

The VIII. Chapter.

A Now after y they had supped, they brought the yōge man in to her. Thē thought Tobias vpon the wordes of the angell, and toke out of his bagg a pece of the leuer of the fish, and layed it vpon the hote coales. So the angell Raphael toke holde of the deuell, and sent him awaye, and bounde him in the wyldernes of the hyer Egipte. Thē spake Tobias vnto the virgin, and sayde: Vp Sara, let vs make oure prayer vnto God to daye, tomorow, and ouermorow: for these thre nightes wil we reconcyle oure selues with God: and whan the thirde holy night is past, we shall ioyne together in y deutye of mariage. For we are thē childrẽ of holy men, and we maye not come together as the heithen, ẏ knowe not God.

B Then stode they vp both together, and be
b.c.d sought God earnestly, ẏ he wolde preserue them. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of ỏ fathers, prayseḋ be thou of heauẽ & earth
of the see, welles, & floudes, & of all the crea, tures that be therin. Thou maydest Adam of n.a.b the moulde of the earth, & gauest him Eua for an helper. And now LORDE thou knowest that it is not because of voluptuousnes, that I take this sister of myne to wyfe, but onely for the loue of childen, in whom thy name be blessed for euer. And Sara sayde: haue mercy vpon vs (O LORDE) haue mercy vpon vs, and let vs both come whole and sounde to a C good age.
And aboute the cocke crowe, it happened, that Raguel called his seruauntes, and they wẽte with him, to make a graue. For he sayde: it is chaunced vnto him peraduẽture,
as it dyd vnto the other seuen men, that wen te in vnto her. Now whã they had made the graue, Raguel came agayne to his wyfe,
and sayde vnto her: sende one of thy maydẽs,
to loke yf he be deed, that I maye burye him
afore it be light daye.
So she sent a mayden to se, which whan
she came in to the chamber, she founde them whole and sounde, slepynge together. And so she came agayne, & brought good tydinges.
D Then Raguel and Anna his wife prayseḋ ẏ
LORDE, and sayde: Prayseḋ be thou o LORDE
God of Israel, For it is not happened vnto vs, as we thought. For thou hast dealte mercifully with vs, and put awaye from vs the enemye that persecuted vs, and hast shewed mercy vnto yonder two beloued. O LORDE, cause thẽ to magnifie the more perfectly, and to offre the the sacrifice of thy prayse, and of their health: that all people maye knowe, ẏ thou onely art God in all the earth.
E And immediatly Raguel commaunded his seruauntes, to fyll the graue, that they had made, with earth, afore it was light: and bade his wife prepare a feast, & to make rea dy all thinges that were necessary for meate, to soch as wente by ẏ waye. He caused two fatt kyne also and foure wethers to be slayne, & meates to be prepared for all his neighbours and frendes.
And Raguel charged Tobias, to remayne with him two wekes. As for all the good ẏ he had, he gaue Tobias ẏ one half of it, and made this wrytinge, that the half which re mayned, shulde fall vnto Tobias after their death.

The IX. Chapter.

WHen Tobias called vnto him the an- A gell, whom he thought to haue bene a man, and sayde vnto him. Brother Azarias, I praye the herkẽ vnto my wordes: Yf I shulde geue myself to be ẏ seruaunt, I shal not deserue ẏ prouydence. Neuertheles I beseke the, that thou wylt take the beastes and the seruauntes, and go vnto Gabelus in Rages the cite of the Medes, and delyuer him his handwrytinge, and receaue the money of him, and praye him to come to my ma-riage. For thou knowest thyself, that my father telleth ẏ dayes: and yf I tary one daye to longe, he wyl be sory in his mynde. Now seist thou how earnestly Raguel hath requy
red me, so that I can not saye him nay.
Then toke Raphael foure of Raguels se- A rauuntes, and two Camels, & wente vnto Rages the cite of the Medes: and whan he had founde Gabelus, he gaue him his handwrytynge, & receaued all ẏ money. He tolde him also of Tobias ẏ sonne of Toby, how all thin-ges had happened, & caused him to come to him to ẏ mariage. Now whan he came in to B
the house of Raguel, he foũde Tobias syttin ge at ẏ table: & he leape vp, & they kyssed one another, and Gabelus wepte, and prayseḋ
God, and sayde: the blessynge of the God of Tob.
Israel haue thou, for thou art the sonne of a right verteous & iust man, & of one ẏ feareth God, & geueth greate allmes. And blessynge haue ẏ wife, and yỏ elders, that ye maye se yỏ childrẽ, and youre childers childrẽ, vnto the thirde and fourth generaciõ, and that youre sede maye be blessed of ẏ God of Israel, which reigneth worlde without ende. And whan they all had sayde Amen, they wente to the feast, but with the feare of the LORDE helde
they the feast of the mariage.

The X. Chapter.

NOw whyle yõge Tobias made lõge A tarienge by reason of ẏ mariage, his father was full of care and heuynes, and thought: what shulde be the cause, that my sonne tarieth so longe? Or why shulde he be kepte so longe there? Peraduenture Gaba lus is deed, and no man wyl geue him the mo ney. Thus begãne he to be very soroufull, he & Anna his wife with him, & begane to we pe both together, because their sonne was not come agayne vnto them at the daye ap-poynted. As for his mother, she wepte with discomfortable teares, and sayde: Wo is me, my sonne: Oh what ayled vs to sende the a waye into a straunge countre, thou light of oure eyes, thou staff of oure age, thou comfor- B te of oure life, thou hope of oure generacion:

seinge all ye thinges that we haue are onely in the, we shulde not haue sent the awaye from vs.

B Then Tobias comforted her, and sayde: holde thy tonge, and be not discomforted, our sonne is whole and sounde: the man ye we sent him withall, is faithfull ynough. Neuertheles she might in no wyse be cõforted: but daylie wente out, loked aboute, and wente aboute all the stretes, wherby she thought he shulde come againe: that (yf it were possible) she might se him cõmynge afarre of.

But Raguel saide vnto his sonne in lawe: Ordary here, and I shall sende a messaũger vnto thy father Tobias, to tell him ye thou art in good health. Tobias sayde vnto him: I am sure, that my father and my mother counte euery daye, and that their hertes are sory.

C So whan Raguel prayed Tobias w̃ many wordes, & he wolde in no wyse heare him, he delyuered Sara vnto him, & the half parte of all his good: in seruauntes and handmaydes, in shepe, in camels, and in kyne and moch money, and so sent him awaye from him with peace and ioye, and sayde: The holy angell of the LORDE be with you in youre iourney, and bringe you forth safe & sounde, that ye maye fynde all thinges in good case with youre elders, and that myne eyes maye se youre children, afore I dye.

So the elders enbraced their daughter, kyssed her, and let her go, exortinge her to honoure hir father and mother in lawe, to loue hir husbande, to rule well hir husholde, to kepe hir house in good ordre, and to shew hir self faultlesse.

The XI. Chapter.

A NOw as they were goinge homewarde againe, vpon ye xj. daye they came to Charra, which lyeth in the halfwaye towarde Niniue. And the angell sayde: Brother Tobias, thou knowest how thou hast left thy father: therfore yf it please the, we two wyll go before, and let the husholde with thy wife and ye catell come softe & fayrly after vs. And whan Tobias was content that they shulde go before, Raphael sayde vnto him: Take of the gall of the fish with the, for it shal be necessary. So Tobias toke of the goll, and they wente their waye. But Anna the mother of Tobias sat daylie by the waye syde vpon ye toppe of an hill, from whence she might se farre aboute her.

B And whyle she was waytinge there for his cõmynge, she loked afarre of, and anone she perceaued hir sonne commynge, and ranne and tolde hir husbande, sayenge: beholde, thy sonne commeth. And Raphael sayde vnto Tobias: As soone as thou commest into the house, immediatly worshipe the LORDE thy God, and geue thankes vnto him: then go to thy father, and kysse him, & strake his eyes ouer w̃ the gall of ye fish, that thou hast brought with the. For be sure, that his eyes shal straight waye be opened, and thy father shal se the light of heauen, and shal reioyse at the sight of the. Then the dogg that had bene with them in their iourney, ranne before, and came as a messaũger, and wagged with his tayle for gladnesse.

So ye blynde father arose, and beganne to C renne, and stombled with his fete, and gaue a seruaunt his hande, ranne to mete his sonne, receaued him, and kyssed him, he and his wife, and beganne to wepe for ioye.

Now whan they had worshipped & thanked God, they satt downe. Then toke Tobias of the fishes gall, and anoynted his fathers eyes: and taried halfan houre, and then beganne the blemysh to go out of his eyes, like as it had bene the whyte & kynne of an egge which Tobias toke and drew from his eyes, and immediatly he receaued his sight.

Then they praysed God, he and his wife, D and all they that knew him. And Tobias sayde: O LORDE God of Israel, I geue the prayse and thankes, for thou hast chastened me, and made me whole. And lo, now do I se my sonne Tobias. After seuen dayes came Sara his sonnes wife also whole and sounde with all ye honsholde and catell, with camels and moch money of his wyues, and with the money that he had receaued of Gabelus: and he tolde his father and his mother all the benefites, which God had done for him, by the man that led him. Achior also and Nabath Tobias sister sonnes came and were glad, & reioysed with him, by reason of all the good that God had shewed vnto him.

And so, for ye space of seuen dayes they made mery, and were right ioyfull euerichone.

The XII. Chapter.

THe Tobias called his sonne vnto him A & sayde: What maye we geue this holy man, that wente with the? Tobias answered his father and sayde: Father, what reward shal we geue him? Or what thinge can deserue his benefites? He hath bene my gyde, and brought me safe agayne: he receaued the money from Gabelus, he caused me to get my wife, he drowe the euell spirite from her, he hath bene occasiō of gladnesse to his father and mother: he delyuered me, that I was not deuoured of the fish, he hath made the to se the light of heauen, yee we all haue receaued greate good of him. How shulde we worthely deserue these thinges vnto him? But I praye the my father, that thou wilt desyre him, yf happlie he wil voutsafe, to take with him the half of all that we haue brought.

B So the father and the sonne called him, to ke him aside, and begannē to praye him, that he wolde be content to take in good worth, the half parte of all that they had brought. Then sayde he secretly vnto them: Prayse ye God of heauen, and geue thankes vnto him before all men lyuynge, for he hath shewed his mercy * vnto vs. It is good to hyde the Kynges secrete, but to shew and to prayse ye workes of God, it is an honorable thinge. Prayer is good with fastinge, and to geue allmes is better, then to hoorde vp treasures of golde. For allmes delyuereth from death, clenseth synne, and causeth to fynde euerlastinge life, But they that do synne and vnrighteousnes, are ye enemies of their owne soules.

C Wherfore I tell you the trueth, and wyll hyde nothinge from you. Whan thou praydest with teares, and burydest the deed, and lefrest thy dyner, and hyddest the deed in thy house vpon the daye tyme, that thou mightest burye them in the nighte; I offred thy prayer before the LORDE. And because thou wast accepte and beloued of God, it was necessary, that tentacion shulde trye the. And now hath the LORDE sent me to heale the, and to delyuer Sara ye sonnes wife from the euell sprete. For I am Raphael an angell, one of the seuen that stonde before God.

D Whā they herde this, they were sore afrayed, and trembled, and fell downe vpon their faces vnto the grounde. Then sayde the angell: Peace be with you, feare not. Where as I haue bene w you, it is the will of God, geue prayse and thankes vnto him.

Ge. 18. a and 19. a Iud. 13. c You thought that I dyd eate and drinke with you, but I vse meate that is inuisible, and drynke that can not be sene of men.

Now therfore is ye tyme that I must turne agayne, vnto him that sent me: but be ye thankfull vnto God, and tell out all his wonderous workes.

And whan he had spoken these wordes, he was taken awaye out of their sight, so ye they sawe him nomore. Then fell they downe flat vpon their faces by the space of thre houres, and prayse God: and whan they rose vp, they tolde all his wōderous workes.

Then XIII. Chapter.

Then olde Tobias opened his mouth, and prayse the LORDE and sayde: Greate art thou o LORDE for euermore, and thy kyngdome wolde without ende: for thou scourgest and healest, thou leadest to hell, and bryngest out agayne, and there is none ye maye escape thy hande. O geue thankes vnto ye LORDE ye children, of Israel, and prayse him in the sight of the Heithē. For emonge the Heithen which knowe him not hath he scatred you, to the intēt that ye shulde shew forth his marueluous workes: & cause them for to knowe, that there is none other God allmighte but he. He hath chastened vs for oure myssedes, and for his owne mercy sake shal he saue vs.

Consydre then, how he hath dealt w you, & prayse him with feare and drede, and magnifie the euerlastinge kynge in yo workes.

I wil prayse him euen in the londe of my captiuyte, for he hath shewed his maiesty vnto a synfull people. Turne you therfore o ye synners, and do righteousnes before God, and be ye sure, that he wyl shew his mercy vpon you. As for me & my soule, we wil reioyse in God. O prayse the LORDE all ye his chosen, holde the dayes of gladnesse, and be thankfull vnto him. O Jerusalem thou cite of God, the LORDE hath punysshed the for the workes of thine owne handes. O prayse the LORDE in thy good thinges, & geue thankes to the euerlastinge God, that he maye builde vp his tabernacle agayne in ye, that he may call agayne vnto the, all soch as be in captiuyte, and that thou mayest haue ioye for euermore. With a fayre light shalt thou shyne, & all ye endes of ye worlde shal honoure the. The people shal come vnto the from farre, they shal bringe giftes, and worshipe ye LORDE in the, and thy londe shal they haue for a Sanctuary, for they shal call vpon the greate name in the.

Cursed shal they be that despyse the, & all they that blaspheme the, shal be condēpned: but blessed shal they be, ye buylde the vp. And for the, thou shalt reioyse in ye childre, for they all shalbe blessed, and gathered together vnto the LORDE. Blessed are they all ye loue ye, and be glad of thy peace. Prayse thou the LORDE o my soule, for the LORDE oure God hath delyuered his cite Jerusalem from all hir troubles. I wil counte my self happie, yf my sede remayne to se ye clearnes of Jerusalē.

* Some rede be vnto you.

Prou. 3. b

The gates of Jerusalem shalbe buylded with Saphyre and Smaragde, and all the copase of hir walles with precious stones. All hir stretes shalbe paued w̄ whyte Marble stone, and in all hir stretes shal Alleluya be sunge. Prayed be ỹ LORDE, which hath exalted her, ỹ his kyngdome maye be vpon her for euermore, Amen. And so Tobias made an ende of his talkynge.

The XIIII. Chapter.

Old after that Tobias had gotte his sight agayne, he lyued two and xl. yeares, & sawe his childers children. Now whan he was an hundreth and two yeare olde, he dyed, & was buried honorably in Ninine. For whan he was fyre and fiftie yeares of age, he lost the sight of his eyes, and whā he was three score yeare olde, he gat his sight agayne. The residue of his life led he in ioye, and increased well in the feare of God, & departed in peace.

But in ỹ houre of his death he called vnto him his sonne Tobias, & seuen yonge springalde his sonnes children, and sayde vnto them: The destruccion of Nininе is at hande, for the worde of the LORDE can not fayle, and oure brethren that are scatred out of the londe of Israel, shal come thither agayne. And the whole londe of it that hath bene waist, shalbe fylled: and the house of God that was brent in it, shalbe buylded againe, & all soch as feare God shall returne thither: the heithen also shal forsake their Idols, & come to Jerusalem, and dwell there, and all the kynges of the earth shalbe glad of her, and worshipe the LORDE God of Israel.

And therfore my children, heare youre father: Serue the LORDE in faithfulnes, seke after his will, and do the thinge that pleaseth him. Commaunde youre children ỹ they do right, geue allmes, be myndefull of God, and euer to be thankfull vnto him in trueth and with all their power. Heare me therfore my childrē, and abyde not here: but in what daye soeuer ye haue buried youre mother beside me, gett you from hence. For I se, that the wickednes of it shal brynge it to destruccion and ende.

After ỹ death of his mother, Tobias departed awaye from Nininе, with his wife and children, and with his childers children, & came agayne to his father and mother in lawe, and founde them whole and in a good age, and toke the care of thē. And he closed their eyes, and was heyre vnto all Raguels goodes, and sawe the fifth generacion and childers childrē. And whan he was xcix. yeare of age, he dyed in the feare of the LORDE, and his kynsfolkes buried him. And all his posterite continued in a good life, and holy conuersacion: so that they were loued & accepted both of God and men, and of all the people of the londe.

Chap. XVI. Judith syngeth prayse vnto the LORDE. The people come together vnto Jerusalē to geue thankes and prayse vnto the LORDE How Judith made hir ende.

The first Chapter.

A Rpharat the kynge of the Medes subdued many people vnto his dominion, & buylded a noble stroge cite, which he called Egbathanis. The walles of it made he of fre stone, foure squared, seuētie cubites hye, and thirtie cubites brode. He made towres therevpon of an hundreth cubites hye. But vpon the foure corners euery syde was twentie fote brode. He made the portes in the heith, like as the towres. This kynge trusted in his mightie hoost, & in his glorious charettes.

So in ỳ twolfte yeare of his raigne it happened, that Nabuchodonosor ỳ kynge of the Assirians (which raigned in the greate cite of Ninive) fought agaynst Arpharat, and ouercame hī in ỳ greate felde called Ragau, besyde Euphrates and Tigris and Jadason in the felde of Erioth the kinge of the Elikes.

B Then was the kyngdome of Nabuchodo
Mac.1,a nosor exalted, and his hert was lift vp: and he sent vnto all them that dwelt in Celicia, in Damascus, in Libanus, and vnto the heithen that dwelt in Carmel and Cedar, and to soch as dwelt in Galile in the greate felde of Esdrelō, to all them that were in Samaria, and beyonde the water of Jordane vnto Jerusalem and the whole londe of Jesse vnto the mountaynes of Ethiopia. Vnto all these dyd Nabuchodonosor the kynge of ỳ Assirians sende messaungers. But they all w one consent wolde not agree vnto him, and sent the messaungers agayne emptie, and put thē awaye without honoure. Then Nabuchodonosor the kynge toke indignaciō at all those londes, and sware by his trone & by his kyngdome, that he wolde be auenged of all these countrees.

The II. Chapter.

A Nno the xiij. yeare of kynge Nabuchodonosor, vpon the xxij. daye of ỳ first moneth, it was deuysed in the courte of Nabuchodonosor ỳ kynge of the Assirians, that he wolde defende himself. So he called vnto him all ỳ elders, all his captaynes and men of warre, and shewed them his secret councell, and tolde them, that his purpose was, to bryngе the whole earth vnder his dominion. Now whan they were all content with this sayenge, Nabuchodonosor the kinge called Holofernes the chefe captayne of his warres and saide vnto him: Go thy waye forth agaynst all the kyngdomes of the west and specially agaynst those that haue despysed my commaundement. Thou shalt spare no realme, all stronge cities shalt thou bryngе in subiection vnto me.

Then Holofernes called together all the B
captaynes & rulers of all the power in Assiria, and mustred the soudyers vnto the hoost (like as the kynge commaunded him) namely, an hundreth and twētye thousande fightinge men vpon fote, and twolue thousande archers vpon horsebacke. All his ordinaunce sent he before with an innumerable multitude of camels, so that the hoost was well prouyded for with oxen, and small catell, and ỳ without nombre. He caused corne to be prepared out of all Syria for his hoost. Moch golde and syluer also toke he out of the kynges house. So he toke his iourney, he and all his hoost, with charettes, horsmen, and archers: of whom there were so many, that they couered the grounde of the lande, like the grashoppers.

And whan he was gone past the borders C of the Assirians, he came towarde the greate mountaynes of Ange, which lye vpon the left syde of Celicia: and so he wente vp in to all their castels, and wanne euery stroge holde. As for ỳ welthy cite of Melothus, he brake it downe, & spoyled all the childrē of Thersis and the Jsmaelites, which laye towarde the wylderne and vpon the south syde of ỳ londe of Chelon. He wente ouer Euphrates also, and came in to Mesopotamia, and brake downe all the hye cities that were there, from the broke of Mambre tyll a man come to the see: and he toke the borders in from Celicia vnto the coastes of Japhet towarde the south. He caried awaye all the Madianites, and spoyled all their goodes: & who so euer withstode him, he slew them with the swerde. After this he wente downe in to the felde of Damascus in the tyme of haruest, and brent vp all the corne and all the trees, and caused the vynes to be cutt downe. And the feare of him fell vpon all them that dwelt in ỳ earth

The III. Chapter.

A SO the kynges & princes of all cities & londes sent their Embassitours: namely, they of Syria and Mesopotamia, Syria Sobal & Lybia & Celicia, which came to Holofernes, & sayde: Let thy wrath ceasse towarde vs: It is better for vs to serue the greate kynge Nabuchodonosor with oure lyues, and to be subiecte vnto the, then that we shulde dye and be slayne, and receaue greater hurte. All oure cities and possessions, all mountaynes and hilles, all feldes, greate and small catell, shepe, goates, horses, and camels, all oure goodes and housholdes, be in thy power, vnder thy subiection be it altogether. We oure selues also and oure children wylbe thyne owne, come vnto vs a peceable lorde, and vse oure seruyce at thy pleasure.

B Then came Holofernes downe from the mountaynes with horsemē & greate power, and conquered all stronge fensed cities, and all that dwelt in the londe. And out of all cities he toke stronge men, & soch as were mete for ỹ warre, to helpe him. There came soch a feare also vpon those countrees, that the inhabitaūce of all the cities, the princes and rulers & the people together, wēte forth to mete him as he came, & receaued him honorably with garlandes & torches, with daunses, tabrettes and pipes.

C Nevertheles though they dyd this, yet might they not swage his rigorous stomak: but he destroyed their cities, & hewed downe their woddes. For Nabuchodonosor the kynge had commaunded him, that he shulde roote out all the goddes of the londe: to ỹ intent that he onely might be called and taken for God, of the nacions which Holofernes with his power brought vnder him. So wente he thorow Syria Sobal, and thorow all Appamia, and all Mesopotamia, came to the Idumeans in the lōde of Gabaa and Sepropoli, and toke their cities, and remayned there thirtie dayes, wherin he caused all the whole multitude of his hooste to be gathered together.

The IIII. Chapter.

A WHan the children of Israel ỹ dwelt in Jewry herde this, they were sore afrayed of him. There came soch tremblinge also and feare vpon them, that they sorowed he shulde do vnto the cite of Jerusalem and the temple of the LORDE, as he had done to other cities & their temples. So they sent in to all Samaria rounde about vnto Jericho, toke in and occupied all the toppes of the mountaynes, made fast the townes with walles, and prepared corne for them agaynst the battayll.

Eliachim also ỹ preste wrote vnto all thē that dwelt towarde Esdrelon (which lyeth ouer agaynst ỹ greate felde by Dotha Jm) & vnto all those by whom men might haue passage vnto them, that they shulde take in the wayes of the mountaynes, wherby there might be eny waye and passage to Jerusalem, & ỹ they shulde holde diligent watch, where eny strate waye was betwixte ỹ mountaynes. And the children of Israel dyd, as B Eliachim the preste of the LORDE had commaunded them. And all the people, cried earnestly, and humbled their soules with fastinges and prayers, they and their wyues. The prestes put on hayrie clothes, and layed the yonge babes before the temple of the LORDE, and couered the aulter of the LORDE with an hayrie clothe. And with one accorde cried they vnto the LORDE God of Israel, that their children shulde not be geuen into a pray, and their wyues into a spoyle, ỹ their cities shulde not be layed waist, & ỹ their Sanctuary shulde not be vnhalowed, and so they to be a shame and rebuke vnto the Heithen. Eccli. 35.

Then Eliachim the hye preste of the LORDE wente rounde about all Israel, and spake vnto them, sayenge: Be ye sure, ỹ the LORDE wil heare youre peticions, yf ye cōtynue stedfast in fastinges and prayers in ỹ sight of the LORDE. Remembre Moses the seruaunte of the LORDE, which ouerthrew ỹ Amalechites (that trusted in their might & power, in their hoost, in their shildes, in their charettes & horsmen) not with weapens, but with holy prayers. Euen so shal all the enemies of Israel be, yf ye contynue in this worke, that ye haue begonne. So vpon this exortacion they contynued in prayer before the LORDE: In so moch that they which offred brent sacrifices vnto the LORDE, offred the offringes vnto ỹ LORDE, beynge arayed in hayrie clothes, and had aßshes vpon their heades. And they all besought God from their whole hert, ỹ he wolde vyset his people of Israel. C Exo. 17.

The V. Chapter.

AND worde came to Holofernes the A prynce of the warres of the Assyriās, ỹ the childrē of Israel prepared themselues to make resistaunce, & how they had stopped the wayes betwixte the mountaynes. Then was he ercedinge wroth, & called all the princes of Moab, & the captaines of Ammon, & sayde vnto them: Tell me, what people is this, ỹ kepeth in the moũtaynes? Or what maner of cities are they? What is their power? Or what maner of hoost haue they? Who is their captayne? And why Iudit.5.b do they despyse vs (more then all those that dwell in the east) and come not forth to mete vs, ỹ they might receaue vs with peace?

Iudit. 11.b Then Achior the captayne of all the Ammonites answered, and sayde: Syr, yf it please the to heare me, I wil tell the trueth before the concernynge this people that dwell in the mountaynes, and there shal no lye go out of my mouth.

B This people is of the generacion of the
Gen. 11.d Caldees, they dwelt first in Mesopotamia, for they wolde not folowe ỹ goddes of their fathers that were in the londe of the Caldees, & so forsoke they the customes of their fore fathers (which had many goddes) and worshipped one God, that made heauẽ and earth: which also commaunded them that they shulde go from thence, and dwell at Haran. Now whan there came a derth in to ỹ
Gen. 41.g
ind 46.a whole londe, they wente downe to Egipte, & there they dwelt foure hundreth yeares, in ỹ Exodi 1.a
ind 12.f which they multiplied so greatly, that their hoost might not be nombred. And whan the Galat. 3.c kynge of Egipte oppressed them, and subdued thẽ in buyldinge of his cities with makynge of claye & brick, they cried vnto God Exodi 1.b
ind 5.b their LORDE, which punyshed the whole londe of Egipte with dyuerse plages.

C Now whan the kynge of Egipte let thẽ
Exo.12.c go their waye, & the plage ceassed, & then folowed after thẽ, to take thẽ, & to bringe thẽ ind 14.b agayne in to his seruyce, whyle they were flyenge awaye, the God of heauẽ opened ỹ see, so ỹ the waters stode fast vpon both the sydes as a wall, & these wente thorow the bottome of the see drye shod. In the which place whã an innumerable people of the Egipcians folowed vpon them, they were so ouerwhelmed with the waters, that there remayned not one, to tell thẽ that came after, how it happened.

D So whan this people was passed thorow the reed see, they came in to the wildernes of the mount Synai, where neuer man might dwell afore, & where the sonne of mã had neuer rested. There were ỹ bytter waters made swete for thẽ, that they might drynke, & xl.
Exo.15.d yeares had they meate from heauẽ. Where Exo.16.f so euer they wente (without bowe & arowe, without buckler or swerde) their God fought Deut. 8.a for thẽ, & caused thẽ to haue the victory. Yee no man was able to hurte this people, except it were so, ỹ they departed vnfaithfully from ỹ worshippinge of the LORDE their God. But as oft as they worshipped ony other beside their God, he gaue them ouer to be spoyled, to be slayne, & to be put to confucion. Neuertheles as oft as they were sory for departynge from the worshipe of their God, the same God of heauen gaue them power & strẽgth to withstode their enemies.

Moreouer they slew the kynge of the Cananites, Jebusites, Pherezites, Ethites, Emites & Amorites, & all ỹ mightie in Hesebon, & toke their lõdes & cities in possession: and so longe as they synned not in ỹ sight of their God, it wẽte well with them, for their God hateth vnrighteousnesse. For in tymes past whan they wente out of ỹ waye, which God had geuen them, ỹ they shulde walke in it, they were destroyed in dyuerse battayles of many nacions, & many of them were caried awaye presoners into a straũge coũtre. But now lately they haue turned thẽselues agayne vnto the LORDE their God, & are come together agayne out of the countrees where they were scatred abrode: and thus haue they cõquered these mountaynes & dwelleth rin: & as for Jerusalem where their Sanctuary is, they haue it againe in possession.

And therfore my lorde, make diligẽt inquisicion, yf this people haue done wickednesse in the sight of their God, then let vs go vp agaynst them, for doutles their God shal deliuer them into thy handes, & subdue them vnto ỹ power. But yf this people haue not displeased their God, we shal not be able to withstande them, for their God shal defende thẽ, & so shall we be a shame to all ỹ worlde.

Now whan Achior had spoken out these wordes, all the prynces of Holofernes were wroth, & thought to slaye him, & sayde euery another: what is he this, which darre saie, ỹ childrẽ of Israel are able to withstode Nabuchodonosor the kynge & his hoost? whereas they are an vnwapened people, without strẽgth or vnderstõdinge of ỹ fettes of warre? That Achior therfore maye knowe, ỹ he hath disceaued vs, we wil go vp in to ỹ mountaynes: & whan the mightie men of thẽ are taken, he also shalbe stickte with the swerde, ỹ all people maye knowe, that Nabuchodonosor is the God of the earth, and that there is none other without him.

The VI. Chapter.

SO whan they had left of speakinge, Holofernes toke sore indignacion, & sayde vnto Achior. For so moch as thou hast prophecied vnto vs, sayenge that the people of Israel shalbe defended of their

God, I will shew the, that there is no God but Nabuchodonosor. Yet whan we slaye them all as one man, thou also shalt perish with them thorow the swerde of the Assirians, & all Israel shal be destroyed with the, & thē shalt thou sele, that Nabuchodonosor is the LORDE of the whole earth. Thē shal the swerde of my knyghthode go thorow ỹ sydes, & thou shalt fall downe stickte amonge the wounded of Israel, & shalt not come to thy self agayne, but be vtterly destroyed with thē. But yf thou thynkest thy prophecye to be true, why dost thou then chaunge thy colowre? why art thou afrayed? Thynkest thou that my wordes are not able to be performed? But that thou mayest knowe, that thou shalt sele these thinges with thē, beholde, from this houre forth wyll I sende the vnto yonder people, that whan the punyshment of my swerde (which they haue worthely deserued) falleth vpon them, thou mayest be punyshed with them.

So Holofernes cōmaunded his seruauntes to take Achior, & to cary him vnto Bethulia, and to delyuer him in to the handes of the children of Israel. Then Holofernes seruauntes toke him, & wēte thorow the playne felde. But whan they drewnye vnto the mountaynes, the slynge casters came ont agaynst them: Nevertheles they gat them awaye by the syde of the mountayne, & bounde Achiors hand & fote to a tre, & so left him bounde with wythies, & turned agayne vnto their lorde.

Notwithstōdinge the children of Israel were downe frō Bethulia, came vnto him, lowsed him, brought him to Bethulia, set him in the myddest of the people, and axed him what the matter was, that the Assiriās had left him bounde.

C Osias the sonne of Micha of the trybe of Symeon, & Charmim (which is also called Gothoniel) were the pryncipall rulers at the same tyme. Now whan Achior stode in the myddest of the Senatours, & before thē all, he tolde them, what answere he gaue Holofernes, to the thinge that he axed him, and how Holofernes people wolde haue slayne him for so sayenge, & how Holofernes himself was wroth, & cōmaunded him for the same cause to be delyuered vnto ỹ Israelites: that whan he ouercame the childrē of Israel he might commaunde Achior also to be put to death with dyuerse tormentes, because he sayde: the God of heauen is their defender.

And whā Achior had playnely tolde out all these thinges, all the people fell downe vpon their faces, prayesinge the LORDE, and poured out their prayers together vnto the LORDE, with a generall complaynte & wepynge, & sayde: O LORDE God of heauen & earth, beholde their pryde, & loke vpon oure lowlynes, & cōsidre how it standeth with thy sayntes, & make it to be knowne, ỹ thou forsakest not those, which holde them fast by the, & how ỹ thou bringest thē lowe, ỹ presume of thē selues, & make their boast in their owne strength. So whan the wepinge and D prayer of the people (which they had made the whole daye longe) was ended, they cōforted Achior, sayēge: the God of oure fathers, whose power & strength thou hast prayesed, shall so rewarde the, ỹ thou shalt rather se their destruccion. Whan ỹ LORDES God then shall geue his seruauntes this liberte, God be with the also amonge vs: so ỹ yf it please ỹ, thou w̄ thyne mayest dwell w̄ vs.

Now whan Osias had ended the councell, he toke him in to his house, and made a greate supper, called all the elders to it, & so they refreßshed them selues after the fastinge. And afterwarde was all the people called together, which made their prayers all the night longe in the congregacion, and besought the God of Israel for helpe.

The VII. Chapter.

THe next daye Holofernes commaun A ded his hooste, to go vp agaynst Bethulia. There were an C. & xx. thou- Iudit. 2.
sande fightinge men on fote, & two & twentie thousande horsmē, besyde the preparynge of them ỹ were womne, & came to them on euery syde out of the countrees & cities which he had takē. All these prepared them selues vnto the battayll agaynst the Israelites, and came on by the hyll syde, vnto the topp that loketh ouer agaynst Dothaim, from the place which is called Belma, vnto Chelmon ỹ lyeth towarde Eßdrelon.

Now whan the childrē of Israel sawe so B greate a multitude of the Assirians, they fell downe flat vpon ỹ grounde, strowed aßshes vpon their heades, & prayed w̄ one acorde, ỹ the God of Israel wolde shew his mercy vpon his people. And so they toke their weapens, & sat betwixte the mountaynes in ỹ narow place, & kepte the waye daye & nighte. But whyle Holofernes was goinge aboute, he founde the water springe, which from the south syde was conueyed in to the cite by a condyte: this cōmaunded he to be directe another waye, & to cut their condite in sunder. There were welles also not farre from the walles, which they vsed secretly, more for pleasure then for necessite.

Then wente the Ammonites & the Moabites vnto Holofernes, and sayde: The childrē of Israel trust nether in speare ner arowe, but haue taken in, and kepe the mountaynes and hilles. That thou mayest ouercome them therfore without ỳ stryknge of eny battayll, sett mē to kepe the welles, that they drawe no water out of them: so shalt thou destroye thē without swerde, or at the least they shall be so feble, that they must be fayne to geue ouer the cite, which they thinke not able to be wōne, for so moch as it lieth in the moūtaynes. These wordes pleased Holofernes well and all his men of warre, and Iudit. 16.a he set an hundreth men at euery well rounde aboute.

D And whan this watch had endured twenty dayes, the Cisternes and all that had water, fayled them that dwelt in the cite of Bethulia, so that in ỳ whole cite they had not drynke ynough for one daye, for the people had water geuen them daylie in a measure. Then came the men and women, yonge persōnes and childrē all vnto Osias, and sayExo. 17.a de all with one voyce: God be iudge betwixte vs and the, for thou hast dealt euell with vs: thou woldest not speake peaceably with the kynge of the Assirians, therfore hath God solde vs in their handes, and there is no man to helpe vs, where as we are brought downe before their eyes in thirst and greate destruccion. Therfore gather now together all the people that be in the cite, that we maye all yelde oure selues wyllingly vnto ỳ people of Holofernes: for better it is ỳ we be captyue and prayse the LORDE with oure lyues, then to be slayne and perisshe, and to be laughed to scorne & shamed of euery man whan we se oure wyues and childrē dye before oure eyes. We take heauen & earth this daye to recorde, and the God of oure fathers (which punysheth vs accordinge to the deserynge of oure synnes) and geue you warnynge, ỳ ye geue vp the cite now in to ỳ power of Holofernes hoost, that oure ende maye be shorte with the swerde, which els shal endure longe for wante of water and for thirst.

E Whan they had spokē out these wordes, there was a greate wepynge and howlynge in the whole congregacion, and that of euery man, and they cryed an whole houre longe vnto God with one voice, sayenge: we Psal. 105.a haue synned with oure fathers, we haue done amysse, we haue dealt wickedly. Thou ỳ art gracious, haue mercy vpon vs, punysh oure vnrighteousnes with thine owne scourge, and geue not those ouer that knowlege the, vnto a people which knoweth the not, leste they saye amonge the heithen: where is Psa. their God?

And whan they were so weery with this crienge and wepynge, that they helde their tunges, Osias stode vp with watrye eyes, and sayde: O take good hertes vnto you Iudi. (deare brethren) and be of good cheare, and let vs wayte yet these fyue dayes for mercy of the LORDE: peraduenture he shal cut awaye his indignacion, and geue glory vnto his name. But yf he helpe vs not whan these fyue dayes are past, we shall do as ye haue sayde.

The VIII. Chapter.

AND it happened whan these wordes A came to the eares of Judith a wyddow, which was the daughter of Merari, the sonne of Idor, the sonne of Joseph, the sonne of Osias, the sonne of Elai, ỳ sonne of Jammor, the sonne of Jedeon, the sonne of Raphoim, the sonne of Achitob, the sonne of Melchia, the sonne of Enam, ỳ sonne of Nathania, the sonne of Salathiel, ỳ sonne of Symeon, the sonne of Ruben. And hir hußbande was called Manasses, which dyed in the dayes of the barlye harueste. For whyle he was byndinge ỳ sheeues together in the felde, the heate came vpon his heade, and he dyed at Bethulia his cite, and there was he buried beside his fathers. Now was B Judith his desolate wyddow thre yeares & six monethes. And in the hyer partes of hir house she made hirself a preuy chambre, where she dwelt, beynge closed in with hir maydēs. She ware a smock of hayre, and fasted all the dayes of hir life, excepte the Sabbathes, and new moones & the solempne dayes that the people of Israel kepte. She was a very fayre and beutyfull personne. Hyr husbande also had left her greate riches, a plenteous housholde, greate vnmoueable possessions and many catell. This Judith was a woman of a very good reporte with euery one, for she feared the LORDE greatly, and there was no body that speake an euell worde of her.

Whā this Judith herde, how Osias had Iudi. promised the people, that after the fyfte daye he wolde geue vp ỳ cite vnto the Assirians, she sent for the elders Chambri and Charmin: and whan they came to her, she sayde: what thinge is this, wherin Osias hath consented, ỳ yf God helpe not within fyue dayes, he wil geue ouer the cite to the Assirians? What are ye, that ye tempte thē

LORDE: This deuyce optayneth no mercy of God, but prouoketh him vnto wrath and displeasure. Wyl ye set the mercy of ỹ LORDE a tyme, & appoynte him a daye after your wyll?

C Neuertheles for so moch as the LORDE is pacient, let vs rather amende oure selues, pouringe out teares, and besekynge him of grace. For God threateneth not as a mā, neither wyll he be prouoked vnto wrath as the children of men. And therfore let vs hertely fall downe before him, and serue him with a meke spirete, and with wepynge eyes saye vnto the LORDE, that he deale with vs accordinge to his owne wyll and mercy: that like as oure hert is now vexed, & brought lowe thorow the pryde of them, it maye so be comforted thorow his grace: in so moch as we sowe not the synnes of oure fathers, which forsoke their God, & worshipped other goddes: for the which synne they perished with the swerde, were spoyled & brought to shame of all their enemies. As for vs, we knowe none other God but onely him, for whose cōsore let vs tary with mekenesse. He shall requyre and make inquisicion for oure blonde, from the vexacions of oure enemies: he shal bringe downe all the Heithen, that ryse vp agaynst vs, and put them to dishonoure, euē the LORDE oure God.

D Therfore deare brethren, seinge ye are the honorable and elders in the people of God, vnto whom all ỹ people haue respecte, and vpon whom the life of the people stondeth, lift vp their hertes with youre exortacion, ỹ they maye call to remembraunce, how oure fathers also in tymes past were tempted, ỹ they might be proued, yf they worshipped their God a right. They ought to remēbre, how oure father Abraham beinge tempted, and tryed thorow many tribulacions, was founde a louer and frende of God. So was Isaac, so was Jacob, so was Moses, and all they that pleased God, beinge tryed thorow many troubles, were sofide stedfast in faith. Agayne, they that receaued not their tentacions with the feare of God, but put thē selues forth with vnpaciency and murmuringe agaynst God, perished of the destroyer, and were slayne of serpentes. And therfore shulde not we vndertake to be auenged, for the thinge that is done vnto vs: but to considre, that all these punyshmentes are farre lesse then oure synnes & myßdedes: Beleuynge also, that this correccion commeth vnto vs (as to the seruauntes of God) for amendment, and not for oure destruccion.

Then sayde Osias & the elders vnto Judith: All that thou speakest, is true, and no mā can reprouve ỹ wordes. Praie thou for vs now therfore vnto God, for thou art an holy womā, and fearest God. And Judith sayde vnto them: Seynge ye knowe, that my wordes are of God, then proue my councell and deuice, yf it be of God: and beseke God, that he wyll bringe my councell to a good ende. E 1.cor.14.c 1.Ioh.4.a 1.Tessl.5.c

Thus haue I deuysed: Ye shal stode this night before the porte, and I wyll go forth with Abra my mayde: Praye ye therfore vnto God, that he wyl graciously remēbre his people of Israel within fyue daies, as ye haue sayde. As for the thinge that I go in hande withall, axe ye no questions of it, tyll I open it vnto you myself: do ye nothinge els, but praye vnto the LORDE youre God for me. Then Osias the prynce of the people of Juda sayde vnto her: Go thy waye in peace, the LORDE be with the, that we maye be auenged of oure enemies, And so they wente from her agayne. Iudit.10.b

The IX. Chapter.

NOw whā they were gone their way, Judith wente in to hir oratory, put on an hayrie smock, strowed aßhes vpon hir heade, fell downe before the LORDE, and cryed vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE God of my father Symeon, which gaueste him a swerde for a defence agaynst the enemies, that vsed violence and wilfulnes, and that rauyshed ỹ vyrgin and put her to dishonesty. Thou that gaueste their wiues in to a praye, and their daughters in to captiuyte, and all their praye for a spoyle vnto thy seruauntes, which bare a zele vnto the, helpe me wyddow, O LORDE my God, I beseke ỹ. For thou haste done all thinges from the begynnynge, and loke what thou haste taken in hande and deuysed, it came euer to passe. For all thy wayes are prepared, & thy iudgmentes are done in thy euerlastinge fore knowlege. O loke now vpon the armyes of the Assirians, like as it was thy pleasure somtyme to loke vpon the hooste of the Egipcians, whan they beynge weapened, persecuted thy seruauntes, & put their trust in their charettes, horsmen, and in the multitude of their men of warre. But thou lokedeste vpon their hooste, castinge a thick darcknes before them: and whan they came in to the depe, the waters ouerwhelmed them. A Exo.14.

Euē so LORDE let it go with these, that trust in ỹ power and multitude of their men B

Psal. 45.b of warre, in their charettes, arowes & speares, and knowe not, that thou onely art oure God, which destroyest warres from the begynnynge, and that thou art the LORDE. O lift vp thine arme now like as euer from ỳ begynnynge, and in thy power bryng their power to naught, cause their might to fall in thy wrath. They make their boast, ỳ they wyl vnhalowe and defyle thy Sanctuary, and to waist the tabernacle of ỳ name, and to cast downe the horne of thine aulter with their swerde. Bryng to passe (O LORDE) ỳ the pryde of the enemye maye be cut downe with his owne swerde: that he maie be taken with the snare of his eyes in me, and ỳ thou mayest smyte him with the lippes of my loue. O geue me a stedfast mynde, that I maye despyse him and his strength, and that I maye destroye him.

C This shal bryng thy name an euerlastinge remẽbraunce, yf the hande of a woman ouerthrowe him. For thy power (O LORDE) stondeth not in ỳ power of men, nether hast thou eny pleasure in the strẽgth of horses. There was neuer proude personne that pleased the, but in the prayer of the humble and meke hath thy pleasure bene euermore.

Judic. 7. a
Psal. 146. b

O thou God of the heauens, thou maker of the waters, and LORDE of all creatures, heare me poore woman, callynge vpon the, and puttynge my trust in thy mercy. Remembre thy couenaunt O LORDE, and my mister wordes in my mouth, & stablysh this deuyce in my hert, that thy house maye contynue still in holynes, and that all the heithen maye knowe and vnderstõde, that thou art God, and that there is none other but thou.

Eccli. 36. a

The X. Chapter.

A AND whan she had left of cryenge vnto the LORDE, she rose vp from the place, where she had lyen flat before the LORDE, and called hir mayde, wente downe in to hir house, layed ỳ hayre cloth from her, put of the garmentes of hir wyddowhode, waßhed hir body, anoynted hir self with precious thinges of swete sauoure, broyded and plated hir hayre, sett an hoode vpon hir heade, and put on soch apparell as belongeth vnto gladnesse, slippers vpon hir fete, armelettes, spanges, earynges, fynger rynges, and deckte herself with all hir best araye.

Judit. 16. b

The LORDE gaue her also a speciall beutye and fayrnesse (for all this deckinge of hir self was not done for eny volupteousnesse and pleasure of the flesh, but of a right discrecion and vertue, therfore dyd the LORDE increase hir bewtye) so ỳ she was exceadinge amyable and welsauoured in all mens eyes. She gaue hir mayde also a bottell of wyne, a pot with oyle, pottage, cakes, bred & chese, and wente hir waye.

B Now whan she came to the porte of the cite, she founde Osias and the elders of the cite waitinge there. Which whan they sawe her, they were astonnyed, & marueled greatly at her bewty, neuertheles they axed no question at her, but let her go, sayenge: The God of oure fathers geue ỳ his grace, and with his power perfourme all the deuyce of thy hert: that Jerusalem maye reioyse ouer the, and that thy name maye be in the nombre of the holy & righteous. And all they ỳ were there, sayde w̃ one voyce: so be it, so be it. Judith made hir prayer vnto ỳ LORDE, & wente out at ỳ porte, she & hir mayde.

And as she was goinge downe the mountayne, it happened that aboute the sprynge of the daye, the spyes of ỳ Assirians met w̃ her, and toke her, sayenge: whence commest thou? Or whither goest thou? She answred: I am a daughter of ỳ Hebrues, and am fled from them, for I knowe, that they shalbe geuẽ vnto you to be spoyled: because they thought scorne to yelde thẽ selues vnto you, that they might fynde mercy in youre sight. Therfore haue I deuysed by my self after this maner: I wyll go before the prynce Holofernes, and tell him all their secretes, and wyll shew him, how he maye come by them, and wynne them, so that not one man of his hoost shall perish.

C And whan these men had herde hir wordes, & considered hir fayre face, they were astonnyed (for they wondred at hir excellent bewtye) & sayde vnto her: Thou hast saued ỳ life by fyndinge out this deuyce, ỳ thou wouldest come downe to ỳ lorde: & be thou sure, that whã thou cõmest vnto him, he shal intreate the well, & thou shalt please him at ỳ hert. So they brought her in to Holofernes pauylion, and tolde him of her. Now whan she came in before him, immediatly he was ouercome & taken with hir bewtye. Then sayde his seruauntes: who wolde despyse ỳ people of ỳ Jewes, ỳ haue so fayre wemẽ? Shulde we not by reason fight agaynst thẽ for these? So whã Judith sawe Holofernes syttinge in a canapye, ỳ was wrought of purple, sylke, golde, Smaragde and precious stones, she loked fast vpõ him, & fell downe vpõ the earth. And Holofernes seruauntes toke hir vp agayne, at their lordes commmaundement.

The XI. Chapter.

A Then sayde Holofernes vnto her: Be of good chere, and feare not in thine hert, for I neuer hurte man, that wold serue Nabuchodonosor the kynge. As for thy people, yf they had not despysed me, I shulde not haue lift vp a speare agaynst thē. But tell me now, what is the cause ẏ thou art departed from them, and wherfore art thou come vnto vs?

And Judith sayde vnto him: Syr, vnderstonde the wordes of thy handmayden: for yf thou wilt do after ẏ wordes of thy hādmayden, the LORDE shall bringe thy matter to a prosperous effecte. As truly as Nabuchodonosor a lorde of the londe lyueth, & as truly as his power lyueth, which is in the to the punyshment of all men that go wronge, all men shall not onely be subdued vnto him thorow the, but all the beestes also of ẏ felde. For all people speake of thy prudēt actuyte, and it hath euer bene reported, how thou onely art good and mightie in all his kyngdome, and thy discrecion is commēded in all londes.

B The thinge is manifest also, that Achior spake, and it is wel knowne, what thou commaūdedst to do vnto him. For this is plaine and of a suretye, that oure God is so wroth with vs (by the reason of oure synnes) that he hath shewed by his prophetes vnto the people, how that for their synnes he wyl delyuer them ouer vnto the enemie. And for so moch as the children of Israel knowe that they haue so displeased their God, they are sore afrayed of the. They suffre greate honger also, & for wante of water, they are deed now in a maner. Moreouer, they are appoynted to slaye all their catell, that they maye drynke the bloude of them: and are purposed to spende all the holy ornamentes of their God (which he hath forbyddē thē to touch) for corne, wyne and oyle. Seinge now that they do these thinges, it is a playne case, ẏ

C they must nedes be destroyed. Which whan I thy handmayden perceaued, I fled from them, and the LORDE hath sent me vnto ẏ, to shew the these thinges. For I thy handmayden worshipe God euen here now beside the, and thy honde mayden shal go forth, and I wil make my praier vnto God, and he shal tell me, whan he wyl reward thē their synne: then shal I come and shew the, & bringe the thorow the myddest of Jerusalem, so that thou shalt haue all ẏ people of Israel, as the shepe without a shepherde: there shal not so moch as one dogg barck agaynst the, for these thinges are shewed me by the prouydence of God: and for so moch as God is displeased with them, he hath sent me to tell the the same.

These wordes pleased Holofernes and all D his seruauntes, which marueled at the wysdome of her, and sayde one to another: there is not soch a woman vpon earth, in bewtye and discrecion of wordes. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: God hath done well, that he hath sent the hither before thy people, that thou mayest geue them into oure handes. And for so moch as ẏ promyse is good, yf thy God performe it vnto me, he shall be my God also, and thou shalt be excellent and greate in the courte of Nabuchodonosor, and thy name shalbe spoken of in all the londe.

The XII. Chapter.

Then commaunded he her to go in, A where his treasure laye, and charged that she shulde haue hyr dwellynge there, and appoynted, what shulde be geuen her frō his table. Judith answered him, and sayde: As for the meate that thou hast Gen. 24. F commmaunded to geue me, I maye not eate of it as now (lest I displease my God) but wyl eate of soch as I haue brought with me. Then sayde Holofernes vnto her: Yf these thinges that thou hast brought with the fayle, what shal we do vnto the? And Judith sayde: As truly as thou lyuest my lorde, thy hande mayden shall not spende all this, tyll God haue brought to passe in my hande, the thinges that I haue deuysed.

So his seruauntes brought her in to the B tent, where as he had appointed. And as she was goinge in, she desyred that she might haue leue to go forth by night & before daye, to hir prayer and to make intercession vnto the LORDE. Then commaunded Holofernes his chamberlaynes, that she shulde go out and in at hir pleasure, to praye vnto hir God those thre dayes.

And so in the night season she wēte forth into the valley of Bethulia, and wasshed hirself in the wellwater. Then wente she vp, and besought the LORDE God of Israel that he wolde prospere hir waye, for the delyueraunce of his people. And so she wente in, and remayned cleane in hir tent, till she toke hir meate in the euenynge.

Vpon ẏ fourth daye it happened, ẏ Holo C fernes made a costly supper vnto his seruaūtes, and sayde vnto Vagao his chamberlay-ne: Go ẏ waye, and councell this Hebruesse, that she maye be wyllynge to consent to kepe company with me. For it were a shame vnto all the Assirians, that a woman shulde so laugh a man to scorne, that she were come from him vnmedled with all.

Then wente Vagao vnto Judith, and sayde: Let not the good daughter be afrayed, to come in to my lorde, that she maye be honoured before him, that she maye eate and drynke wyne, and be mery with him. Vnto whom Judith answered: Who am I, that I shulde saye my lorde naye? what so euer is good before his eyes, I shal do it: and loke what is his pleasure, that shal I thinke well done, as longe as I lyue.

D So she stode vp, and deckte hirself with hir apparell, and wente in, and stode before him. And Holofernes hert was whole moued, so that he brent in desyre towarde her. And Holofernes sayde vnto her: drynke now and sytt downe, and be mery, for thou hast founde fauoure before me. Then sayde Judith: Syr, I wil drynke, for my mynde is mery er to daye, then euer it was in all my life. And she toke and ate and dranke before him, the thinges that hir mayden had prepared for her. And Holofernes was mery w̄ her, and dranke more wyne, then euer he dyd afore in his life.

The XIII. Chapter.

A NOw whan it was late in the night, his seruauntes made haist, euery mā to his lodginge. And Vagao shutt the chamber dores, and wente his waye, for they were all ouerladen with wyne. So was Judith alone in the chamber. As for Holofernes, he laye vpon the bed all dronken, and of very dronkennes fell a slepe.

Eccli. 31.c

Then commaunded Judith hir mayden, to stōde without before the dore, and to wayte. And Judith stode before the bed, makynge hir prayer with teares, and moued hir lippes secretly, and sayde. Strengthe me O LORDE God of Israel, and haue respecte vnto the workes of my handes in this houre, that thou mayest set vp thy cite of Jerusalem, like as thou hast promysed: O graunte that by the I maye performe the thinge, which I haue deuysed thorow the beleue that I haue in the.

B And whan she had spoken this, she wente to the bedstreade, and lowsed the swerde that hanged vpon it, and drew it out. Then toke she holde of the hairie lockes of his heade, and sayde: Strengthe me o LORDE God in this houre, and with that, she gaue him two strokes vpon the neck, and smote of his heade. Then toke she the canapy awaye, and rolled the deed body aside. Immediatly she gat her forth, and delyuered the head of Holofernes vnto hir mayden, and bad hir put it in hir walett.

And so these two wente forth together after their custeme, as though they wolde praye, and so passed by the hoost, and came thorow the valley vnto the porte of the cite. And Judith cried afarre of vnto ẏ watchmen vpon the walles: Open the gates (sayde she) for God is with vs, which hath shewed his power in Israel. And whan they herde hir voyce, they called the elders of the cite together. And they came all to mete her, litle & greate, yonge & olde, for they thought not that she shulde haue come so soone. So they lighted candels, and gathered about hir euerichone: but she wente vp into an hye place, and caused sylence to be proclamed.

C Whan euery man now helde his tonge, Judith sayde: O prayse the LORDE our God, for he hath not despysed, ner forsaken them, that put their trust in him: and in me his honde mayden he hath performed his mercy, which he promysed vnto the house of Israel: yee in my hāde this same night hath he slayne the enemy of his people.

And with that she toke forth the heade of Holofernes out of the walett, and shewed it them, sayenge: Beholde the heade of Holofernes the captayne of the Assirias, and this is the canapy, wherin he laye in his dronkennes: where the LORDE oure God hath slayne him by the hande of a woman.

But as truly as the LORDE lyueth, his angell hath kepte me, goinge thither, remayninge there, and commynge hither agayne from thence. And the LORDE hath not suffred me his handmayden to be defyled, but without eny fylthynes of synne hath he brought me agayne vnto you: & ẏ with greate victory, ẏ that I am escaped, and ye delyuered. O geue thankes vnto him euerychone, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for euer.

So they praysed the LORDE altogether, D and gaue thākes vnto him. And to her they sayde: The LORDE hath blessed the in his power, for thorow the he hath brought our enemies to naught.

And Ozias ẏ chefe ruler of the people of Israel, sayde vnto her: Blessed art thou of the LORDE the hye God, aboue all wemen vpon earth.

Blessed be the LORDE the maker of heauen and earth, which hath gyded ỹ a right to wounde and to smyte of the heade of the captayne of oure enemies. For this daye he hath made thy name so honorable, that thy prayse shall neuer come out of the mouth of mẽ, which shal all waye remembre ỹ power of the LORDE: seinge thou hast not spared thine owne self, but put the in ieoperdy, consideringe the anguysh and trouble of thy people, and so hast helped their fall before God ỹ LORDE. And all the people sayde: Amẽ, Amen.

E Achior also was called, & he came. Then sayde Judith vnto him: The God of Israel vnto whõ thou gauest wytnes, that he wolde be auenged of his enemies, euen he hath this night thorow my hande smyttẽ of the head of all the vnfaithfull. And that thou mayest se that it so is, beholde, this is ỹ heade of Holofernes, which in his presumptuous pryde despysed the God of the people of Israel, and threatened ỹ with destruccion, sayenge: whan the people of Israel is takẽ, I shall cause the also to be stickte with the sworde. Whan Achior sawe Holofernes heade, he fell downe vpon his face to the grounde for very anguish & feare, so ỹ he swouned withall. But after that he was come agayne to himself, he fell downe before her & prayed her, sayẽge: Blessed art thou of thy God in all the tabernacles of Jacob: for all the people that heare of thy name, shall prayse the God of Israel because of the.

The XIIII. Chapter.

A Judith saide vnto all the people: Brethren heare me, Stycke vp this heade vpon oure walles, and whan the Sonne aryseth, take euery man his weapen, and fall out violently: not as though ye wolde go beside them, but to renne vpon them with violence. Whan the spyes in the tẽtes se this, they shall of necessite be cõpelled to fle backwarde, and to rayse vp their captayne to the battayll. So whã their captaynes come in to Holofernes pauylion, and fynde the deed body wrapped in the blonde, fearfulnes shall fall vpon them: and whan ye perceaue that they fle, folowe them without all care, for God shal delyuer them vnto you, to be destroyed.

Then Achior seynge the power of God which he had shewed vnto the people of Israel, fell of from his heithenish beleue, and put his trust in God, and let him self be circumcided: and so was he nombred amonge the people of Israel, he and all his posterite vnto this daye.

Now as soone as it was daye, they stickte vp Holofernes heade vpon the walles, and euery man toke his weapen, and so they wente out with an horrible crye. Whan the spyes sawe that, they ranne vnto Holofernes tent. And they that were within the tẽt, came before his chamber, and made a greate russhinge to wake him vp, because they thought with the noyse to have raised him. For there durst not one of the Assirians knocke, go in, ner to open. B

But whan the captaynes and prynces and all the chefe in the kynge of the Assirians hoost came together, they saide vnto the chamberlaynes: Go youre waye in, and wake him vp, for the myse are crepte out of their holes, and darre prouoke vs vnto battayll. 1. Reg. 2

Then wente Vagao in to his chamber, C stode before the bed, and clapped with his handes, for he thought he had bene slepynge with Judith.

But whã he had herkened perfectly with his eares, and coude perceaue no sterynge, he wente nyer to the bed, and lift it vp, and then sawe he the deed bõdy of Holofernes lyenge there without a heade, weltred in his blonde vpon the earth. Then cried he with loude voyce, and with wepynge rent his clothes, and wente in to Judiths tent, and founde her not: And so he leapte out vnto the people, and sayde: one womã of ỹ Jewes, hath brought all Nabuchodonosors people to shame. For lo, Holofernes lyeth vpõ the grounde, and hath no heade.

Whan the chefe of the assirians hoost herde that, they rente their clothes, and there fell an intollerable feare and tremblinge vpõ them, so ỹ their myndes were sore afrayed. And there was an exceadynge greate crye in the whole hoost.

The XV. Chapter.

N Ow whan all the hoost herde that A

Holofernes was headed, their mynde and co uncell fell from them: and soch a feare came vpon them, that they vndertoke to defende them selues by flyenge awaye: one spake not to another, but hanged downe their heades, left all behynde them, and made haist to esca pe from the Hebrues: for they herde, that they were haistinge to come after with their weapens, and so they fled by the wayes of the feldes, and thorow all the fote pathes of the dales.

And whan ỳ children of Israel sawe that they fled, they folowed vpon them, and wen-te downe with trōpettes, blowinge and ma-kynge a greate crie after thē. As for the Assirians, they had no ordre, and kepte not thē selues together, but fled their waye. Neuer-thelesse the children of Israel fell vpon them with one company and ordre, and discomfited as many as they might gett. And Osias sent messaungers vnto all the cities and coū trees of Israel.

B So all the regions and euery cite sent out their best men after them in harnesse, & smote them with the swerde, tyll they came to ỳ vttemost parte of their borders. And the other that were in Bethulia came into the tē tes of the Assirians, and toke all that they which were fled, had left behynde them, and so they founde greate good. And they that came agayne to Bethulia from the battayll, toke with them soch thinges as had bene theirs: there was no nōbre of the catell, and of all costly Jewels, so that from the lowest vnto the hyest, they were all made riche of the spoyles of them. And Joachim the hye preest at Jerusalē, came to Bethulia with all the elders, that they might se Judith.

C Now whan she came out vnto them, they begame all to prayse her with one voyce, sayenge: thou worshipe of the cite of Jeru salem, thou ioye of Israel, thou honō of oure people, thou hast done manly, and thy hert is comforted, because thou hast loued clenlynes and chastyte, & hast knowne no man but thine owne husbande: therfore hath the hā-de of the LORDE comforted the, and blessed shalt thou be forever. And all people sayde:
so be it, so be it.

In thirtie dayes coude the people of Israel scarse gather vp the spoyles of the Assi-rians. But all that belonged vnto Holofernes, and had bene his specially, (whether it were of golde, of syluer, precious stones, clothinge and all ornamentes) they gaue it vnto Judith. And all the people reioysed, both we men, maydens, and yonge people, with pipes and harpes.

The XVI. Chapter.

Then sange Judith this songe vnto A the LORDE: Begynne vnto the LOR-DE vpon the tabrettes, singe vnto the LORDE vpon the cymbals. O synge vnto him a new songe of thankesgeuynge, be ioyfull and call vpon his name. It is the LOR- Psal.
DE that destroyeth warres, euen the LORDE is his name. Which hath pitched his tentes in the myddest of his people, that he might delyuer vs from the hande of all oure enemies. Assur came out of the mountaynes in the multitude of his strength. His people stop-red the valleys. He purposed to haue brēt vp my londe, and to slaye my yonge men with the swerde.

He wolde haue caryed awaye my children B and virgins into captiuyte, but the allmigh tie LORDE hurte him, and delyuered him to the handes of a woman, which brought him to confucion. For their mightie was not destroyed of the yonge men. It was not the sonnes of Titan that slew him, nether haue
the greate giauntes sett them selues agayns him: but Judith the daughter of Merarih hir fayre bewtye hath discomfited him, and brought him to naught. For she layed awai hir widdowes garment, and put on the appa red of gladnesse in the reioysinge of the children of Israel. She anoynted hir face, and bounde vp hir hayre in an hoode, to begyle
him. Hir slippers rauyshed his eyes, hir bew tye captyuated his mynde, with the swerde smote she of his neck. The Persians were as-tonnyed at hir stedfastnesse, and the Medes at hir boldnes. Then howled the armyes of ỳ Assirians, whan my symple appeared, dry of thyrst. The sonnes of the daughters haue C pearsed them thorow, and slayne them as fu gityue childrē: they perysshed in the battayll, for the very feare of the LORDE my God. Let vs synge a songe of thākesgeuynge vnto the LORDE, a new songe of prayse wyl we synge vnto oure God. LORDE, LORDE, thou art a greate God, mightie in power, whom no man maye ouercome. All thy creatures shul de serue the, for thou spakest but the worde, & Gen.
they were made: thou sente thy sprete, & they Psal.
were created, and no man maye withstonde thy voyce. The mountaynes shal moue from the foundacions with the waters, the stony rockes shal melt before the like waxe. But they that feare the, shal be greate with ỳ in all thinges. Wo vnto the people that ryse vp against my generacion, for the allmigh-

LORDE wyll auenge him self of them, & in the daye of iudgmēt wyl he vyset them. For he shall gene fyre & wormes in to their flesh, that they maye burne and fele it for euermore.

After this it happened, that after the victory all the people came to Jerusalem, to gene prayse and thankes vnto the LORDE. And whā they were purified, they offred all their brent sacrifices and their promysed offerynges. And Judith offred all Holofernes weapons, and all the Jewels, that ỹ people had geuē her, and the canapy that she toke from his bed, and hanged them vp vnto the LORDE. The people was ioyfull, as the vse is: & this ioye by reason of the victory, with Judith, endured thre monethes.

So after these dayes euery man wente home agayne, and Judith was in greate reputacion at Bethulia, and right honorably ta ken in all the londe of Jsrael. Vnto hir vertue also was chastite ioyned, so ỹ after hir husbonde Manasses dyed, she neuer knew man all the dayes of hir life. Vpon the hye solempne dayes she wente out with greate worshipe. She dwelt in hir husbandes house an hundreth and fyue yeare, & left hir honde mayden fre, and dyed, and was buried beside hir husbande in Bethulia. And all the people mourned for her seuen dayes. So longe as she lyued, there was none that troubled Jsrael, and many yeares also after hir death.

The daye wherin this victory was gotten, was solemply holden, and rekened of the Jewes in the nombre of the holy dayes, and is yet greatly holden of the Jewes euer sithe, vnto this daye.

The ende of the boke of Judith.

The chapters in the boke of Hester, which are nott founde in the text of the Hebrue, but in the Greke and Latyn.

The XI. Chapter after the Latyn.

In this chapter is descrybed the dreame of Mardocheus.

MArdocheus the sonne of Jair, the sonne of Semei, ỹ sonne of Cisei of ỹ trybe of Ben Jamin a Jew: which had his dwelllynge in Susis, a man of greate reputacio, & excellent amonge all them that were in the kynges courte (Neuertheles he was one of the presoners, whom Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilō had caried awaye from Jerusalem vnto Babilon wt Jechonias the kynge of Juda.) In the seconde yeare of the raigne of greate Artaxerses in the first daye of ỹ moneth Nisan, had this Mardochens soch a dreame: He thought he herde a greate tēpest, horrible thonderclappes, erthquakes, & greate vprō in ỹ londe: & ỹ he sawe two greate dragōs, ready to fight one agaist another. Their crye was greate. At the which roaringe and crye all Heithen were vp, to fight agaynst ỹ righteous people. And ỹ same daye was full of darcknes & very vncleare, full of trouble & anguysh, yee a greate fearfulnes was there in all the londe. The righteous were amased, for they feared ỹ plage & euell ỹ was deuysed ouer thē, & were at a poynte wt them selues to dye. So they cried vnto God. and while they were cryenge, the litle well grew in to a greate ryuer & in to many waters. And with ỹ it was daye, & the sonne rose vp agayne. And ỹ lowly were exalted, and deuoured the glorious and proude.

Now whan Mardocheus had sene this dreame, he awoke, and musēd stedfastly in his hert, what God wolde do: and so he desyred to knowe all the matter, and his mynde was there vpon vntyll the night.

The XII. Chapter.

In this chapters is declared, how Mardocheus vttereth the treason of the two seruauntes agaynst the kynge, and therfore doth the kynge reward him.

AT the same tyme dwelt Mardocheus with Bagatha and Thares the kynges chamberlaynes and porters of the palace. But whan he herde their deuyce, and had diligently considered their ymaginacions, he perceaued that they wente aboute, to laye their cruell handes vpon the kynge Artaxerses: and so he certified the kinge therof. Then caused the kynge to examen ỹ two gelded with tormentes. And whan they had graunted it, they were put to death.

This the kynge caused to be put in ỹ Cronicles for an euerlastinge remembraūce, and Mardocheus wrote vp the same matter. So the kynge commaunded, that Mardocheus shulde do seruyce in the courte, and for this faithfulnesse of his, he gaue him a reward. But Aman the sonne of Amadathus the Agagite, which was holden in greate honoure and reputacion in the kynges courte, vndertoke to hurte Mardocheus & his people, becawse of the two chamberlaynes that were put to death.

The XIII. Chapter.

The copie of the commaundement, which King Artaxerses (by the entisinge of Amā) sent out in to all countres, for the destruccion of the Jewes. The prayer of Mardocheus.

A Heft. 1. a and 16. a THe greate kynge Artaxerses which raigneth from India vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundreth and seuen and twē tye londes, sendeth his frendly salutacion vnto all the princes and debytes of the countrees, which be subiecte vnto his dominion. Whan I was made lorde ouer many people, and had subdued the whole earth vnto my dominion, my mynde was not with crueltye and wronge to exalte myself by the reason of my power: but purposed w̄ equyte allwaye and gentylnes, to gouerne those that be vnder my iurisdiccion, and wholy to set them in a peaceable life, and therby to bringe my kingdome vnto tranquylite, that men might safely go thorow on euery syde, and to renue peace agayne, which all men desyre. B Now whan I axed my councelers, how these thinges might be brought to a good ende, there was one by vs, excellēt in wysdome, whose good wyll, true & faithfulnes hath oft bene shewed & proued (which was also ẏ princi pall & next vnto ẏ kinge) Amā by name, which certified vs, how ẏ in all lōdes there was crepte in a rebellious folke, ẏ made statutes & lawes agaynst all other people, & haue allwaye despysed the proclamed commaundemēntes of kynges: and how that for this cause it were not to be suffred, that soch rule shulde contynue by you & not to be put downe. Seinge now we perceaue the same, that this people alone are contrary vnto euery man, vsynge straunge and other maner of lawes, & withstonde oure statutes and doinges, and go about to stablish shrewd matters, that oure kyngdome shulde neuer come to good estate and stedfastnes: C Therfore haue we commaūded, that all they that are appoynted in wrytinge and shewed vnto you by Aman (which is ordened and set ouer all oure busynes, and the most prynçipall next vnto the kynge, and in maner as a father) shal with their wiues & children be destroyed and roted out with the swerde of their enemies and aduersaries: & ẏ there shalbe no mercy shewed, & no man spared. And this shalbe done ẏ xiiij. daye of the moneth called Adar) of this yeare, that they which of olde (and now also) haue euer bene rebellious, maye in one daye with violence be thrust downe in to the hell, to the intēt, that after this maner, oure empyre maye haue peace and tranquylite.

But Mardocheus thought vpon all the d workes and noble actes of ẏ LORDE, & made his prayer vnto him, sayenge: O LORDE LORDE, thou valeaunt and allmyghtie kynge (for all thinges are in thy power, and yf thou wilt helpe and delyuer Israel, there is no mā that can withstōde ner lett the: for thou hast made heauen & earth, and what wonderous thinge so euer is vnder the heauen: thou art LORDE of all thinges, and there is no man, ẏ can resist the O LORDE) Thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest LORDE, that it was nether of malyce, ner presumpcion, ner for eny desyre of glory, that I wolde not bowe downe myself ner worshipe yonder proude presumptuous Aman (for I wolde haue bene cōtent, and ẏ with good wyll, yf it might haue done Israel eny good, to haue kyst euē his fote steppes) but that I dyd it, becawse I wolde not sett the honoure of a mā in the steade of the glorye of God, and becawse I wolde worshipe none but onely ẏ my LORDE. And this haue I done in no pryde ner presumpcion. e

And therfore O LORDE thou God and kinge, haue mercy vpon thy people, for they ymagyn how they maye bringe vs to naught, yee their mynde and desyre is to destroye and to ouerthrowe the people, that hath euer bene thine enheritaunce of olde. O despyse not thy porciō, which thou hast delyuered & brought out of Egipte for thine owne self. Heare my prayer, and be mercifull vnto ẏ people, whō thou hast chosen for an heretage vnto thyself. Turne oure complaynte and sorow into ioye, that we maye lyue O LORDE, and praise thy name. O LORDE, suffre not ẏ mouthes of them that praise the, to be destroyd.

All ẏ people of Israel in like maner cried as earnestly as they coude vnto the LORDE, for their death and destruccion stode before their eyes. f

The XIIII. Chapter.

Of the sorowe, complaynte and prayer of quene Hester.

QVene Hester also beynge in the bytayll of death, resorted vnto the LORDE, layed awaye hir glorious apparell, and put on the garmētes that serued for sighinge and mournynge. In the steade of precious oyntment, she scatred ashes and dōge vpon hir heade: and as for hir body, she humbled it, and brought it very lowe. All places where she was, wōte to haue ioye & pleasure, those fylled she with ẏ hayre, ẏ she out hirself. She prayed also vnto the LORDE God of Israel with these wordes:

O my LORDE, thou onely art oure kynge, helpe me desolate womā, which haue no helper but ỹ, for my misery and destruccion is harde at my hande. Fro my youth vp I haue herde out of the kynred of my father, that thou tokest Israel from amōge all people (and so haue oure fathers of their fore elders) that they shulde be thy perpetuall inheritaunce, and loke what thou didest promise thē, thou hast made it good vnto thē.

B Now well LORDE, we haue synned before the, therfore hast thou geuen vs in to the hādes of oure enemies, because we worshipped their goddes. LORDE thou art righteous. Neuertheles it satisfieth thē not, that we are in bytter and heuy captiuyte and oppressed amonge them, but thou hast layed their hondes vpon the hondes of their goddes: so that they begynne to take awaye, the thinge that thou with thy mouth hast ordened and appoynted: to destroye thyne inheritaunce, to shut and to stoppe ỹ mouthes of them that prayse the, to quēch the glory and worshipe of thy house and thine aulter, and to open the mouthes of the heithen, ỹ they maye prayse the power & vertue of the goddes, and to magnifie the fleshly kynge for euer.

C O LORDE, geue not thy cepter vnto thē that be nothinge, lest they laugh vs to scorne in oure misery and fall: but turne their deuyce vpō them selues, and punysh him, that hath begonne the same ouer vs, and set him to an example. Thinke vpon vs O LORDE, and shew thy self in ỹ tyme of oure distres and of oure trouble. Strengthe me O thou kynge of goddes, thou LORDE of all power, geue me an eloquēt and pleasaunt speach in my mouth before the Lyon. Turne his hert in to ỹ hate of oure enemie, to destroye him, and all soch as consent vnto him. But delyuer vs with thy hande, and helpe me desolate woman, which haue no defence ner helper but onely ỹ LORDE thou knowest all thinges, thou wotest that I loue not the glory and worshipe of the vnrighteous, and that I hate and abhorre the bed of the vncircūcyded and of all heithen.

D Thou knowest and wotest my necessite, ỹ I hate the token of my preemynence & worshipe, which I beare vpon my heade, what tyme as I must shew my self and be sene, & that I abhorre it as an vncleane cloth, and that I weere it not whā I am quyete and alone by my self. Thou knowest also that I thy honde mayden haue not eaten at Amās table, and that I haue had no pleasure ner delyte in the kynges feast, that I haue not dronke the drynkofferinges, and that I thy honde mayden haue had no ioye sens ỹ daie that I was brought hither vnto this daye: but onely in the O LORDE. O thou God of Abraham, O thou mightie God aboue all, heare the voyce of them, that haue none other hope, and delyuer vs out of the hande of ỹ wicked, & delyuer me out of my feare.

The XV. Chapter.

Quene Hester appeareth before the kynge, with an heuy hert for the trouble of hir people, and God turneth the kynges hert.

A AND vpon ỹ thirde daye it happened, that Hester layed awaye ỹ mournynge garmētes, and put on hir glorious apparell, and decte hirself goodly (after that she had called vpon God, which is the beholder & Sauioure of all thinges) toke two maydes wt her: vpon the one she leaned hir self, as one ỹ was tender: the other folowed her, and bare the trayne of hir vesture. The shyne of hir bewtye made hir face rose colored. The similitude of hir face was chearfull and amyable, but hir hert was sorowfull for greate feare. She wente in thorow all the dores, and stode before the kynge. The kynge sat vpon the trone of his kingdome, and was clothed in his goodly araye, all of golde, and sett wt precious stones, and he was very terryble. He lift vp his face, that shone in the clearnes, and loked grymly vpon her. Then fell the Quene downe, was pale and faynt, leaned hir self vpon the heade of the mayde that wente with her. Hester.5.a

B Neuertheles God turned ỹ kynges mynde, that he was gentle, that he leape out of his seate for feare, and gat her in his armes, & helde hir vp tyll she came to herself agayne. He gaue her louynge wordes also, & sayde vnto her: Hester, what is the matter? I am ỹ brother, be of good cheare, thou shalt not dye: for oure commaundement toucheth the comons, not the. Come nye. And with that he helde vp his golden wande, and layed it vpon hir neck, and enbraced her frendly, and sayde: talke with me. Thē sayde she: I sawe the (O lorde) as an angell of God, & my hert was troubled for feare of thy maiesty and clearnesse. For excellent and wonderfull art thou (O lorde) and thy face is full of amyte. But as she was thus speakynge vnto him, she fell downe agayne for fayntnes: for the Prou.21.a Gen.33.b 2.Re 19.e which cause the kynge was afrayed, and all his seruauntes comforted her.

The XVI. Chapter.

A copye of the commaundement, which kinge Artaxerses caused to be proclamed in all the countrees of his domymon, for the wealth of the Jewes.

A The greate kynge Artaxerses, which raigneth frō Jndia vnto Ethiopia, ouer an hundreth and xxvij. londes, sendeth vnto the prynces & rulers of the same londes, soch as loue him, his frendly salutacion. There be many, that for the sondrye frendshipes and benefites which are diuersly done vnto them for their worshipe, be euer ȳ more proude and hye mynded, and vndertake not onely to hurte oure subiectes (for plenteous benefites maye they not suffre, and be gynne to ymagin some thinge agaynst those that do them good, and take not onely all vnthankfulnes awaye fro men) but in pryde and presumpcion (as they that be vnmynde full and vnthākfull for the good dedes) they go aboute to escape the iudgment of God, ȳ seyth all thinges, which (iudgment) hateth & punysheth all wickednes. Jt happeneth oft also, ȳ they which be set in office by the hyer power, and vnto whom the busynes and causes of the subiectes are cōmytted to be handled, ware proude, and defyle thē selues with sheddynge of innocent bloude, which bryngeth them to intollerable hurte. Which also with false and disceatfull wordes and with lyenge tales, disceaue and betraye the innocent goodnes of prynces.

B Now is it profitable and good, that we take hede, make search therafter, and consider, not onely what hath happened vnto vs of olde, but the shamefull, vnhoneste, and noy some thinges, that the debites haue now taken in hande before oure eyes: and therby to be warre in tyme to come, that we maye make the kyngdome quyete & peaceable for all men, and that we might some tyme drawe it to a chaunge: and as for ȳ thinge that now is present before oure eyes, to withstande it, and to put it downe, after the most frendly maner.

Hester 3.a What tyme now as Aman the sonne of Amadathu ȳ Macedonyan (a straunger verely of the Persians bloude, and farre from oure goodnes) was come in amōge vs as an aleaunt, and had optayned the frendshipe that we beare towarde all people, so that he was called oure father, and had in hye honoure of euery man, as the next and prynci-pall vnto the kynge, he coude not forbeare him self from his pryde, hath vndertaken not onely to robbe vs of the kyngdome, but of oure life.

With manyfolde disceate also hath he de (syred to destroye Mardocheus oure helper and preseruer, which hath done vs good in all thinges: and innocent Hester the like partaker of oure kyngdome, with all hir people. For his mynde was (whan he had take them out of the waye, and robbed vs of them) by this meanes to translate the kyngdome of the Persians vnto thē of Macedonia. But we fynde, that the Jewes (which were accused of ȳ wicked, ȳ they might be destroyed) are no euell doers, but vse reasonable & righe lawes, and that they be the children of the meste hye lyuynge God, by whom the kyngdome of vs and oure progenitours hath bene well ordred hither to. Wherfore, as forthe letters and cōmaundementes, that were put forth by Aman the sonne of Amadathu, ye shal do well, ȳ ye holde them of none effecte: for he that set them vp and inuented thē, hangeth at Susis before the porte, with all his kinred, and God (which hath all thinges in his power) hath rewarded him after his deseruynge.

And vpon this ye shal publish and set vp) the copy of this letter in all places, that the Jewes maye frely and without hinderaunce holde them selues after their owne statutes, and that they maye be helped, and that vpō ȳ xiij. daye of ȳ xij. moneth Adar they maye be auenged of them, which in the tyme of their anguysh and trouble wolde haue oppressed thē. For the God that gouerneth all thinges, hath turned to ioye, the daye whan in ȳ chosen people shulde haue perished.

Moreouer, amōge the hye solempne dayes that ye haue, ye shall holde this daye also w all gladnesse: that now and in tyme to come, this daye maye be a remembraūce to good, for all soch as loue the prosperite of the Persians: but a remembraunce of destruccion to those that be sedicious vnto vs.

All cities and lōdes that do not this, shal horribly perish and be destroyed w the swarde and fyre, and shall not onely be nomore inhabited of men, but be abhorred also of ȳ wilde beastes & fowles.

The boke of Wyßdome.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I. An exortacio for iudges and rulers to loue wyßdome. The spirite of wyßdome hateth falsede, dissimulacion and Ypocrysie, rebuketh vnrighteousnesse and abhorreth wicked doers.

Chap. II. The ymaginacios and thoughtes of the vngodly, how they geue the selues ouer vnto synne, and persecute all vertue and trueth.

Chap. III. The felicite and health of godly people, though they be put here to trouble and heuynesse: Agayne, what sorow shall happen to the vngodly and their children.

Chap. IIII. To lyue chaist & godly withall, is commendable. A disprayse of the wicked. The honoure of verteous age. The shamefull death of the vngodly.

Chap. V. How the iust men shal stode against the wicked, that haue put them here to trouble & what sorowe shall come vpon the vngodly. Agayne, what ioye shal happen to the righteous, which haue God himself for their defence.

Chap. VI. An exortacion vnto soch as be in rule and auctorite, to receaue wyßdome. A commendacion of wyßdome.

Chap. VII. All men haue like intraūce in to the worlde: yet who so calleth vpon God for wyßdome, shal haue his desyre The profit that cometh by wyßdome passeth all other thinges.

Chap. VIII. Wißdome shulde be receaued in youth. He that marieth himself vnto her, shall optayne loue of God and men.

Chap. IX. A prayer vnto God for the gift of wyßdome.

Chap. X. What profit and good came by wyßdome in the olde tyme.

Chap. XI. How wißdome ledeth the righteous, & how the vngodly are punyshed thorow the mightie hande of God.

Chap. XII. God is mercifull and suffreth longe, to the intent that synners shulde amende.

Chap. XIII. Vayne are they that haue not the knowlege of the lyuynge God, but turne vnto to the creatures: vnhappie are they that honoure ymages.

Chap. XIIII. The worshippinge of ymages. The power of God. Punyshment of them that make ymages, and of soch as worshipe them. How ymages came vp first. The honouringe of ymages is the cause, begynnynge, and ende of all myschefe.

Chap. XV. The faithfull haue respecte vnto God and not vnto ymages.

Chap. XVI. God punisheth the wicked, but defendeth the godly, & that by greate wonders.

Chap. XVII. Of the greate darcknesse in Egipte, and blyndnesse of the vngodly.

Chap. XVIII. How God destroied the firstborne of Egipte. Gods people eate the easterlambe ioyfully, the Egiptians mourne, God punysheth the synners in the wilderneße, Moses intreateth for the people.

Chap. XIX. Like as the wicked are euer synnynge more and more, so doth the wrath of God neuer ceasse, tyll they be destroyed. Of them that were punyshed in the tyme of Loth.

The first Chapter.

SEt youre affeccion vpō wyßdome, ye that be iudges of the earth. Haue a good opinion of the LORDE, & seke him in the synglenesse of hert. For he will be fonde of them that tempte him not, and appeareth vnto soch as put their trust in him. As for froward thoughtes, they separate from God, but vertue (yf it be alowed) refourmeth ỳ vnwyse. And why? wyßdome shall not entre in to a froward soule, ner dwell in the body that is subdued vnto synne. For the holy goost abhorreth fayned nurtoure, & withdraweth himself frō ỳ thoughtes that are without vnderstondinge: & where wickednes hath the vpper hāde, he flieth from thence. For the spirite of wyßdome is louynge, gentle and gracious, and wil haue no pleasure in him that speaketh euell with his lippes. For God is a witnesse of his reynes, a true searcher out of his hert, and an hearer of his tonge. For the spirite of ỳ LORDE fylleth the rounde compasse of the worlde, and ỳ same that vpholdeth all thinges, hath knowlege also of the voyce. A 3. Reg. 3 Psal. 2. b 2. Par. 15 Galat. 5. Esaie 6. a Iere. 23. d Acto. 7.

Therfore he that speaketh vnrighteous thinges, can not be hydd, nether maye he escape the iudgmēt of reprofe. And why? inquysicion shal be made for the thoughtes of the vngodly, and the reporte of his wordes shal come vnto God, so that his wickednes shalbe punished. For the eare of gelousy heareth all thinges, and the noyse of the grudginges shal not be hydd. Therfore bewarre of murmuringe, which is nothinge worth, and refrayne youre tonge from slaūder. For there is no worde so darck and secrete, that it shall go for naught: and the mouth that speaketh lyes, slayeth the soule. B 3. Re. 2. g Matt. 6. 2 Heb. 4. b Luce 12. a

O seke not youre owne death in ỳ errour of youre life, destroye not youre selues thorow the workes of youre awne handes. For God hath not made death, nether hath he pleasure in the destruccion of the lyuynge. C Deut. 4. c

For he created all thinges, that they might haue their beynge: yee all the people of the earth hath he made that they shulde haue healthe, that there shulde be no destruccion in them, and that the kyngdome of hell shulde not be vpon earth (for righteousnesse is euerlastinge and immortall, but vnrighteousnes bringeth death.) Neuertheless, the vngodly call her vnto them both w^th^ wordes & workes, & whyle they thinke to haue a frende of her, they come to naught: for the vngodly that are confederate with her and take hir parte, are worthy of death.

The II. Chapter.

A For y^e^ vngodly talke & ymagin thus amonge them selues (but not right:) The tyme of oure life is but shorte & tedious, & when a man is once gone, he hath nomore ioye ner pleasure, nether knowe we eny man y^t^ turneth agayne from death: for we are borne of naught, & we shal be hereafter as though we had neuer bene. For oure breth is as a smoke in oure nostrels, & y^e^ wordes as a sparck to moue oure herte. As for y^r^ body, it shalbe very asshes y^t^ are quēched, & y^r^ soule shal vanish as y^e^ soft ayre. Oure life shall passe awaye as y^e^ trace of a cloude, & come to naught as y^e^ myst y^t^ is dryuē awaye w^th^ the beames of y^e^ Sonne, & put downe w^th^ the heate therof. Oure name also shalbe forgotten by litle & litle, & no man shal haue oure workes in remembraunce.

B For y^r^ tyme is a very shadow y^t^ passeth awaye, & after y^r^ ende there is no returnynge, for it is fast sealed, so y^t^ no mā cōmeth agayne. Come on therfore, let vs enioye y^e^ pleasures y^t^ there are, & let vs soone vse y^e^ creature like as in youth. We wil fyll oure selues w^th^ good wyne & oyntment, there shal no floure of the tyme go by vs. We wil crowne y^r^ selues w^th^ roses afore they be wythered. There shal be no fayre medowe, but y^r^ lust shall go thorow it. Let euery one of you be partaker of oure voluptcousnes. Let vs leaue some token of y^r^ pleasure in euery place, for y^t^ is oure porcion, els gett we nothinge. Let vs oppresse the poore righteous, let vs not spare the wyddowe ner olde man, let vs not regarde y^e^ heades y^t^ are gray for age. Let y^e^ lawe of vnrighteousnesse be oure auctorite, for y^e^ thinge y^t^ is feble is nothinge worth. Therfore let vs defraude the righteous, & why: he is not for y^r^ profit, yee he is cleane cōtrary to y^r^ doinges. He checketh vs for offendinge agaynst y^e^ lawe, & slaundreth vs as transgressours of all nurt^e^. He maketh his boost to haue y^e^ knowlege of God, yee he calleth him self Gods sonne. He is the bewrayer of oure thoughtes: It greueth vs also to loke vpon him, for his lyfe is not lyke other mens, his wayes are of another fashion. He counteth vs but vayne persōnes, he w^th^drawe th him self from y^r^ wayes as from fylthynes: he cōmendeth greatly y^e^ latter ende of the iust, & maketh his boast y^t^ God is his father. Let vs se then yf his wordes be true, let vs proue what shal come vpon him: so shal we knowe what ende he shal haue. For yf he be y^e^ true sonne of God, he will receaue him & delyuer him from the handes of his enemies. Let vs examen him with despitefull rebuke and tormentinge, that we maye knowe his dignite & proue his pacience. Let vs condemne him with the most shamefull death: for like as he hath spoken, so shal he be rewarded.

Soch thinges do the vngodly ymagin, & go astraye, for their owne wickednes hath blynded them. As for the mysteries of God, they vnderstonde them not: they nether hope for the rewarde of righteousnesse, ner regarde the worshipe that holy soules shall haue. For God created man to be vndestroied, yea after the ymage of his awne lickenesse made he him. Neuertheless thorow envye of the deuell came death in to the worlde, and they that holde of his syde, do as he doth.

The III. Chapter.

BVt the soules of y^e^ righteous are in A y^e^ hande of God, & y^e^ payne of death shal not touch the. In y^e^ sighe of the vnwyse they appeare to dye, & their ende is take for very destruccion. The waye of the righteous is iudged to be vtter destruccion, but they are in rest. And though they suffre payne before men, yet is their hope full of immortalite. They are punished but in fewchinges, neuertheless in many thinges shal they be well rewarded. For God proueth them, & fyndeth the mete for himself: yee as the golde in the fornace doth he trye them, & receaueth them as a brentofferinge, and when y^e^ tyme commeth they shalbe loked vpon.

The righteous shal shyne as the sparkes B y^t^ renne thorow the rede busshe. They shal iudge the nacions, & haue dominion ouer y^e^ people, & their LORDE shal raigne forever. They y^t^ put their trust in him, shal vnderstonde the trueth, & soch as be faithfull, wil agree vnto him in loue: for his chosen shal haue gyftes & peace. But the vngodly shalbe punished accordinge to their awne ymaginacion, for they haue despysed the righteous, & forsaken the LORDE.

Who so despyseth wysdome & nurt^e^, he C is vnhappie, and as for the hope of soch, it is but vayne, their labours vnfrutefull, and their workes vnprofitable. Their wyues are vndiscrete, and their childrē most vngodly. Their creature is cursed. Blessed is rather ỹ baren & vndefyled, which hath not knowne the synfull bedd: she shall haue frute in the rewarde of the holy soules. And blessed is ỹ gelded, which w̄ his handes hath wrought no vnrighteousnesse, ner ymagined wicked thinges agaynst God. For vnto him shal be gyuen ỹ speciall gift of faith, and the most acceptable portion in ỹ temple of God. For glorious is the frute of good laboure, & the rote of wyszdome shall neuer fade awaye. As for ỹ childrē of aduoutrers, they shal come to an ende & the sede of an vnrighteous bedd shal be roted out. And though they lyue lōge, yet shal they be nothinge regarded, & their last age shalbe without honoure. Yf they dye haistely, they haue no hope, nether shal they be spoken to in the daye of knowlege. For horrible is the death and ende of the vnrighteous.

The IIII. Chapter.

A How fayre is a chaist generacion w̄ vertue: The memoriall therof is immortall, for it is knowne w̄ God and men. When it is present, mē take exāple there at: and yf it go awaye, yet they desyre it. It is allwaie crowned & holden in honō, & wynneth ỹ reward of the vndefyled battayll. But the multitude of vngodly childrē is vnprofitable, and the thinges ỹ are planted w̄ whordome, shal take no depe rote, ner laye eny fast foundacion. Though they be grene in the braunches for a tyme, yet shal they be shakē w̄ the wynde: for they stonde not fast, & thorow the vehemence of the wynde they shalbe roted out. For the vnparfecte braunches shalbe broken, their frute shalbe vnprofitable & sower to eate, yee mete for nothinge. And why: all the children ỹ are borne of the wicked, must beare recorde of the wicked nesse agaynst their fathers & mothers, when they be axed. But though the righteous be ouertaken w̄ death, yet shal he be in rest.

B Age is an honorable thinge: neuertheles it stondeth not only in the lenth of tyme, ner in the multitude of yeares: but a mans wyszdome is the graye hayre, and an vndefyled life is the olde age. He pleased God, & was beloued of him: so that where as he lyued amōge synners, he trāslated him. Yee sodēly was he taken awaye, to the intent ỹ wickednesse shulde not alter his vnderstōdinge, & ỹ ypocrisye shulde not begyle his soule. For ỹ crastie bewitchinge of lyes make good thinges darck, & vnstedfastnesse also & wickednes of

C voluptuous desyre, turne asyde ỹ vnderstondinge of ỹ symple. Though he was soone deed, yet fulfilled he moch tyme. For his soule pleased God, therfore haisted he to take him awaye frō amonge ỹ wicked. This the people se, & vnderstonde it not: they laye not vp soch thinges in their hertes, how ỹ ỹ louynge fauo & mercy of God is vpō his saintes, & ỹ he hath respecte vnto his chosen.

Thus ỹ righteous ỹ is deed, cōdemneth the vngodly which are lyuinge: & ỹ youth ỹ is soone brought to an ende, ỹ lōge life of ỹ vnrighteous. For they se ỹ ende of ỹ wyse, but they vnderstōde not what God hath deuysed for him, & wherfore ỹ LORDE hath taken him awaie. And why: they se him & despyse him, therfore shall God also laugh thē to scorne: So ỹ they thē selues shal dye hereafter (but without honō) yee in shame amonge ỹ deed for euermore. For without eny voyce shal he burst those ỹ be puft vp, & remoue thē frō ỹ foundacions, so ỹ they shalbe laied waist vnto the hyest. They shal mourne, and their memoriall shall perisshe. So they beynge afrayed shall remembre their synnes, and their owne wickednesse shal bewraye thē.

The V. Chapter.

A Then shal ỹ righteous stonde in great stedfastnesse agaynst soch as haue dealt extremely w̄ thē, & takē awaye their labours. When they se it, they shalbe vexed w̄ horrible feare, & shal wonder at the haistynesse of ỹ sodane healthe: gronynge for very distresse of mynde, & shall saye within them selues (hauynge inwarde sorow, and mournynge for very anguysh of mynde): Matt. 19.

These are they, whom we somtyme had in derision, & iested vpō. We fooles thought their life very madnesse, & their ende to be w̄ out honoure. But lo, how they are counted amonge the children of God, & their porcion is amonge the sayntes. Therfore we haue erred from the waye of trueth, ỹ light of righteousnesse hath not shyned vnto vs, and the Sōne of vnderstōdinge rose not vp vpō vs. We haue weeried ō selues in ỹ waye of wickednesse & destruccion. Tedious wayes haue we gone: but as for the waye of the LORDE, we haue not knowne it. Sap. 5.a

B What good hath ō pryde done vnto vs: Or, what profit hath the pompe of riches brought vs: All those thinges are passed awaye like a shadowe, & as a messaunger rennynge before: as a shippe ỹ passeth ouer the wawes of the water, which whan it is gone by, the trace therof can not be founde, nether ỹ path of it in the floudes. Or as a byrde ỹ flyeth thorow ỹ ayre, & no man can se 1. Per. 3.c Sap. 4.b Pro. 30.b

eny token where she is flowen, but only heareth the noyse of hir wynges, beatinge the light wynde, partinge the ayre thorow the vehemēce of hir goinge, & flyeth on shakynge hir wynges, where as afterwarde no token of hir waye can be foūde. Or like as whē an arowe is shott at a marck, it parteth the ayre, which immediatly cōmeth together agayne, so that a man can not knowe where it wente thorow. Euen so we in like maner as soone as we were borne, beganne immediatly to drawe to oure ende: & haue shewed no token of vertue, but are consumed in oure owne wickednesse.

C Soch wordes shal they that haue synned, speake in the hell: for the hope of the vngodly is like a drye thistell floure (or dust) that is blowne awaye wt the wynde: like as thynne scomme yt is scatred abrode wt the storme: like as ye smoke which is dispersed here & there wt the wynde, & as ye remembraunce of a straūger yt tarieth for a daie, & thē departeth.

But ye righteous shal lyue for euermore: their rewarde also is wt the LORDE, & their remembraunce wt the Hyest. Therfore shal they receaue a glorious kyngdome & a beutifull crowne of the LORDES hande: for wt his right hande shal he couer thē, & wt his owne arme shall he defende thē. His gelousy also shal take awaye the harnesse, & he shal wapē ye creature to be auēged of ye enemies. He shal put on righteousnes for a brest plate, & take sure iudgment in steade of an helmett. The invyncible shylde of equite shall he take, his cruell wrath shal he sharpē for a speare, & the whole compase of the worlde shall fight with him agaynst the vnwyse.

D Thē shal the thonder boltes go out of ye lightninges, & come out of the rayne bowe of the cloudes to the place apoynted: out of the hard stony indignacion there shall fall thick hales, & ye water of ye see shal be wroth agaynst thē, & the floudes shal renne roughly together. Yee a mightie wynde shal stōde vp agaynst them, & a storme shall scater thē abrode. Thus the vnrighteous dealinge of thē shal bringe all the lōde to a wyldernes, & wickednes shall ouerthrowe the dwellinges of the mightie. The VI. Chapter.

A WYsdome is better then strength, & a mā of vnderstādinge is more worth thē one yt is strōge. Heare therfore (O ye kinges) & vnderstonde: O lerne ye yt be iudges of the endes of the earth. Geue are ye yt rule ye multitudes, & delite in moch people. For the power is genē you of the LORDE, & the strēgth from the Hyest: which shal trie yo workes and search out yo ymaginacios: How that ye beynge officers of his kyngdome, haue not executed true iudgmeny, haue not kepte the lawe of righteousnes, ner walked after his will. Horribly & that righteously shall he appeare vnto you: for an harde iudgmēt shal they haue ye beare rule. Mercy is graūted vnto the symple, but they that be in auctorite shalbe sore punyshed. For God which is LORDE ouer all, shall excepte no mās persōne, nether shal he stande in awe of eny mans greatnesse: for he hath made ye small and greate, & careth for all alyke. But the mightie shal haue ye sorer punyshmēt.

Vnto you therfore (o ye kinges) do I speake, ye ye maye lerne wysdome and not go amysse: for they ye kepe righteousnes shalbe righteously iudged: and they ye are lerned in righteous thinges, shal finde to make answere. Wherfore set yo lust vpon my wordes, & loue thē, so shal ye come by nurtō. Wysdome is a noble thinge, & neuer faydeth awaie: yee she is easely sene of thē that loue her, & founde of soch as seke her. She preuēteth them ye desyre her, ye she maye first shewe herself vnto thē. Who so awaketh vnto her by tymes, shal haue no greate trauayle, for he shal finde her syttinge ready at his dores. To thinke vpon her, is parfecte vnderstandinge: & who so watcheth for her, shalbe safe, & that soone. For she goeth aboute, sekynge soch as are mete for her, sheweth her self cherefully vnto them in their goynges, & meteth them wt all diligēce. For ye vnfained desyre of reformacion is hir begynnynge: to care for nurtō is loue, and loue is the kepinge of hir lawes. Now the kepinge of ye lawes is perfecacion & an vncorrupte life, & an vncorrupte life maketh a man familier wt God. And so the desyre of wysdome ledeth to ye kingdome euerlastinge. Yf yo delyte be thē in royall seates & cepters (o ye kynges of the people) set youre lust vpō wysdome, ye ye maye raigne for euermore. O loue the light of wysdome, all ye ye be rulers of the people. As for wysdome, what she is, and how she came vp, I wil tell you, and will not hyde the misteries of God from you: but wil seke her out from ye begynnynge of the nativyte, and bringe the knowlege of her in to light, and wil not kepe backe the trueth. Nether will I haue to do wt cōsumynge envye, for soch a man shal not be partaker of wisdome. But the multitude of the wyse is the welfare of the worlde, and a wyse kynge is the vpholdinge of the people. O receaue nourtoure then thorow my wordes, and it shal do you good. The VII. Chap.

I Myself also am a mortall man, like as all other, & am come of ye earthy generacio of him ye was first made, & in my mothers wōbe was I fashioned to be flesh: In the tyme of ten monethes was I brought together in blonde thorow the sede of man, & the cõmodious appetite of slepe. Whan I was borne, I receaued like ayre as other men, & fell vpon the earth (which is my nature) crienge & wepinge at the first, as all other do. I was wrapped in swadlinge clothes, & brought vp wt greate cares. For there is no kinge yͭ hath had eny other begymnynge of byrth. All men then haue one intraunce vnto life, & one goinge out in like maner.

Wherfore I desyred, and vnderstandinge was geuẽ me: I called, & the spirete of wyßdome came in to me. I set more by her thẽ by kingdomes & royall seates, & counted riches nothinge in cõparison of her. As for precious stone I compared it not vnto her: for all golde is but grauell vnto her, & syluer shalbe counted but claye before hir sight. I loued her aboue welfare & beutie, & purposed to take her for my light, for hir shyne can not be quenched. All good thinges came to me wt her, & immumerable riches thorow hir hãdes. I was glad in thẽ all, for this wyßdome wẽte before me, & I knew not yͭ she is the mother of all good thinges. Now as I myself lerned vnfaynedly, so do I make other men partakers of her, & hyde her riches from no man: for she is an infinite treasure vnto men, which who so vse, become partakers of the loue & frendshipe of God, and are accepted vnto him for the giftes of wyßdome.

God hath graunted me to talke wysely, & conuenietly to hãdle the thinges yͭ he hath gracionsly lent me. For it is he, yͭ ledeth vnto wyßdome, & teacheth to vse wyßdome a right. In his hãde are we & o wordes: yee all o wyßdome, o vnderstandinge & knowlege of all o workes. For he hath geuẽ me yͭ true sciẽce of these thinges: so that I knowe how yͭ worlde was made, & the powers of yͭ elemẽtes: yͭ begynnynge, endinge & myddest of yͭ tymes: how the tymes alter, how one goeth after another, and how they are fulfilled: yͭ course of the yeare: the ordinaunces of the starres: the natures & kindes of beastes: the furiousnesse of beastes: the power of yͭ wyndes: the ymaginacions of mẽ: the deuersities of yonge plantes: the vertues of rootes, & all soch thinges as are secrete & not loked for, have I lerned. For the worckmaster of all thinges hath taught me wyßdome. In hir is yͭ spirete of vnderstãdinge, which is holy, manifolde, one onely, sotyll, curteous, discrete, quyck, vndefyled, playne, swete, leuynge the thinge yͭ is good, sharpe, which forbyddeth not to do well, gẽtle, kynde, stedfast, sure, fre: hauynge all vertues, circũspecte in all thinges: receauinge all spretes of vnderstãdinge beige cleane & sharpe. For wißdome is neembler thẽ all neẽble thiges: she goeth thorow & attayneth to all thiges, because of hir clennes. For she is yͭ breth of yͭ power of God, & a pure cleane expressinge of yͭ clearnes of Allmightie God. Therfore can no vndefyled thinge come in to her: for she is yͭ bryghtnes of yͭ euerlastige light, yͭ vndefiled myrro of yͭ maiesty of God, & yͭ ymage of his goodnesse. And for so moch as she is one, she maie do all thinges: & beinge stedfast herself she renueth all, & amõge yͭ people cõveyeth she herself into yͭ holy soules. She maketh Gods frendes & prophetes: for God loueth no mã, but him in whõ wyßdome dwelleth. For she is more beutyfull then the Sonne, and geueth more light then the starres, and the daye is not to be cõpared vnto her: for vpõ yͭ daye cõmeth night. But wickednesse can not ouercome wyßdome, and foolishnes maye not be wt her. Heb. 1.a

The VIII. Chapter.

A Wyßdome reacheth frõ one ende to another mightely, & louigly doth she ordre all thinges. I haue loued her and laboured for her euẽ fro my youth vp: I dyd my diligẽce to mary my self wt her, soch lone had I vnto hir beutye. Who so hath yͭ cõpany of God, cõmẽdeth hir nobilyte, yee the LORDE of all thinges himself loueth her. For she is yͭ scolemastresse of yͭ nurtõ of God, & yͭ choser out of his workes. B If a man wolde desyre riches in this life, what is richer then wißdome, yͭ worketh all thiges? (Thou wilt saye:) vnderstãdinge worketh. What is it amõge all thinges, yͭ worketh more thẽ wyßdome? If a man loue vertue & righteousnes, let him labõ for wyßdome, for she hath greate vertues. And why? she teacheth sobernes & prudence, righteousnes & strẽgth, which are soch thinges as mẽ can haue nothinge more profitable in their life. C If a mã desyre moch knowlege, she cã tell yͭ thinges yͭ are past, & discerne thinges for to come: she knoweth yͭ sotilties of wordes, & cã expoũde darcke sentẽces. She can tell of tokẽs & wõderous thinges, or euer they come to passe, & the endes of all tymes & ages. So I purposed after this maner: I will take her vnto my cõpany, & cõmõ louigly wt her: no doute she shal geue me good coũcell, & speake cõfortably vnto me in my carefulnes & grefe. For hir sake shal I be well and honestly taken amõge the comõs & lordes of yͭ councell. Though I be yonge, yet shal I haue sharpe vnderstandinge: so yͭ I shal be maruelous in yͭ sight of greate mẽ, & yͭ faces of princes shal wõder at me. Whã I holde my tõge, they shal byde my leysure: Iob 29.c

whā I speake, they shal loke vpō me: & yf I talke moch, they shal laye their handes vpō their mouth. Moreouer, by the meanes of her I shal optayne immortalite, and leaue behinde me an euerlastinge memoriall, amōge thē ẏ come after me. I shal set ẏ people in ordre, & the nacions shalbe subdued vnto me. Horrible tyrauntes shal be afrayed, whan they do but heare of me: amonge the multitude I shal be counted good, & mightie in battayll. Whā I come home, I shal fynde rest wt̄ her: for hir cōpany hath no bytternes, & hir felashipe hath no tediousnesse, but myrth & ioye.

C Now whan I cōsidered these thinges by myself, & pondered them in my hert, how ẏ to be ioyned vnto wysdome is immortalite, & greate pleasure to haue hir frendshipe: how ẏ in the workes of hir handes are infinite riches: how that, who so kepeth company wt̄ her shalbe wyse: and that he which talketh with her, shal come to honoure: I wente aboute sekynge, to gett her vnto me. For I was a ladd of a rype wytt, and had a good vnderstandinge.

But whan I grewe to more vnderstādinge, I came to an vndefyled body. Neuerthelesse whan I perceaued that I coude not kepe myself chaist, excepte God gaue it me (& ẏ was a poynte of wysdome also, to knowe whose gift it was) I stepte vnto the LORDE, and besought him, and with my whole hert I sayde after this maner:

The IX. Chapter.

A 2.Reg.3.b Gen.1 O God of my fathers, & LORDE of mercies, (thou ẏ hast made all thīges wt̄ ẏ worde, & ordeyned mā thorow thy wysdome, ẏ he shulde haue dominiō ouer ẏ creature, which thou hast made: ẏ he shulde ordre ẏ worlde acordinge to equite & righteousnes, & execute iudgmēt wt̄ a true hert) geue me wysdome, which is euer aboute ẏ seate. & put me not out frō amōge ẏ children: for I thy seruaunt & sonne of ẏ handmayden, am a feble personne, of a shorte tyme, and to yōge to the vnderstandinge of iudgment and ẏ lawes. And though a man be neuer so parfecte amonge the children of men, yet yf thy wysdome be not with him, he shal be nothinge regarded. Pſal.115.b 1.Par.29.b 2.Par.1.a But thou hast chosen me to be a kynge vnto ẏ people, and the iudge of thy sonnes and daughters.

B Thou hast cōmaunded me to buylde a temple vpon ẏ holy mount, & an aulter in the cite wherin thou dwellest: a lickenesse of thy holy tabernacle which thou hast prepared frō the beginninge, and thy wysdome with ẏ, which knoweth ẏ workes: which also was wt̄ ẏ whan thou maydest ẏ worlde, & knewe Pro.8.c Ecch.1.a what was acceptable in thy sighte, & righte in thy commaundementes. O sende her out of thy holy heauens and from the trone of thy maiesty, that she maye be with me, & labboure with me: that I maye knowe, what is acceptable in ẏ sight. For she knoweth and vnderstandeth all thinges: and she shall lede me soberly in my workes, and preserue me in hir power. So shal my workes be acceptable, & then shal I gouerne thy people righteously, & be worthy to syt in my fathers seate. For what man is he, that maye knowe the councell of God? Or, who can thinke what the will of God is? For the thoughtes of mortall men are miserable, & oure forecastes are but vncertayne. And why? a mortall and corruptible body is heuy vnto the soule, and the earthy mansion kepeth downe the vnderstandinge ẏ museth vpon many thinges. Very hardly can we discerne the thinges that are vpon earth, and greate labōre we, or we can fynde the thinges which are before oure eyes: Who will then seke out the groūde of the thinges that are done in heuē? Oh LORDE, who cā haue knowlege of ẏ vnderstandinge and meaninge, excepte thou geue wysdome and sende thy holy goost frō aboue? that the wayes of them which are vpon earth maye be reformed: ẏ men maye lerne ẏ thinges that are pleasaunt vnto the, and be preserued thorow wysdome.

The X. Chapter.

WYsdome preserued ẏ first mā, whō God made a father of the worlde, whā he was created alone, brought him out of his offence, toke him out of the moulde of ẏ earth, & gaue him power to rule all thinges. Whan the vnrighteous went awaye in his wrath from this wysdome, ẏ brotherheade perished thorow ẏ wrath of murthur. Agayne, whā ẏ water destroyed ẏ whole worlde, wysdome preserued the righteous thorow a poore tre, whereof she was gouerner herself. Moreouer whā wickednes had gotten ẏ vpperhande, so ẏ the nacions were puft vp with pryde, she knewe ẏ righteous, preserued him fautlesse vnto God, and layed vp sure mercy for his children. She preserued the righteous, whan he fled from the vngodly ẏ perished, what tyme as ẏ fyre fell downe vpon ẏ v. cities: Like as yet this daye the vnfruteful, waist and smokinge lōde geueth testimony of their wickednesse: yet the vnripe and vntymely frutes that growe vpon the trees.

And for a tokē of a remembraunce of the vnfaithfull soule, there standeth a pīler of salt. For all soch as regarded not wysdome, gat not only this hurte, that they knewe not the thinges which were good, but also left behinde them vnto mē, a memoriall of their foolishnes: so ỹ in the thinges wherin they synned, they coude not be hydd. But as for soch as take hede vnto wysdome, she shal delyuer them from sorowe.

C Whan the righteous fled because of his brothers wrath, wysdome led him the right waye, shewed him ỹ kyngdome of God, gaue him knowlege of holy thinges, made him riche in his laboures, and brought to passe the thinges that he wente aboute. In ỹ disceatfulnes of soch as defrauded him, she stode by him, & made him ryche. She saued him from the enemies, and defended him from ỹ disceauers. She made him stronge in battayll, and gaue him the victory, ỹ he might knowe, how that wysdome is stronger then all thinges. Whan the righteous was solde, she forsoke him not, but delyuered him frō synners. She wente downe with him in to the dongeon, and fayled him not in the bandes: tyll she had brought him the cepter of ỹ realme, and power agaynst those that oppressed him. As for them that had accused him, she declared them to be lyers, & brought him to perpetuall worshipe.

D She delyuered the righteous people and fautlesse sede, from the nacions that oppressed them. She entred in to the soule of the seruaunt of God, and stode by him in wonders and tokens agaynst the horrible kynge. She gaue ỹ righteous the rewarde of their labours, & led them forth a maruelous waye: on the daye tyme she was a shadowe vnto them, and a light of starres in the night season. She brought them thorow the reed see, and caried them thorow the greate water. She drowned their enemies in the see, and brought them out of the depe. So the righteous toke the spoyles of the vngodly, and praysed thy holy name (o LORDE) and magnified thy victorious hād with one accorde. For wysdome openeth the mouth of ỹ dome, & maketh ỹ tonges of babes to speake.

The XI. Chapter.

She ordred their workes in the hādes of the holy prophet: so ỹ they wente thorow ỹ wyldernes ỹ was not inhabited, & pitched their tētes in ỹ waist deserte. They stode agaynst their enemies, & were auenged of their aduersaries. Whā they were thirstie, they called vpō ỹ, & water was geuē them out of ỹ rok, & their thirst slockened out of ỹ harde stone. For by ỹ thinges, where thorow their enemies were punished, were they helped in their nede. For vnto the enemies thou gauest mās bloude in steade of lyuynge water. And where as they had scarcenesse in ỹ rebuke whan the children were slayne, thou gauest vnto thine awne a plenteous water vnloked for: declaringe by the thyrst ỹ was at that tyme, how thou woldest bringe thine awne vnto honō, & slaye their aduersaries.

B For whan they were tryed & nourtured wh fatherly mercy, they knowleged how the vngodly were iudged, and punyshed thorow ỹ wrath of God. These hast thou exorted as a father, & proued thē: but vnto ỹ other thou hast bene a boysteous kynge, layed hard to their charge, & condēned thē. Whether they were absent or present, their punyshmēt was alyke. For their grefe was dubble: namely, mournynge, and ỹ remēbraunce of thinges past. But whā they perceaued ỹ their punishmētes dyd thē good, they thought vpon the LORDE, & wondered at ỹ ende. For at the last they helde moch of him, of whō in ỹ outcastinge they thought scorne, as of an abiecte. Neuertheless ỹ righteous dyd not so when they were thirstie: but euen like as ỹ thoughtes of ỹ foolish were, so was also their wickednes. Where as certayne mē now (thorow erō) dyd worshipe domme serpentes & vayne beestes, thou sendedst a multitude of domme beastes vpon them for a vengeaunce: ỹ they might knowe, that loke wherwithall a mā synneth, by the same also shal he be punyshed. For vnto thy allmighty hande, that made the worlde of naught, it was not vnpossible, to sende amonge them an heape of Bees, or woode lyōs, or cruell beastes of a straūge kynde, soch as are vnknowne, or spoute fyre, or cast out a smokinge breth, or shote horrible sparkes out of their eyes: which might not only destroye them with hurtinge, but also kyll them with their horrible sight. Nee without these beestes might they have bene slayne with one winde, beynge persecuted of their awne workes, and scatered abrode thorow the breth of thy power.

D Neuertheles thou hast ordred all thinges in measure, nōbre & weight. For thou hast euer had greate strēgth & might, & who maye withstōde ỹ power of thine arme? And why like as ỹ small thynge ỹ ỽ balaunce weyeth, so is ỹ worlde before ỹ: yee as a droppe of ỹ morninge dew, that falleth downe vpon the earth. Thou hast mercy vpon all, for thou hast power of all thynges: and makest the as though thou sawest not the sinnes of mē, because they shulde amende. For thou louest all the thinges that are, and hatest none of

thē whō thou hast made: nether dydest thou ordeyne or make eny thinge of euell will.

How might eny thinge endure, yf it wer not ẏ will? Or how coude eny thinge be preserued, excepte it were called of ẏ? But thou spareſt all, for all are thine, o LORDE, thou louer of soules.

The XII. Chapter.

A O LORDE, how gracious & swete is thy sprete in all thinges? Therfore chastenest thou thē measurably that go wrōge, and warnest them, concernynge the thinges wherin they offende: thou speakest vnto them (o LORDE) and exortest thē to leaue their wickednes, and to put their trust in the. As for those olde inhabiters of thy holy londe, thou mightest not awaye with them, Deut. 9.a 12.d.18.b for they commytted abhominable workes agaynst the: as wytchcraft, sorcery and Idolatry: they slew their owne children without mercy: they atē vp mens bowels, and deuoured the bloude: Yee because of soch abhominaciōs, myßbeleues & offeringes, thou slewest the fathers of the desolate soules by the handes of oure fathers: that ẏ londe which thou louest aboue all other, might be a dwellinge for the children of God.

B Nevertheles thou sparedest thē also (as mē) & sendedst ẏ forerūners of thyne hoost, euē hornettes to destroye thē out by lytle & litle. Not ẏ thou wast vnable to subdue ẏ vngodly vnto ẏ righteous in battayll, or with Exo. 23.d Deut. 7.d cruell beestes, or wt one rough worde to destroye thē together: But ẏ mynde was to driue thē out by lytle & litle, geuinge thē time & place to amende: knowinge well, ẏ it was an vnrighteous nacion & wicked of nature, & ẏ their thought might never be altered. For it was a cursed sede from ẏ begynnynge, & feared no mā: Yet hast thou pardoned their synnes. For who wyl saye vnto the: why hast thou done ẏ? Or who wyl stōde agaynst thy iudgmēt? Or who wil come before ẏ face an auēger of vnrighteous mē? Or who wil blame ẏ, yf ẏ people perish, whō thou hast made? C For there is none other God but thou, ẏ 1.Pet.5.a careſt for all thinges: ẏ thou mayest declare how ẏ ẏ iudgmēt is not vnright. There dare nether kīge, ner tyraūt in ẏ sight requyre accōptes of them, whō thou hast destroyed.

For so moch thē as thou art righteous ẏ self, thou ordrest all thīges righteously, & punisheſt euē hī ẏ hath not deserued to be punyshed, & takest him for a straūger & an aleaunt in ẏ lōde of ẏ power. For ẏ power is ẏ begynnynge of righteousnes: and because thou art LORDE of all thinges, therfore art thou gracious vnto all. Whan men thinke ẏ not to be of a full strength, thou declarest ẏ power: & boldly delyuereſt thou them ouer ẏ knowe ẏ not. But thou LORDE of power iudgest quyetly, and ordrest us with greate worshipe, for thou mayest do as thou wilt.

Job 9.b By soch workes now hast thou taught thy people, that a mā also shulde be iust and louynge: and hast made thy childrē to be of a good hope: for euen when thou iudgest, thou geuest rowme to amende from synnes. For in so moch as thou hast punyshed, and wt soch diligence delyuered ẏ enemies of thy seruaūtes, which were worthy to dye (where thorow thou gaueſt thē tyme & place of amēdement ẏ they might turne frō their wickednes) wt how greate diligence then punyſhest thou thine awne childrē, vnto whose fathers thou hast swome & made couenaūtes of good promises? So where as thou doest but chasten vs, thou punyſhest o enemies dyuerse wayes: to ẏ intēt ẏ whā we punysh, we shulde remēbre ẏ goodnesse: & whan we o selues are punyshed, to put oure trust in thy mercy.

Wherfore where as men haue lyued ignoraūtly & vnrighteously, thou hast punyshed thē fore, euē thorow ẏ same thinges that they E worshipped. For they wente astraye very lōge in ẏ waye of errō, & helde ẏ beestes (which euē their enemies despysed) for goddes, lyuynge as children of no vnderstandinge. Therfore hast thou sent a scornefull punyshment amonge them, as amonge the childrē of ignoraunce. As for soch as wolde not be reformed by those scornes & rebukes, they felt the worthy punishmēt of God. For ẏ thinges ẏ they suffred, they bare thē vnpacietly, beinge not contēt in them but vn wyllinge. And whan they perysshed by ẏ same thinges that they toke for goddes, they knowleged then, that there was but one true God, whom before they wolde not knowe: therfore came ẏ ende of their dampnacion vpon them.

The XIII. Chapter.

Z VAyne are all men, which haue not ẏ knowlege of God: as were they that out of the good thinges which are sene, knewe not him, that of himself is euerlastinge. Nether toke they so moch regarde of the workes that are made, as to knowe, who was the craftesman of them: but some toke the fyre, some the wynde or ayre, some ẏ course of ẏ starres, some ẏ water, some the Sonne and Moone, or the lightes of heaven which rule ẏ earth, for goddes. But though they had soch pleasure in their beuty, that they thought them to haue bene goddes:

yet shulde they haue knowne, how moch more fayrer he is that made them. For the mater of beuty hath ordened all these thinges. Or yf they marueled at the power and workes of thē, they shulde haue perceaued therby, yf he which made these thinges, is mightier then they.

B For by the greatnesse & beutye of the creature, yf maker therof maye playnely be knowne. Notwithstondinge they are the lesse to be blamed, that sought God & wolde haue founde him, and yet myssed. And why? for so moch as they wēte about in his workes and sought after them, it is a tokē, that they regarded and helde moch of his workes yf are sene: howbeit they are not wholy to be excused. For yf their vnderstondinge and knowlege was so greate, yf they coude discerne the worlde and yf creatures, why dyd they not rather fynde out yf LORDE therof?

But vnhappie are they, and amenge the deed is their hope, that call thē God which are but the workes of mens handes: golde, syluer and the thinge, that is founde out by connynge, the similitude of beastes, or eny vayne stone that hath bene made by hande of olde. Or as whan a carpenter cutteth 44.b 2.a
C downe a tre out of the wodd, and pareth of the barck of it connyngly: and so with the one parte maketh a vessell to be vsed, and digheeth meate with the residue. As for the other parte that is left, which is profitable for nothinge (for it is a croked pece of wodd and full of knobbes) he carueth it diligently thorow his vanite, and (accordinge to the knowlege of his connynge) he geueth it some proporcion, fashioneth it after the similitude of a man, or maketh it like some beest, straketh it ouer with reed and paynteth it, and loke what foule spot is in it, he casteth some coloure vpon it. Then maketh he a conuenīt tabernacle for it, setteth it in the wall and maketh it fast with yron, prouydinge so for it, lest it happē to fall: for it is well knowne, that it can not helpe it self: And why? it is but an ymage, and must of necessite be helped.

D Then goeth he and offreth of his goodes vnto it for his children and for his wife: he seeketh helpe at it, he axeth councell at it: he is not ashamed to speake vnto it yf hath no soule: for health, he maketh his peticion vnto him that is sicke: for life, he prayeth vnto him that is deed: he calleth vpon him for helpe, that is not able to helpe him self: & to sende him a good iourneye, he prayeth him that maye not go. And in all the thinges yf he taketh in hande (whether it be to optayne eny thinge or to worke) he prayeth vnto him that can do maner of good.

The xiiij. Chapter.

A GAyne, another mā purposinge to say le & beginynge to take his iourney thorow yf raginge see, calleth for helpe vnto a stock, yf is farre weaker, thē yf tre yf beareth him. For as for it, couetousnesse of moneye hath founde it out, & yf craftesmā made it wt his connynge. But yf prouydence (O father) gouerneth all thinges frō yf beginnynge, for thou hast made a waye in yf see, & a sure path in the myddest of yf wawes: declaringe therby, yf thou hast power to helpe in all thinges, yee though a man wente to the see without shippe. Neuertheless, yf yf workes of yf wysdome shulde not be vaine, thou hast caused an arke to be made: & therfore do men Exo. 14.d Gen.6.c commytte their lyues to a small pece of wodd passinge ouer the see in a shyppe, & are saued.

For in the olde tyme also whā the proude A giauntes perished, he (in whō the hope was Gen.7.b left to increase yf worlde) wēte into the shippe, which was gouerned thorow thy hande, & so left sede behinde him vnto yf worlde. For happie is yf tre where thorow righteousnes cōmeth: but cursed is the ymage of wodd, yf is made wt hādes, yee both it & he yf made it: he, because he made it: & it, because it was called God, where as it is but a frayle thinge. For the vngodly & his vngodlynes are both like Psal.7.a
abhominable vnto God. Euen so yf worke & he yf made it also shal be punyshed together. Therfore shal there a plage come vpon the ymages of the heithen: for out of the creature of God they are become an abhominacion, a temptacion vnto the soules of men, and a snare for the fete of the vnwyse. And why? the sekinge out of ymages is the beginnynge of whordome, and the bringinge vp of them is the destruccion of life. For they were not from the beginnynge, nether shall they cōtinue for euer. The welthy ydilnes of C men hath founde them out vpon earth, therfore shal they come shortly to an ende. Whē a father mourned for his sonne yf was taken awaye frō him, he made him an ymage (in all yf haist) of his deed sonne: & so begāne to worshipe him as God, which was but a deed mā & ordened his seruauntes to offre vnto him. Thus by processe of tyme & thorow lōge custome, this errō was kepte as a lawe, & tyraūtes cōpelled mē by violēce to honō ymages. As for those yf were so farre of, yf mē might not worshipe them presently, their picture was brought frō farre (like the ymage of a kynge whō they wolde honoure) to the intent that with greate diligence they might worshipe him which was farre of, as though he had bene present. Agayne, the syngular connynge of the crafte sman gaue the ignoraunt also a greate occasiō to worshipe ymages. For the workman wyllinge to do him a pleasure that sett him a worke, laboured with all his connynge to make the ymage of the best fashion. And so (thorow the beuty of the worke) the comon people was disceaued, in so moch that they toke him now for a God, which a litle afore was but honored as a man. And this was the erroure of mans life, whan men (ether for to serue their owne affeccion, or to do some pleasure vnto kinges) ascrybed vnto stones and stockes the name of God, which ought to be geuen vnto no man.

Moreover, this was not ynough for them that they erred in the knowlege of God: but where as they lyued in the greate warres of ignoraunce, those many and greate plages called they peace. For ether they slewe their awne children and offred them, or dyd sacrifice in the night season, or els helde vnreasonable watches: so that they kepte nether life ner mariage cleane: but ether one slewe another to death maliciously, or els greued his neghboure wt aduoutrie. And thus were all thinges myxte together: blonde, manslaughter, theft, dissimulacion, corrupcion, vnfaithfulnesse, sedicion, periury, disquyetinge of good men, vnthankfulnes, defylinge of soules, chaūginge of byrth, vnstedfastnesse of mariage, mysordre of aduoutrie and vnclennesse. And why? the honouringe of abhominable ymages, is the cause, the begynnynge and ende of all euell. For they yt worshipe Idols, either they are madd whā they be mery, or prophecie lyes, or lyue vngodly, or els lightly mansweare them selues. For in so moch as their trust is in ỳ Idols (which haue nether soule ner vnderstondinge) though they sweare falsely, yet they thinke it shal not hurte them.

Therfore commeth a greate plage vpon them, and that worthely: for they haue an euell opiniō of God, geuinge hede vnto Idols, swearinge vniustly to disceaue, and dispysinge righteousnes. For their swearinge is no vertue, but a plage of them that synne, and goeth euer with the offence of the vngodly.

The XV. Chapter.

BVt thou (O ỏ God) art swete, longe sufferinge and true, and in mercy ordrest thou all thinges. Though we synne, yet are we thine, for we knowe thy strength. Yf we synne not, then are we sure, that thou regardest vs. For to knowe the, is parfecte righteousnes: yee to knowe ỳ righteousnes and power, is the rote of immortalite. As for the thinge that men haue founde out thorow theyr euell science, it hath not disceaued vs: as the paynting of the picture (an vnprofitable laboure) and carued ymage, with diuerse colours, whose sighte entiseth the ignoraunt: so that he honoureth and loueth the picture of a deed ymage, that hath no soule.

Nevertheles, they that louesoche euell thinges, are worthy of death: they that trust in them, they that make them, they that loue them, and they that honoure them. The potter also taketh t tempereth soft earth, laboureth it, and geueth it the fashion of a vessell, what so euer serueth for oure vse: and so of one pece of claye he maketh some cleane vessel for seruice, and some contrary. But whether euery vessell serueth, that knoweth ỳ potter himself. So with his vayne laboure he maketh a god of the same claye: this doth euen he, which a litle afore was made of earth himself, and within a litle whyle after (whan he dyeth) turneth to earth agayne.

Notwithstandinge, he careth not ỳ more because he shal labō ner because his life is shorte: but stryueth to excell goldsmythes, ỳ syluer smythes t copper smithes, and taketh it for an honō to make vayne thinges. For his hert is ashes, his hope is but vaine earth t his life is more vyle then claye: for so moch as he knoweth not his awne maker, that gaue him his soule to worke, and brethed in him the breth of life. They counte oure life but a pastyme, and oure conuersacion to be but a market, and that men shulde euer be getting, yee and that by euell meanes. Now he ỳ of earth maketh frayle vessell and ymages, knoweth himself to offende aboue all other.

All the enemies of thy people and ỳ holde them in subieccion, are vnwyse, vnhappie and exceadinge proude vnto their owne soules: for they iudge all the Idols of the heithē to be goddes, which nether haue eyesight to se, ner noses to smell, ner eares to heare, ner fingers of handes for to grope: t as for their fete, they are to slowe to go. For man made them, and he that hath but a borowed spirite, fashioned them. But no man can make God like vnto him: for seinge he is but mortall himself, it is but mortall that he maketh with vnrighteous handes. He himself is better then they whom he worshippeth, for he lyued though he was mortall, but so dyd neuer they. Yee they worshippe beestes also, which are most miserable: for compare thinges that can not sele vnto them, & they are worse then those. Yet is there not one of these beestes, that with his sight cā beholde eny good thinge, nether haue they geuen prayse ner thankes vnto God.

The XVI. Chapter.

A For these and soch other thinges haue they suffred worthy punyshment, & thorow ỹ multitude of beestes are they roted out. In steade of ỹ which punishmentes thou hast graciously ordred thine awne people, & geuen them their desyre that they lōged for: a new & straunge taist, preparinge them quales to be their meate: to the intent ỹ (by the thinges which were shewed and sent vnto them) they ỹ were so gredy of meate, might be withdrawen euen from the desyre that was necessary. But these within shorte tyme were brought vnto pouerte, and taisted a new meate. For it was requisite ỹ (without eny excuse) destruccion shulde come vpō those which vsed tyrāny, & to shewe onely vnto the other, how their enemies were destroyed. For whan the cruell woodnesse of the beestes came vpon them, they perysshed thorow the stinges of the cruell serpentes.

B Notwithstōdinge ỹ wrath endured not perpetually, but they were put in feare for a litle season, ỹ they might be refourmed, hauynge a token of saluacion, to remembre the cōmaundement of thy lawe. For he ỹ cōuerted, was not healed by the thinge ỹ he sawe, but by THE, O sauīō of all. So in this thou shewdest thine enemies, ỹ it is thou, which delineresst frō all euell. As for thē whan they were bytten wt̄ greshoppers and flyes, they died, for they were worthy to perish by soch: But nether the teth of dragons ner of venymous wormes ouercame ỹ children, for thy mercy was euer by them & helped thē. Therfore were they punyshed to remēbre thy wordes, but hastely were they healed agayne: lest they shulde fall in to so depe forgetfulnesse, that they might not vse thy helpe.

C It was nether herbe ner plaster ỹ restored thē to health, but thy worde (o LORDE) which healeth all thinges. It is thou (o LORDE) ỹ hast the power of life & death: thou ledest vnto deathes dore, & bringest vp agayne. But man thorow wickednes slayeth his owne soule, & when his spriete goeth forth, it turneth not agayne, nether maye he call agayne ỹ soule ỹ is takē awaye: It is not possible to escape ỹ hande. For ỹ vngodly ỹ wolde not knowe ỹ, were punyshed by ỹ strēgth of thine arme: wt̄ straūge waters, hales and raynes were they persecuted, & thorow fyre were they cōsumed. For it was a wonderous thinge that fyre might do more then water which quēcheth all thinges: but ỹ worlde is ỹ auēger of the righteous. Some tyme was ỹ fyre so tame, ỹ the beestes which were sent to punysh ỹ vngodly, brent not: & ỹ because they shulde se & knowe, ỹ they were persecuted wt̄ the punyshmēt of God. And somtyme brent the fyre in the water on euery syde, ỹ it might destroye ỹ vnrighteous nacīō of the earth. Againe, thou hast fed thine awne people wt̄ angels fode, & sent thē bred ready from heauē (without their labō) beynge very pleasaūt & well gusted. And to shewe thy riches & swetnesse vnto thy childrē, thou gauest euery one their desyre, so ỹ euery man might take what liked him best. But the snowe & yse abode the violēce of the fyre, & melted not: ỹ they might knowe, ỹ the fyre burninge in the hale & rayne, destroied ỹ frute of ỹ enemies: ỹ fyre also forgatt his strēgth agayne, ỹ ỹ righteous might be norished. For ỹ creature ỹ serueth ỹ (which art ỹ maker) is fearse in punyshinge ỹ vnrighteous, but it is easy & gētle to do good, vnto soch as put their trust in the. Therfore dyd all thinges alter at the same tyme, & were all obediēt vnto thy grace, which is ỹ norse of all thinges, acordinge to ỹ desyre of thē ỹ had nede therof: ỹ ỹ childrē (O LORDE) whō thou louest, might knowe, ỹ it is not nature & the growinge of frutes ỹ fedeth mē, but ỹ it is ỹ worde, which preserueth thē ỹ put their trust in the. For loke what might not be destroyed wt̄ the fyre, as soone as it was warmed wt̄ a litle Sonne beame, it melted: ỹ all men might knowe, ỹ thankes ought to be geuen vnto ỹ before ỹ Sonne ryse, & ỹ thou ought est to be worshipped before ỹ daye spryng. For ỹ hope of ỹ vnthankfull shal melt awaie as the wynter yse, & perishe as water, ỹ is not necessary.

D Exo. 16.

E Deut. 8. Matt. 4.

The XVII. Chapter.

A Greate are thy iudgmētes (o LORDE) & thy councels can not be expressed: Rom. 11. ther fore men do erre, ỹ wil not be refourmed wt̄ thy wysdome. For whan the vnrighteous thought to haue thy holy people in subiectiō, they were bounde wt̄ the bandes of darcknes & longe night, shutt vnder ỹ rofe, thinkinge to escape ỹ euerlastinge wisdome. And why lo they thought to be hyd in ỹ darcknesse of their synnes, they were scatered abrode in ỹ very myddest of the darck coueringe of forgetfulnes, put to horrible feare & wonderously vexed. For the corner where they were, might not kepe them from feare: because ỹ Exo. 10. e ſounde came downe and vexed them: yee many terryble and ſtraunge viſions made them afrayed.

B No power of the fyre might geue them light, nether might the cleare flames of the ſtarres lighte ẏ horrible night. For there appeared vnto thē a ſodane fyre, very dredeful: At ẏ which (whan they ſawe nothinge) they were ſo afrayed, that they thought ẏ thinge which they ſawe, to be the more fearfull. As
rod. 7. b for the ſorcery ⁊ enchauntemēt ẏ they vſed, it came to deriſiō, and the proude wyſdome was brought to ſhame. For they ẏ promyſed to dryue awaie the fearfulnes ⁊ drede frō ẏ weake ſoules, were ſick for feare thē ſelues, and that wt ſcorne. And though none of ẏ wōders feared thē, yet were they afrayed at the beeſtes which came vpon thē, ⁊ at ẏ hiſſynge of the ſerpētes: In ſo moch that with trēblinge they ſwowned, ⁊ ſayde they ſawe not ẏ ayre, which no mā yet maye eſcape.

C For it is an heuy thinge, whā a mans owne conſciēce beareth recorde of his wickednes ⁊ condēpneth him. And why? a vexed ⁊ wounded conſciēce, taketh euer cruell thinges in hāde.
al. 45. a Fearfulnes is nothinge els, but a declaringe ẏ a mā ſeketh helpe ⁊ defence, to anſwere for him ſelf. And loke how moch leſſe the hope is within, the more is ẏ vncertaynte of the matter, for the which he is puniſhed. But they ẏ came in ẏ mightie night, ſlepte ẏ ſlepe ẏ fell vpō thē frō vnder ⁊ frō aboue: ſomtyme were they afrayed thorow ẏ feare of ẏ wonders, ⁊ ſomtyme they were ſo weake, ẏ they ſwowned withall: for an haſtie ⁊ ſodane fearfulnes came vpon thē. After warde, yf eny of thē had fallē, he was kepte ⁊ ſhutt in preſon, but without chaynes. But yf eny dwelt in a vyllage, yf he had bene an hyrd or huſbandman, he ſuffred intollerable neceſſite: for they were all bounde with one chayne of darckneſſe.

D Whether it were a blaſynge wynde, or a ſwete ſonge of ẏ byrdes amonge the thicke braunches of the trees, or the vehemence of haiſtie rūnynge water, or greate noyſe of ẏ fallynge downe of ſtones, or the playenge ⁊ rūnynge of beaſtes whō they ſawe not, or ẏ mightie noyſe of roaringe beeſtes, or ẏ ſownde ẏ anſwereth agayne in the hye mountaynes: it made thē ſwowne for very feare. For all the earth ſhyned wt cleare light, ⁊ no mā was hyndered in his labo. Onely vpon thē there fell a heuy night, an ymage of darckneſſe that was to come vpon them. Yee they were vnto them ſelues the moſt heuy ⁊ horrible darckneſſe.

The XVIII. Chapter.

A Neuertheles thy ſayntes had a very greate light (and the enemies herde their voyce, but they ſawe not the figure of them.) And becauſe they ſuffred not ẏ ſame thinges, they magnified the: and they ẏ were vexed afore (becauſe they were not hurte now) thanked the, and beſought ẏ (o God) ẏ there might be a difference. Therfore had they a burnynge piler of fyre to lede them in Exo the vnknowne waye, ⁊ thou gaueſt them the Sonne for a fre gift without eny hurte. Reaſon it was, that they ſhulde want light ⁊ to be put in the preſon of darckneſs, which kepte thy childrē in captiuyte, by whom the incorrupte light of the lawe of ẏ worlde was for to be geuen. Whan they thought to ſlaye B
the babes of the righteous (one beinge laied Exo out, and yet preſerued to be leder vnto the other) thou broughteſt out the whole multitude of the children, and deſtroydeſt theſe in Exo the mightie water. Of that night were our fathers certified afore, that they knowinge vnto what oothes they had geuen credēce, might be of good cheare. Thus thy people receaued ẏ health of the righteous, but the vngodly were deſtroied. For like as thou haſt hurte oure enemies, ſo haſt thou promoted vs whom thou calledeſt afore. For the righteous children of the good men offred ſecretly, ⁊ ordred the lawe of righteouſnes vnto vnite: ẏ the iuſt ſhulde receaue good and euell in like maner, ſinginge prayſes vnto ẏ father of all men. Agayne, there was harde an vnconvenient voyce of the enemies, ⁊ piteous crie for childrē that were bewayled. The maſter and the ſeruaūt were pumyſhed C alike, the meane man and the kynge ſuffred in like maner. For they all together had innumerable that dyed one death.

Nether were ẏ lyinge ſufficient to bury Exo
ẏ deed, for in ẏ twinckelinge of an eye, the nobleſt nacion of thē was deſtroyed. As oftas God helped thē afore, yet wolde it not make thē beleue: but in ẏ deſtruccion of ẏ firſt borne they knowleged, that it was ẏ people of God. For whyle all thinges were ſtill, ⁊ whā ẏ night was in ẏ myddeſt of hir courſe, thy Allmightie worde (o LORDE) leapte downe frō heauē out of ẏ royall trone, as a rough mā of warre, in ẏ myddeſt of ẏ londe ẏ was deſtroyed: ⁊ ẏ ſharpe ſwerde perſourmed ẏ ſtraite cōmaundemēt, ſtādinge ⁊ fyllinge all thinges wt death: yee it ſtode vpō ẏ earth ⁊ reached vnto the heauen. Then the ſight of the euell dreames vexed them ſodenly, and fearfulneſſe came vpon them vnawarres.

D Then laye there one here, another there halfe deed halfe quyck, and shewed the cause of his death. For the visions that vexed thē, shewed thē these thinges afore: so that they were not ignoraunt, wherfore they perished.
The tentacion of death touched the right treous also, and amonge the multitude in the wylderneesse there was insurreccion, but thy wrath endured not longe. For the faultlesse
E man went in all the haist, and toke the bat tayll vpon him, brought forth the weapē of his ministracion: euen prayer and ỹ cēsours
of recōcilinge, set himself agaynst ỹ wrath,
and so brought the misery to an ende: decla-ringe therby, that he was thy servaunt. For he ouercame not the multitude with bodely power, ner with weapēs of might: but with the worde he subdued him that vexed him, puttinge the in remembraunce of the ooth & couenaūt made vnto the fathers. For whan the deed were fallen downe by heapes one vpon another, he stode in the myddest, paci-F fied the wrath, and parted ỹ waye vnto the lyvynge. And why: in his longe garmēt was all the beuty, and in the foure rowes of the stones was the glory of the fathers grauē, and thy maiesty was written in the crowne
of his heade. Vnto these the destroyer gaue place, and was afrayed of them: for it was only a tentacion worthy of wrath.

The XIX. Chapter.

A AS for the vngodly, the wrath came vpō them without mercy vnto the en
de. For he knew before what shulde happē vnto them: how that (whan they had cōsented to lett them go, and had sent them out with greate diligence) they wolde repen G 4.a te, & folowe vpon them. For whan they were yet mournynge and makinge lamētacion
by the graues of the deed, they deuysed another foolishnes: so that they persecuted them in their flienge, whom they had cast out afo re w' prayer. Worthy necessite also brought them vnto this ende, for they had cleane for gotten the thinges ỹ happened vnto them afore. But the thinge that was wantynge of their punyshment, was requysite so to be fulfilled vpon them with tormētes: that thy people might haue a marueleus passage thorow, and that these might fynde a straun ge death.

B Thē was euery creature fashioned agayn
e of the new accordinge to the wyll of their maker, obeyenge thy commaundementes, ỹ
thy children might be kepte without hurte.
For the cloude ouershadowed their tentes, & the drye earth appeared, where afore was water: so ỹ in the reed see there was a waye without impediment, and the greate depe be came a grene felde: where thorow all ỹ peo ple wente that were defended with thy han-de, seinge thy wonderous & marueleus wor-kes. For as ỹ horses, so were they fedd, & leap te like lābes, prayesinge the (o LORDE) which haddest delyvered them. And why: they we re yet myndefull of the thinges, that happe ned whyle they dwelt in the londe: how the grounde brought forth flyes in steade of ca

tell, and how ỹ ryuer scrauled with the mul titude of frogges in steade of fysshes.

But at the last they sawe a new creacion C of byrdes, what tyme as they were disceā- Exo.16.c
ned with lust, and desyred delicate meates. Nu.11.g
For whan they were speakinge of their appetite, the quales came vp vnto them from the see, and punyshmentes came vpon ỹ syn ners, not without the tokēs which came to passe afore by the vehemēce of ỹ streames:
for they suffred worthely accordinge to their wickednesses, they dealt so abhominably & churlishly with straungers. Some receaued no vnknowne gestes, some brought ỹ straun gers in to bondage that dyd them good. Be syde all these thinges there were some, that not only receaued no straungers with their wylles, but persecuted those also, and dyd thē 1.Ioh.b

fore were they punyshed with blyndnesse, like as they that were couered with sodane Gen.19.
darcknesse at the dores of the righteous: so 4.Re.6.
ỹ euery one sought ỹ intraunce of his dore.

Thus the elementes turned in to them sel D ues, like as whan one tune is chaunged vpon an instrument of musick, and yet all the residue kepe their melody: which maye easely be perceaued, by the sight of the thinges that are come to passe. The drye lōde was turned in to a watery, & ỹ thinge that afore swam me in the water, wente now vpon the drye grounde. The fyre had power in the water (cōtrary to his awne vertue) and the water forgatt his awne kynde to quench. Agayne, the flammes of the noysome beasties hurte
not the flesh of them that wēte with them, nether melted they the yse, which els melteth lighely. In all thinges hast thou promoted thy people (o LORDE) and brought them to honoure: thou hast not despysed them, but allwaye and in all places hast thou stonde
by them.

The ende of the boke of wysdome.

Ecclesiasticus called Jesus Syrac

The prologe of Jesus the sonne of Syrac vnto his boke.

MAny and greate mē haue declared wyßdome vnto vs out of ỳ lawe, out of ỳ prophetes & out of other that folowed thē. In the which thinges Jsrael ought to be commended, by the reason of doctrine and wißdome: Therfore they that haue it & reade it, shulde not onely thē selues be wyse there thorow, but serue other also with teachinge and wrytinge.

After that my graund father Jesus had geuen diligent laboure to reade the lawe, the prophetes and other bokes that were left vs of oure fathers, and had wel exercised himself therin: he purposed also to wryte some thinge of wyßdome and good maners, to the intēt that they which were wyllinge to lerne and to be wyse, might haue the more vnderstandinge, and be the more apte to lede a good conuersacion.

Wherfore I exorte you to receaue it louyngly, to reade it with diligence, and to take it in good worth: though oure wordes be not so eloquent as the famous oratours. For the thinge that is wrytin in the Hebrue tonge, soundeth not so well whan it is trāslated in to another speache. Not only this boke of myne, but also the lawe, the prophetes, and other bokes sounde farre other wyse, then they do, whan they are spoken in their awne language.

Now in the XXXVIII. yeare whan I came in to Egipte in the tyme of Ptolomy Euergetes, and continued there all my life, I gat libertie to reade and wryte many good thinges. Wherfore I thought it good and necessary, to bestowe my diligence and trauayle to interprete this boke. And considering that I had tyme, I laboured and dyd my best to performe this boke, and to brynge it vnto light: that the straūgers also which are disposed to lerne, might applye them selues vnto good maners, & lyue accordinge to ỳ lawe of ỳ LORDE.

What this boke conteyneth.

Chap. I. All wyßdome commeth of God, for he onely is wyse The frute of Gods feare.

Chap. II. An exortacion vnto pacience & to the feare of God.

Chap. III. A doctryne for children, how they shulde honoure father and mother: & how men ought to be gentle and lowly.

Chap. IIII. Wyßdome lerneth to be mercifull and louynge vnto euery man. What rewarde wyßdome geueth, to them that loue her and seke her.

Chap. V. Let no man trust in his riches, let no man leane vpon his owne power, let no man despyse the mercy & longe sufferynge of God.

Chap. VI. Of true & false frendshipe. An exortacion to herken vnto wyßdome.

Chap. VII. Many goodly lessons and documētes.

Chap. VIII. Ne teacheth to bewarre of strife, to thincke scorne of no mā, to avoyde suertyshipp, to bewarre of braneles and cruell people.

Chap. IX. How mē shulde behaue them selues with their wyues, & how olde frendshipe ought not to be broken &c. with many other good lessons.

Chap. X. Of iudges & rulers of the people. How pryde ought to be eschued.

Chap. XI. Many good instruccions.

Chap. XII. How and to whom a mā shulde do good.

Chap. XIII. How the poore shulde kepe himself from the riche.

Chap XIIII. The vnfaithfulnes and wickednes of rich nygardes. An exortacion to do good & to cleue vnto wyßdome.

Chap. XV. The profit that commeth of the feare of God & of wyßdome, which the wicked will not receaue.

Chap. XVI. The multitude of euell children is not good, for the grace of God is not amonge the vngodly. The pacience, mercy, and wyßdome of God.

Chap. XVII. How God made man, endewed him with gifres, openynge his wil & lawe vnto him: but chose Jsrael out of all people.

Chap. XVIII. The wyßdome of God and ordre of his workes, which no mā maye comprehende. The dayes of man are shorte. God suffreth longe, rebuketh and teacheth all soch as wil receaue nurture.

Chap. XIX. Many good lessons of wyßdome.

Chap. XX. Men ought to geue warnynge, to exorte and to rebuke: but not to be cruell, violent or malicious. Of sylence, and speakinge, & how to bewarre of lyes.

Chap. XXI. All maner of synnes ought to be eschued. The difference of the wyse and foolish.

Chap. XXII. A foole wyll not be reformed nor rebuked. Be faithfull vnto thy neghboure and frende.

Chap. XXIII. A faithfull prayer vnto God, to preserue the mouth and tonge from noysome wordes and oothes, & the hert from euell thoughtes. How greate abhominacion adoultry is.

Chap. XXIIII. A commendacion of wyßdome.

Chap. XXV. There is nothinge better, then an honest verteous woman. Agayne, there is nothinge worse then an euell, vngodly, & frowarde woman.

Chap. XXVI. A commendacion and prayse of a good honest woman, and how noysome an euell wyfe is.

Chap. XXVII. Many goodly sentences.
Chap. XXVIII. Men ought not to take vengeaūce, but euery man to forgeue his neghboure, & not to beare euell wil ner to stryue. What harme commeth of false tongues & slaunderers.
Chap. XXIX. How mē shulde haue compassion and lende vnto their neghbours: and how they that borowe, ought to behaue them selues agayne. Of vnadvysed suertieshipe. How euery man ought to be content with that he hath, and not to be chargeable vnto other.
Chap. XXX. Who so loueth his childrē, teacheth them, nurtoreth them and chasteneth thē. Healthis a noble gift.
Chap. XXXI. The misery of the cuvetous. How one shulde behaue him self at the table, and be measurable in meate and drynke. What harme commeth of drynkinge to moch wyne.
Chap. XXXII. To be set in rule & dignite, shulde not make a man proude and hye minded, but to feare, to be diligent and faithful vnto them, that are committed vnto him &c. with other good lessons.
Chap. XXXIII. How God ought to be feared, & his lawe kepte. The difference of dayes and of men. The ordringe of childrē and housholde.
Chap. XXXIIII. The hope of the vngodly is vayne: the righteous shalbe preserued, for he putteth his trust in God, which wil not be reconciled with offeringes, but with an innocent life.
Chap. XXXV. The offringe that pleaseth God is to kepe his cōmaundementes, to be thankful, mercifull, and to cease from synne. God is the defender of wyddowes, fatherlesse, and oppressed, and heareth their prayer.
Chap. XXXVI. An earnest prayer vnto God for helpe agaynst the enemies. The prayse of an honest woman.
Chap. XXXVII. Of true & false frēdshipe. Good councell ought to be sought at them, which are verteous and feare God, but first at God himself. Of wyßdome and soberne sse.
Chap. XXXVIII. Phisicians and medicyns ought not to be despysed, but vsed as a gift of God: neuertheles God himself is first to be sought in all sickne sse. Men shulde be measurable in mournīge for the deed, & prepare them selues also vnto death. Euery workman ought to be diligent in his laboure, and to please God with kepinge his commaundementes.
Chap. XXXIX. Wyßdome and the feare of God excell all other thinges. All thinges are made to serue the faithfull.
Chap. XL. The life of man is a battayll. All thinges passe awaie, but the trueth abydeth for euer. The liberall and louynge condicions of the righteous. The vnfaithfullnes and nigardnesse of the vngodly.
Chap. XLI. Death is fearfull vnto the wicked, but a ioye vnto the righteous. The cursinge of the vngodly. A good name is a noble thinge. What the thinges be, wherof a man ought to be ashamed.
Chap. XLII. Where one ought not to be ashamed. The care and bringinge vp of childrē. The power and wyßdome of God.

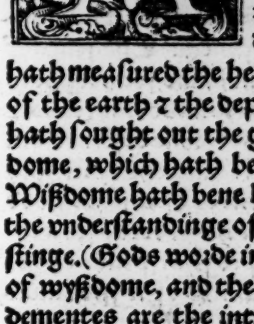
The first Chapter.



ALl wyßdome cōmeth of God the LORDE, & hath bene euer wt him, and is before all tyme. Who hath nombred ye sonde of the see, ye droppes of the rayne & the dayes of tyme? Who hath measured the heyth of heauē, ye bredth of the earth & the depenesse of the see? Who hath sought out the grounde of Gods wißdome, which hath bene before all thinges? Wißdome hath bene before all thinges, and the vnderstandinge of prudence from euerlastinge. (Gods worde in the heyth is the well of wyßdome, and the euerlastinge cōmaundementes are the intraunce of her.) Vnto whom hath ye rote of wyßdome bene declared? Or who hath knowne hir wyt? Vnto whom hath the doctrine of wyßdome bene discouered and shewed? and who hath vnderstande the manyfolde entraūce of her? A 1.Re.3. and 4. Iob 28. Iacobi 1. Rom.11

There is one: euē the Hyest, the maker of all thinges, ye Allmightie, ye kynge of power (of whom men ought to stonde greatly in awe) which sytteth vpon his trone, beinge a God of dominion: He hath created her therow ye holy goost: he hath sene her, nombred her, and measured her: He hath poured her out vpon all his workes, and vpon all flesh B

acordinge to his gift: he geueth her richely vnto them that loue him. The feare of the LORDE is worshipe and triuphe, gladnesse & a ioyfull crowne. The feare of the LORDE maketh a mery hert, geueth gladnesse, ioye and longe life. Who so feareth the LORDE, it shal go well with him at the last, & in the daye of his death he shal be blessed.

C The loue of God is honorable wisdome: loke vnto whom it appeareth, they loue it, for they se what wonderous thinges it doth. al.no.b The feare of LORDE is the begynnynge of to.9.b wysdome, and was made with the faithfull in the mothers wombe: it shall go with the chosen wemen, and shalbe knowne of ye righteous and faithfull. The feare of the LORDE is ye right Gods seruyce, that preserueth and instructeth the hert, and geueth myrth & gladnesse. Who so feareth the LORDE, shal be happie: and whan he hath nede of comforte, he shal be blessed. To feare God is the wisdome that maketh rich, and bringeth all good with her. She fylleth the whole house with hir giftes, & the garners with her treasure. The feare of the LORDE is the crowne of wysdome, and geueth plenteous peace & healthe. He hath sene her & nombred her: knowlege and vnderstandinge of wysdome hath he poured out as rayne: and them that helde her fast, hath he brought vnto honor.

D The feare of the LORDE is the rote of wysdome, and hir braunches are longe life. (In the treasures of wysdome is vnderstondinge and deuocion of knowlege, but wysdome is abhorred of synners.) The feare of the LORDE dryueth out synne, for he that is without feare, can not be made righteous, & his wilfull boldnes is his owne destruccion. A pacient man wyl suffre vnto the tyme, and then shal he haue ye rewarde of ioye. A good vnderstondinge wil hyde his wordes for a tyme, and many mens lippes shal speake of his wysdome. In the treasures of wysdome is the declaracion of doctrine, but the synner abhorreth the worshipe of God. My sonne, yf thou desyre wisdome, kepe the commaundement, and God shal geue her vnto the: for the feare of the LORDE is wysdome & nurtoure, he hath pleasure in faith and louynge mekenesse, and he shal fyll the treasures therof. Be not obstinate and vnfaithfull to the feare of the LORDE, and come not vnto him with a duble hert. Be not an ypocrite in the sight of men, and take good hede what thou speakest. Marck well these thinges, lest thou happen to fall and bringe thy soule to dishonoure, and so God discouer thy secretes, and cast the downe in the myddest of the congregacion: because thou woldest not receaue the feare of God, and because thy hert is full of faynednes and disceate.

of vnderstondinge, and shrincke not awaye, whan thou art entysed. Holde the fast vpon God, ioyne thy self vnto him & suffre, that thy life maye encreace at the last. What so euer happeneth vnto the, receaue it: suffre in heuynesse, and be pacient in thy trouble. For Ecclus.

O ye ye feare the LORDE, take sure holde of his mercy: shrincke not awaye fro him, that ye fall not. O ye that feare ye LORDE, beleue him, and youre reward shall not be emptye. O ye that feare ye LORDE, put youre trust in him, & mercy shal come vnto you for pleasure. O ye ye feare ye LORDE, set yo loue vpo him, & yo hertes shal be lightened.

Wo be vnto him that hath a dubble hert, wicked lippes and euell occupied handes, & to the synner ye goeth two maner of waies. Wo be vnto them that are lowse of hert, which put not their trust in God, and therfore shal they not be defended of him. Wo be vnto them that haue lost pacience, forsaken the right wayes, and are turned backe into frowarde wayes. What wyl they do, whan the LORDE shal begynne to vyset the?

patient, tyll they se himself) sayenge: better it is forus to fall in to the handes of ỳ LORDE, then in to the hādes of men: for his mercy is as greate as him self.

The III. Chapter.

A The children of wyßdome are a cōgregacion of the righteous, and their exercise is obedience and loue. Heare me youre father (o my deare children) and do there after, that ye maie be safe. For the LORDE wil haue the father honoured of the children, and loke what a mother commaūdeth hir children to do, he wil haue it kepte. Who so honoureth his father, his synnes shall be forgeuē him: and he that honoureth his mother, is like one that gathereth treasure together. Who so honoureth his father, shal haue ioye of his owne children: & whan he maketh his prayer, he shal be herde. He that honoureth his father, shall haue a longe life: & he that is obedient for ỳ LORDES sake, his mother shal haue ioye of him.

B He that feareth the LORDE, honoureth his father and mother, and doth them seruice, as it were vnto the LORDE himself. Honoure thy father in dede, in worde and in all pacience, that thou mayest haue his blessinge: for the blessinge of ỳ father buyldeth vp the houses of the children, but the mothers curse roteth out the foundacions. Reioyse not whan thy father is reproued, for it is no honoure vnto the, but a shame. For the worshipe of a mans father is his awne worshipe, and where the father is without honour, it is the dishonesty of the sonne. My sonne, make moch of thy father in his age, and greue him not as longe as he lyueth. And yf his vnderstandinge fayle, haue pacience wt̄ him, & despyse him not in thy strength. For the good dede that thou shewest vnto thy father, shall not be forgotten: and whan thou thy self wantest, it shall be rewarded the (and for thy mothers offence thou shalt be recompensed with good, yee it shal be founded for the in righteousnes) and in the daye of trouble thou shalt be remembred: thy synnes also shall melt awaye, like as the yse in ỳ fayre warme wether.

C He ỳ forsaketh his father, shall come to shame: & he that defyeth his mother, is cursed of God. My sonne, perfourme ỳ workes wt̄ lonynge mekenesse, so shalt thou be loued aboue other men. The greater thou art, the more hūble thy self (in all thinges) and thou shalt fynde fauō in the sight of God. For greate power belongeth onely vnto God, & he is honoured of the lowly.

Seke not out the thinges that are aboue thy capacite, and search not the grounde of soch thinges as are to mightie for the: but loke what God hath commaunded the, thinke vpō that allwaye, and be not curious in many of his workes. For it is not nedefull for the, to sew thine eyes, ỳ thinges ỳ are secrete. Make not thou to moch search in superfluous thinges, and be not curious in many of his workes: for many thinges are shewed vnto the allready, which be aboue ỳ capacite of men. The medlinge with soch hath begyled many a man, and tangled their wyttes in vanite. Now he that loueth parell, shal perish therin. Pro. 25.d Rom. 12.a Deut. 4.a Some rede * thy workes.

D An harde hert shall fayre euell at ỳ last (an hert that goeth two wayes, shal not prospere: & he that is froward of hert, wyll euer be the worse and worse) A wicked hert shall be ladē wt̄ sorowes, and ỳ vngodly sinner wyll heape one synne vpon another. The councell of the proude hath no health, for ỳ plante of synne shal be roted out in thē. The hert of him ỳ hath vnderstandinge, shal perceaue hye thinges, and a good eare wil gladly herken vnto wyßdome. An hert that is wyse & hath vnderstādinge, wyl abstayne from synnes, and increase in the workes of righteousnes. Water quencheth burnynge fyre, & mercy reconcyleth synnes. God hath respecte vnto him ỳ is thankfull: he thinketh vpon him agaynst the tyme to come: so that whan he falleth, he shal fynde a stronge holde. Pſal. 40.a Dan. 4.d Math. 5.a

The IIII. Chapter.

MY sonne, defraude not the poore of his almes, and turne not awaye thine eyes from him that hath nede. Despise not an hongrie soule, and defye not the poore in his necessite: greue not the hert of him that is helpelesse, and withdrawe not the gift from ỳ nedefull. Refuse not the prayer of one that is in trouble, and turne not awaye thy face from the nedy. Cast not thine eyes aside frō ỳ poore, ỳ thou geue him not occasion to speake euell of the. For yf he complayne of ỳ in the bytternes of his soule, his prayer shal be herde: euē he ỳ made him, shal heare him. Be curteous vnto ỳ company of the poore, humble thy soule vnto the elder, & bowe downe ỳ heade to a man of worshipe. Let it not greue the to bowe downe thine eare vnto the poore, but paye thy dett, and geue him a frendly answere, and ỳ wt̄ mekenesse. A Deut. 15.a Mat. 25.c

Delyuer him ỳ suffreth wrōge frō ỳ hāde of ỳ oppressō, & be not faint harted whā thou sittest in iudgmēt. Be merciful vnto ỳ fatherles as a father, & be in steade of an hußbāde B Gen. 14.c Exo. 2.b

vnto their mother: so shalt thou be as an obedient sonne of ỳ Hyest, and he shal loue the more thē ỳ mother doth. Wisdome bringeth life in to hir children, receaueth thē ỳ seke her, & wyll go before thē in ỳ waye of righteousnes. He ỳ loueth her, loueth life: & they ỳ seke her diligētly, shal haue greate ioye. They ỳ kepe her, shal haue the heretage of life: for where she entreth in, there is the blessinge of God. They that honoure her, shal be ỳ seruauntes of the holy one: and they that loue her, are beloued of God. Who so geueth eare vnto her, shal iudge the Heithē: and he that hath respecte vnto her, shall dwell safely.

C He that beleueth her, shal haue her in possession, and his generacion shal endure: for whan he falleth, she shal go with him before all. Feare, drede and tentacion shal she bringe vpon him, and trye him in hir doctrine: tyll she haue so proued him in his thoughtes, that he committe his soule vnto her. Thē shal she stablish him, bringe the right waye vnto him, make hī a glad mā, shewe him hir secretes, and heape vpon him the treasures of knowlege, vnderstondinge and righteousnes. But yf he go wronge, she shall forsake him, and geue him ouer in to the handes of his enemie.

D Ephe.5.b Matth.10.e Leui.19.d My sonne, make moch of the tyme, eschue the thinge ỳ is euell, and for ỳ life shame not to saye ỳ trueth. For there is a shame ỳ bringeth synne, and there is a shame that bringeth worshipe and fauō. Accepte no person after thine owne will, that thou be not confounded to thine owne decaye. Be not ashamed of ỳ neghbō in his aduersite, & kepe not back ỳ councell whā it maye do good, nether hyde ỳ wysdome in hir beuty. For in the tōge is wysdome knowne, so is vnderstandinge, knowlege and lernynge in the talkinge of the wyse, & stedfastnesse in ỳ workes of righteousnes. In no wise speake agaynst the worde of treuth, but be ashamed of the lyes of thine owne ignoraunce. Shame not to confesse thine errour, and submitte not thyself vnto euery man because of synne. Withstande not ỳ face of the mightie, and stryue not agaynst the streame. But for the trueth stryue thou vnto death, and God shal fight for the agaynst thine enemies. Be not hastie in thy tonge, nether slack and negligent in thy workes. Be not as a lyon in thine owne house, destroyinge thy housholde folkes, and oppressinge them ỳ are vnder the. Let not thine hande be stretched out to receaue, and shutt whan thou shuldest gene.

Act.20.c

The V. Chapter.

RUst not vnto thy riches, and saye not: tush, I haue ynough for my life. (For it shall not helpe in the tyme of vengeaunce and temptacion.) Folowe not the lust of thine owne hert in thy strength, and saye not: tush, how shulde I? for who wyl cast me downe because of my workes? for doutles God shal auenge it. And saye not: I haue committed mo synnes, but what euell hath happened me? For the Almightie is a pacient rewarder. Because ỳ synne is forgeuē ỳ, be not therfore without feare, nether heape one synne vpō another. And saye not: tush, the mercy of the LORDE is greate, he shal forgeue my synnes, be they neuer so many. For like as he is mercifull, so goeth wrath from him also, and his indignacion cōmeth downe vpon synners.

Make no tariēge to turne vnto ỳ LORDE, & put not of frō daye to daie: for sodenly shal his wrath come, & in the tyme of vengeaunce he shal destroie ỳ. Truste not in wicked riches for they shal not helpe in the daye of punishment and wrath. Be not caried aboute to euery wynde, and go not in to euery waye: for so doth the synner that hath a dubble tonge. (Stonde fast in ỳ waye of ỳ LORDE) be stedfast in thy vnderstandinge, abyde by ỳ worde, and folowe the worde of peace and righteousnes. Be gētle to heare ỳ worde of God, that thou mayest vnderstande it, and make a true answere wt wysdome. Be swifte to heare, but slowe and pacient in geuinge answere. Yf thou hast vnderstondinge, shappe thy neghbō an answere: Yf no, laye thine hāde vpō ỳ mouth: lest thou be trapped in an vndiscrete worde, & so cōfounded. Honō & worshipe is in a mās wyse talkinge, but ỳ tōge of ỳ vndiscrete is his owne distrucciō. Be not a pretty accuser as longe as thou lyuest, and vse no slaunder wt thy tonge. For shame and sorow goeth ouer the these, and an euell name ouer him that is dubble tonged: but he that is a pretty accuser of other men, shalbe hated enuyed and confounded. Se that thou iustifie the small and greate alyke.

The VI. Chapter.

BE not ỳ neghbours enemye for ỳ sides sake: for who so is euel shal be ỳ heyre of rebuke & dishonō, & who so euer beareth envye and a dubble tōge, offendeth. Be not proude in the deuyce of thine owne vnderstandinge, lest ỳ leanes wyther, and ỳ frute be destroyed, & so thou be left as a dryetre. For a wicked soule destroyeth him that hath it, maketh him to be laughed to scorne of his enemies, (and bringeth him to the porcion of the vngodly.) A swete word multiplieth frendes, and pacifieth thē yͭ be at variaunce, and a thankfull tonge will be plenteous in a good man. Holde frendshipe wᵗ many, nevertheles haue but one counceler of a thousande.

Yf thou gettest a frende, proue him first, and be not haistie to geue him credence. For some man is a frende but for a tyme, and wyl not abyde in the daye of trouble. And there is some frende that turneth to enemyte, and taketh parte agaynst the: and yf he knowe eny hurte by the, he telleth it out. Agayne, some frende is but a companyon at the table, and in the daye of nede he contynueth not. But a sure frende wil be vnto yͭ euen as thyne owne self, and deale faithfully with thy housholde folke. Yf thou suffre trouble and aduersite, he is with the, and hydeth not him self from the. Departe frō thine enemies, yee and bewarre of thy frendes.

A faithful frende is a stronge defence: who so findeth soch one, findeth a noble treasure. A faithfull frende hath no peare, the weight of golde and syluer is not to be compared to the goodnesse of his faith. A faithfull frende is a medicyne of life, & they yͭ feare the LORDE, shal fynde him. Who so feareth the LORDE, shal prospere with frendes: and as he is himself, so shal his frende be also. My sonne, receaue doctryne frō thy youth vp, so shalt thou fynde wyßdome tyll thou be olde. Go to her as one that ploweth, and soweth, and wayte paciētly for hir good frutes. For thou shalt haue but litle laboure in hir worke, but thou shalt eate of hir frutes right soone. O how exceadīge sharpe is wißdome to vnlerned men: an vnsted fast body wyl not remayne in her. Vnto soch she is as it were a twichstone, & he casteth her from him in all the haist: for wyßdome is wᵗ him but in name, there be but few yͭ haue knowlege of her. (But with them that knowe her, she abydeth enē vnto yͭ appearinge of God.)

Geue eare (my sonne) receaue my doctryne, and refuse not my councell. Put thy fote in to hir lynckes, and take hir yock vpon thy neck: bowe downe thy shulder vnder her, beare hir paciently, and be not weery of hir bandes. Come vnto her with yͭ whole hert, and kepe hir waves with all thy power. Seke after her, and she shalbe shewed the: and whā thou hast her, forsake her not. For at the last thou shalt fynde rest in her, and that shal be turned to thy greate ioye. Then shal hir fetters be a stronge defence for the, & hir yock a glorious rayment. For the bewtye of life is in her, and hir bandes are the couplinge together of saluacion. Yee a glorious rayment is it, thou shalt put it on, and the same crowne of ioye shalt thou weere.

My sonne, yf thou wilt take hede, thou shalt haue vnderstādinge: and yf thou wilt applye yͭ mynde, thou shalt be wyse. Yf thou wilt bowe downe thine eare, thou shalt receaue doctryne: and yf thou delyte in hearinge, thou shalt be wyse. Stonde with yͭ multitude of soch elders as haue vnderstandinge, and consente vnto their wyßdome with thine hert: that thou mayest heare all godly sermons, and that the worthy sentences escape the not. And yf thou seist a man of discrete vnderstandinge, gett the soone vnto him, and let thy fote treade vpon the steppes of his dores. Let thy mynde be vpon the commaundementes of God, & be earnestly occupied in his lawes: so shal he stablish yͭ hert, and geue yͭ wyßdome at thine owne desyre.

The VII. Chapter.

SO no euell, so shall there no harme happen vnto the. Departe awaye from the thinge that is wicked, and no myssfortune shal medle with the. My sonne, sowe no euell thinges in the forowes of vnrighteousnes, so shalt thou not reape thē seuenfolde. Labō not vnto man for eny lordshipe, nether vnto the kynge for the seate of honoure. Justifie not thy self before God (for he knoweth the hert) and desyre not to be reputed wyse in the presence of the kynge. Make no laboure to be made a iudge, excepte it so were, yͭ thou coudest mightely put downe wickednes: for yf thou shuldest stōde in awe of yͭ presence of the mightie, thou shuldest fayle in geuynge sentence. Offende not in yͭ multitude of the cite, and put not thyself amonge the people. Bynde not two synnes together, for in one synne shalt thou not be vnpunyshed. Saye not: tush, God wil loke vpō the multitude of my oblacions, and whan I offre to the hyest God, he wyl accepte it.

Be not faynt harted whan thou makest yͭ prayer, nether slack in geuinge of allmesse. Laugh no man to scorne in the heuynesse of his soule, for God (which seyth all thinges) is he that can bringe downe, and set vp agayne. Accepte no lesynge agaynst thy brother, nether do the same agaynst thy frende. Vse not to make eny maner of lye, for the custome therof is not good. Make not many wordes, whan thou art amonge the elders: and whan thou prayest, make not moch bablinge. Let no laborious worke be tedious vnto the, nether the husbandrie which the Allmightie hath created. Make not thy boast in the multitude of thy wickednes, but humble thy self euen from thine hert: and remembre that the wrath shall not be longe in tarienge, and that the vengeaunce of the flesh of ỳ vngodly is a very fyre and worme. Geue not ouer thy frende for eny good, ner thy faithfull brother for the best golde.

C Departe not from a discrete and good woman, that is fallen vnto the for thy porcion in the feare of the LORDE, for ỳ gift of hir honesty is aboue golde. Where as thy seruaunt worketh truly, intreate him not euell, ner the hyrelinge that is faithfull vnto the. Loue a discrete seruaunte as thine owne soule, defraude him not of his libertie, nether leaue him a poore man. Yf thou haue catell, loke well to them: and yf they be for thy profit, kepe them. Yf thou haue sonnes, bringe them vp in nurtor and lernynge, & holde thē in awe from their youth vp. Yf thou haue daughters, kepe their body, & shew not thy face cherefull to warde thē. Marye ỳ daughter, and so shalt thou perfourme a weightie matter: but geue her to a man of vnderstandinge. Yf thou haue a wife after thine owne mynde, forsake her not: (but cōmitte not thy self to the hatefull.)

Honoure thy father from thy whole herte, and forgett not the sorofull trauaile that thy mother had wt the: remembre that thou wast borne thorow them, and how cāst thou recōpense them the thinges that they haue done for the? Feare the LORDE with all ỳ soule, & honoure his ministers. Loue thy maker with all thy strēgth, and forsake not his seruauntes. Feare the LORDE with all thy soule, & honoure his prestes. Geue thē their porcion of the first frutes and increase of ỳ earth, like as it is commaūded the: geue thē ỳ shulders, and their appoynted offeringes, and firstlinges. Reach thine hande vnto the poore, that God maye blesse the with plenteousnes. Be liberall vnto all men lyuynge, yet let not but do good euen to them that are deed.

Let not them that wepe be without comforte, but mourne with soch as mourne. Let it not greue the to vyset the sick, for that shal make the to be loued. What so euer thou takest in hande, remembre the ende, and thou shalt neuer do amysse.

The VIII. Chapter.

STryue not with a mightie man, lest thou chaunse to fall in to his hādes. Make no variaūce wt a riche mā, lest he happen to bringe vp an harde quarell agaynst ỳ. For golde & siluer hath vndone many a man, yee euē ỳ hertes of kynges hath it made to fall. Stryue not wt a mā that is full of wordes, & laye no stickes vpon his fyre. Repe no company with the vnlerned, lest he geue thy kynred an euell reporte. Despyse not a man that turneth himself awaye from synns, and cast him not in the teth withall: but remēbre ỳ we are frayle euerychone. Thynke scorne of no mā in his olde age, for we wexe olde also. Be not glad of the death of thine enemie, but remembre that we must dye all the sorte of vs (and fayne wolde we come in to ioye.) Despyse not the sermons of sochelders as haue vnderstandinge, but acquaynte thy self wt the wyse sentences of them: for of them thou shalt lerne wyßdome and the doctrine of vnderstandinge, and how to serue greate men without complaynte.

Go not from ỳ doctryne of the elders, for they haue lerned it of their fathers. For of them thou shalt lerne vnderstandinge, so ỳ thou mayest make answere in ỳ tyme of nede. Kyndle not ỳ coales of synners, lest thou be brent in the fyrie flammes of their synnes. Resist not the face of the blasphemer, that he laye not wayte for thy mouth. Lende not vnto him that is mightier then thyself: Yf thou lendest him, counte it but lost. Be not suertie aboue ỳ power: yf thou be, then thynke surely to paye it. Go not to lawe wt the iudge, for he wyl iudge acordinge to his owne honoure. Trauayle not by the waye wt him ỳ is braineles, lest he do the euell: for he followeth his awne wilfulnes, & so shalt thou perish thorow his foly.

Stryue not with him that is angrie and cruell, and go not with him in to ỳ wylderues: for blonde is nothinge in his sight, and where there is no helpe, he shal murthur ỳ. Take no councell at fooles, for they loue nothinge but the thinges that please themself. Make no cōcell before a straunger, for thou canst not tell what wyll come of it. Opē not thine hert vnto euery man, lest he be vnthāfull to the, and put the to reproffe.

The IX. Chapter.

BE not gelous ouer ỳ wyfe of thy bosome, ỳ she shew not some shrewed poynte of wicked doctryne vpō the. Geue not the power of thy lyfe vnto a wo man, lest she come in ỳ strength, and so thou be confounded. Loke not vpon a womā that is desyrous of many men, lest thou fall in to hir snares. Vse not the company of a womā that is a player and daūser, & heare hir not, lest thou perish thorow hir entysinge. Behol be not a mayde, that thou be not hurt in hir bewtye. Cast not thy mynde vpon harlottes in eny maner of thinge, lest thou destroye both thy self and thine heretage. Go not aboute gasinge in every layne of the cite, ne ther wadre thou abrode in the stretes therof. Turne awaye thy face from a beutyfull woman, and loke not vpon the fayrnesse of o ther.

B Many a man hath perished thorow the bewty of women, for thorow it the desyre is kyndled as it were a fyre. (An adulterous woman shalbe trodden vnder fote as myre, of every one that goeth by the waye. Many a man wondringe the bewtye of a straūge woman, have bene cast out, for hir wordes kyndle as a fyre.) Sytt not wt another mans wyfe by eny meanes, lye not with her vpon the bedd, make no wordes with her at ỹ wyne: lest thine hert consent vnto her, & so thou with thy blonde fall in to destruccion. Forsake not an olde frende, for the new shal not be like him.

A new frende is new wine: let him be olde, & thou shalt drynke him with pleasure. Desyre not ỹ honoure and riches of a synner, for thou knowest not what destruccion is for to come vpon him. Delyte not thou in the thinge that the vngodly have pleasure in: beinge sure, that the vngodly shall not be accepted vntyll their graue.

C Repethe from the man that hath power to slaye, so nedest thou not to be afrayed of death. And yf thou commest vnto him, make no sawte, lest he happen to take awaye thy life. Remembre that thou goest in the myddest of snares, and vpon the bulwerkes of ỹ cite. Bewarre of thy neghboure as nye as thou canst, and medle with soch as be wyse and have vnderstandinge. Let iust men be thy gestes, let thy myrth be in the feare of God, let the remembraūce of God be in thy mynde, and let all thy talkynge be in the commaundementes of the Hyest. In the handes of craftesmen shall the workes be commended, so shal the princes of the people in the wysdome of their talkynge. A man full of wordes is perlous in his cite: and he that is temerarious and past shame in his talkinge, is to be abhorred.

The X. Chapter.

A MYse iudge wil ordre his people with discrecion, and where a man of vnderstandinge beareth rule, there goeth it well. As the iudge of the people is himself, eñ so are his officers: and loke what maner of man the ruler of the cite is, soch are they that dwell therin also. An vnwise kinge destroyeth his people, but where they that be in auctorite are men of vnderstandinge, there the cite prospereth. 1.Re.12.a

The power of the earth is in the hande of God, and whan his tyme is, he shal set a profitable ruler vpon it. In the hande of God is the power of man, and vpō the scrybes shal he laye his honoure. Remembre no wronge of thy neghboure, and medle thou wt no vnrighteous workes. Pryde is hatefull before God and men, and all wickednes of the Heithen is to be abhorred. Because of vnrighteous dealinge, wronge, blasphemies and diuerse disceate, a realme shal be trāslated frō one people to another. Leui.19.c Iere.27.a Dan.4.c

There is nothinge worse then a cuvetous man. What prydest thou the, o thou earth and aßshes? There is not a more wicked thinge, then to loue moneye. And why? soch one hath his soule to sell: yet is he but fylthie dōge whyle he lyueth. B

And though the phisician shewe his helpe neuer so longe, yet in conclucion it goeth after this maner: to daye a kynge, tomorow deed. For whan a man dyeth, he is the heyre of serpentes, beastes and wormes. The begynnynge of mans pryde, is to fall awaye from God: and why? his hert is gone from his maker, for pryde is the origenall of all synne. Who so taketh holde therof, shalbe fylled with cursinges, and at ỹ last it shal ouer throwe him. Therfore hath the LORDE brought the cōgregacions of the wicked to dishonō, and destroyed them vnto the ende.

God hath destroyed the seates of proude princes, and sett vp the meke in their steade. God hath wythered the rotes of the proude Heithen, and planted the lowly amonge them. God hath ouerthrowne the londes of the Heithen, and destroyed them out of the grounde. He hath caused them to wyther awaye, he hath brought them to naught, and made the memoriall of them to ceasse from out of the earth. (God hath destroyed the name of the proude, and left the name of ỹ humble of mynde.) Pryde was not made for man, nether wrothfulnes for mens children. The sede of men that feareth God, shalbe brought to honoure: but ỹ sede which transgresseth the commaundementes of ỹ LORDE shalbe shamed. He ỹ is the ruler amōge brethren, is holdē in honoure amōge them, and he regardeth soch as feare the LORDE. C Sap.6.b Luc.1.d 14.b.18.b Gen.19.e

The glory of the riche, of the honorable and of the poore is the feare of God. D

He that ordreth himself honestly in powerte, how mody more shal he behaue himself honestly in riches? Pro.10.c me mā that laboureth, and the more he weerieth himself, the lesse he hath. Agayne, some man is slouthfull, hath nede of helpe, wāteth strēgth, and hath greate powerte, and Gods eye loketh vpon him to good, setteth him vp from his lowe estate, and lifteth vp his heade: so that many men maruell at him, and geue honoure vnto God.

Prosperite and aduersite, life and death, powerte and riches come all of the LORDE. (Wyßdome, nurtoure and knowlege of ỳ lawe are with God: lowe and ỳ wayes of good are with him. Errour and darcknes are made for synners: and they that exalte themselues in euell, waxe olde in euell.) The gift of God remayneth for the righteous, and his good wyl shal geue prosperite for ever. Some man is rich by lyuynge nygardly, and ỳ is the porcion of his reward, in that he sayeth: now haue I gotten rest, and now wyl I eate and drynke of my goodes myself alone. And yet he considereth not, that the tyme draweth nye, ỳ he must leaue all these thinges vnto other men, and dye himself. Stonde thou fast in thy covenaunt, and exercyse thyself therin, and remayne in the worke vnto ỳ age. Contynue not in the workes of synners, but put thy trust in God, and byde in thine estate: for it is but an easy thīge in ỳ sight of God, to make a poore man riche, and that suddenly. The blessinge of God haisteth to ỳ rewarde of the righteous, and maketh his frutes soone to flouish and prospere. Saye not: what helpeth it me? and what shal I haue ỳ whyle? Agayne, saye not: I haue ynough, how can I wante? Whan thou art in welfare, forget not aduersite: and whan it goeth not well with the, haue a good hope, that it shal be better. For it is but a small thinge vnto God, in the daye of death to rewarde euery mā accordinge to his wayes. The aduersite of an houre maketh one to forgett all pleasure, and whan a man dyeth, his workes are discouered. Prayse no body before his death, for a man shalbe knowne in his children.

Bringe not euery man in to thine house, for the disceatfull layeth wayte dynerslye. Like as a partrich in a maūde, so is the herte of the proude: and like as a spye, that loketh vpon the fall of his neghbō. For he turneth good vnto euell, and slaundreth the chosen. Of one sparck is made a greate fyre, & an vngodly mā layeth wayte for blonde. Beware of the disceatfull, for he ymagineth wicked thinges, to bringe ỳ in to a perpetuall shame. Yf thou takest an aleaūt vnto ỳ, he shal destroye the in vnquietnes, and dryue the from thine owne wayes.

The XII. Chapter.

Tim.5.a shalt fynde greate rewarde: though not of him, yet (no doute) the LORDE him self shal rewarde the. He stödeth not in a good case, that is allwaye occupied in euell, & geueth
no allmes: for the hyest hateth the synners, and hath mercy vpon them that shew the workes of repentaunce. Geue thou vnto soch as feare God, and receaue not a synner: As for the vngodly and synners, he shall recompense vengeaunce vnto them, and kepe them to the daye of wrath. Geue thou vnto the good, and receaue not the synner: do well vnto him that is lowly, but geue not to the vngodly. Let not the bred be geuen him, that he be not mightier then thy self therin. For so shalt thou receaue twyse as moch euell, in all the good that thou doest vnto him: And why? the hyest hateth synners, and shal re-warde vengeaunce to the vngodly.

ne, & in aduersite an enemye shal not be hyd.
For whan a mā is in wealth, it greueth his enemies: but in heuynes and trouble a man

one that is richer then thy self. How agree the ketell & the pott together? for yf ý one be smytten agaynst the other, it shal be bro
kē. The rich dealeth vnrigteously, & threateneth withall: but ý poore beinge oppressed and wrōgeously dealt withall, suffreth scarcenesse, & geueth fayre wordes. Yf thou ke the a bare man, and not be sory for the. Yf pe, and gene the all good wordes, and saye:

what wantest thou? Thus shal he shame ý seyth that thou hast nothinge, he shal forsake the, and shake his heade at the.

Bewarre, that thou be not disceaued and B brought downe in thy symplenesse. (Be not to humble in thy wysdome, lest whan thou art brought lowe, thou be disceaued thorow foolishnes.) Yf thou be called of a mightie man, absent thy self, so shal he call the to him
the more oft. Preasse not thou vnto him, that thou be not shott out: but go not thou farre of, lest he forgett the. Withdrawe not ý self frō his speach, but beleue not his many wordes. For wt moch cōmunicacion shall he tempte the, and (wt a preuy mock) shall he question ý of thy secretes. The vnmercifull mynde of his shal marck ý wordes, he shal not spare to do ý hurte & to put ý in preson.

walkest in parell of ý ouerthrowinge.

(Now whā thou hearest his wordes, ma C ke the as though thou werest in a dreame, & wake vp. Loue God all thy lyfe longe, & call vpon him in thy nede.) Euery beast loueth his like, euen so let euery man loue his negh-boure. All flesh wil resorte to their like, and euery man will kepe company with soch as he is him self. But as ý wolfe agreeth with the lambe, so doth the vngodly with ý righ teous. What felishippe shulde an holy man 2.Cor.6.c haue with a dogg? How can the ryche and the poore agree together? The wilde asse is the lyons pray in the wilderneesse, euen so are poore men the meate of the ryche. Like as the proude maye not awaye with lowlynes, euen so doth the riche abhoure the poore. Yf

a rich man fall, his frendes sett him vp agayne: but whan the poore falleth, his frendes forsake him. If a rich mā fall in to an errour, he hath many helpers: he speaketh proude wordes, and yet men iustifie him.

D But yf a poore man go wronge, he is punyshed: yee though he speake wisely, yet can it haue no place. Whan the riche man speaketh, euery body holdeth his tōge: and loke what he sayeth, they prayse it vnto the clowdes. But yf the poore man speake, they saye: What felowe is this? and yf he do amysse, they shal destroye him. Riches are good vnto him that hath no synne in his conscience, and powerte is a wicked thinge in the mouth of the vngodly. The hert of man chaungeth his countenaunce, whether it be in good or euell. A chearfull countenaunce is a tokē of a good hert, for els is it an harde thinge to knowe the thought.

The XIIII. Chapter.

A ccli.19.c nd 25.c ico.3.a BLissed is the man, that hath not fallen with ỳ worde of his mouth, and is not pricked with the conscience of synne. Happie is he that hath had no heuynes in his mynde, and is not fallen from his hope. It becommeth not a couetous man and a nygarde, to be ryche: and what shulde a nygarde do with golde? He that with all his carefulnes heapeth together vnrighteously, gathereth for other folkes, and another mā shal make good chere with his goodes. He ỳ is wicked vnto him self, how shulde he be good vnto other mē? How can soch one haue eny pleasure of his goodes? There is no thinge worse, then whan one disfauoureth himself, & this is a rewarde of his wickednes. If he do eny good, he doth it not knowinge therof, and agaynst his will, and at the last he declareth his vngraciousnes. A nygarde hath a wicked eye, he turneth awaye his face, and despyseth his owne soule. ro.27.c ccli.1.a A couetous mans eye hath never ynough in the porcion of wickednes, vntyll the tyme that he wither awaye, and haue lost his owne soule.

B A wicked eye spareth bred, & there is scarceneſſe vpō his table. My sonne, do good to ỳself of ỳ thou hast, & gene ỳ LORDE his due offeringes. Remembre ỳ death tarieth not, & how ỳ the couenaunt of the graue is shewed vnto the: (for the couenaunt of this worlde shal dye the death.) Do good vnto ỳ frende before thou dye, and accordinge to thy abylite reach out thine hande, and gene vnto ỳ poore. Be not dispoynted of ỳ good daye, & let not ỳ porcion of ỳ good daie ouerpas the. Shalt thou not leaue thy trauayles and labours vnto other men? In the deuydinge of the heretage gene and take, and sanctifie thy soule. Worke thou righteousnes before thy death, for in ỳ hell there is no meane to fynde. All flesh shal fade awaye like grasse, & like a floriſhinge leaf in a grene tre. Some growe, some are cast downe: euen so is ỳ generacion of flesh and blonde: one commeth to an ende, another is borne. Ecclī. 4.a Probi. 4.b Luc.16.b

All transitory thinges shall fayle at the last, and the worker therof shal go withall. Euery chosen worke shall be iustified, and he ỳ medleth withall, shal haue honoure therin. Blessed is the man ỳ kepeth him in wysdome, and exercyseth himself in vnderstandinge, & with discrecion shal he thinke vpon the forekn owlege of God. Which considereth ỳ wayes of wysdome in his hert, hath vnderstandinge in hir secretes, goeth after her (as one that seketh hir out) & conteyneth in hir wayes. He loketh in at hir windowes, & herkeneth at hir dores: He taketh his rest besyde hir house, & festeneth his stake in his walles: He shall pitch his tent nye vnto hir hande, and in his tent shal good thinges rest for euermore: He shal sett his children vnder hir coueringe, & shal dwell vnder hir braunches. Vnder hir coueringe shal he be defended from the heate, and in hir glory shall he rest.

The XV. Chapter.

HE that feareth God, wil do good: and who so kepeth the lawe, shal optayne wysdome. As an honorable mother shal she mete him, and as a vyrgin shall she receaue him. With ỳ bred of life and vnderstandinge shall she fede him, and gene him the water of wholsome wysdome to drynke. If he be constant in her, he shall not be moued: and yf he holde him fast by her, he shal not come to cōfucion. She shall bringe him to honoure amonge his neighbours, and in the myddest of the congregacion shall she open his mouth. With the spirete of wysdome and vnderstādinge shal she fyll him, and clothe him with the garment of glory. She shal heape the treasure of myrth & ioye vpō him, and gene him an euerlastinge name to heretage. Foolish men wyll not take holde vpon her, but soch as haue vnderstandinge, wil mete her, for she is farre from pryde and disceate. Men that go aboute with lyes, wil not remembre her: (but men of trueth shall be founde in her, euen vnto the beholdinge of God.) Prayse is not semely in the mouth of ỳ vngodly, for he is not sent of ỳ LORDE.

For of God commeth wysdome, & the praye shall stonde by the wysdome of God, and shal be plenteous in a faithfull mouth, and the LORDE shal geue her vnto him.

B Saye not thou: It is the LORDES faute that I am gone by, for thou shalt not do ye thinge that God hateth. Saye not thou: he hath caused me to go wronge, for he hath no nede of the vngodly. God hateth all abhominacion of erroure, & they that feare God wyll loue no soch. God made man from the begynnynge, & left him in the hande of his councell. He gaue him his commaundementes and preceptes: yf thou wilt obserue the commaundementes, & kepe acceptable faithfulnes for euer, they shal preserue ye. He hath set water and fyre before the, reach out thine hande vnto which thou wilt. Before man is life and death, good and euell: loke what him lyketh, shalbe geuen him. For the wysdome of God is greate and mightie in power, and beholdeth all men contynually. The eyes of the LORDE are vpon them that feare him, and he knoweth all the workes of man. He hath commaũded no man to do vngodly, neither hath he geuen eny man leue to synne.

The XVI. Chapter.

A Delyte not thou in the multitude of vngodly children, and haue no pleasure in them, yf they feare not God. Trust not thou to their life, and regarde not their labours: for one sonne ye feareth God is better, thẽ a thousande vngodly. And better it is for a man to dye without childrẽ, thẽ to leaue behynde him soch children as are vngodly. For by one ye hath vnderstandinge, maye a whole cite be vpholden, but though the vngodly be many, yet shal it be waysted thorow them. Many soch thinges hath myne eye sene, and greater thinges then these haue I herde with myne eares. In the congregacion of the vngodly shal a fyre burne, & amonge vnfaithfull people shal the wrath be kyndled.

B The olde giaũtes optayned no grace for their synnes, which were destroyed, trustinge to their owne strẽgth. Nether spared he them, amõge whom Loth was a straunger: but smote them and abhorred them because of the pryde of their wordes. He had no pitie vpõ them, but destroyed all the people, that were so stoute in synne. And for sõ moch as he ouersawe not the sixe hundreth thousande, that gathered them selues together in ye hardnesse of their hert: it were marueil yf one beynge hardnecked, shulde be fre. For mercy & wrath is with him: he is both mighty to forgeue, and to poure out displeasure. Like as his mercy is greate, euẽ so is his punysshment also, he iudgeth a man acordinge to his workes. The vngodly shal not escape in his spoyle, and the longe pacience of him that sheweth mercy, shal not byde behynde. All mercy shall make place vnto euery man acordinge to the deseruynge of his workes, (and after the vnderstandinge of his pilgremage.)

Saye not thou: I wyl hyde my self from C God, for who wyl thinke vpon me from aboue? I shal not be knowne in sõ greate a heape of people, for what is my soule amonge sõ many creatures? Beholde, the heauen, yee the heauen of heauens, the depe, the earth and all that therin is, shall be moued at his presence: the mountaynes, the hilles and the foundacions of the earth shal shake for feare, whan God vysiteth them. These thinges doth no hert vnderstonde, but he vnderstandeth euery hert, and who vnderstandeth his wayes? No man seyth his storme, and the most parte of his workes are secrete. Who wil declare the workes of his righteousnes? Or who shal be able to abyde them? for the couenaunt is farre from some, and the tryenge out of men is in the fulfillynge. He that is humble of hert, thynketh vpon soch thinges: but an vnwyse and erroneous man casteth his mynde vnto foolish thinges.

My sonne, herken thou vnto me, & lerne D vnderstãdinge, and marck my wordes with thine hert: I wyll geue the a sure doctrine, & planely shal I instructe the. God hath sett his workes in good ordre from the begynninge, and parte of them hath he sundered from the other. He hath garnyshed his workes from euerlastinge, and their begynnynges acordinge to their generacions. None of thẽ hyndered another, nether was eny of them disobedient vnto his worde. After this, God loked vpõ the earth, and fylled it with his goodes. With all maner of lyuinge beastes hath he couered the grounde, and they all shalbe turned vnto earth agayne.

The XVII. Chapter.

tes, declaringe vnto them his greate and no ble workes: (that they shulde prayse his ho ly name together, reioyse of his wonders, & be tellinge of his noble actes.) Besydes this, he gaue them instruccion, and the lawe of li fe for an heretage. He made an euerlastinge couenaunt with them, and shewed them his righteousnes & iudgmentes. They sawe his glory with their eyes, and their eares herde
the maiesty of his voyce. And he saide vnto them: bewarre of all vnrighteous thinges.

God, stonde in the porcion that is sett forth
for the & in the prayer of the most hye God.
Go in to the porcion of the holy worlde,
with soch as be lyuinge and geue thankes vn
to God.)

C Who wil prayse the LORDE in the hell?
Abyde not thou in the errour of the vngod ly, but geue him thākes before death. As for ✠ deed, thankfulnesse perisheth from him as nothinge. Geue thou thankes in thy life, yee whyle thou art lyuynge & whole shalt thou geue thankes, and prayse God and reioyse
in his mercy. O how greate is the louynge kyndnesse of the LORDE, and his mercifull goodnes vnto soch as turne vnto him? For all thinges maye not be in man: & why? the sonne of man is not immortall, and he hath pleasure in the vanyte of wickednes. What is more cleare th̄ the Sonne? yet shal it fay
le. Or what is more wicked, then the things that flesh and blonde hath ymagined? and that same shall be reproued. The LORDE seyth the power of the hye heaven, and all are but earth and aßshes.

The XVIII. Chapter.

HE that lyueth for euermore, made all thinges together. God onely is righteous, & remayneth a victorious kynge for euer. Who shalbe able to expresse the workes of him? Who hath sought out the grounde of his noble actes? Who shal decla re the power of his greatnesse? Or, who wil take vpon him to tell out his mercy? As for the wonderous workes of ✠ LORDE, there maye nothinge be taken from them, nothin-ge maye be put vnto them, nether maye the grounde of them be founde out. But whan
a man hath done his best, he must begynne agayne: and whan he thinketh to be come to an ende, he must go agayne to his labour.
What is man? Wherto is he worth? What good or euell can he do? If the nombre of a mans dayes be allmost an hundreth yeare, it is moch.

Like as the droppes of rayne are vnto ✠
see, and as a grauell stone is in comparison of the sonde: so are these few yeares to the dayes euerlastinge. Therfore is ✠ LORDE pacient with them, and poureth out his mer cy vpon them. He sawe and perceaued the thoughtes and ymaginacions of their har te, that they were euell: therfore heaped he vp his mercifull goodnes vpon them, and shewed them the waie of righteousnes. The mercy that a mā hath, reacheth to his neigh
boure: but ✠ mercy of God is vpon all flesh.
He chasteneth, he teacheth and nourtureth yee euen as a shepherde turneth agayne his flock, so doth he all them that receaue chas-tenynge, nurtoure and doctryne. Mercifull is he vnto them, that stonde in awe of his iudgmentes.

My sonne, whan thou doest good, make no grudginge at it: and what so euer thou geuest, speake no discomfortable worde.
Shal not the dew coole the heate? Euen so is a worde better then a gift. Is not a frend ly worde a good honest gift? but a gracious man geueth them both. A foole shal cast man in the tethe, and that roughly, & a gift of the nygarde putteth out ✠ eyes. Ge the righteousnes before thou come to iudgmēt: Lerne before thou speake, and go to phisick or ever thou be sick: examen and iudge thy selfe, before the iudgment come, and so shalt thou fynde grace in the sight of God. Humble thy self afore thou be sick, and in tyme of thy disease shewe thy conuersacion. Let not to praye allwaye, and stonde not in feare to be resourmed vnto death, for the reward of God endureth for ever. Before thou prayest, prepare thy soule, and be not as one ẏ tempteth God. Thynke vpon the wrathfull indignacion that shalbe at the ende, and the houre of vēgeaunce, whā ẏ lᵉ shal turne away his face. Whan thou hast ynough, remembre the tyme of honger: and whan thou art rych, thynke vpon the tyme of powerte and scarcenesse.

From the mornynge vntyll the euenynge the tyme is chaunged, and all soch thynges are soone done in ẏ sight of God. A wyse man feareth God in all thinges, and in the dayes of transgression he kepeth him self from synne. A discrete man hath pleasure in wyßdome, and he that fyndeth her, maketh moch of her. They that haue had vnderstandinge, haue dealt wysely in wordes, haue vnderstonde the trueth and righteousnes, and haue sought out wyse sentēces and iudgmentes. Folowe not thy lustes, but turne ẏ from thine owne will. For yf thou geuest thy soule hir desyres, it shal make thine enemies to laugh the to scorne. Take not thy pleasure in greate voluptuousnes, & medle not to moch withall. Make not to greate cheare of the thinge that thou hast wonne by avauntage: lest thou fall in to powerte, and haue nothinge in thy purse.

The XIX. Chapter.

A Labourynge man that is geuen vnto dronckennes, shall not be riche: and he that maketh not moch of small thynges, shal fall by litle and litle. Wyne and women make wyse men rēnagates, and put men of vnderstādinge to reprofe: and he that accompanieth aduouterers shal become a wicked man. Mothes and wormes shall haue him to heretage, yee he shall be sett vp to a greater example, and his soule shalbe roted out of the nombre. He that is haistie to geue credence, is light mynded, and doth agaynst himself. Who so reioyseth in wickednes, shal be punished: he that hateth to be resourmed, his life shalbe shortened: and he that abhorreth bablinge of wordes, quencheth wickednes. He that offendeth agaynst his owne soule, shal repent it: and he that reioyseth in wickednes, shalbe punyshed.)

Rehearse not a wicked and churlish worde twyse, and thou shalt not be hyndered. Shew thy secretes nether to frende ner foo, & yf thou hast offended, tell it not out. For he shal herken vnto the and marck the: and whan he fyndeth oportunyte, he shall hate the. Yf thou hast herde a worde agaynst ẏ neghboure, lett it be deed within the and be sure, thou shalt haue no harme therby. A foole trauaileth with a worde, like as a woman that is payned with bearinge of childe. Like as an arowe shott in a dogges thye, so is a worde in a fooles hert. Tell thy frende his faute, lest he be ignorant, and saye: I haue not done it, or yf he haue done it, that he do it nomore. Reproue thy neghboure, that he kepe his tonge: and yf he haue spokē, that he saye it nomore.

Tell thy neghboure his faute, for oft tymes an offence is made, and geue not credēce to euery worde. A man falleth somtyme with his tonge, but not with his will. For what is he, ẏ hath not offended in his tonge? Geue thy neghboure warnynge, before thou threaten him, and geue place vnto the lawe of the LORDE. The feare of God is all wyßdome, & he that is a right wyse man kepeth the lawe. As for the doctrine of wickednes, it is no wyßdome, and the prudence of synners is no good vnderstondinge: it is but wickednesse and abhominacion & a blasphemynge of wyßdome. A symple man of small vnderstandinge that feareth God, is better then one that hath moch wyßdome, and transgresseth the lawe of the Hyest.

A crafty sotell man can be wyse, but he is vnrighteous, and with giftes he wrayesteth the open and manyfest lawe. A wicked man can behaue himself humbly, and can douke with his heade, and yet is he but a disceauer within. He hydeth his face, and disguyseth it: & because he shulde not be knowne, he preuenteth the.

And though he be so weake that he can do the no harme, yet whan he maye fynde oportunyte, he shall do some euell. A man maye be knowne by his face, and one that hath vnderstondinge, maye be perceaued by the loke of his countenaunce. A mans garment, laughter & goynge, declare what he is.

The XX. Chapter.

Some man reproueth his neghbō oft tymes, but not in due season: A gayne, some man holdeth his tonge, and he is wyse and discrete. It is moch better to gene warnynge and to reproue, then to beare euell will: for he that knowlegeth him self openly, shalbe preserued from hurt and destruccion. Like as whan a chamberlayne thorow desyre and lust defyleth a mayden, euen so is it with him that vseth violence and vnrighteousines in ỹ lawe: (O how good a thinge is it, a man ỹ is reproued, to shewe openly his repentaunce: for so shalt thou escape wylfull synne.)

Some man kepeth sylence, and is founde wyse: but he that is not ashamed what he sayeth, is hatefull. Some man holdeth his tonge, because he hath not the vnderstandinge of the language: and some man kepeth ccls.3.a sylence, waytinge a conuenyent tyme. A wyse man wyll holde his tonge tyll he se oportunyte, but a wanten and an vndiscrete body shal regarde no tyme. He that vseth many wordes, shal hurte his owne soule: and he ccli.32.a that taketh auctorite vpō him vnrighteously, shalbe hated.

Some man hath oft tymes prosperite in wicked thinges: Agayne, some man getteth moch, and hath harme and losse. There is some gift that is nothinge worth: Againe, there is some gift, whose rewarde is dubble. Some man getteth a fall for beynge to proude, and some commeth to worshipe from lowe estate. Some man bieth moch for a litle price, and must paye for it seuenfolde.

B A wyse man with his wordes maketh ccli.6.a him self to be loued, but the fauours of fooles shalbe poured out. The gift of the vnwyse shal do the no good, for his eyes are seuenfolde. He shal geue litle, & saye he gaue moch:
ccli.19.c he openeth his mouth and crieth out, as it were one that crieth out wyne. To daye he lendeth, tomorow he axeth it agayne, and soch a man is to be hated. The foole sayeth: I haue no frende, I haue no thanke for all my good dedes: yee euen they that eate my bred, speake no good of me. O how oft, and of how many shal he be laughed to scorne: He taketh a more perlous fall by soch wordes, then yf he fell vpon the grounde: euen so shal the falles of wicked men come haistely. In the mouth of him that is vntaught, are many vnconuenient and vnmete wordes. A wyse sentence shall not be alowed at the mouth of the foole, for he speaketh it not in due season.

C Some man synneth not, because he hath not wherwithall, and in his rest he shall be stynged. Some man there is that destroyeth his owne soule with shame, and for an vnwyse bodyes sake destroieth he it, (and with acceptinge of personnes shal he vndoo himself.) Some man promiseth his frende a gift for very shame, and getteth an enemye of him for naught. A lye is a wicked shame in a man, yet shall it be euer in the mouth of the vnwyse. A thefe is better, then a man that is accustomed to synne, but they both shal haue destruccion to heretage. The condicions of lyers are vnhonest, and their shame is euer with them.

A wyse man shall bringe himself to honoure with his wordes, and he that hath vnderstondinge shall be sett by amonge greate men. He that tylleth his londe, shal increase his heape of corne: he that worketh righteousines, shall be exalted, & he that pleaseth greate men, shall escape moch euell. Rewardes and giftes blynde the eyes of the wyse, and make him domme, that he can not tell mē their fautes. Wysdome that is hyd, and treasure that is hoorded vp, what profit is in them both? Better is he that kepeth his ignoraunce secrete, then a man that hydeth his wysdome.

The XXI. Chapter.

MY sonne, yf thou hast synned, do it nomore: but praye for thy foresynnes, that they maye be forgeuen the. Fle from synne, euen as from a serpent: for yf thou commest to nye her, she wyll byte the. The teth therof are as the teth of a lyon, to slaye the soules of men. The wickednes of man is as a sharpe two edged swerde, which maketh soch woundes that they can not be healed.

Stryfe and wrongeous dealinge shall waist awaye a mans goodes, & thorow pryde a rich house shalbe brought to naught: so the riches of the proude shalbe rooted out. The prayer of the poore goeth out of the mouth, and commeth vnto the eares, and his vengeaunce (or defence) shall come, and ỹ haistely. Who so hateth to be reformed, it is a token of an vngodly personne: but he that feareth God, wyl remembre himself. A mightie man is knowne afarre of by his tonge, but he that hath vnderstondinge, perceaueth that he shal haue a fall.

Who so buyldeth his house with other B mens cost, is like one that gathereth stones in wynter. The congregacion of the vngodly is like stubble gathered together, their ende is a flamme of fyre. The waye of the vngodly is sett with stones, but in their ende is hell, darcknes, and paynes. He that kepeth the lawe, wyll holde fast the vnderstan dinge therof, and the ende of the feare of God is wysdome. He that is not wyse, wyll not be taught in good: but the vnwyse man aboundeth in wickednes: and where bytternes is, there is no vnderstōdinge. The knowlege of the wyse shall flowe like water that renneth ouer, and his councell is like a fountayne of life.

C The hert of a foole is like a brokē vessell, he can kepe no wysdome. Whan a man of vnderstondinge heareth a wyse worde, he shal commende it, and make moch of it. But yf a volupteous man heare it, he shall haue no pleasure therin, but cast it behynde his back. The talkynge of a foole is like an heuy burthen by the waye: but to heare a wyse man speake, it is a pleasure. Where a doute is in the congregacion, it is axed at the mouth of the wyse, and they shal ponder his wordes in their hertes. Like as a house that is destroyed, euen so is wysdome vnto a foole: As for the knowlege of the vnwyse, it is but darck wordes. Doctryne is vnto him ỹ hath no vnderstandinge, euen as fetters about his fete, and like mannicles vpon his Eccl.d right hande. A foole lifteth vp his voyce vnto laughter, but a wyse man shall scarse laugh secretly.

D Lernynge is vnto a wyse man a Jewell of golde, and like an armlett vpō his right arme. A foolish mans foote is soone in his neghbours house, but one that hath experience, shall be ashamed at the personne of the mightie. A foole wyll pepe in at ỹ wyndow in to the house, but he that is well nourtured, wyll stonde without. A foolish man stondeth herkenynge at the dore, but he that is wyse, wyll be ashamed.

The lippes of the vnwyse wylbe tellynge foolish thinges, but ỹ wordes of soch as haue vnderstandinge, shalbe weyed in the balaunce. The hert of fooles is in their mouth, but the mouth of the wyse is in their hert. Whan the vngodly curseth the blasphemer, Eccl.d he curseth his owne soule. A preuy accuser of other men shal defyle his owne soule, and be hated of euery man: (but he that kepeth his tonge and is discrete, shall come to honoure.)

The XXII. Chapter.

A A Slouthfull body is moulded of a stone of claie: he that toucheth him, must wash his handes agayne. A mysnurtored sonne is the dishonoure of the father. A foolish daughter shalbe litle regarded. A wyse daughter is an heretage vnto hir husbande: but she that commeth to dishonesty, bringeth hir father in heuynes. A daughter that is past shame, dishoureth both hir father & hir hußbande: the vngodly shal regarde her, but they both shal despise her. The playenge of Musick is not mete where heuynes is, euen so is the correccio & doctryne of wysdome euer vnpleasaunt vnto fooles.

Who so teacheth a foole, is euen as one B that gleweth a potsherde together: as one that telleth a tayle to him that heareth him not, and as one that rayseth a mā out of an heuy slepe. Who so telleth a foole of wysdome, is euen as a man, which speaketh to one ỹ is a slepe. Whā he hath tolde his tayle, he sayeth: what is the matter? Whā one dyeth, lamentacion is made for him, because ỹ light fayleth him: euē so let mē mourne ouer a foole, for he wanteth vnderstandinge. Make but litle wepinge because of the deed. for he is come to rest: but the life of the foole is worse then the death. Seuen dayes do men Gen. 50. b mourne for him that is deed, but the lamentacion ouer the vnwyse and vngodly shulde endure all the dayes of their life.

Talke not moch with a foole, and go not C with him that hath no vnderstondinge. Beware of him, lest it turne the to trauayle, & thou shalt not be defyled with his synne. Departe from him, and thou shalt fynde rest, & shalt not be drawē back in to his foolishnes. What is heuyer then leade? And what shulde a foole be called els, but leade? Sōde, salt Pro. 27. a & a lōpe of yron is easier to beare, then an vnwyse, foolish, and vngodly man. Like as the band of wodd bounde together in the foundacion of the house can not be lowsed, euē so is it with ỹ hert ỹ is stablished in ỹ thought of coūcell. The thought of the wyse, shal neither feare ner be offended at eny tyme.

Like as a fayre playstred wall in a winter D
house, & an hye buyldinge, maye not abyde ỹ wīde & storme: euē so is a fooles hert afraied in his ymaginacion: he feareth at euery thinge, and can not endure. He that nyppeth a mans eye, bryngeth forth teares: and he that pricketh the hert, bringeth forth ỹ meanynge & thought. Who so casteth a stone at the byrdes, frayeth them awaye: & he ỹ blaspheme th his frēde, breaketh ỹ frēdshipe, though thou dreweste a swerde at thy frende, yet dispayre not, for thou mayest come agayne to ỹ frende. Yf he speake sowerly, feare not, for ye maye be agreed together agayne: excepte it be so that thou blaspheme him, dyßdayne him, opē his secretes and wounde him trato rously: for all soch thinges shal dryue awaye a frende.

E Be faithfull vnto ẏ neghbō in his powerte, that thou mayest reioyse with him also in his prosperite. Abyde stedfast vnto him in ẏ tyme of his trouble, that thou maiest be heyrēb him in his heretage. Like as the vapor and smoke goeth out at the ouen before ẏ fyre, euen so euell wordes, rebukes and threatenynges go before bloudsheddinge. Be not ashamed to defende ẏ frende: as for me, I wyl not hyde my face from him, though he shulde do me harme. Who so euer heareth it, shal bewarre of him. Who shal set a watch before my mouth, & a sure seale vpon my lippes, ẏ I fall not rb thē, & ẏ my tonge destroye me not?

The XXIII. Chapter.

A O LORDE, father and gouernoure of my life, leaue me not in their ymaginaciō & councell. Oh let me not fall in soch reprofe. Who wyll kepe my thought with ẏ scourge, and the doctryne of wyßdome in myne herte? that he spare not myne ignoraunce, that I fall not with them, lest myne ignoraunces increase, that myne offences be not many in nombre, and that my synnes exceade not: lest I fall before myne enemyes, and so my aduersary reioyse. O LORDE, thou father & God of my life, leaue me not in their ymaginacion. O let me not haue a proude loke, but turne awaye all volupteousnes fro me. Take fro me the lustes of the body, let not the desyres of vnclennes take holde vpon me, and geue me not ouer in to an vnshamefast and obstinate mynde.
